"A few years ago I was living in Ukraine, in the town of Romny. Having resigned the post I had been filling, I was enjoying a time of rest in my house, which stood in a large garden, and at the same time awaiting from the Government a fresh appointment. My family consisted of four persons—my wife, two sons, and a daughter. My eldest son was studying at the Ecclesiastical Academy at Kieff; the younger was at home preparing to enter college (Gymnase). My daughter, aged ten, was going to school. On returning home one day, she ran in bringing the news that a fortune-teller had settled in the neighborhood and that she was surprising all who consulted her. The little girl, with the curiosity natural to her age, begged me earnestly to take her some day when she had not many lessons to do, to see this divineress. The day arrived, and we drove, in fine weather, to the dwelling of the modern pythoness. Her modest home was in a kind of villa. We stopped on seeing a little old lady approaching us. She was followed by an enormous dog. "Does the fortune-teller live here, madame?" I asked. "Yes, sir." We were taken into a small vestibule and thence into a large room. Our guide opened a door and called some one—'Madame Marie, we have visitors;' and there entered a woman of thirty-five or forty, wearing the dress of the women of the towns in Ukraine. 'What do you wish me to foretell?' asked she, lighting two little bits of candle, and covering the window with a thick curtain so that the room was quite dark. The candles were reflected in a little mirror on the wall. She placed another mirror in such a manner that the candles were between them. 'This is how it is done. I look in this third mirror which I hold near to me, and I communicate to those present what I see in it.' I glanced at the small mirror, my daughter doing the same, but we saw nothing but the light of the candles.

"'First of all, madame,' I said, 'be so good as to give me a few particulars as to your past life, at least those relating to the period when you were first conscious of the power of divining. How did it come about?' 'Once when I was a little girl,' she replied, 'the idea came into my head that I might be able to foretell things. I had heard that for this purpose a mirror was used. So I seated myself before the lighted candles, as now. I took the mirror and began to look. I saw in it my future husband and the whole of my destiny. Well, since then, whenever I have nothing to do, I light the candles, take the mirror in my hand, and wait for what it has to show me. I see every event. For instance, suppose someone I know is going to be ill. If he is to recover we find that we continue to see him, in the sequel, at work, at rest, going about. If he is to die, then the mirror shows us the funeral—the priests, the torches, the coffin, the cemetery. If I ask mentally whether these events will take place in a few days, a week, or a month, I am at once shown a date marked in dots (points). Sometimes an annoying incident happens in the neighborhood, such as a robbery. I am aware of it immediately, and I give information as to where the lost goods are to be sought. They are recovered, and the owner is very grateful to me. Occasionally the fear that I am committing a sin comes over me. I one day confided this fear to a priest, my confessor. 'Pray to God,' said he, 'He will forgive you, though I can see nothing wrong in coming to the help of one's fellow-creatures.' Thus I gradually grew accustomed to foretelling. At first I was only successful in the evening or at night, but now I am equally so at high noon. 'I no sooner look in the mirror than I see the whole life of man pass before me.' 'I see,' she resumed, after a few moments' silence, 'that you are a rich man, and an official. You—but, no, you have no appointment now. That is the past. I see you in uniform; how richly braided it is! You have a gold chain around your neck from which hangs a medallion inscribed 'Justice of the Peace.' But all that is over. You have had no appointment for three years.'"

A DEATH-BED SCENE.

Having heard that the father of a dear friend was very ill, and knowing from experience how trying night nursing is, I called and offered to sit up, while my friend and her husband rested.

As I walked into the sick room, I saw a light fleecy mist over the bed, and after a little time I was able to describe the spirit form of a lady, who was at once recognized as the old gentleman's wife.

She appeared to me to be making "passes" down the sufferer on the bed, who soon dozed off into a quiet sleep. He had previously been in great pain.

From time to time we saw spirit forms flitting over the bed, and often the old gentleman would begin to talk to someone by name, who, his daughter told me, had passed on years before. He would ask and answer questions, and wish the "friends" good-bye, looking towards the door, and waving his hand in adieu to them. We, his daughter, son-in-law, and myself, saw that the end was approaching. All night we watched him in his quiet, unconscious sleep. At times beautiful light flitted over his bed and the calm feeling that came over us was beyond words to describe. All at once we heard, faintly, the sound of angelic lullaby strains for a few moments.

Morning came, and at 9:30 we saw that the end was at hand; over the head of the bed a glorious light broke forth, while the spirit friends seemed to gather together, and we distinctly saw his wife stoop down over him, put out her hands as though lifting him up, and, with a quiet, but distinctly audible "Come," we saw the light and spirits ascend and a beautiful golden light burst forth and enveloped them. Nothing remained but the peaceful, cast-off, worn-out body.

May God and His holy angels grant us, one and all, such a glorious entrance into heaven.

PASSAGE OF MATTER THROUGH MATTER.

When first I read of the passage of matter through matter it was entirely incomprehensible to me. Afterwards I read the "Light of Egypt," the author of which has an extensive knowledge of psychic phenomena. He says:

"No matter how solid any external object may appear it is not so, for every molecule of which it consists forms an extremely small atomic system of satellite atoms, revolving around their primary atoms, which forms the impenetrable point of every crystal. There is space between every one of them. To dematerialize matter and resolve it into its original elements require the application of an external force powerful enough to polarize the material cohesive affinity of the atoms. If the dematerializing force is electric the form is destroyed as far as the external plane is concerned, but if it is magnetic the object is only etherealized, and in this state matter can be made to pass through matter, and immediately the magnetic dissolvent is withdrawn the object will reassume its original shape. We need scarcely add that in this natural fact lies the secret of the spiritual materializing phenomena of Modern Spiritualism, and it forms the true foundation of all magical manifestations of a physical nature."

If credible human testimony has any value whatever, matter has passed through matter. I have never had an opportunity of witnessing this peculiar manifestation but my investigation has clearly proved to my mind that spirits can not only materialize but be photographed. It is difficult to determine what is impossible; and what appears to be impossible now may become an actuality in the future.

MARCH

"And thou hast joined the gentle train
An' wear'st the gentle name of spring."

Thou blusterer March! we welcome thee,
Though in stern Winter's guise,
For in thy honest heart we see
The good that latent lies.

Thou lovest with the howling blast
To sport in fitful glee,
But when thy ruder mood is past
Thou laugh'st right merrily.

Thou hid'st beneath thy mantle's fold
The bonnie face of Spring,
Yet half would'st thou release thy hold
To give her spirit wing.

Through all thy wild, wild masquerade,
Thou hast one purpose held,
Forgotten ne'er, though long delayed,
To be with grace fulfilled.

When thou hast had thy merry rout,
Thou wilt thy tribute bring;
Fling all thy beauteous banners out,
To thy sisters of the Spring.

Mad, merry March, we love thee well,
But thou hast tarried late,
We bid thee hail, and then farewell,
For thy gentle sisters wait.

E. W. Sprague's Report.

Since our last monthly report, we have organized four new societies and visited five others that we organized last year.

After we were at the mid-winter meeting at Battle Creek, Mich., we visited Lawton, Mich., where we organized a fine society which we chartered with the Michigan State Spiritualists Association. Our visit to Owosso, Mich., instilled new life into that society. We raised thirty-three dollars by subscription, the amount to be used in leasing the hall again which they had given up and moved out of after having held it for many years. We left them with good prospects for future work and very much encouraged.

Of the societies that we organized last year, we visited Ft. Wayne, Argos, Rochester, Frankfort and Elwood, Ind. All of these are at work, some working under difficulties, others with better conditions; but all doing good for our cause.

The other new societies that we organized are at Rensellaer, Lowell and Sedalia. At Rensellaer we held our meetings in the building of the "Church of God." I wonder what Elder Covert will do when he finds it out. We spent but two days in this town, when it needs two years of persistent work to do justice by the people and to our cause. Nevertheless, this little band of earnest souls will do all in their power to enlighten their townsmen and neighbors. Rensellaer was one of the centres of Spiritualism twenty-five years ago.

At Lowell we organized another small society. This was the early home of our arisen sister worker, Mrs. Colby Luther, and it was in this vicinity that she developed her mediumship, the great power of which was felt throughout the land.

There are not as many Spiritualists in Lowell as there were in those early days, and the reason for it is that there has been no leader and no organized effort. The children have been allowed to grow up in the Sunday-schools, and many of them have naturally drifted into the church; but the good work of Mrs. Luther has not been in vain, for there are a few Spiritualists left here that are determined to keep the truths of Spiritualism alive. If the work of Mrs. Luther had been carried on systematically from the time that she first began it in this place, I do not believe there would have been an orthodox church doing business in this vicinity to-day. It is the perseverance and the persistence of the church that keeps it alive. It is apathy and lack of organization that keeps Spiritualism from advancing.

If we expect to advance the cause of Spiritualism as it ought to advance we must send our missionaries to the Christians, and do it through systematic organization.

We trust this little society, which is composed of earnest and enthusiastic souls may grow in numbers and influence, in accordance with the wishes of its supporters.

We next visited Sedalia, Ind., held four meetings and organized a society. This is a new field around which the interest centers. Chesterfield camp-meeting has played an important part in bringing the light to this place. Large audiences came to hear us, many were curiosity seekers at first, but became interested as they listened to the true gospel.

The missionary work of the N. S. A. is an object lesson which the Spiritualists want, and we trust it may be the means of loosening the purse strings of the many who are able to assist the few good souls who are now so nobly assisting the N. S. A. in its good work.

Let us not become impatient, for our cause is marching on to victory. Every days it grows stronger. We feel there is great promise for Spiritualism and our National and State associations for the future.

Spiritualism and Religion.

To the Editor.—Dr. A. T. Hudson, of Stockton, Cal., departed this life, Feb. 5, 1902. He seemed to be waiting to welcome the expected call. By three years he had passed the four score mark.

Brother A. T. and myself began our subscription to The Progressive Thinker nearly at its outset. Indeed I think it was the year of its birth. Our love and interest for it as the champion of modern spiritual lore has never abated. It is one of those captivating journals that, once it secures the attention of the reader, leaves no place to stop or let go.

While I have never had a spirit message from the celestial side of spirit life, yet every report from that source has been to me freighted with solid meaning and real worth. Thomas Buccal, of England, had the same idea and estimate of Spiritualism which I indorse and defend.

He is reported to have said: "When we admit the claims of Spiritualism and its philosophy, it is of small concern about that which is outside of it. Spiritual philosophy occupies so large a domain of human thought that its study becomes at once profoundly absorbing. The knowledge of kindred and friends who have gone before consists of wisdom of a sober second thought. It is spirit lore condensed, verified and refined. Nothing but a wise experience can improve, correct or add to it. We are happy to say there is now an open door between the two worlds, and it is likely to remain open as a lively thoroughfare as long as human intelligence lasts. From the realms of the spirit world comes the startling announcement of a most commanding import. It relates to Belief and a Supreme Being. It should be printed in letters of gold. Spirit Georgie says: 'The angels look back over the history of the ages and see the sorrows, trials, suffering and unrest caused by a belief in a Supreme Being.'"

Is it possible? Only think! The mere fact of belief in a Supreme Being, a curse, a woe-begetting force, spent on the pious victim. It smites the Christian cult with a withering blight. It shadows the prelate and his occupation with a dismal comment.

The Progressive Thinker asks, "Should Spiritualism take its place among the great religions of the world, or be assigned to its proper position in the domain of science?"

To my view our spirit philosophy has no more concern about religion than has geology, mathematics, or the fourth dimension of space.

Science and religion are not only opposed to each other, but they are hostile and as inimical as knowledge and barbaric ignorance. Science is based on three predicates, as fact, observation and reason. Spiritualism also comes before the world based on fact, observation and reason. The word religion has a forbidding make up. It is the obverse of freedom. It is shackles and bondage. Religion is from the Latin word Ligo to bind, and religo to rebind or bind back. Save us from restraint and fetters.

OCCULT MYSTERIES.

THE GREAT DIVINE, THE REV. DR. SAVAGE, GIVES THE GROUNDS OF HIS BELIEF

EXAMPLES OF SPIRIT WRITING AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS FROM THE OTHER WORLD WHICH HAVE COME WITHIN HIS EXPERIENCE—SOME TESTS OF MEDIUMS.

In an interesting article on "Results of Psychical Research," which appeared in the March number of Ainslee's Magazine, the Rev. Minot J. Savage, D. D., says that he is perfectly certain that such things as ghosts exist, but is not ready to explain their origin or nature.

Dr. Savage gives several examples of spirit writings and communications from the dead. He offers them as typical cases classed as mental phenomena and says that his purpose in making them public is to place the intelligent reader in such a position that he may be able to make up his mind as to what theory seems best fitted to account for the facts. The author explains that he deals with occurrences with which he is personally familiar.

The first example given, Dr. Savage says, occurred here in the immediate vicinity of New York. A young man who had been studying abroad and was of anything but an imaginative temperament, had returned home apparently in perfect health and was at the summer home of his mother.

It was his habit after dinner to go out on the piazza and walk up and down smoking his pipe. One evening he came in quietly and without talking to anybody went to bed. The next morning he said to his mother:

"Mother, I have something very sad to tell you. You must be strong and brace yourself to bear it. I am going to die very soon."

When asked for an explanation, he said: "Last night when I was walking up and down on the piazza, smoking, a spirit appeared and walked up and down by my side. I have received my call and am going to die."

The mother, of course seriously troubled, sent for a doctor and told him the story. He made a careful investigation, found nothing the matter with her son and treated the whole thing as a bad dream or a hallucination.

The next morning the young man did not seem quite so well, but the doctor said there was nothing the matter and tried to laugh the family out of their fears. The third morning the young man appeared to be still worse and the doctor was again summoned.

Then he discovered a case of appendicitis. The young man was operated on and died in a couple of days. From the time of the vision until his death not more than five days had gone by.

Some time after this experience the mother visited a psychic here in New York. She made no previous appointment, but went as a perfect stranger and awaited her turn.

The son's spirit seemed to be present at once and told the mother a series of very remarkable things which, by no possibility, could the psychic ever have known. Then in answer to the question, "Who was it that you saw that night?" the question being purposely framed so as not to appear to refer to anybody out of the body, he said that it was his father. The father had been dead some years.

Dr. Savage says that his daughter made an appointment with Mrs. Piper under an assumed name and went to her utterly unknown. A friend had given her three locks of hair. She knew nothing about them, not even so much as whether they had been cut from the heads of people living or dead.

After Mrs. Piper had gone into a trance the locks of hair were placed in her hand one at a time. She told all about them, gave the names of the persons to whom they belonged and the name of the person who had given them to her, told whose heads they were from, whether the persons were living or dead and in regard to one of them, asked why they had cut off the extreme ends of the hair, where it was lifeless, instead of nearer the head. The daughter made notes of what Mrs. Piper said and later found that she had been accurate in every particular.

Another case which Dr. Savage gives is that of a friend, the daughter of a New England clergyman, whose husband in later years was also a minister. When she was a young woman the mediumistic power would take possession of her, sometimes against her will. She never sat for pay, but sometimes would oblige a friend who desired to witness experiences of this sort.

One day a German, evidently a gentleman, whom she did not know, came and begged for a sitting. She consented and among other things, began to jabber sounds which to her were without meaning.

When the influence had left her she was going to apologize by explaining that she had been forced to utter these sounds and was not able to control herself. The German told her not to apologize or explain.

He said that she had rendered him an incalculable service. He assured her that she had been speaking in German and that his father had been talking to him.

Then he went on to explain that his father had died suddenly, leaving his business affairs so entangled that they were utterly unable to straighten them out. He needed certain information, he said, which he had no way of obtaining. This, he said, his father had given to him through her and the matter was perfectly plain.

Dr. Savage tells of a Boston clergyman who was very active in charitable work. At his death his parishioners were scattered.

The widow of the colleague of the clergyman was the medium in this case, though she had never seen a medium in her life. She had nothing to do with ordinary Spiritualism, did not believe in it and was, in fact, opposed to it.

The deceased clergyman talked to his colleague's widow and made her the agent in charitable undertakings. She would receive orders to go into town to a certain street and number and would be told that there she would find persons to whom she could minister.

Cases like this occurred frequently. She would follow these directions, knowing nothing of the case except that which had thus been told to her, and she said that a mistake was never made.

She always found the person and the condition as they had been described to her. In one instance she traveled out of the state knowing not even the name of the person she was to seek out, and she found the case of which she had been told.

On one occasion, too, the daughter of the old minister, through the colleague's widow, was told to put $20 into an envelope and to send it to another town to an address that she had never heard of. She hesitated to send the money in this way, wishing to delay and get a check, but she was peremptorily ordered not to wait as the matter was one of immediate and vital importance.

She sent the money as directed and later received a letter acknowledging its receipt. The writing and grammar were poor. It told the story of abuse and desertion of a wife on the part of a husband.

The wife had done all she could to keep the little family together. She had reached the limit of her endeavors, had pawned the last bit of decent furniture and as making preparations to go out into the world with her children when the money arrived.

Dr. Savage says that never in his life until his son died two years ago did he attempt to get into communication with any special person at any sitting held with a medium. On two or three occasions within the last two years, he says, he tried to see if he could get any communication from his boy, who died at the age of 31. Dr. Savage says that during a sitting with Mrs. Piper his son seemed to be present and said to him:

"I wish you to go at once to my room. Look in my drawer and you will find there a lot of loose papers. Among them are some which I wish you would take and destroy at once."

Mrs. Piper was in a trance at the time and her hand was writing. She had no personal acquaintance with the son and had never seen him.

Dr. Savage went to the room and found in the drawer the papers referred to. They contained things which the young man had jotted down and entrusted to the privacy of his drawer.

The experience of a world-famous naturalist is also given: He once expressed contempt for all spiritual matters, but was led to make a study of them by some personal experiences.

He and other people organized a circle of sixteen persons to investigate. None of them possessed mediumistic powers at first, but as they went on psychic powers of description were developed within the limits of their own membership. The naturalist himself became an automatic writer.

One of the members of the circle had a brother who before he died had promised to try to communicate with the member after death. The scientist tried to get in touch with his dead brother.

Soon his hands began to move making at first meaningless scrawls, but later it strung letters together in the form of words. As he looked at what had been written it seemed to him without meaning. When he showed the scrawls to the brother of the dead man the brother said with some surprise:

"Perhaps it has no meaning for you, but it has for me."

He then explained that his brother had made up certain words out of his head. He had given these to the speaker and had said:

"If I can ever come to you I will bring these as a test. If I do not bring them you need not believe that it is I."

The naturalist had produced the identical combinations of letters which the dead brother years before had made as a proposed test for the living one.

The last experience which Dr. Savage gives is that of a young English girl who was engaged to a young American. He died suddenly.

Some time after his death she went to a medium in this city. She made no appointment and the medium had no way of knowing who she was.

The medium went into a trance and immediately the girl's lover seemed to be present. He recalled circumstances of their acquaintance and then said:

"I am glad that I have been able to save your father's life once or twice during the last year."

A short time afterward the father wrote home from South Africa telling how he was sitting in his tent one day when there came upon him suddenly an unaccountable impression that he was in danger. It was as though some one were trying to make him feel his danger and make him move.

So strong was the feeling that he left his place and went over to the other side of the tent. He had hardly done so before a shell struck the chair on which he had been sitting. Had he remained there he would have been killed instantly.—New York Sun.

IN THE OCCULT.

The Amazing Feat of a Somnambulist.

(By J. Sanderson Christison, M. D., author of "Brain in Relation to Mind," "Crime and Criminals," Etc.)

Among the phenomena of nature most surprising to man, a supernormal performance by an ordinary representative of his species is probably the most attractive because the least expected. And while it is commonly believed that the day of miracles is past, yet from time to time our attention is called to well-attested phenomena which are difficult to place in any other category, although in some respects they fall short of its requirements. For one thing, they usually lack a satisfactory purpose or occasion. But such affairs are always interesting and suggestive and may indeed be very instructive. They at least contribute to the rational basis of faith and teach us to accept much more than we can comprehend.

The affair I am here about to describe is a case of somnambulism which in some respects seems the most remarkable illustration of its kind that I have yet met with or found on record. The subject is a young mulatto housemaid who was referred to me by her employer owing to the fact that she had suffered an epileptic attack on the day following her astonishing feat. I shall here introduce her as Miss Julia, a much esteemed employe of Mrs. Brown, who resides within one of the most aristocratic precincts of the North Side of Chicago.

It was only a few nights ago, about 3 a. m., when Mrs. Brown was awakened by an unusual noise, pointing to a disturbance in a room adjoining which was occupied by Julia. Mrs. Brown immediately arose to investigate the cause, and after opening Julia's door she called her name several times. To these calls she received no response, but heard a slight creaking sound in the direction of a stairway that ascended from Julia's room to the floor above. She also observed that some of the furniture near the door was not in its usual position. This condition was very perplexing to Mrs. Brown, and she immediately proceeded to secure help in her investigation, when a moment later a great crash was heard that awakened the inmates of the house on three floors. At once half a dozen more persons joined in the investigation of the cause of the disturbance.

But they had not far to go, for during the moments of preliminary consultation the heavy breathing of a person was heard as if but a short distance away, and this clew almost directly led to the discovery of Julia lying on the floor at the top of the stairway in an apparently stuporous state. The high tension of the alarmed company was now relieved, and after they had administered a few "shakings" to Julia she slowly arose to her feet, with a dazed look in her eyes. She, however, made no answer when asked if she knew where she was. But a few moments later she inquired what floor she was on, and shortly thereafter she was led down to her room, where she at once fell sound asleep.

In the morning she was attending to her duties at her usual time, without either a scratch or a bruise on her person; and upon being asked by her mistress how she felt Julia promptly replied, "all right," but in a way which indicated marked surprise at the question. On further questioning her it was discovered that she had absolutely no recollection of the night's surprising performance.

So far it would appear that nothing very remarkable had occurred. But when a few more details are added it will become evident that Julia had performed an amazing feat.

The stairway that Julia ascended was closed at the top by a heavy door, which was nailed down horizontally to a strong cross-beam, securely fixed. The door not being sufficient to cover the whole space, a half-inch board had also been nailed to the cross-beam to fill the vacancy along one side of the door. It is evident that great effort from below would be required in order to dislodge the door from the strong and firmly set cross-beam to which it was nailed. This, however, would not be so hard to understand provided a good leverage position was available for the feet on the steps beneath.

It should also be understood that the stairway thus inclosed contained various household utensils, the steps from the bottom to the top being utilized as shelves to hold the articles. Practically not an inch of space was vacant.

Just here is the greatest mystery, for while Julia succeeded in raising the door, presumably by applying her head and shoulders, she had passed the crowded stairway without leaving the slightest trace of having done so, for not an article on the steps indicated the slightest disturbance, everything presenting the same appearance and position as before the girl's ascent.

If the readers will examine the illustration it will be seen that with the exception of the first step there is nowhere sufficient space for even the toes of a human foot to rest upon. And for anyone to attempt a footing on the miscellaneous and fragile collection crowded on every step could result in nothing but breakage, disorder, injury and failure. Indeed, if the steps had been cleared of everything but the crutch that leans across the stairway it would still be a mystery that this article should have remained undisturbed through such a fierce struggle and crash as Julia's feat would seem to require. Even the iron rod resting on the edges of the steps and ready to slide downward on but little disturbance remained unmoved.

But the fact is that the more the details are thoughtfully examined the deeper the mystery seems to grow, especially when we add that Julia's whole performance was effected in absolute darkness, disclosing a wonderful feat by a somnambulist.

Julia is rather above the average height for women, is of spare build and ordinarily not very strong, and her health not very good. But she is a quiet, sensible, diligent person. She tells me that when 12 years old and living on a farm in southern Missouri she had her first sleep-walking experience. It seems that she had been permitted to go to town with her brother on account of a Republican rally, and returned long after milking time, a thought which worried her much. The family had retired, but she found a note on the table informing her that the cows had been milked and she should go to bed. She went to bed, but about midnight she was discovered running toward the cows in an adjacent field. She was loudly called to by her employer, which act woke her up just as she bumped against the trunk of a tree.

Julia is one-fourth Indian extraction and a quite remarkable peculiarity in her family, in which there are nine children, is that all have dark-colored skin, two of her sisters and three of her brothers have brick-red, kinky hair, all the others having black kinky hair. On account of this peculiarity inducements were offered, but not accepted, for the appearance of the family at the late world's fair.

Somnambulism is quite common among children and not so very uncommon among adults. It is frequently associated with epilepsy, as in Julia's case, and is regarded by authorities as a masked form or substitute for a "fit." The subjects often exhibit extraordinary perceptive and executive powers, but their executive displays are usually along lines of previous experience. In some cases the entire character qualities are apparently reversed, so that what was but a thought in the normal state becomes action in the altered state. Sometimes the personality is more than duplex, as in the case of Beauchamp, in whom Dr. Morton Prince of Boston discovered four personalities.

The length of a spell may be little more than momentary, or may last for hours, weeks or months. Its onset may be abrupt or the subject may pass into the second personality while continuing business transactions quite properly. In this condition some idea may arise which acts as a mental switch, so that after a prolonged absence from home the subject may find himself a bewildered visitor in a strange city.

One man is recorded to have left home and family and launched into a strange business in a remote town with some success, and several years afterward returned to his previous home with no memory of the events occurring in the interval.

In explanation of the development of the "second" personality an eminent observer thinks that "a psychic shock is sustained, the result of which is that the mind is put through a prism and a certain number of rays are separated from the rest and developed into an independent personality." Other writers define the condition as simply due to a development of what is called the subliminal self, with a sinking of the ordinary self. But it seems to me that the explanation is more simply stated by assuming that a switching of ideas takes place through a break in the associative processes caused by some physiological perversion which continues for a variable period, and thus certain groups of thoughts that would naturally be associated and more or less rule in the normal state are excluded from action. Thus the mind is narrowed in its range of operations and, according to the law of apperception, the perceptive powers are increased.—Chicago Record-Herald.

IT IS VERY SUGGESTIVE.

What Is the Matter with Us, Anyway?

To the Editor:—I have read with interest and thoughtfulness the appeals from Mr. Hull in The Progressive Thinker and other Spiritualist papers regarding the Morris Pratt Institute. Now the writer is in favor of education and of schools, and yet in my opinion all the Morris Pratt Institutes and all the Moses Hull Training Schools will not prevent ignorance from coming to the front. Mr. Hull and others say that Spiritualism is on the wane, and that one prominent cause therefor is that ignorant so-called mediums, and speakers with bad grammar, bad logic, and general ignorant denunciation of everything, have driven the better and wiser people into the liberal churches.

But will the establishing of schools prevent this while the mass of people are on this this plane of life upon which we find them to-day? I think not.

The fact of the matter is that we who are on the ignorant plane don't know it, and no one can make us know that we are there. We think we know as much as the wisest; many of us have "guides" with big names and controlling "bands" of Indians (wild or otherwise) and other "influences" about us, and these "controls" tell us, or we think they do, that we have a work to do for the world, that we must heal, or give tests, or preach, be ordained, etc.

These guides tell us, or we think they do, that they do not want us to read, study or inform ourselves, but that they will furnish the bad grammar and poor logic for us, and why should not the guides be obeyed? They are spirits, and don't they know all about everything? Haven't these spirits who control us greater wisdom than any or all the presidents and teachers of earthly schools? Of course they have.

Even Mr. Jamieson, in debate with now President Hull, says that if there are spirits they ought to know everything about everybody and everything; and they do, of course, especially those who control us, and these controls want us to work for humanity and incidentally for ourselves, and if no society wants us we'll start one of our own.

But then many societies like our style and employ us in preference to the college-bred, and the people will come to hear us, too. Of course, again, some who think they are high up and deep down thinkers will go to the liberal churches, but then we'll have the biggest lot of people who want to know about spirits—who want "tests" and and "messages" and "readings" and profound preaching or "sermons." And how will any Morris Pratt or Moses Hull school prevent it? Will some one enlighten us?

There is no law of the land that can bid us be silent. The N. S. A. has as yet formulated no plan by which we ignoramuses can be set one side, and Infinite Intelligence, too, is as silent as the grave upon this important matter.

This is one side of the picture. But another chapter may be added. What is the matter with us, anyway? Why cannot Spiritualism produce to-day as grand and exalted talent unaided by Spiritualistic theological institutions as it has done in the past? There is no denying that Spiritualism was built up to its height of glory by speakers and workers reared within its ranks without colleges or schools of mortal kind. One boast of Spiritualism has been, not that its "rising speakers were uneducated," but that it had power within it to educate them, that it had a system of education peculiar to itself—schools higher than those of earth. Have we not had culture and refinement and "finished scholars" backed by the highest intelligence in the "unschooled" representatives of our great and grand cause?

The boast of Spiritualism has been that it has taken the unlettered and unlearned, the shrinking, the retiring, the bashful, and even the uncouth, and by and through the power inherent within it, or in other words under the tutelage of the unseen helpers and wise spiritual instructors, it has roused into action the sleeping, dormant powers of mind and soul, and untold blessings unto individuals and to the world has been the result. What school of mundane teaching would have improved upon the wondrous writings of A. J. Davis? What training school of earth would have brought forth finer thought than that of W. J. Colville?

Wherein would higher culture, deeper refinement, truer dignity, better understanding, sounder philosophy, choicer diction and loftier eloquence be attained by academic teaching than that evinced by many of the workers that have graced (not disgraced) our platform, and who have been educated through spiritual powers and processes? Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten, Mrs. Nellie Brigham, Mrs. Elizabeth Lowe Watson, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, Mrs. Colby Luther, Lyman C. Howe, A. B. French, Walter Howell, J. J. Morse, Hudson Tuttle and many others, all trained and taught in the schools peculiar to Spiritualism.

Mr. Hull says: "The fact is, able, intelligent, respectable young men and women are not willing to go before the world as public workers unprepared. They want in addition to what the spirit world can do for them the preparation which culture can give." What meaning shall we place on these words? Was the implied meaning that no culture can come from the spirit world, intended, and that those thus educated were unprepared? It can hardly seem so.

We have a few college-bred speakers in our ranks, but in what sense is their appearance upon the rostrum superior to those "unschooled" ones before mentioned? Some of us have detected errors in various ways in public work among our "educated" ones. Some of us have heard Unitarian and Universalist preachers who had the benefits of a theological training, that were not perfect in expression and were awkward in manner and unsound in logic.

Again, Mr. Hull says that the old days and old ways of educating the workers are "gone forever." It may be so, but would they could return. It is claimed there are no young workers coming into the cause. Why is this, and what is the trouble? Is it lack of interest and effort on the morthl side, or on the spirit side, or both? Has the spirit world become tired of its effort and given us over to our new schools to be? Have the spiritual helpers become disgusted with our bickerings and vagaries and our efforts to be "popular," and left us to work out our own salvation, or is the material out of which fine speakers and mediums are developed, exhausted? Who will answer?

As before stated, I am in favor of schools and of education from a mundane source for those who may not or cannot come under the higher spiritual training, but I would have those schools rest on the solid foundation of science and philosophy and not upon the shaky foundation of religion—a something that has no counterpart in nature.

THE GOD QUESTION.

A Discussion of Judge Arington's Essay.

To the Editor:—The very instructive, though extensive article from A. J. Davis' Arabula, on the God question, which appeared in your issue of February 8, was very interesting to me. Not, perhaps, because I entirely endorse the masterly argument of the learned author, Judge Arington, in all its details, for it seems rather far-fetched and superfluous, but rather because it shows to what lengths human reason will go, how it will search for proof and argument in the far-off distance, in the greatest depths and greatest heights, to prove a favorite proposition, the incontrovertible proof of which lies so very near and close at hand.

All individuals necessarily look at the same things and objects from different standpoints and consequently these things and objects acquire correspondingly different aspects, and it is by the mutual exchange of opinions based upon these different aspects that true knowledge concerning the things and objects is finally acquired. Now it may be barely possible that my point of vantage is at a sightly greater altitude than that of our learned friend, or it may be my physical anatomy is more extensive in the direction of its length than his, at any rate it seems to me that I can see over Judge Arington's shoulder, and although I perceive and recognize the same God, the same, or at any rate some universal controlling power and intelligence. I also perceive that the different natural phenomena cited by our friend in the article are not entirely dependent upon the conscious and intelligent volition of the God in question, but are rather the spontaneous, automatic and inevitable outgrowth of pre-existing conditions and circumstances. And neither the God who controls this our universe or any other God within what appears to us as boundless nature could possibly enact, execute, repeal, change or hold in abeyance any of the so-called laws or courses of procedure which by their action and interaction produce all of the phenomena brought forward.

For instance, it is as superfluous if not to say absurd, to cite the existence of a five-petaled flower, the seven colors in the rainbow, or any geometrical or mathematical equation, as it would be to say, two plus two makes four, ergo there is not only a God, but that God can count four. And the chances against two plus two making four in a Godless universe would be far more infinite than our friend considers the chances against the production of a five-petaled flower. But to my understanding, looking at things from my standpoint the production of a three-leaved clover-leaf, a four, five, six, twelve, or twenty-four petaled flower, the seven colors of the rainbow, the reflection of light or heat rays, or any geometrical or mathematical equation is just as uncreatable, as immutable, as inevitable and spontaneous and beyond the power and fiat of any God whatsoever, as is the simple proposition that two plus two makes four, God or no God, intelligence or no intelligence, law or no law. Of course it is entirely beyond the scope of this article to even hint at an explanation of my position, as this would require as much if not more space than Judge Arington's argument, as we would have to go much deeper into the nature of things, and causes. But I think I can show very clearly that the God who controls our universe at least, does not trouble himself or herself over-much about the production of either four, five or twelve petaled flowers, ten-fingered humans or hydra-headed monsters, or any geometrical or mathematical proposition whatsoever, whatever his employment or daily labors and intelligent efforts may be, which of course I do not pretend to know, not standing in his shoes if in shoes he stands.

In order to show this I shall be obliged to draw a comparison between the microcosm, man, and the macrocosm, our universe, and study the former in order to ascertain facts in regard to the latter which are beyond our range of examination. I suppose we all agree that the laws and rules of nature act upon and hold good in regard to the microcosm, the same as they do in regard to the macrocosm, and vice versa.

Considering now a human being, we find a supreme controlling intelligence or soul, whether intelligent or not, inhabiting a physical embodiment. This embodiment is composed of bones, muscles, nerves, etc., and among other things we notice little, tiny, flat, round disks, called blood corpuscles, traveling hither and thither in all directions. In examining one of these tiny disks with the most powerful microscopes yet invented we obtain no information in regard to its ultimate molecular composition; we can only discern a still more tiny speck called a nucleus. But examining these disks with the mind's eye, we find that they are composed of certain ultimate particles called molecules, and in examining these molecules we find that they in turn are composed of still smaller ultimate particles called atoms. Now, as we cannot study the nature of the molecules and atoms in the microcosm, on account of their smallness, let us see if we cannot study them in the macrocosm. Let us consider that the atoms of the microcosm hold the same relation to each other and the molecules, as do the moons, planets and suns to each other and to the macrocosms, then we shall behold in every solar system a molecule of the macrocosm. And every molecule is a solar system of the microcosm. Going one step further, let us consider that every atom of the microcosm is evolved, developed and perfected by and under the same laws and rules as evolve, develop and perfect the planets of the macrocosm, which for all we know to the contrary is perfectly feasible and possible, yea probable, if not actually a fact. If this is so, then we might expect to find blazing suns, surrounded by attendant planets, each planet at some time in its history bringing forth continents, oceans, vegetation, animals, men. These men, being evolved and developed under and by the same laws and rules as ourselves, would in time perfect their reasoning faculties and make inquiries regarding the causes of their being and whether or not there was a God who gave them life.

Now, it seems to me, that we, as human souls, being to all intents and purposes the God of our own physical embodiment, pay about as much attention, are as much interested in the squabbles, exploitations, opinions and disputes of these tiny inhabitants of the atoms of our blood corpuscles, as the God of our universe pays to us and our talk.

We as human Gods know, that if we observe the laws of health, the blood corpuscles will take care of themselves. They perform their assigned tasks without any conscious effort on our our part; yea, we are not even familiar with the modus operandi of their extraction and manufacture from the food we eat, nor with the way and manner in which they perform their office, nor with the nature of these various offices. But even if we did know these things, this knowledge on our part would not help the blood corpuscles, nor would it effect them in the least. For the blood of an idiot performs its duty as well as that of the most profound sage.

Now, upon the immutability of natural law, it would be very easy to understand, that among the vegetable productions of these atomical planets, there would also most probably be some five, six or twelve-petaled flowers, there would also be some ten-fingered humans and four-legged dogs, etc., all without our knowledge and consent, and in spite of the fact, that we perhaps are entirely incapable of counting either twelve, six, or even two. The molecular suns of the blood corpuscles would shed their radiance upon the atomical planets, and the angles of reflection would be ever equal to the angles of incidence, whether we knew of it or not. And whenever conditions were favorable, refulgent rainbows with the same unvarying prismatic colors would gladden the eyes of the tiny beholders, although we, as Gods, of our bodies, might not even know what caused a rainbow anywhere in nature.

I think I have shown quite conclusively that the production of the natural phenomena cited by the learned judge is not at all dependent upon the wisdom, intelligence or state of mental development of the God controlling this our universe. He or she may be perchance a novice or experimenter in universe-building, a mere Infant-God; the phenomena would occur just the same as long as any God were present. How, then, can we know that there is a God at all? This is the easiest of all questions to answer.

How do we know when a human body is alive or when it is dead? How do we know when the human God is present or when absent? We know it by the result. As long as the human soul, the spirit is still present, the blood coures through the arteries with regular rhythmic motion. The nerves, the muscles and all the organs of the body work together in harmony and for the general upbuilding and maintenance of the body. As long as this continues, we may be sure that the God of the body, the human soul is still present, that the body is alive. As soon as the soul or spirit departs permanently, circulation stops, the organs cease to perform their functions, the body is dead. The atomical and molecular life of the body now asserts itself and gets the upper hand, because the controlling and harmonizing influence of the soul has been taken away. The different molecules separate from their neighbors and acquire individual existence independent of each other and of the body in general, and finding the body too small for all of them, they escape into the atmosphere and form gases. Thus the organs of the body fall to pieces and the body decays; disintegrates back into its constituent elements, which under the harmonizing and controlling influence of the soul, the God, were extracted and combined and held together to form a beautiful harmonious whole, which now is all chaos and confusion.

The office and influence of the universal God as well as that of the human god is merely one of furnishing the necessary power and energy to keep the machine in running order. To supply all souls within the universe with the necessary energy to extract, combine and assimilate the requisite elements to maintain their bodies and perform their functions each in its own sphere and on its own plane of life and action. The moment that the Godhead were withdrawn from the universe, that moment all rhythmic motion would stop. All systems would begin to tumble about and over each other. All order would be turned to chaos, all harmony to discord, all life to death.

The very fact that all is life, all is order, all is harmony with a general tendency towards universal improvement and progress is sufficient and abundant proof that our God is still at the helm and the universe is still alive, all squabbles disputes and opinions to the contrary of any of us poor, tiny, ignorant, arrogant and self-conceited mortals notwithstanding.

The God of Israel.

St. Paul found in a certain city a temple inscribed to the "Unknown God," and he modestly told those agnostics that, "Whom ye thus ignorantly worship, him proclaim I unto you." And straightway he set the mill to grinding as it had been grinding since the early days of Moses, and as it continues to grind to-day.

As, confessedly by the scriptural writers and the churches, God is incomprehensible, the only chance for St. Paul or any other man to proclaim God is to tell what he is or has done in the world and to impute to him certain motives, purposes or reasons for the doing. This the scriptural writers did, and this the church continues to do; the scriptural account starting out with, "In the beginning God created the heavens and earth;" the church account to date ending with, "The sun do move."

That is the God of Israel, sometimes called the God of the Bible, at others the God of Moses, and now the God of the church. To ask you whether you believe in the God of Israel is to ask you if you believe in the many remarkable statements of God's dealings and purposes in the world found in the Bible and repeated by the church.

To ask you whether you believe in God is quite another question, and few, if any, can answer in the negative. Yet, so persistently has the God of Israel, or Jewish account of God, been dingdonged into this people, that many when they reject that are ready to say there is no God. On the other hand, if any man uses the term God, they take it that he must necessarily mean the God of Israel. F. J. RIPLEY.

MAN'S Mighty Power OVER HIS FELLOW-MAN

THE SECRET REVEALED AT LAST.

Astounding Discoveries Which Prove That People Can Actually Be Influenced and Controlled for Years Without Dreaming They Are Under the Mystic Spell of Another.

How It Is Done—A Powerful Secret Method of Mind Control, by the Side of Which Hypnotism and Kindred Influences Sink Into Insignificance.

At last the true secret of mental power and mind control has been revealed. A noted college in the city of New York has just issued a wonderful book by eminent scientists, which lays bare the mysteries of personal influence. Five thousand copies of this remarkable work are to be distributed free of charge for the purpose of acquainting the public with this mighty mind power.

This wonderful new force gives a control and an influence over persons that would astonish and mystify the most powerful hypnotist who ever lived. It enables you to know the secret natures and lives of every one you meet; you can tell the character, abilities and entire nature of your correspondents though thousands of miles away. You can exert a strange silent influence over others in your presence or at a distance entirely without their knowledge. You can quickly develop your will power, memory and other mental faculties to a marvelous degree. You can by a new secret process, quickly cure bad chronic diseases and build up your own health and strength in an incredibly short space of time. It explains the most marvelous system of physical and mental development known to man. It truly reveals the secret power of charming, the art of fascination. You can win and hold friends without number. You can master the secrets and know the power of the wise men of old. You can acquire that inward confidence, that magnetic power that will enable you to overcome all obstacles to success, and rise to a position of prominence in your community. The book is enthusiastically endorsed by ministers of the gospel, business and professional men. It is a work which should be in every home. This wonderful new work is entitled "The Secret of Power." It fully explains the uses and possibilities of the marvelous "Ki-Magi" system of personal influence. It lays bare the mysteries of magnetic control. It gives you a veritable key to the souls of men. It is richly illustrated by the finest half-tone engravings. It is by far the most remarkable, interesting and thrilling work of the kind ever written. For a limited time it will be sent to your address absolutely free. "In your 'Ki-Magi' System I have found what I for years searched for in vain," writes Mr. Joseph Steiner, 1100 Ninth street, N. W., Washington, D. C. "It has changed the whole trend of my thought and given my life a new meaning. I feel younger and stronger every day. I find in it the key to business success." W. Rockwell Kent, of Binghamton, N. Y., writes: "Your Ki-Magi System is the most powerful agency on earth for the betterment of man. All who master it will become a power in the world and be successful and happy."

S. I. Yetter, of Middletown, Pa., says: "The 'Ki-Magi' System of personal influence has brought me the success in business for which I have been looking. It is the magnet which controls. There is no guesswork about it—it is a scientific fact. It has taught me to know and control myself as well as others."

Felix Moosbrugger, of 276 Halsey st., Newark, N. J., writes: "Many are the swindling deals I have avoided in my father's business through my knowledge of your system. The change which has taken place in my personal character is simply marvelous. I have developed a confidence and power in myself that I never dreamed I could acquire."

Col. C. E. Tuller, of 1201 Euclid ave., Cleveland, Ohio, says: "My success in curing afflicted people is absolutely wonderful. A boy given up for sure death by five physicians I restored to perfect health inside of five minutes. A woman that could not touch her foot to the ground on account of rheumatism was cured by one application of the method explained in your system.

If you wish a free copy of the book which started Mr. Mossbrugger, Col. Tuller and others on the road to success, write to-day to the Columbia Scientific Academy, office 159 P, 1931 Broadway, New York, and the book will be sent you by return mail, postage prepaid.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Karezza makes a plea for a better birthright for children, and aims to lead individuals to seek a higher development of themselves through most sacred relations. It is pure in tone and aim, and should be widely circulated. Price, cloth, $1.

Father Tom and the Pope,

Or a Night at the Vatican.

Written probably by Sir Samuel Ferguson. From Blackwood's Edinburg Magazine. This is a humorous account of a rollicksome visit to the Pope of Rome by Father Tom, an Irish priest, armed with a superabundance of Irish wit, two imperial quart bottles of Irish "puttecn," and an Irish recipe for "conwounding" the same. "What's that?" says the Pope. "Put in the sperits first," says his Riv'rence; "and then put in the sugar; and remember, every dhrop of water you put in after that, spoils the punch." "Glory be to God," says the Pope, not minding a word Father Tom was saying. "Glory be to God!" says he, smacking his lips. "I never knewn what dhrink was afore," says he. "It bates the Lachrymalchrystal out ov the face," says he—"it's Necthar itself, it is, so it is!" says he, wiping his epistolical mouth wid the cuff of his coat. Paper, 25cts.; cloth, 50 cents. SATURDAY, MARCH 22, 1902.

Baksheesh! Baksheesh!

He who travels in Mohammedan countries, more particularly in Egypt and Syria, is everywhere met with the cry from the rabble, of "baksheesh, baksheesh." It is the first Arabec word he meets with in his journeyings, and the last that greets his ears on leaving the country. It means in English "a present," and should be met with "La shy hu,"—"there is none." But that will not prevent the beggars from hounding his track and imploring with greater vehemence for baksheesh, baksheesh.

From the multiplicity of American cities appealing to Andrew Carnegie for money to erect library buildings it would almost seem as if the word "library" has a meaning with him closely resembling the Arabec petition to "give, give."

Would not humanity be the gainer if these appeals of mendicants were limited to demands on mortality? Instead, wherever we go, we see men and women imitating courtiers on bended knees before a throne, asking special favors of the Supreme Ruler of the universe, and reminding him that his Son taught that they who asked in faith, nothing doubting, should be amply rewarded by him, and insisting that their petitions be granted on that account.

Omitting the saving of a ship in a storm by the prayers of Moody, and the prevention of a comet striking the earth, making a general wreck of this old globe, at the urgent request of a pope, we have no well authenticated case of an answer to prayer! And even in those cases there are skeptics, doubting Thomases, who think the winds had spent their force when Moody prayed, and the comet did not change its course to please the Holy Papa.

It is no unusual thing to see a whole nation, with its millions of devout worshipers, joining in a common request, asking for some beneficent act, as the saving of the life of a worthy President; but who has ever witnessed the intervention of the Almighty arm on such occasion? A Nero could not be more heedless of such prayers than is the great Father.

Five times a day, in sunshine, shade, or storm, on raging main, or traversing desert sands, the Moslem bows to Allah, reminds him of his mighty power, and asks his aid in crushing his enemies; but Allah remains as silent when addressed by his Arabec name as when appealed to under his Anglo-Saxon cognomen of God.

Positively are not such appeals to outside forces for aid, absolutely pernicious, with a tendency to destroy confidence in one's own ability to do and win success? The beggar who has no motive for toil, soon relapses into that indolent characteristic of the bushmen, who thrive on nature's products, with no ambition but to pick the fruit, "eat, sleep, and breed."

Teach all, whether in pursuit of fame or worldly pelf, to trust to his own unaided energies, to invigorate his brain and muscle by exercise, and to rely upon them to supply his needs. The instruction carried out in practice, then it is puling babes, decrepit age, the invalid encountering some sudden disaster, and the simpleton without brains, who need implore aid from God or man.

Good for Dr. Harper.

President Harper, of the University of Chicago, in an address on "The Church and Higher Education," given the other evening at the Auditorium, took occasion to disapprobate the action of the Northwestern University in its treatment of Prof. Pearson for repudiating Bible Miracles. Said Dr. Harper:

"A university which endeavors to curtail the researches of professors because of their beliefs, and because they published the results of their discoveries, will not long remain a university. The university has no more right than the state to restrict research, or the promulgation of the results of such research.

"The university is a modern institution. Previous to 1870 there was no university, the higher educational institutions being colleges. Our curriculum then was wholly of the past. Latin was the great essential and English was hardly recognized, while the study of modern literature was excluded entirely. The changes have been so great in recent years that it can hardly be called evolution, but revolution. The course of study in the high schools of to-day is better than that of most of the colleges of the past and of many of the poorer colleges of the present time."

But the universities, as well as colleges, are mostly under sectarian management, and education is manipulated in the interest of the church. So soon as a Professor discovers the source of the Christian fraud, and reveals the fact to students, or through the press, he is shoved aside, and an ignoramus, so far as real learning is concerned, is substituted in his place. President Harper himself is in absolute danger of removal, for he has been very free in his expressions of late.

Let Us All Rejoice.

The following Associated Press dispatch will be read with profound interest:

New York, Feb. 28.—In one of the most remarkable operations known to surgery, says a Baltimore special to the World, the brain of the Rev. Wm. A. Stark, pastor of the Broadway German Methodist Episcopal church of this city, has been actually lifted from its bed and the roots of certain nerves that had caused the clergyman excessive neuralgia were extracted. The patient is said to have stood the operation well and few doubts of his recovery are entertained. The operation was performed at the John Hopkins hospital.

There is hope for the future if operations like the above can be successfully performed on the clergy. When the first symptom of insanity shows itself in a dominie, evidenced by his graphic pictures of a flaming hell, place him on an operating table, remove the skull, lift the brain, if he has any, from its place, clip the nerves which inspire the hell-fire discourses, let him rest for a few days, then he can return to the pulpit, and tell of the loving kindness of the All-Father, forgetful of his former harangues when he whooped up hell for more than it was worth. Great is surgery.

A Narrow Inspiration.

Some scientist anxious to bring to our comprehension the immense distance of some of the so-called fixed stars, has selected the nearest in the constellation Centaur, of which there are thirty in this southern group. He suggests a railway, and the fare one penny for each one hundred miles, and finds the cost of a trip to that little twinkler in the heavens at £1,100,000,000. The speed of travel fixed at sixty miles an hour, it will require 48,663,000 years to make the journey. One of these stars, formerly supposed to be a central orb around which the millions of other suns, with all their planetary trains, revolved, is a thousand times larger than the sun which illuminates our earth.

God, according to Bible authority, made that star and all the countless host that wheel in mystic dance in the heavens, in six days, became wearied with his laborious task, and rested on the seventh day.

The wonder to us is, whether it did not seem a menial employment to the great Creator to engage in making aprons for Adam and Eve after they had eaten of the fruit of knowledge and found themselves naked? We suspicion the inspired historian, when detailing that event, had a very poor conception of the immensity of the material universe. Unfortunately his inspiration did not extend in that direction.

On the Road to Infidelity.

Prof. Delitsch, the learned Assyriologist, who recently gave a lecture in Berlin, on the "Babylonian Origin of Hebrew Ideas," before the German Emperor, is about journeying to Bagdad, Asiatic Turkey, to study the topography and antiquities of Babylonia.

If the Professor is industrious in research, will leave his religious education behind, and give full expression to his real discoveries, he will find the Hebrew Bible is but a compilation, mostly of Assyrian myths, revamped and adapted to the people passing as Jews. But he will have the satisfaction of seeing Infidel, perhaps Atheist, attached to his name, as is the modern habit of doing, a late substitution in place of Inquisitorial tortures.

Just Her Luck.

Rev. Dr. Roberts tells of an old woman who had spent all her years trying to protract a precarious existence cultivating among the rocks of a New England farm. She grew aged with her rough experience, and was near her end. Just before she died her minister was called in, who, by way of comfort, said:

"Well, my sister, you have had a long, hard life. Now you are about to enter into your well-earned rest."

To this the dear old lady responded:

"No, parson, it would be just my luck to have the resurrection come to-morrow morning."

Such is the cruelty of fate. It is hoped the good old woman had a day or two off before she entered on her eternal round of singing, "Glory, glory to God and the Lamb forevermore."

Ransoming Missionaries.

It is reported that Miss Stone, who went missionarying and was kidnaped, has been ransomed, the sympathetic people of this country raising $75,000 which the brigands accepted after much haggling. It is sad and pitiable to see intelligent and well educated persons so misguided by religious zeal and superstition as to leave their homes to propagate their beliefs among other races; but if they do they must accept the consequences. The Chinese and Mohammedans have their own religion, as sacred to them as Christianity is to the Christian; a faith that has grown through thousands of years, and they abhor the foreigner who would come among them with a system of religion which would subvert the faith of their ancestors. How would we like it if the Mohammedans should send missionaries to this country, and they should not be content to teach, but constantly interfered with our government, and their converts became opposed to its fundamental principles?

These foreigners never have asked for missionaries. They have done everything they could to keep them out of their countries, yet the missionaries have forced themselves forward, and often under the cannon's mouth erected their churches! They trust in God for protection, but when there is a test of his special care, they have to fall back on the government. God will not even give a friendly warning to a missionary running straight into an ambush of cannibals. If it had not been for American energy in pushing directly against the Boxers, the entire company of ambassadors and missionaries would have been massacred.

It strikes one of good plain common sense that it is better for missionaries to keep away from countries where they are not wanted, and confine their energies, and the use of the vast sums of money raised for missions, at home where so much needed.

These "pagan" peoples have religions of their own, perfectly adapted to their wants, and their morality compares favorably with Christians. If the young fledglings of theological schools continue to go, they must adopt new methods. Now that the "poor benighted heathens" have learned the value we set on a missionary, they will go into the kidnaping business, and there will be less safety for missionary and traveler or no safety at all.

Greatness.

In the common acceptation of the term, "greatness" conveys the idea of political height, statesmanship, position, etc., as a congressman, senator, president, king, or emperor. But true greatness may include either or all of these. It means largeness, broadness; noble manhood and womanhood; generosity, benevolence, love and kindness.

Men and women are only great when they use their energies and intellect toward doing noble acts, toward leading lives of true greatness. If they are fortunate in the accumulation of wealth and can use it to the advantage of less fortunate fellow-men, not lavishly and extravagantly, but systematically and appropriately, always where it will do the greatest amount of good, such persons are greater than the average king or president.

Generosity does not consist of giving indiscriminately to all applicants for aid, but in the proper and consistent use of the means at one's command for the good or assistance of the needy. Generosity leads man to speak not bitterly but kindly of and to the fallen, the weak and despondent. It inspires man to become great in this one sense. But kindness is the one great and leading gift to produce greatness.

One may hand his money out to a beggar as he would toss a bone to a hungry dog, and the world, seeing, will call him generous. Or, having many millions, if he gives fifty thousand dollars to a church they call him benevolent, but if he has such a surplus that he can corner any commodity he chooses and does so to make an extra million, his benevolence and generosity are but sham. No man works a corner on an article of use that he does not do so to raise the price and force the customers to pay it.

There may be shrewdness and sagacity but no real greatness in the average millionaire. There is more of it found among the common people who give an occasional dollar to their fellows who are in need than can be found in the ranks of the aristocratic "400" we hear so much about.

Strength of character, kindness and trueness of principle are the greatest factors for the unfoldment of the best within man, and coupled as they always are with a spirit of progress will produce true greatness for the present and the eternal future.

Let us learn to be unselfish, unprejudiced; kind and sympathetic; generous without hope of remuneration; let us be true as the laws or principles of Nature; let us be as great as the whole of being from whence we came. This is Spiritualism without frills and tucks, pure and simple.

No Dishonest Mediums.

Says a prominent Spiritualist, "There are no dishonest mediums." Would to heaven this were true. Would to heaven the millers, the bakers, the grocers, the druggists, the doctors, the lawyers and everyone else were honest, but this assertion, though coming perhaps, from an honest soul, is very erroneous.

If all men and women were honest there would be no dishonest mediums, and Spiritualism would stand for about all that can be known of a future existence, and its advocates, lecturers and mediums would be looked upon as sacred sponsors of the loved ones who have passed from this sphere of existence, message-bearers from spirit friends, by the whole world, but this is not the case, and because of this human failing many who possess medial powers and who ought to hold such powers as too sacred to prostitute, become so base and so reckless as to give out that which they know to be false, and the cold, prejudiced world of human beings begin to look upon the whole institution or system as a humbug and delusion. This is one of the mightiest walls that Truth has to contend with. This has not only been true of Spiritualism but of every other new truth that has sprung up in all the ages of the past of which there is any record, and no one should expect Spiritualism to be an exception to the rule.

We are sorry there are dishonest mediums, but we know there are mediums also, who would rather starve than be untrue to the gift of their medial powers.

Our Constitution's Guarantees.

Not satisfied with indirectly compelling the tax-paying public to help support religion and the church, by the exemption of church property from taxation, the godly school board of Topeka, Kansas, has issued an order compelling all children in the city schools to attend religious exercises and take part in the same. The resolution making the request for the order issued by the board was drawn up by Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, who gained some cheap notoriety by editing for one week a Topeka daily paper, to show the world how Christ would run a paper.

Full of the true "evangelical" spirit, which denotes more of the spirit of popular religion than of Jesus, this godly man and the school board apparently have no respect for the rights of those who do not believe the Bible and who object to having their children take part in religious exercises.

A son of Mr. Phillip Billard has been suspended because he failed to take part in these exercises, and the board refuses to reinstate him.

Failing to secure an order from the school board permitting his boy to return to school without reading the Bible and repeating the Lord's Prayer, Mr. Billard filed suit to compel the Topeka school board to readmit his son. Mr. Billard cites in his petition that he has for many years been a heavy tax-payer in Topeka, and has been a payer of taxes to sustain the schools of this city.

In his petition Mr. Billard says: "About the month of December, 1901, it began to be publicly understood that religious exercises were to be conducted in the schools of the city, and were to be made obligatory upon all pupils, and affiant thereupon instructed his son to pursue his studies as usual during such exercises and not to participate therein, affiant being conscientiously opposed to such a violation of the letter and spirit of the state constitution, his son sharing his views in that regard; that, Jan. 9, for the sole reason that affiant's son quietly and unobtrusively pursued his studies during said religious exercises, which constituted a form of worship consisting of prayer, the singing of religious songs, the recital of the Lord's Prayer and reading from the Bible, and did not participate in said form of worship, the principal of Quincy School suspended affiant's son from the privileges of the school."

If the case be lost in the lower courts, steps have been taken by the Topeka school board to carry it to the State Supreme Court.

It is to be hoped that if the case be decided adversely to Mr. Billard, he will carry it, if need be, to the highest tribunal of the land, that it may be settled whether the guarantees of our National Constitution are of any effect or not.

Morally, and by the letter of the Constitution of the United States, a board of education has as good right to compel school children to listen to, and take part in, exercises including the reading and reciting of characteristic selections from Paine's Age of Reason, and Robert G. Ingersoll's lecture on Voltaire, as it has to order the reading and reciting of selections from the Bible, and the singing of hymns saturated with evangelical rot.

If such an "infidel" order were issued, the godly evangelicals would raise a howl that would reverberate from Maine to Mexico—but as it is only the "infidel" ox is gored, that is all right and proper. Such seems to be the orthodox views of ethics and human rights.

The Church's Predicament.

If we may rightly judge from the reports and editorial comments of the secular press, our Presbyterian brethren are in somewhat of a quandary over the revision of their creed. To Spiritualists it would seem the correct thing to do to pitch the whole old confession of faith into the waste basket of obsolete things, or, better and more appropriate still, cast it into a burning fiery furnace, where it would surely be "purified as by fire."

The horridly abhorrent dogmas of the old creed are of such a character that they would disgrace any decently respectable Devil who had any regard for his moral character and his good mental and ethical judgment; much more are they dishonoring to a good, wise and loving God.

The Inter-Ocean, which seems to lean toward old-fashioned orthodoxy in its editorial expressions, says that the Presbyterian committee on creed revision has maintained a wise reticence regarding its deliberations. However, if the committee's conclusions be judged from some recent indications given by Dr. Herrick Johnson, the acceptance of them by the church must be regarded as extremely doubtful.

Dr. Johnson states that "the expression of revelation as contained in the Westminster Confession" has been slightly modified. His use of the word "revelation" instead of "inspiration" doubtless indicates the nature of the modifications. For these two terms are the shibboleths of the "new theology" whose influence is chiefly responsible for the attempted revision. The distinction between these two words may seem wire-drawn to laymen, but it goes to the heart of the whole matter.

The Westminster Confession is built upon the affirmation, put forward in its first chapter, that the Bible is "immediately inspired of God." Its framers adduced texts from the Bible to support its every position. They held these texts to contain absolute truth and to be divine authority. They made the "Supreme Judge" of all questions of faith "the Holy Spirit speaking in Scripture."

The advocates of the "newer theology," of which Dr. Heber Newton and Dr. Lyman Abbott may be named as conspicuous and moderate exemplars, decline to accept the Bible as containing absolute and particularly inspired truth. They admit it contains a "revelation," but they also hold that the scriptures of other religions likewise contain "revelations."

They find in the works of Confucius, of Plato, of the great poets and philosophers generally, "revelations" more or less valuable. They would class the Bible with these works of human genius—at their head, perhaps, but still with them—and would deprive it of its unique position as the only book believed by Christians to be actually "inspired of God."

Christianity's foundation is universally admitted to be the miracle of the incarnation. The evidence of that miracle is contained in the Bible. It is of itself a miracle so incredible to merely human reason that it is difficult to believe that serious and truthful men would have ventured to record it unless the power of "inspiration" impelled them to do so against their purely human judgment.

Thus it would appear that if the Presbyterian church is prepared to abandon inspiration it would thereby pave the way to abandonment of the miracle of the incarnation. When confidence in the special knowledge of the witnesses is lost, then faith in the thing to which they witness falls to the ground.

It is hardly possible, however, that the Presbyterian or any other church, whatever the vagaries of some theologians, will abandon inspiration and the miracle of the incarnation. In so doing they might well continue to be teachers of ethics, but they would no longer be Christian teachers of Christianity.

As Spiritualists it is none of our fight, but as onlookers interested in human and humane progress everywhere and among all parties and sects, we feel impelled to keep close watch on all apparent attempts to ascend to higher ethical and religious grounds. The spirit of the age is crowding old orthodox beliefs and dogmas on every side, and the life and growth of Christian denominations depend on their advancing with the progress of modern scholarship and thought. They must let go the untenable doctrines that were once held to be the veritable truth of God, and must give way to the higher and better views of advanced thinkers to-day.

Calling these newer views "vagaries" will not render their acceptance less imperative, if the church would retain in any great degree its hold on the modern mind.

The predicament of the churches is, they must march with the progress of scholarship and thought, or be left behind to dwindle into a state of petrified desuetude.

IMPORTANT LECTURES.

As previously announced, we shall soon publish three highly interesting lectures: One on "Psychic and Astral Development," by Countess Constance Wachtmeister. Another on "Dreams," by the great English psychic and scholar, C. W. Leadbeater. Another, equally as important and interesting, by the guides of Cora L. V. Richmond, on the "Twentieth Century Fulfillments." It was a mistake, in announcement of a lecture by Col. Olcott. The one announced was published in December last, and created such an interest that the large edition printed was exhausted in a few days.

"The Spiritualism of Nature." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. Price 15 cents. For sale at this office.

1848 An Anniversary of Deeds, 1902

NOT WORDS ALONE.

Chicago Spiritualists and their friends are invited to make ready to attend a benefit for the mediums' home established at Reed City, Mich., by the National Spiritualists' Association. It will be given on Saturday evening, April 5, in the Auditorium Hall, No. 77 Thirty-first street.

The programme from 7:45 to 9:30 o'clock will consist of music and messages by excellent talent, after which there will be dancing until 2 a. m.

Every medium in the city is asked to co-operate towards the financial success of the enterprise. The object sought is of greater importance than the gain of any individual, or single coterie of men and women. Let there be no jealousies but rather a worthy rivalry as to who most can work and best agree. No other sect wholly neglects its worn-out workers.

Admission to programme and ball, 50 cents. The tickets of admission will be tasty in design, and belong to the purchasers as souvenirs of the evening. Friends in the city or state who are unable to attend may add their contributions by sending orders, accompanied by cash, to Geo. B. Warne, chairman, 4203 Evans avenue, who will return souvenirs to the applicants.

All mediums who will aid in this effort, are asked to forward their names and numbers forthwith, to W. J. Elmo, 3117 Wabash avenue who will see that they appear on the advertising matter which will be widely scattered.

Executive Committee: Geo. B. Warne, W. J. Elmo, A. H. Bliss, A. J. Cutler, Ervin A. Rice, J. Kirby Smith, T. S. Russell, Charles E. Quinlan, Mrs. J. R. Francis, Mrs. H. A. Cross, Mrs. Ella Johnson Bloom.

HOME CIRCLE EXPERIENCE

The following is a synopsis of my experience of spiritual manifestations in the home circle.

For several years I have been investigating the phenomena of Spiritualism, but without much satisfaction, although I traveled nearly from coast to coast in search of truth, and many times I participated in these so-called home circles, but with the exception of three or four times did not receive anything worthy of any notice; but last spring, 1901, I happened to meet two ladies of my acquaintance at a sociable, and among others matters we spoke of Spiritualism and home circles, and I promised these two ladies, Mrs. H. Wulf and Mrs. Dr. Oxford that if they wished to form a circle I would be glad to attend regularly, which I did, as the following will show.

March 20, 1901, we had our first meeting at Doctor Oxford's residence. At our meeting were present Mrs. Wulf and daughter, Mrs. Oxford, son and nieces and myself. Manifestations were raps and answering of questions by raps, and we were informed that after thirteen meetings we should have some nice manifestations through my mediumship, or organism, and apparently an Indian spirit seemed to try to control me and talk, but I did not give up to the forces.

At the second seance those present were Mrs. Wulf and daughter, Mrs. Oxford and niece and myself. At this seance some spirit or force tried to control the hand of Mrs. Oxford, but for some reason no writing was received. Raps as before, and at times it looked as if there were clouds of vapor arising and floating through the room.

Seances three, four and five were like the second seance, but seances six and seven, present Mrs. Wulf and daughter, Mrs. Oxford and myself, on asking questions the table would answer by moving from one to another without being touched, and I requested the force to have the table follow me, and it did, a distance of about eight feet until I could go no further on account of the wall.

At seance eight, those present were Mrs. Wulf and daughter, Mrs. Oxford, niece, and myself. After some rather forcible movements of the table, we found leaves of some small plant like spring cress on the table, and Mrs. Wulf had several on her hair and dress, and on investigating we found the force to be the spirit of an Indian that that brought those leaves, and at times we could smell the aroma of flowers, but where it came from no one knew. We could hear voices also, but could not understand anything, and concluded to get a trumpet to assist us and the forces, and before we concluded this seance our table, which was always in the center, was raised up and turned upside down, and slid down on the body of the niece of Mrs. Oxford until it fell on the floor. After setting the table right again it followed me to some extent around the room, and questions were answered by very loud raps.

At seance nine those present were Mrs. Wulf and daughter, Mrs. Oxford and niece, Mr. Schoenfeld, Lee and J Rau and myself. The only manifestations were raps and answering of questions.

At seance ten, present Mrs. W. and daughter, Mrs. O. and niece, Mr. Rau and myself; the manifestations were very loud raps and shaking of the table. On examination we found a number of leaves and a few little white flowers on the table. The table again moved to and fro and followed me across the room and was turned over into my lap.

At seance eleven, present Mrs. W. and daughter, Mrs. O. and myself, and as I had received the trumpet from Newport, Ky., we hung it up under the chandelier. We could hear voices but not strong enough to understand anything that was said. Questions were answered by raps.

At the twelfth seance, present Mrs. W. and daughter, Mrs. O. and niece and myself. During the week Mrs. Oxford had been informed through automatic writing that the spirits would give some surprising manifestations through my organism. We concluded to get a little cabinet which consisted of two curtains of some black, light material, behind which I took my seat. After this we laid the trumpet on a little stand in front of the cabinet, as the forces were quite boisterous with the table, I requested them to desist, but the forces either did not understand or did not care. A little bunch of various colored leaves was laid at my feet in the cabinet, and little balls of light could be seen floating around near the cabinet. Mrs. W. was partly controlled and seemed to be taken to a battle-field and a voice spoke through her and said: "Take this to my mother. Good bye." Apparently it was a dying soldier trying to send a locket to his mother.

At seance thirteen, present Mrs. W. and daughter, Mrs. O. and niece and myself, manifestations were rather forcible movement of the table. The trumpet lay outside of cabinet on a stand, with mouthpiece toward cabinet. Lights could be seen and at various times the folks outside the cabinet noticed what seemed to be building of forms. On request not to be so boisterous, the forces got worse and I went out of the cabinet and told the forces that I would stop the noise, and lay on the table crosswise, full weight of 165 pounds, thinking I would stop it, but in the wink of an eye I was thrown back into my seat in the cabinet and again I tried to stop the table by laying on it, and used my feet as braces on the floor, but it was of no avail, I had to desist or have the table go to pieces, and finally it quieted down and answered questions by raps. As the trumpet is in three sections of about 12 inches each, we neglected to put it together right, and we heard no voices for some time, until the last, but could not understand anything.

At seance fourteen, present Mrs. Wulf and daughter, Mrs. Oxford and myself in the cabinet. The table began to rap instantly and answer questions, parts of hands and faces could be seen, also lights floating through the air. Finally the trumpet could be heard, as a voice said, "Jacob, my dear son," and when I put the question who else was here the voice said, "Gretel (my sister) is here, also in fact we are all here," and after a bit other voices could be heard which said, "Mollie and Lucy are here," both being sisters of my wife, and one of the voices seemed to cry, at least it sounded that way, and to close various questions were answered.

As it had got too close to mid-summer and was extremely warm, we concluded to discontinue until fall, when weather would be cooler, and as the Doctor objected to having seances at his house, we concluded to look up some other quarters where we would continue our search of the truth, but being unable to get any one interested, we concluded to have our meetings at Mrs. Wulf's house, and on October 3, we had our first meeting at Wulf's. Present were Mrs. Wulf and daughter, Mrs. Oxford and myself, and at the first and second meetings we received no manifestations outside of raps and answering of a few questions, and as the house is very small, and the rooms also, and there being too much disturbance, we concluded to fix up a little seance room in the coal and wood house, further away from the house proper, which we did forthwith. We covered the sides of the shed with some black stuff and put the cabinet in the southwest corner of the little room, got some new chairs, table and music-box, and soon were ready for further investigation.

October 17, third seance in new quarters, present Mrs. W. and daughter, Mrs. Oxford and myself. Manifestation, many leaves and some flowers were left on the table, also some one tried to speak through the trumpet.

October 21, fourth seance, present Mrs. Wulf and daughter and myself. Manifestations rather boisterous, movements of the table (through the spirit of an Indian, who also brought the flowers, as we found out). I felt something drop in my hand, on examination found some flowers and quite a lot of leaves, which were evidently brought from somewhere, as Mrs. Wulf had nothing like it in her garden; and some one tried to speak through the trumpet.

Fifth and sixth seances same as the fourth.

Seventh seance (manifestation), present Mrs. Wulf and daughter and myself. Beautiful chrysanthemums, raps and answering questions, spirit lights and speaking through the trumpet by my mother and sister, who also promised better manifestations in the future, and advised us to get more truth-seekers in the circle. We also concluded if practicable to have two seances a week.

Eighth seance, present Mrs. W. and daughter, F. H. Alexander and myself. Manifestations, beautiful chrysanthemums for each of us, boisterous movements of the table; as I tried to hold the table down, as I did once before, I was thrown back into my seat in the cabinet; also speaking through the trumpet.

Ninth seance, no results.

Tenth seance, present were Mrs. Wulf and two daughters and myself. Four flowers were brought by Indian, the table was thrown to and fro. I also requested Indian to bring flowers with long stems and leaves, which he did in following seances.

Eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth seances, no results to speak of.

Fourteenth seance, present Mrs. Wulf, daughter, and myself. Indian brings two beautiful roses; have about half-hour conversation with mother and sister. The roses and fern leaves were just as nice as if they had just been plucked, and dew-drops could be seen on them; when light was made the table was turned upside down on request, and turned back again.

Fifteenth seance, no results.

Sixteenth seance, present Mrs. Wulf, daughter and myself. Manifestations, beautiful roses and fern leaves, speaking through the trumpet, also the Indian tries to speak, as I accused the Indian in former seances of not always telling the truth, he says through trumpet, "Me good, me no lie." The spirit of a little girl came and instructed me to bring the New Year's greeting to Grandpa and Grandma Arneman, also to mamma, which I did next day. This was the most pleasing and satisfactory seance held so far.

Seance seventeen, present Mrs. Wulf, daughter, Mrs. Oxford and myself. Indian brings beautiful roses and fern leaves, different voices are heard through the trumpet, questions are answered through trumpet, also by raps on the table.

Seance eighteen, present Mrs. Wulf, daughter, Mr. F. H. Alexander and myself. The spirit of a lady by name of Stuart came and talked to us about 20 minutes, also a spirit called Emma, and tried to write on a slate and afterwards we found her name written between the slates in beautiful handwriting; also the spirit of a colored man whom I knew in earth life about thirty years ago, and he answered all questions by lifting the table and dropping it on the floor instead of rapping.

Seance nineteen, present Mrs. Wulf, daughter, Mr. Haines, Alexander, two gentlemen named Stakke, from Beresford, S. D. Manifestations, quite forcible movement of the table and answering questions through raps. The spirit of the colored man brought what appeared to be the heads with the seed of broom corn, and on inquiry stated that he had got it on a farm near by, and I requested him to get something better for the ladies, as he promised he would, and he went and got some myrtle and seemed much pleased at what he had accomplished. The gentlemen from Dakota seemed to be very much pleased, as they evidently had never witnessed anything like it.

Seance twenty, present Mrs. Wulf and daughter, Mrs. Oxford, Mrs. Behm, Mrs. Pfeifenberg, Mr. Haines and myself. Manifestations, first the colored man, or rather his spirit, answered various questions and informed us we were to receive lots of flowers through the Indian spirit; then some one spoke through the trumpet, which was followed by a lady giving her name as Marie Stakke and a sister of the gentlemen from South Dakota, but she passed away about 26 years ago, and while speaking to this spirit the Indian guide made his appearance with a basket, and on striking a light (our seances were all held in the dark) the whole floor around and about me was covered with roses, carnations, myrtle, smilax and fern; there really must have been a small armful, and they were all as fresh as though they had just been plucked and carried through the rain. After answering several questions, the Indian left us; Marie Stakke talked to us again and told me to send her and father's and mother's love to her brothers and sister, and send them what she left on a little table on which we have the trumpet. On investigating we found she had taken some of the smilax and put it in the trumpet. When I asked her where she got the smilax, she said she took it off the table, as we had so much of it we could spare that much for her brothers. I think this was the most beautiful seance we had so far, and I shall take pleasure in reporting again later on of the progress we are making. Hundreds of minor manifestations took place during this time, which I have not stated here, thinking this would be enough.

Now, Brother Francis, if the foregoing manifestations were not produced by spirit forces, I would like to have some one explain to me how it is done, as my companions and myself would not have the patience we had during all these months, to deceive ourselves or one another. If those honest seekers of truth will get at this work with a will and perseverance, they can all accomplish like results, and if any of the readers of The Progressive Thinker wish a little information as to our work, I shall be pleased to answer all questions as near as I can.

I say there is nothing equal to a home circle.

This excellent Home Circle will be followed by one from Mrs. A. B. Severance, of Whitewater, Wis., and one from Edward Simonton, of St. Paul, Minn. Contributions in the same line of thought are invited.

ATTENTION, HEALERS!

The Illinois State Spiritualists Association would like at once the name of every person who is or has recently been actively engaged in the practice of magnetic healing, either in Chicago, or in the state. Kindly send name and address to the undersigned at 4203 Evans avenue, Chicago, without delay. Matters of personal interest to every individual identified with that line of work will follow from compliance herewith.

VALUABLE PREMIUMS.

AN INCOMPARABLE SPECIAL OFFER TO NEW SUBSCRIBERS, OR THOSE WHO WISH TO SECURE THESE TWO OF OUR PREMIUM BOOKS.

Two exceptionally valuable books will be sent out for twenty-five cents each, to every one who sends in a yearly subscription for The Progressive Thinker. The paper one year $1.00 and the two books 50 cents. Total for paper and the two books, $1.50. The paper one year and one of these books, $1.25. Or if you wish to secure an exceedingly valuable library, you can secure our eight premium books for $2.50. The paper one year and these eight books, $3.50. See second page, "Premiums."

One of the above books offered for 25 cents is entitled "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the other is Vol. 3 of "The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World." Both of these books are nicely and substantially bound in cloth. They are printed in bold, clear type, and will prove invaluable to every reflective mind. These are the only two books we offer at the price. If you desire any more of the premium books than the two offered then you can only secure these two on the terms offered on our second page. Such a liberal offer has never been made before by any other publisher on this earth, you will admit. Our eight premium books cannot be excelled in intrinsic merit by any other eight books you may select in the whole range of Occult and Spiritualistic literature. And as to their price it is only about one-sixth of the price of other works on like subjects. You miss the chance of your life in not securing these valuable books.

"The Mysteries of the Formation of the Earth, the Rising and Sinking of Continents, the Introduction of Man, and His Destiny Revealed in God's Own Way and Time." A work of deep interest, given through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley, by an advanced band of ancient spirits. Price $1. For sale at this office.

"Spiritual Fire Crackers, Bible Chestnuts and Political Pin Points." By J. S. Harrington. A pamphlet containing 70 pages of racy reading. Price 25 cents. For sale at the office of The Progressive Thinker.

"Historical, Logical and Philosophical Objections to the Dogmas of Reincarnation and Re-Embodiment." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. A keen and masterly treatise. Paper, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

"The Commandments Analyzed." By W. H. Bach. The Commandments are not only analyzed, but contrasted with other Bible passages, showing great incongruities. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

Malignity—How It Ruined Mary Ball.

I.

There is no condition of the mind that is more deplorable than that state commonly designated as malignity or unquenchable hatred. Milton says:

"I see thou are unplacable, more deaf
To prayers than winds and seas; yet winds and seas,
Are reconciled at length and sea to shore;
The anger, unappeasable, still rages,
Eternal tempests never to be calm."

That person who nurtures a cruel, relentless malignant spirit, is clasping to his bosom a monster that will blacken his spiritual nature, deaden his moral perceptions, hamper his intuitions, and effectually block the road of progress, and prevent the ingress of high and exalted thoughts into his soul.

"You do not now how hate can burn
In hearts once changed from soft to stern;
Nor all the false and fatal zeal
The convert of revenge can feel," unless you first become a brutal monster, a man-beast, or a devil; in fact, until then you cannot realize the awful condition of that person who manifests an unforgiving spirit, and who refuses to receive back into the family an erring daughter who plaintively pleads for forgiveness; who seeks with tear-stained eyes, and a heart that is surging with emotions of genuine sorrow and repentance, to be again admitted to the home circle; who supplicates, implores,—yea, cries to have the portals of her parents' hearts opened again towards her, that she may once more feel the sunshine of their love, and by noble deeds atone for her misstep in life; but who meets with nothing but repulses; who sees pointing tauntingly and maliciously towards her the hydraheaded finger of scorn, instead of the beckoning arms of filial affection, and who finally, after doing all that a penitent child could do to soften her parents' malignity, plunges into the dark abyss of despair—seeks relief from the horrors of her surroundings through suicide. She had said to her father:

"Thou shalt not force me from thee;
Use me reproachfully and like a slave;
Tread on me, buffet me, heap wrong on wrongs,
On my poor head; I'll bear it with all patience,
Shall weary out the most unfriendly cruelty;
Lie at thy feet, and kiss them though they spurn me,
Till wounded by my sufferings thou relent
And raise me to thy arms with dear forgiveness."

The father would not relent. Look at the sleuth-hound pursuing the innocent fawn; gaze upon the boa-constrictor coiling around the victim of its greed; look at the venom of the cobra, and at the deadly sting of the centipedes; gaze at all that is low, vile and devilish, and behold them all combined in one human being, a father who crushes with the coils of his hate the gentle spirit of his daughter.

As the tragic tale runs, which occurred many years ago, and which we select as one of the "purest" cases of malignity that ever existed, Mary Ball, a daughter of a well-to-do merchant of Wheeling, W. Va., was enticed from her home by a commercial traveler. By a false marriage, he induced her to come to Chicago. After arriving there she learned that the marriage ceremony which she supposed to have been performed, was false. Poor, deluded child, heart-broken, she immediately returned home, but her father positively declined to receive her. Almost distracted the disheartened girl sought refuge at Wellsboro, Ohio, with some friends. Her father, not content to let his wayward child alone, maliciously followed her, drove her from there, and she was then compelled to seek an asylum in Pittsburgh, and finally by the force of circumstances she was actually driven to a house of prostitution. Well educated, remarkably pretty, and with a soul that yearned for purity of life, her descent under the circumstances was really heart-rending.

The pathetic story of her difficulties with her father were written up in the Pittsburgh papers, and created at the time no little comment; but they did not bring a ray of sunshine to the heart of this despairing young girl; they gave her no hope—nothing on which she could clutch to keep her from sinking. In all the darkness of her soul while struggling to once more stand an honored member of society and the Home Circle, did she lose all regard for herself, nor the recollections of the days of innocence. Finally she gave way to despair! Her father's heart was closed against her like a granite rock; her mother, too, turned from her, and then she purchased a revolver.

Picture the agony of that young girl; see the dismal, sorrow-breeding clouds of her soul, as they shade her eyes, darken her features, and surge forth in her plaintive sighs, as tremulous as the emotions of pity that linger sweetly on the lips of an angel, who bends tenderly over the despairing victim of a father's heartless vengeance. Oh! how she regrets her wayward step, and how impatiently she watches the lingering moments on the dial plate of time, hoping the next one will come freighted with a message of love and forgiveness from the home of her childhood, so that she can step forward—REDEEMED! They come—each one—with only a wailing agony of despair for her poor lacerated soul. Finally she clasps the revolver desperately in her hands, and fires the fatal shot! Poor Mary Ball is no more on earth!

II.

The daughter, suffering acutely from the pangs of remorse, and her every emotion a wish to heaven for forgiveness, and her every thought prayer-crowned and rendered beautiful with aspirations that would be an honor to any of earth's children, it seems very strange that in this enlightened 19th century, her own father should repulse her; yea, more, pursue her with unparalleled venom, and throw obstacles in the way of her reformation. He should, on the contrary, have awaited her penitential return, with an anxious heart and outstretched arms. When the Arctic survivors returned to New York, it is said that Lieut. Danenhower, who had recognized his parents as soon as the vessels were near enough to distinguish faces and forms, waited for no gang-plank, but simply swung himself to the bridge of the tug-boat, where he was met by his brother-in-law, Schenk. After embracing and kissing him, his first question was, "Where is Rae?" meaning his sister, Schenck's wife, but without waiting for a reply he bounded towards his mother, whose arms remained outstretched all the while to embrace him, and after two years' weary watching and waiting, the mother and son were united in tears of joy. They remained in this touching position for several minutes without exchanging a word, when the manly fellow embraced his father and brother, who were also weeping. Returning to his mother, he said, "Mother, let us go into the cabin; I have so much to say to you."

Here were anxious parents awaiting the return of a son from the Arctic regions, and they greeted him with tender tones of endearment. Should not the return of a wayward daughter, from a more dangerous and appalling journey than the exploration of Arctic seas, receive a like tender and cordial greeting, while over her lacerated soul should be placed the mantle of forgiveness.

III.

Mary Ball, once in spirit life, met at the threshold those who had seen her aspirations as they surged heavenward as brilliant as the smiles of an angel; who heard her heart-rending prayers; who saw her pathetic struggle to be forgiven by her parents, and her earnest effort to be good and do good, and who gave her a cordial reception to a sphere where all her desires to advance will receive hearty approval and recognition. Verily, verily though a woman of the town, Mary Ball was nearer God, nearer the angels, nearer those wise sages who can survey the nature of each one, than her parents who repulsed her when she tenderly sought their forgiveness. Nurse malignity; nurse hate; nurse envy; nurse covetousness; and nurse an unforgiving selfish spirit, and you can no more enter the spheres of light, than a demon can. They are the currency of hells. TO DO GOOD, and BE GOOD are the currency of heaven. Choose this day between the two.

CONSOLATION.

My boy is dead. I lay upon my bed,
Anguished and worn; my stricken head,
Low bent with sorrow, and my whole self numb
With the agony that holds the spirit dumb—
And seals the font of tears. Grief's mailed hand
Closed on my heart and tightened, as a band
Is tightened by the waxing power—
Of wheel and thumb-screw.

In that awful hour,
The terror of the grave fell on me, dark
As night-slain day; rigid and stark
As the dead clay in the churchyard mold.
And o'er my fainting spirit rushed the cold
Of endless winter, with a burn'd out sun,
And forces spent ere half the work be done.
In the thick darkness that around me went,
The veil within my being's temple rent,
As tho', with noise of elemental strife,
Great forces warred. My soul's strained life
Faint on its cross, all motionless there hung,
While from spaces of the infinite were flung,
Swift as wing'd javelins the bitter gibe
And taunt demoniac, as tho' a tribe
Of devils scoffed at Love's bent head,
Crying, "What help hast thou? Thy son is dead!"
And 'neath the taunt my aching spirit sent Upward in agony the cry that went—
Upward from Godgotha—that same strain,
"My God! My God! hast Thou forsaken pain?"

After the cry, my spirit waited dumb,
And silent, for the answer that must come.
And all the anguish of my weary heart,
Drew back a little—that the nobler part,
The purer essence that had called on God
Might watch, unhamper'd by the aching clod.
Then thro' the dim arches of awaiting space
Trembled a strange effulgence. All the place,
Emptied itself to silence. To mine ear,
De-waxed of its material—came clear
True harmony; as when instruments of gold
Woo'd tenderly doth yield sweet music's soul
In mystic cadence. Or when voices ring
The gloria in excelsis, and a King,
Coming to his own, receives glad cheer
Of welcome.

Then, unto my spirit near,
A Presence drew, and a voice came. I lay
Sense-bound and still. "Behold another day
Approacheth. Arise and follow!" So spoke
The voice triumphant, as when the deep stroke
Of some grand tocsin sounds aloud the call
To conflict. My nature roused to all
Fulness of sensation, the numbed blood
Quickened and sped onward, as spring flood
Released from winter's hold, with strong
Tumult of on-rushing, foams along
Its channel. Obedient to the voice
I rose and followed, knowing no choice
Nor will in following.

Swift, to the room
Whose atmosphere devitalized held gloom
Of death, and naught save death, my spirit still Submissive to that Omnipresent Will,
Went softly. And preceding me the cry
Of a great love went, as homeward fly
Upon strong wings the weary birds to nest
And huddling young. Within my aching breast
Ever the wail, "O, Love! My son! My son!
Would God that I had died, and dying won
For thee full living. O, mother love! so bold
To grasp, cans't thou be impotent to hold?
Love vanquished Death at first, and can it be
That death at last o'er Love hath victory?"

Beside the bier, with the dead hands pressed
Within mine own, and the silent breast
Pillowing my brow, I crouched me down,
Even as plants bend earthward 'neath the frown
And lash of tempest. Then the Presence came
More nearly to me. The celestial flame
Of perfect Love, which is its essence, shone
Around about me, and my heart-sick moan
To silence still'd itself. The voice of Love
Breathed softly, as the nest song of a dove,
Unto my soul—"O, Grief! most manifest,
Hast thou no hope to soothe thy fever'd breast?
Can'st thou not balm thy heart with tears? Is pain,
Love borne, so omnipresent that the strain
Yields not to deeper loving? And can Truth
Show only beak and talons? Has thy ruth
No recognition of High God's decree
Of growth eternal?

"E'en as from the tree
Falls the dead bark, that fuller life may be
In wood and fibre, so the growing man
This earthly covering looseth. Thus only can
The true life quicken, with the larger beat
Of effort, and grand impulse to complete
Its course celestial. O, Love! cans't thou,
Out-reaching 'yond this mortal, even now,
Unto that strange immortal, which thy soul
Feels dumbly must transcend the mold
Which unto mold returns, cans't thou still think
That life, true life, shall end at the grave's brink?
That that strange essence which is born of God
Shall perish into nothingness, as this clod
Shall perish? That the great God of breath
And life yields sovereignty to death?
Living, thy son!—and shall live; e'en as God
Himself doth live, and operate in sod
Of earth, in pulse of air, in heat of sun,
And motion of the spheres that courses run
In spaces universal.

"And for thee,
In recognition of thy love, shall be
A sign in heaven; even thy dead child,
Who living in God's love shall send erewhile
The Love Divine, thro' human love, thy life
To guide and elevate into the noble strife
Of effort Godward. Humanity shall stand,
And thro' pale Sorrow's lips demand—
Of thee full brotherhood with thy dear son,
And thou, the claim admitting, shall have won
A triumph o'er the grave. And Love in thee,
Shall hold Death robbed of his grim victory.

THE IMPOSSIBILITY OF CREATION

An Exhaustive and Philosophical Argumentative Essay Controverting the Theistic Idea of Creation.

BY PROF. J. S. LOVELAND, OF SUMMERLAND, CAL.

All genuine Theists, or believers in a personal Deity, regard him as the creator of the material universe and all that in it is. This also includes all intelligent beings whether they are angels, devils or men. All are from him. If God did not create them, they are not dependent upon him, are under no obligation to him for life, and he has no right to govern or control them. If he assumes to do so, it is the assumption of the despot. Of right they can demand reciprocity. They owe him no more duty than he does them. But how did these angels, devils and men originate, or are they eternal?

I suggest these queries to stimulate thought as the proposition before us is the impossibility of creation. For the sake of the argument, and to show its perfection, I admit the existence of the God of the Theist, and all his assumed attributes or perfections. He is Eternal, Omnipotent, Omniscient, Omnipresent, Immutable, Holy, Just and Good. In essence, he is Spirit. But no definition of Spirit has ever been given, yet the above named attributes are the qualities of the Infinite Spirit. All Theists, however, affirm that matter and spirit have nothing in common. They are two totally unlike substances. Matter has not a single attribute of spirit, and that not a single property of matter. This position is absolutely necessary for them to take, for the admission of a single element common to both would render distinction between them impossible. Theists make this a strong point in arguing the immortality of the soul. We will, therefore, lay down this position, as one of the fundamentals of Theism, that God, in his essential nature, embodies not one single element of matter. He is pure spirit, whatever that may be. Hence, his activities must be of a purely spiritual character. Spirit can no more perform the functions of matter than that can of spirit. This position is self-evident.

But some of our modern dreamers tell us there is no functioning power in so-called matter; that what seems to be the working of material substance is only the outer show of the invisible activity of spirit. This is simple assumption without one particle of proof, and right in the face of prima facie evidence. For instance, the fact and law of gravitation can be stated and comprehended only in terms of matter. The same is true of electricity. But the most fatal defect for the Theist is that it annihilates his assumption of a creation; for, if all the motions and workings in, and of, what we call matter are all spirit, and matter is simply the algebraic x or shadow of the real spirit worker, then all that is, is eternal or unbeginning, for spirit never began. Spirit is God and God is eternal, hence creation would be impossible.

But there is the principle of motion in matter. It attracts, (pulls) directly in proportion to quantity and inversely to the square of the distance. This puller is matter or spirit. If matter, then spirit is unnecessary. If spirit, then, as said before, there was no creation, for spirit is confessedly eternal. Attraction, repulsion and motion are all embraced in the power of matter in accordance with the verdict of the common sense of mankind, therefore spirit cannot possess them unless it is a form of matter. But, if spirit and matter are in essence one, then that one is the infinite God, and there was no creation.

The N. S. A. very consistently proclaimed in their creed, "We believe that the phenomena of nature, physical and spiritual, are the expressions of infinite intelligence." The cyclone, the volcano, the plague or the cholera are the expression of the same nature as the supremest triumphs of human genius. And the unspeakable horrors of war, the reign of murder and the vast category of crimes, and the consequent misery are from the same attributes as the most glorious works of benevolence and good will. In other words, all the vast phenomena of active nature are the actual workings of the living God. Reduced to its last analysis, it is the broad affirmation that in reality there is nothing but God. Nature, human, animal, vegetable and mineral, constitutes the vast instrumentality by which God outworks his manifold attributes. But the Theist will not admit these logical deductions from his own premises. He must have a creation, and that creation put out of joint in some way so as to account for the existence of evil and suffering.

With these preliminary remarks as a necessary introduction, I will now submit the positive argument. Prior to a creation there must have been infinite space—an infinite void so far as physical substance was concerned. But this infinite space was filled with an Infinite God. He had spent an eternity in self-contemplation and enjoyment. Being infinite in nature, infinite in attributes, nothing could be added to his being or his consciousness. There could be no new thought, no new element of knowledge. Hence, there could arise no new motive or incentive to action. There was nothing outside of him, and his essential nature was "the same to-day, yesterday and forever." His motives must be unbeginning, and could have no more influence at one period of time than another. Hence, the impulse to act could be no more potent at one time than at another; and a changeless God could be no more amenable to the impulsion to act at one time than another. God, an immutable God, could never begin to act, for beginning to act implies a stronger impulsion than had existed before. But nothing existed but God. He was alone and had been inactive from eternity. No impulse could arise, except in himself, and could not arise there without a change from inaction to action. But a perfect God, an immutable God could not change. Creation was not necessary to his happiness or his perfectness. If it was, he had been imperfect and unhappy for an eternity. And if the non-creative, or do-nothing period was a perfect one, then he has been imperfect ever since.

But it is self-evident, from these positions, that a perfect God could never begin to act. Hence, he could never create, for that would necessitate the susceptibility of God to an influence of a motive which for an eternity had had no influence on him whatever. Here was God. For an eternity living in, of, for, and by himself. Doing nothing. Incapable of change, because immutable; yet suddenly rousing up and creating the universe. A motive, or a number of them, which had been utterly powerless for uncounted ages, in a moment became potent enough to stir the Immutable Omnipotent to the inconceivable task of creating from nothing or from himself the material universe in six days. No wonder that he was tired after such an effort and wanted one day for rest. After an eternity of idleness such a work might well make him weary.

But the very statement is prima facie demonstration of the impossibility of creation. Here is the immutable, changeless God, "the same to-day, yesterday and forever," changed in a moment, (with absolutely nothing to induce the change,) from eternal inaction into an infinitely active doer. The lethargy of eternal ages gave way to ceaseless work, for the creator is also the upholder. He is in and through all things. As Paul wrote, he is "Ta Panta en Ta Panta," the all in the all. He counts the hairs on all heads and numbers the sands on the seashore. He feeds the sparrows. Eternal inaction has changed to ceaseless action. The changeless has changed. The immutable has become the mutable. The will power of God has become weaker, or the motive power stronger. The infinite consciousness of the infinite God has, all at once, been transformed into the material universe. Spirit has descended to matter. But these are conceded impossibilities and, therefore, creation is impossible, for it involves them all. And there is no way for the Theist to wiggle around them. He can find no new motive in the mind of his God for creating, or doing anything else for that matter.

Mr. Theist, of what did God make the universe? Of himself or nothing. We may dismiss the nothing hypothesis at once. Nothing can ever become something or something nothing. And as God was the reality in space, the universe must have sprung from his own being. It must be a perfect manifestation of his essential nature. Rev. Hosea Ballou said that God made the universe of himself, and he naively asks what else he had to make it of. But, if the universe is an output from God, it can have nothing but what is in perfect harmony with him. Its substance, properties and motions are, all of them, the nature and acts of God. He is not at war with himself. Every tendency of everything and being must be a manifestation of some characteristic of God. But the Theist can by no means accede to these positions, for they array God against himself. They make perpetual clashing in the Godhead itself. But they demonstrate the impossibility of creation. A perfect God never did, never could create a universe which is at war with itself.

The Theist seeks to evade this insuperable objection. He talks about a moral law, free will, and transgression on the part of devils and men. But hold on, Mr. Theist. Who made these men and devils? Why, God, of course. Have they any powers or tendencies which God did not give them? If so, where did they come from? Was there any such thing as moral evil, or any other kind of evil prior to creation? No, of course not. Well, then, evil is in some way the result of creation, and as God is the Creator, evil has come directly from him. It is the direct, foreseen result of the powers and tendencies which he created, and called man or angel. There was no other being but God in existence before creation. For all the results of creation God is alone responsible.

But it is an impossible supposition that any being, much less a perfect God, could or would create the powers or conditions which would produce eternal war and suffering in his dominions. A good God could never allow suffering, and a holy one could never allow sin. Therefore the world of sin, war, confusion and pain was not made by God.

Some shallow minded Theist will say: "O, God created man upright, but he made himself sinful." How? "Why, he violated God's law." Was the law good and holy? "Yes, of course, for God made it." Was man good and holy? "Yes." Was there anything but goodness and holiness in the creation as it came from the hand or heart of God? "No." Then sin or moral evil was impossible. Nothing can change itself into its opposite. As there was not a tendency or impulsion to evil in the entire universe of God, evil was impossible unless God was evil. But, he is Holiness itself, says the Theist. He is also Goodness. Then he did not create this world, for it has much, very much of evil. Hence, our world was never created. Creation is an impossibility. If one world is uncreated all worlds are uncreated.

Many Theists, seeing the absurdity and impossibility of this old assumption, say: "O, we don't believe in any such a creation as that. We know that evolution is a truth, and all the creation that has occurred is that God has framed and fashioned the material universe according to his own pleasure. And he is still carrying on the work of creation in the boundless space."

This is a denial of actual creation, and an admission of the eternity of matter. Its God is only a Supervising Architect working upon pre-existing material. But the same difficulties exist as to God's beginning his constructive or forming work as in the prior theory of absolute creation, and a great many more which Theism has never solved and never can.

As matter, material substance, is eternal, it has properties of its own. It is self-existent. Its properties, or attributes cannot be destroyed or altered for that would be annihilation. Hence, God, in working upon or with matter, must be limited or conditioned by the nature of matter, hence, he could not be omnipotent, for he is subject to the properties of matter. And, as it is eternal and progresses, we know not how many innate forces and tendencies, how do we know that every change and motion in the material universe is not the result of the innate forces which pertain to it as a self-existent substance? There is not a particle of evidence to the contrary. And it is just as impossible for a just and holy God to co-operate with an imperfect, unholy nature, as to create it in the first place from himself or nothing. Hence, creation is impossible with this view. It completely destroys the idea of a God with the attributes of infinite perfectness. Indeed, it cannot be shown that this God is of any use, or subserves any purpose in the economy of things. If he acts at all, it is just to that extent which the attributes of matter will allow him. If any of the motions of matter are the effects of its innate energies, then all of them must be placed in the same category. If any of the forces of nature are effects of God acting, then all are, and the whole machinery of nature is the instrumentality through and by which God outworks himself. This, of course, makes him the doer of all the evil as well as the good. But that is impossible, for a perfect God. Hence, God never created or formed this warring nature, and he has nothing to do with it. The rage of the tempest, which overwhelmed Galveston, killing hundreds or thousands, was not the wrath of God any more than the volcanic outpour, which overwhelmed Pompeii and Herculaneum.

God is not the slaughterer of the Filipinos or the Boers; and he did not murder by tens of thousands the unfortunate Hindoos in the late famine. But if he governs the world he did all these things and countless others of the same character. But all these are evidences and manifestations of imperfection, therefore, God did not do them; is not the ruler of nature, or he must have prevented their occurrence. And, if he had created nature, he would have rendered such things impossible. There is no more a God Ruler than there is a God Creator. Both are impossible. As I have shown, action by an intelligent being is always preceded and is dependent upon motives, which are impulsions to action. Action is the embodiment of will or volition. There are motives, volition, action. In an immutable being, if the motives or impulsions to action, were powerless at one time to secure volition or willing, they would be equally inefficient at all times. Therefore, God could never have a motive sufficiently strong to induce him to create unless he changed, or in other words ceased to be the immutable being he is claimed. But such a God could never cease to be, could never change.

From every point of view, the conclusion is forced upon us that existing substance was never created, and that creation is an impossibility. If any modern Theist, whose God is only the great architect of the universe, and whose creation is limited to form and does not include substance, should attempt to argue this question, it will be necessary for him to define very carefully what are the essential qualities and possibilities of uncreated substance. And also to point out what pertains to any material organization which does not inhere in its own essence, but has come from some ab extra being which is not included in what we term nature.

It is very necessary that we know just what the assumed God is doing, what he can or will do, so that we can govern ourselves accordingly. We don't want to trench upon the domain of God, and we don't want to be waiting for him to do what belongs to ourselves. In fact, we want to know what this assumed God amounts to anyway, as he is neither a creator nor upholder of the universe. We are sure that this God notion is the grand reason why so many are doing so little or nothing to uplift humanity. It is the ready excuse for selfish indolence, whether the God be called Jehovah or a returning spirit.

In conclusion, I suggest to all thinkers that the argument of this article completely overthrows every phase of the so-called evidences for the existence of a God, which are to be found in all the works upon Natural Theology; from the Design argument of Paley to the anthropomorphic plea of the New Thought philosophy which is held by some Spiritualists. There having been no creation—material substance being eternal, and its properties and tendencies being eternal also, Paley's designing and Plato's geometrizing have nothing to do with the motions and workings of the physical universe.

The Theist must prove that our world is a created and governed one, before he can adduce it or its workings as evidences of a Deific personality. All the prima facie evidence and facts are ours. The Theist is compelled to start with unproved assumptions and inferences, and hence his conclusions are glittering non sequiturs. But now is not the time to unmask the fallacies of Theistic reasoning. In a future article I may notice some of them.

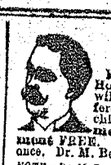
J. S. LOVELAND.

SPIRIT LIFE NOW.

A Message from Frances E. Willard.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:—Since I have entered into a larger view of life, and look around and see the great necessity for radical reform in earth life, I feel like putting forth a mighty effort to try and convert the world to my views of radical reform. But common sense tells me that there are "many men of many minds," and as it has taken years of time to bring about the present condition of mankind, which is not altogether deplorable, so will it take time to produce any very great radical changes in their habits and modes of living. Anyway it is a matter of education, and an education of slow growth, but the results are sure and certain. All of us who hold utopian ideas for a more perfect manifestation of life on the physical plane, will certainly have the pleasure of seeing them fulfilled, when the era of the brotherhood of mankind is at its height and in full maturity. Therefore it becomes us as true reformers to concentrate our efforts and assist in bringing about the conditions necessary for this era.

It will never cease to be, to me, an ever recurring regret that whilst in earth life I lacked the courage to acknowledge my belief in Spiritualism. Whilst the position I held as leader of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union would have been jeopardized by such an avowal, and much good work lost to the world by it, yet personally to me the benefits would have been much greater and I could have been more useful in other fields of reform work, which would eventually have embraced all true reform.



The question might be asked, am I as radical on the liquor question as formerly? Yes, but greater progression has broadened the field, and as I said before, there is a more expansive view of all sides of the question, and now my greatest efforts should be and are to assist in bringing all humanity into more fraternal relations than now exists. When man feels, and his whole being is saturated in fraternal love for his fellow man, and this love has conquered all selfishness, then and not until then will there cease to be manufactured, bought and sold, anything that will injure my brother or my sister.

Yours ----ngly,

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Restores Eyesight

"Actina," a Wonderful Discovery Which Cures Diseased Eyes, No Matter Whether Chronic or Acute, Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. This wonderful treatment takes the form of a Pocket Battery and is known as "Actina." It is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient. There is no risk of experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable. This wonderful remedy also makes the use of spectacles unnecessary, as it not only removes the weakened and unnatural conditions of the eye, but gives it a clear vision.

A. O. T. Pennington, Massachusetts building, Kansas City, Mo., says: "Actina,' cured my mother of cataracts and cured me of asthma.

W. J. Read, 500 Prospect avenue, Kansas City, Mo., says: My sister was STONE BLIND and "Actina" restored her sight perfectly after oculists had failed.

L. B. Bailey, New England building, Kansas City, says: "Actina" cured me of catarrh and is the best thing to cure colds.

W. R Owens, Adrian, Mo., writes: "Actina" saved me from going BLIND.

Robert Baker, 80 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill., writes: I should have been blind had I not used "Actina."

This method of treatment has been given a thorough test and thousands have been cured after being pronounced incurable.

Advice FREE. FREE treatment at office. 'Actina" is sent on trial to out-of-town people. Call or write for Prof. Wilson's 100-page Treatise on the Eye and Its Disease and disease in general free on application. Address New York and London Electric Ass'n., Dept. T, 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require. Every item sent to us for publication, should contain the full name and address of the writer. We desire to know the source of every item that appears. This rule will be strictly adhered to.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Bear in mind that all notices for this page are cut down to suit the space we have to occupy when received.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Bear in mind, please, that Isa Wilson Kayner's address is at No. 112 Winchester avenue, Chicago, where she can be addressed.

Stella A. Keys writes from Worcester, Mass.: "The People's Spiritualist Society held its usual meeting Sunday, and there was a good audience. Mrs. Belden was our speaker and test medium. She gave a good lecture at both sessions, and the tests were mostly recognized. We had our usual semi-monthly supper and a public whist party in the evening, and gave prizes."

The Chicago Tribune has the following: "A dispatch from Harper, Kans., says that an alarm amounting among the more superstitious to almost a panic has spread here because of what are believed to be the prophetic inspired words of a 5-weeks'-old infant. The child began talking at the age of three weeks. Its first attempt was made on Feb. 20. Its words were clear and incisive, and it has kept repeating them at irregular intervals during wakefulness ever since. They are: 'Six years of famine in Kansas.' The sentence is taken by many to be a message from the Deity, to be disregarded by hearers at their peril. Already a number of farmers are leaving the state, firm in the belief that a long drouth is approaching. The child shows unusual signs of intelligence, is well formed, and of normal growth, but parrots the words like a phonograph. It can say nothing else. The father, John Shelby, is a laboring man. Hundreds have traveled here, and waited for hours to secure confirmation of the story from the baby's lips."

G. S. Klock informs us that Max Hoffman has left Lincoln, Neb., and will locate in Milwaukee, Wis. He has met with success at Lincoln.

Geo. W. Mosey speaks approvingly of the work of M. C. Jessup, at Elwood, Ind.

The Chicago Chronicle has the following from Lafayette, Ind.: "The noted will case of William Case, contested by forty relatives of the decedent against the National Spiritual Association of New York, to-day was set for hearing in Tippecanoe circuit court on March 12. Case at his death in July 1900, willed his estate, valued at $20,000 to the Spiritual Association and to Eugene M. MacDonald, editor of the Truth Seeker, the official organ of the society, to promulgate the work of the Spiritualists. Case's body was cremated in Cincinnati two days after his death and his ashes scattered to the winds. The relatives bring suit to set aside the provisions of the will. It is believed the estate will be wasted in litigation."

G. N. Hilligoss writes from Lake Helen, Fla.: "I notice in the report of my marriage at the Southern Cassadaga Camp, a typographical error that I wish corrected. I was united in marriage to Mrs. Louis Klotter of 2400 W. McMicken avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio. The report as printed reads 'Blatter,' which is very misleading to the many friends of us both."

The Lansing State Republican says: "Reverend Minot J. Savage has declared his belief in spirits. The particular evidence which he offers just now is the fact that Mrs. Piper told him that in a certain drawer he would find papers left by his dead son which ought to be destroyed. He says the message came through Mrs. Piper while she was in a trance and that she knew neither of his son nor the papers. The incident was truly remarkable, but it is called upon to prove rather more than it will bear. Dr. Savage has been a foremost investigator of psychic phenomena in this country for a long while and his affairs must be pretty well known and discussed among those who work with him. Of course Dr. Savage does not rest his case upon the one instance, but he believes he has sufficient proof that an impalpable, invisible something is left over after death which is able to affect living matter in this world. That something possesses memory and a sympathy with the living. If this is true now it must have been true for the countless centuries during which man has been substantially what he is now. Why have our dead friends declined for all these centuries to do anything which appealed to a scientific man as evidence of their existence? Evidently though, Dr. Savage rests his conviction upon what he believes to be sound scientific reasoning. He has a vast weight of evidence to move before he can carry any considerable number of people with him.

E. G. L. S. writes from St. Paul, Minn.: "The St. Paul Alliance, one of the strongest spiritual societies of the ...ties, has held very successful meetings this year, having been presided over by local talent, with decidedly good results. It has organized a very fine lyceum for the benefit of the little children and I notice the older ones seem to take great interest in it, judging from the size of the adult class. As a leader in the lyceum work, Mr. Jos. P. Whitwell could not be excelled. He is always affable and kind in his manner, and possesses the magic power to instill confidence into the minds of the little ones, thus helping them to so beautifully express in their own words the lessons they have from the study of the hour. We all realize what a great benefit each little expression of their thoughts given again and again will be to them in the future in giving them self-confidence to speak before the public if called upon. A little library has been recently added to their work for the benefit of all who may desire to investigate the truth of the beautiful philosophy of Spiritualism.

The Chicago Chronicle has the following from Mishawaka, Ind.: "While in a trance for a period of thirty hours Miss Myrtle Dohner, daughter of a wealthy farmer, claims to have experienced a remarkable transition from earthly scenes to the heavenly domain. In a statement given to Rev. W. S. Tracy, pastor of Zion's church, she says she was first ushered into a heaven where Christ sat upon a throne in magnificent splendor, surrounded by hundreds of angels waving palms. There were also many others all robed in spotless white, and myriads of children graced the scene. Christ beckoned unto her, and the entire populace of the brilliant realm sang praises to the Lord. Next she was led into a different world. All was black and in a lake of fire. Satan's subjects were writhing in pain and begging for mercy. Satan smiled in derision at the suffering ones and asked Miss Dohner to follow him, but a guide interposed. Miss Dohner is one of ten who passed into a trance at a revival meeting in Salem church. While in this state she spoke the names of three persons, declaring they had just become Christians. The three joined the church at that hour, but the girl was four miles from the scene where the conversion was recorded."

T. A. Wentworth, Springview, Neb., writes that he is surprised to find so many Spiritualists joining hands with the ministers, teasing their God. So many prayers injure God's hearing, and that may be the reason so few prayers are answered. All Spiritualists believe that we are part of one great whole. Now, if we pray, it is a part of God praying to another part; or God praying to himself for aid or strength from himself. The man who prays to God to do what it is his own duty to do, is a shirk. Right dealing between man and man will do more good than all the prayers of christendom. Matter can't exist without spirit, and spirit can't exist without matter; each is worthless without the other.

The Boston Traveler has the following: "On the 10th day of last June, while alone in my room, having first arranged the 'conditions,' an alleged spirit announced itself to me, which proved to be that of a person I had last seen about two weeks previous, a well and hearty man. The spirit said he had been in the spirit world less than 24 hours, giving me his name, the cause as well as the time and place of his death, together with many other particulars. He told me there was a news item in the newspaper, announcing his death and the cause, giving me the name and date of the paper, which I afterwards verified. He also said the funeral services over his body would take place the next day, June 17, at his former home, and indicating also the hour, inviting me to attend. In connection with verifying the news item I also found in another paper, in the usual column, a notice of his death, as also the date and hour of his funeral, corresponding exactly to what the alleged spirit told me, and of which I had possessed no previous knowledge or intimation however remote. Now, Mr. Editor, and all others who are disposed to receive this as a truthful statement, which I am prepared to make oath to if necessary, I submit without fear of contravention that there is no theory yet invented by the pigmies of materialistic science that can explain the how or why of the information coming to me in the manner described, except and only upon the assumption that it was the decarnated spirit of the one it purported to be, or some other spirit acting in his behalf."

T. S. Russell writes: "The Englewood Spiritualist Union is arranging for elaborate services, March 30, to celebrate the anniversary of Modern Spiritualism. Emma Nickerson Warne will be in charge, assisted by Mrs. Maggie Waite, Mrs. J. C. Chesnut and other noted workers. There will be services at 2:30 and 7:30. An excellent program, music, recitations, lectures, messages, lunch, etc. Come to the feast."

The Chicago Inter Ocean has the following from Butte, Mont.: "A remarkable instance of a dream coming true, or a demonstration of clairvoyance or other psychic phenomenon, comes to light here with the death of W. S. Mann, a stranger in Butte, who died of paralysis on Feb. 23. There was nothing among his effects by which his relatives could be located except several unsigned and undated letters from his wife. The body was held by an undertaker in the hope that the relatives might be found, and the day following the death a letter was received at his hotel. This was turned over to Undertaken Duggan. It was from the wife and had been written a few days before her husband's death. The letter was again unsigned. About a week later another letter was received from the wife, having been written at Hot Springs, Ark. This letter followed Mann about the country, but arrived in Butte after the body had been buried. It was dated Feb. 23, and was a heart-breaking message. Mrs. Mann wrote that she had a most shocking and realistic dream that night when she saw her husband in his coffin. She dreamed further that he had been buried alive, and that when the grave was opened the body was found turned over in the coffin. Still another letter came, and in it she said she had the same visions three times, and she begged an immediate answer from any one who might get the letter. Undertaker Duggan was so impressed with the letter that he had the body exhumed to satisfy himself that Mann had not been buried alive. Decomposition had set in, and the undertaker says he could find no evidence that Mann was not dead when he was buried."

G. S. Klock writes: "The word God was formed by the people to designate that which they worshiped. There was a time when there was no such word as God. As long as there has been people there has been something worshiped. Was it the word God? No. It was a thing or a condition. Now, we would like to have some of the God-knowing people tell us who and where our God is. We have never found him in form."

Mrs. A. C. Priest writes from Spokane, Wash.: "I have, at my own expense, opened a public reading room and hall for the benefit of Spiritualists and investigators. Sunday meetings at 7:30 p. m.; Thursday circles, 7:30 p. m.; developing circles, Tuesdays and Saturdays; spiritual readings by appointment."

The Baltimore American says: "Rev. Minot J. Savage makes no secret of his belief in apparitions and only a few days ago in the pulpit in New York gave an interesting account of incidents within his own experience of what seemed to return from the other world. Dr. Savage has also expressed his faith in the genuineness of the phenomena witnessed in the presence of Mrs. Piper, of whom so much has been of late said and written. Kellar, the magician, speaking this morning of Dr. Savage, said that he was undoubtedly sincere and certainly was one of the most brilliant men in the country, 'But,' said Mr. Kellar, 'almost everyone may obtain the faculty of conjuring up an apparition. It is a common experience to close the eyes and see faces—the first face invariably a pretty one. But in a moment it is displaced and an ugly, sinister face appears instead. Now, by long practice, I have acquired the power of retaining before me the pretty face, or any face I may choose. I can hold the one face as long as I please, and no matter how far away, I can at will summon the apparition of any person I have ever met. The person is as distinctly outlined and visible before me, for as long as I choose, as he or she could possibly be in real life. Now, why may not Dr. Savage's faculty of seeing apparitions be allied to mine?' Mr. Kellar believes also that Mrs. Piper's phenomena are genuine, inasmuch as there is no willful deception."

A. L. Van Norman writes from Meridian, Miss.: "The Progressive Thinker has come to me every Wednesday, so regularly now for over a year, that I would feel as though I had lost the dearest friend I had, should it stop. I look for it with a great deal of pleasure every week. I have since my childhood been a freethinker. I never could believe in vicarious atonement and blood salvation as taught and preached from the pulpit. I have been a staunch and firm believer in Spiritualism for over fifteen years."

The Evening Observer of Dunkirk, N. Y., says: "Henry F. Schmul gave a demonstration in hypnotism, magnetism and suggestive therapeutics before the members of the I. O. O. F. in their hall in the Monroe Block, Thursday evening. He gave illustrations of hypnotism in the walking state as well as in the sleeping. Among the different phases of the science he gave demonstrations in anasthesia, and illusions in catalepsy. The subjects he worked upon were taken from the audience. After hypnotizing one subject he caused him to pass into a state of anasthesia. He stuck pins and needles into the flesh but the patient was unconscious of feeling. The first subject was hypnotized in less than thirty seconds simply by Mr. Schmul looking at him. He placed him in a state of catalepsy in which the body became rigid and placed the feet and head over the backs of two chairs. Mr. Schmul sat upon the body of the man, but his weight had no effect, the body remaining stiff and motionless. He hypnotized two other young men and to each he told them that their best girl was in the hall. They approached each other and kisses flew thick and fast. When Mr. Schmul brought them out of the state they were locked in each other's arms. He caused others to drink salt water making them believe it sweet, and to throw away sweet water which he told them was bitter. Mr. Schmul is an accomplished hypnotist. A conversation which he held with the late Dr. Henry Raymond Rogers at the Electricity Building at World's Fair at Chicago, caused him to make a study of the cosmic and occult sciences."

Sue J. Finck writes: "I thank Mr. Tuttle for his views in your Symposium, yet I think Spiritualism might be considered a 'sacred fact.' It is in my opinion wholly a personal matter as to the use that is made of it; at least thousands who have accepted the fact make it such. I also thank Sar'gis for his 'A Lesson and Its Uses,' in a late Progressive Thinker. May both live long to advocate the fact of Spiritualism free from human fallacies."

E. B. Candy writes from Princeton, Ind.: "We have no society here, but as often as possible we meet the friends in Evansville. They have recently organized a new society with thirty charter members, known as the First Church of Communion of Spiritualists, with Brother McElroy as president, and Jas. Vandyke, secretary. Their meetings are held in A. O. U. W. hall. I will endeavor to get a society started here, as several are getting interested and are anxious to investigate."

Mrs. C. A. Rodgers writes: "I have the whole set of premium books, and they are a continuous pleasure. I never tire of reading them, they are so full of instruction. It was a grand thought when you made the price within the reach of the poorest."

The Evening Leader has the following: "We regret to learn that a bill has been introduced in the state senate which will have the effect to drive out of Virginia those practitioners known as Osteopathists. We shall not enter into any discussion as to whether or not Osteopathy is a science, but we are satisfied, from our own investigation, that in some cases at least, notably in chronic nervous troubles, rheumatism, and the like, the treatment is often most successful. There are many men and women of good sense who will testify that they have been greatly benefited by this treatment, and we do not believe that there is one who will testify that he has been harmed by it. There are only five or six such practitioners in Virginia and so far as we know to the contrary they are honorable men, and faithful to their duty. We know that this is true of the two practitioners in Richmond, and it seems to us a hardship and an injustice to drive them out of the state. As we understand it the Osteopathists are entirely willing to be examined by a board, competent to pass upon practitioners of that character, and are willing to pay their license as other practitioners pay. Of course they could not pass the examination of the State Medical Board, because, for one thing, they do not use medicine in their practice. We believe that the public should be protected from quacks and fake doctors of whatever character, but these men are neither quacks nor fakirs. They hold that a certain manipulation of the bones will drive out certain diseases, and they are graduates of the school that teaches this so-called science. The general assembly should certainly not exclude the Osteopathists until the members have made a thorough investigation and satisfied themselves that it is contrary to the public welfare to permit them to practice."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

E. W. Sprague and wife are now doing missionary work in Indiana. They wish to hear from parties wishing their services. Anyone sending them addresses of Spiritualists in their respective localities will do them a great favor and also assist the work. They have a little time for camp-meeting work still open. Address them at Rochester, Ind.

George Friend writes from Toledo, O.: "It affords me great pleasure to announce that the Independent Association of Spiritualists is enjoying a feast of knowledge which is being disseminated through the lips of Mrs. Marian Carpenter, of Detroit, Mich. She has been our speaker and medium since Feb. 1, and will continue with the association through the month of March. She has been with us on previous occasions and it is only justice to her and the cause to say that the guides speaking through her organism are fearless and outspoken in their denunciation of priestly rule. Arrangements are being made to further the knowledge of spirit return by a grand anniversary meeting on March 23, when the association will occupy the Memorial hall proper, which is on the floor above where the present meetings are being held, and which has a seating capacity of nearly one thousand. On this occasion the hall will be artistically decorated by Nelson G. Trefry & Co., florists and decorators, of this city, also flowers and ferns from members and friends of the association. Special music, both vocal and instrumental, will be a great feature of the occasion, Mrs. Marian Carpenter and her husband, Mrs. Geo. Dailey, a fine elocutionist, of Detroit, and other talent will officiate on this occasion to make the day one that will long be remembered in Toledo and vicinity."

N. A. S. writes from Toronto, Canada: "Oscar A. Edgerly, who served the Toronto Spiritualist Association during January and February, has been re-engaged for March, April and May. Mr. Edgerly's lectures have given great satisfaction, being of a broad and liberal character, strongly impregnated with common sense deductions, clear and logical reasoning, and unbiased by creed-bound influences and the numerous relics of paganism which are still cherished to a surprising extent by the great variety of religions having sway in the present century. He believes it is high time the various churches of our modern civilization were entirely discarding the great mass of absurdities which are found in the so-called sacred writings and church dogmas and creeds. Mrs. J. A. Murtha is also engaged for the months of March and May, as test medium, and both precedes and follows Mr. Edgerly's lectures with spirit messages. Mrs. Murtha is giving excellent satisfaction, and the Sunday and week-night meetings are crowded. Mrs. Murtha will serve the Toledo society during April. Our association has started a free reading-room, which is open every afternoon, and is doing a good work for Spiritualism. The cause is steadily acquiring adherents. Toronto is an excellent and agreeable field for good, honest mediums, but proves a very undesirable place for fakirs."

Dr. L. P. Griggs writes from Wrencoe, Tenn.: "If you hear or know of some obscure medium that is good at finding things unseen by the physical eyes, commend them to me. I have got a tough problem for them in a fouracre field which if they can solve, there is $1,000 in it for them. I have tried a number of the notable ones and they have failed utterly. Some of my experiences with them would make interesting reading."

The following is a pleasant tribute to the work of Prof. W. M. Lockwood, by the Spiritualist Society of Columbus, O. The president, J. D. Arras, and the secretary, C. H. Parsons, write: "Tonight closes the two months' engagement of Prof. W. M. Lockwood, of Chicago, Ill., with our society, and we feel that we cannot let him go without some expression of our appreciation of his logical and instructive lectures, which bring the philosophy of Spiritualism into the domain of Naturalism, and establishes the fact of spirit return by linking together matter and spirit through the ceaseless changes of cosmic evolution. He leaves us with the best wishes not only of the board of trustees, but of all who have had the pleasure of listening to his interesting and instructord-Herald.

F. J. Raab visited Port Hadlock, B. C., and held circles there with good results. He has a devoted love for the truth, and desires to spread the same.

L. S. Hoover speaks well of the mediumship of Mrs. Maude Colby Kuboock, of Muncie, Ind. She is controlled by her well-kpown grandmother, Mrs. Colby Luther, and under her inspiring influence is able to do a grand work.

Lady Wanted for Thought Transference.—Telepathy, or transmission of thought between two minds widely separated, is now a scientific fact, as much so as the wireless telegraphy of Signor Marconi. This, the writer and others has repeatedly and conclusively demonstrated, but he desires the co-operation of an intelligent, educated lady for further experimentation. The object is simply in the interests of science and the personal pleasure derived through benefits to mind and soul. The lady must possess a quick, susceptible, idealistic mentality; strong powers of concentration, and that element of spiritual harmony indicated by strong, affectionate nature, musical talent, and love of the beautiful, the artistic and poetic. Good physical health and a wholesome personality are absolutely essential for marked success in this work. She should possess strong sympathies and have that inherent, subtle feeling of reaching out of the heart and soul; for it is this that indicates a spirit that reaches out across space, that annihilates distance, that makes the far become near, the absent to be present, through an established, perfect and harmonious rapport. The nature should be bright, sunny, hopeful, sanguine, optimistic, aspiring; and sufficiently intuitional that in the very reading of this there will flow into the mind something of the writer's personality, vague, subtile and indescribable though it be; sufficiently intuitional that you will distinctly feel a sense of harmony, a something you can scarce grasp and yet that seems to awaken responsive chord, as though the soul of the writer spoke and your soul listening, heard. Kindly address for further information, Lock Box 47, Cleveland, Ohio.

Adair Welcker, Attorney-at Law, writes from San Francisco, Cal.: "In the opening article of McClure's Magazine for March, 1902, the statement is made that Prof. Loeb of Chicago, conceives life and electricity to be the same. He believes it also to be the fact, that as the result of the magnificent work done by him and those assisting him, life may be prolonged. With the last statement I agree, but as will appear from the pages of a manuscript script book called 'His Verses For Those Kindest Hearted,' copies of which were presented by me several years ago to the libraries of Royal Societies in Ireland, Scotland, and England, to the libraries of their chief universities, and to the chief universities of America. With the first statement I do not in all respect agree. In one of the poems therein contained called, 'How to Overcome the Last Enemy,' are these words: 'For electrified is action, and (transmuted) will, through deeds, come a force to end all dying,' etc. Action is, indeed, as has been seen by Prof. Loeb, the result of the operation of electricity; for as in the poem stated, electrified is action, but back of electricity is something more subtile, which determines its character, as to whether the manifested electricity will be negative or positive. This subtle something is thought. Of thoughts there are two kinds: One kind causes the world to most highly honor and pay those willing, for such rewards, to take the life of their fellows; the other is the kind of thought requiring the highest known form of human courage, whose final end is, not destruction, but creation, and out of which comes the discovery of the X-ray, and such work as has been done, by Prof. Loeb, for which the world has not capacity sufficiently to reward him."

Will C. Hodge is now visiting D. Edson Smith, at Santa Ana, Cal. He will go from there to Los Angeles.

A meeting of the chartered societies and members of the State Spiritualists Association of Missouri will be held at De Honey's Hall, 3944 Olive street, St. Louis, March 31, at 1 p. m., for the election of officers and the transaction of other important business. All Spiritualists who are interested in an efficient state association are cordially invited to be present and take part. By order, Dr. Green, Secretary, 518 Commercial Building.

District Judge Holmes, of Des Moines, Iowa, directed the issuance of a writ of mandamus to compel the state board of medical examiners to issue certificates to graduates of the S. S. Still College of Osteopathy in Des Moines in accordance with the provisions of the statutes. The board had refused to issue certificates to graduates of any college of osteopathy on the ground that the standard of the schools was not satisfactory.

F. P. Wilmarth writes from Springfield, Mo.: "The many friends of C. M. and Josie K. Folsom will be glad to learn that Mrs. Folsom is fast recovering from her long five months' illness. Mr. and Mrs. Folsom are honest mediums and they desire to hear from societies desiring their services; also from camps for the coming season. Secretaries of societies and camps can get their terms by addressing them at 1136 Robberson avenue, Springfield, Mo."

Mrs. Mary C. Von Kanzler writes: "I went as speaker and test medium to the First Association of Spiritualists in Philadelphia during October, December and January. This association is about to celebrate its fiftieth anniversary as a regularly organized society. It has in connection with it a Children's Progressive Lyceum, also a Young People's Union, and a most valuable aid in the Women's Progressive Union. It owns its church to meet in, and it has a pleasant dining-room in which to serve dinners and lunches. The officers are efficient. Captain Keffer, with his nearly eighty years, a veteran of the G. A. R., and also a veteran Spiritualist, bears the honor of being the president, and Mr. Frank Morrill is one of the most earnest spiritually interested workers in this society. Mr. Groom, conductor of the children's progressive lyceum, and Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader, guardian, and Clara Zimmerman, secretary, are doing a good and lasting work for the young. The Young People's Union, Bert Benner, president, and Amelia Gunderman, secretary, is a success."

Mrs. Mary Flanders writes: "I received 'A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands,' and allow me to thank you for it. I think it very interesting and instructive. The Progressive Thinker comes to me every Tuesday, and I don't think I could live without it. It is a great comfort to me."

Mrs. Mary C. Von Kanzler writes: "I came to Elmira, N. Y., and assisted in organizing the First Spiritualist Unity Society during the month of last November. I addressed large audiences twice every Sunday of that month, and twice during the week days. Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds and Mrs. Wridet, the trumpet medium, did most valuable service during December and January. February I returned to the society and continued my labors so well received before. This society has purchased a church formerly owned by the German Evangelical society. It was built in 1876, and is of brick, and is now undergoing repairs and will be dedicated some time in May. This society admitted the public without a fee at the door, and from the first they had raised a fund for the treasury by a membership fee of one dollar. This fund was constantly increased, the collections proving sufficient to pay the expenses of speaker, hall, etc. As president, Mrs. Louis Dahl knows how to inspire every member. Her good husband is a most valuable aid, and not only supports his wife in word, but goes into his pocket for the cash to move the wheels of progress. He gave $500, and Mr. Benjamin Rhodes gave the same amount, while one good lady gave her new gold watch and chain. There are others who will give just as freely to pay for this beautiful church building, centrally located on Church street."

Ex-Congressman O. M. Kem writes from Montrose, Colorado, about Dr. Bland's book, "In the World Celestial," as follows: "I have read many works along occult lines, but I have read none which I appreciate so highly as I do this. It is clear, concise and free from the absurd theories so often found in books pertaining to the occult. Being personally acquainted with the hero, I can believe that the book is substantially a record of his personal experiences, which gives it great additional interest and value. All who contemplate emigrating to that country beyond the 'great divide,' should read this book. It will help to clear away the accumulated mythological mists of centuries, which have shadowed and made dismal the path of the pilgrim. This delightful book answers the question, 'If a man die shall he live again,' by clearly showing that in reality there is no death." Price $1.00. For sale at the office of The Progressive Thinker.

There will be a union celebration of the 54th anniversary of the advent of Modern Spiritualism, under the auspices of all the local societies of Cleveland, O., Sunday, March 30, at Pythian Temple, Huron street, near northeast corner of Erie street. Good speakers, mediums, singers, music, etc.

A. W. writes: "The cause in Jackson, Mich., progresses favorably. For the past five Sundays we have had Mrs. Emma N. Moore, of Elwood, Indiana, whose in defatigable labors have endeared her to us all. Her lectures, messages and psychometric readings gave great satisfaction. The society has engaged her services for the month of April. Last Sunday evening before dismissal, the president of the society presented her with a beautiful bouquet of carnations, and an address signed by all the members of the executive committee, thanking her for her unwearied efforts to promote the cause and welfare of the society. Mrs. Amanda Coffman, of Grand Rapids, Mich., will be with us for the last Sunday in March."

The secretary writes that Mrs. Sarah E. Bromwell has been elected again president of the National Sunlight center Club. A very pleasant evening was spent and refreshments served by the president, whose home was beautifully decorated with flowers. It was decided to hold an informal dance at the Great Northern Hotel, April 1, at 8 p. m. Tickets only 50 cents.

INDIANA NOTES.

Good News of Spiritualism in Rochester.

We feel that the readers of the best and most widely circulated Spiritualist paper in the world should know of the progress of the cause in Rochester, Ind.

In September, 1891, one man fitted up a hall for the purpose of holding Spiritualist meetings, and the first speaker was J. S. Loveland, the second, Emma Nickerson Warne, third, Mrs. Lena Bible, fourth, Prof. C. W. Peters who remained for one year, at which time we contracted for a new hall of our own, furnished it with carpet, pictures, electric lights, etc., and seated it with opera chairs. This hall is centrally located and well maintained, and for ten long years the gospel of truth has been proclaimed from its rostrum by some of the most prominent workers in the cause of Spiritualism, and to-day the Spiritualists in this town and county are numbered by the hundred though a great majority of them are, as elsewhere, cowards to their conscience, and dare not take a prominent part in the promulgation of a truth that every man, woman and child should be familiar with. But notwithstanding all this, the First Spiritualist Church of Rochester is recognized as one of the leading organizations of Rochester, and the hope of the future grows brighter and brighter every day.

Rev. Harry J. Moore, who has been the pastor for more than a year, is accomplishing a very good work, and he speaks eloquently to large audiences, and he is recognized by saint and sinner to be the most accomplished pulpiteer of the city, and being a Bible Spiritualist, after the manner of Moses Hull, the orthodox people are disposed to accept his teachings as being preferable to that of their own ministers.

Mrs. Moore is a very nice lady and she is a constant worker, always ready and willing to do her part in the public service and in any part of the outside work.

Last Sunday night Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague conducted the services, and received twenty-six persons into membership, and the ceremony was beautiful and every way appropriate. After Mr. Sprague gave each one the right hand of fellowship, accompanied by words of recognition, Mrs. Sprague pinned upon each one a rosette of white and red ribbons and a fragrant flower. Indeed it was a happy time and one that will long be remembered by all participants.

Not the least of the successful features is the lyceum that convenes every Sunday morning for the consideration of topics that are interesting and profitable to all, and the march with flags and banners at the close of the session is always beautiful and inspiring.

The funeral orations delivered by Mr. Moore have been largely attended by church people who are pleased with the manner in which he gives expression and explanation to truths that are pleasurable and acceptable to all fair-minded persons, and in this way we are making inroads upon dark theology.

The N. S. A. is doing a work through Mr. and Mrs. Sprague that is bearing precious fruit, and when the tide of public opinion is turned in favor of Spiritualism, as it will in the very near future, the seed they are sowing will bring forth an hundred fold.

THE PRESIDENT.

A Glance at Texas.

Little by little we learn to make use of every condition and event in life, and build better each day than before. We realize more fully than ever the great good to be done our cause by regular routes arranged and made by our teachers—similar to a Star Course of lectures.

Mr. and Mrs. Kates entered our state, Feb. 23, at Marshall, and organized a society; they visited Houston, held six meetings in four days; Galveston was the next place; here they held meetings in a former Methodist church which has just been purchased by the local society, of which Mr. John W. Ring, president of the State Association, is speaker. The property consists of two lots of ground, a two-story frame residence, and a large two-story brick temple, with lecture, library, lyceum and reception rooms. Consecration services will be held on the anniversary Sunday.

Flatonia was visited; San Antonio, the quaint Mexican city, enjoyed their ministrations two nights; Austin, the capital city, was next in line, and they are continuing their good work toward Ft. Worth.

These excellent workers teaching the beautiful philosophy of Spiritualism, and demonstrating its scientific phenomena as Mrs. Kates does in her sweet, charming way, are a mighty force for the growth of our cause. Good as their work is, it is made even more effective by their example of true noble living. Their practical business management, which enables them to pay their expenses and salary, and to put money in the treasury, is a point to be especially noted.

They have made a route through Texas, and reluctantly we let them go for we want them to "do so again." When each state organizes and forms a route through its territory, then such good workers can go from east to west and north to south, to an advantage. Let us hasten to this end.

We now need some earnest, devoted workers who wish to locate and take charge of the interest created. Address Secretary, Mrs. Nettie M. Wood, 2011 Washington street, Houston, Tex., if you are loyal to our cause and want to establish a society and remain with it, caring for its interests. COR.

THE WONDER.

Ho! Clear the way! There passes one
Whose head is high; who seems to say:
"Behold the wonders I have done!
The riches that I have to-day
Are but the fair rewards of all
The wisdom and the worth I've shown;
If I am great and ye are small
'Tis due to strength I have alone."

And people, gazing at him, sigh
With envy, thinking all his gains
Were due to wondrous cells that lie
Within the compass of his brains—
Forgetting that if here or there
Chance had delayed or turned away
He might be humbly toiling where
The luckless thousands are to-day.

The artist, pale and ragged, stands
Before his picture. Luck has ne'er
Put colors in his slender hands,
Chance drew no line or shadow there!
There talent and soul-strength are shown,
But people, awed and wondering, glance
At him who might be poor, unknown,
Save for some lucky turn of chance.

ASPHODEL BLOOMS AND Other Offerings.

BY

EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storiettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 285 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The Author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.

The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."

That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."

Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest."

Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered, hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

--OR--

DIAL PLANCHETTE.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than seven years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive Communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt. D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I send communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

NEW EDITION

THE LYCEUM GUIDE

BY EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

Do you want to organize a society for the social, intellectual and spiritual advancement of the children and adults?

THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM

furnishes all you desire.

Do you want a self-sustaining society, founded on the basic principles of the spiritual philosophy? You have it in THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

It furnishes a system of evolution of internal growth, not the old cup and pitcher Sunday-school.

It has something to interest and advance every member, and those who are most active in teaching are the ones who learn most.

NO SPECIAL INSTRUCTOR REQUIRED.

THE LYCEUM GUIDE gives every detail needed for effective organization, and for conducting the society when established.

It has Golden Chain Recitations; the prettiest songs and music; choral responses; a service for a Band of Mercy; calisthenics; how to make the badges, flags and banners; marching exercises; full instructions in conducting the exercises, with parliamentary rules, etc.

Many Spiritualists living in isolation, have formed lyceums in their own families; others have banded, two or three families together, while large societies have organized on the lyceum platform, and found great interest in this self-instructive method.

Do not wait for a "missionary" to come to your assistance, but take hold of the matter yourself, procure copies of the GUIDE, and commence with the few or many you find interested.

Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle (address, Berlin Heights, Ohio) will answer all questions pertaining to lyceum work.

The price of THE LYCEUM GUIDE is 50 cents, postpaid, or by the dozen, 40 cents each, by express, charges paid by receiver. Address

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Albert T. Lyndecker: Q. Why is it that spirits when they impersonate, seem to be troubled with the disease with which they died?

A. This question is answered by the following quotation from "Mediumship and Its Laws," page 98: "It is difficult, perhaps impossible, for a spirit passing from earth life by a violent or painful death, not to have the sensation of its lost earthly experience revived in itself, and reflected on the medium when it thus comes in direct relation to the earthly sphere. This is quite distinct from that form of impersonation which causes the medium to imitate the death scene as a test of identity. One is under the direct control of the spirit; in the other the spirit is the subject of preceding conditions."

Mrs. Mary E. Bradburn sends locks of hair and asks: What are these two young girls best fitted for?

A. They are too young to determine this fateful matter. Were it possible to mark out for each a path to go, it would be injudicious and of greatest harm to them. Diverse as they are, unlike in tastes and yet with strong sympathy for each other, their future will lead them in widely diverse ways. It is not now to speculate on what that future may be, but to prepare for any emergency which may come. The one with dark hair should be encouraged in her studies and held back in her social life; the other held back in her studies, or at least not crowded, and encouraged to overcome her shrinking from contact with the world.

Roy J. Wheeler: Q. (1) When was the Inquisition?

(2) Does the Bible say that in olden times spirits came down from God and married the daughters of men?

A. (1) The Inquisition dates from Theodosius' reign in the latter part of the fourth century, and was more or less active in suppressing heresy, and removing those obnoxious to the governing powers. What is usually meant by the Inquisition is the culmination of all that is horrible and fiendish in the "Modern Inquisition" which dates from the papal bull of Sixtus IV., 1478, and its main object was to exterminate or expel the Jews and Moors from the kingdom. In 1483 Torquemada, confessor to Queen Isabella, having poisoned her mind against the heretics, and silenced every emotion of pity, mercy or feeling, was appointed by her, chief inquisitor. During his term of office it is said over 10,000 persons, of all ages and ranks, both men and women and even children were burned at the stake. Although no record was kept, it is estimated that 100,000 were subject to torture, and many times that number to confiscation of property and exile. Under one of Torquemada's successors, L'lorente, in ten years, 2536 were burned and 47,000 tortured.

The result was the expulsion of the Jews and Moors, the suppression of heresy, which meant the death or silence of every one who dared to think and the remaining of a nation, ignorant, credulous, superstitious, cruel, savage, unthinking; slaves of the priests.

(2) The text of Bible you seek is Genesis 6:2: "The sons of God saw the daughters of men, that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose."

This curious revelation has caused a great deal of comment and speculation. It is thrust into the narrative of the wickedness of men which led to the deluge. It was believed by the writer, or he had heard it repeated as a folk-lore story, and inserted it where it would appear best.

Soon after these sons of God, or spirits, were established with their wives, the deluge came. As not a word is afterwards said of them, we are left in doubt as to what became of them. Did they ascend to heaven when the flood came, taking their wives with them; did they like cowards leave their wives to perish, or did they perish with them?

Who can tell? And yet it is a pleasing story of the early childhood of mankind, and sincerely believed by all ancient peoples at a time when the gods were near to the children of men. Poor Gods! how far away have they fled since knowledge flooded the world with its light!

Chas. Baumann, New York City: Q. I formed a circle with one of my friends and his family, consisting of his wife and a little daughter of 10 years.

This girl soon developed as a medium, being controlled by several spirits. There is much enthusiasm at the house, and seances after seances are held, lasting often more than two hours. Is there no danger of any kind for the child, being controlled so often by the spirits?

A. Perhaps more disappointment has come to investigators of psychical phenomena from the course outlined by this correspondent, than any other. When the members of a circle find mediumistic power in their midst, in their eagerness to receive messages, in the ecstasy of the pleasure of conversing with spirit friends, they forget the fundamental principles of continued success. Every impression of spirit intelligence is expressed through and by means of the vital force of the medium, and however much the circle may give assistance there is the ever present danger of exhaustion. When this force commences to fail, communication becomes difficult, is imperfect, and when this is perceived by the circle, doubts and questionings disturb the harmony which has prevailed, and thus makes intercourse yet more difficult. Then when communications become contradictory and untruthful, it is thought the influences are evil, and disgust takes the place of over-weening confidence.

Sometimes by such exhaustion, other and undesirable intelligences, enter at the door thus opened and retain their hold, even after the conditions have been restored by the needed recuperation.

More urgently may this be said where the medium is a child, or youth. The circle in such cases should not be held more frequently than once a week, nor prolonged, however interesting, beyond an hour and a half. In cases like the one under discussion, the youthful medium is overtaxed and exhausted, and the exercise of her powers become distasteful, and once laid aside is not resumed. Perhaps the power is completely lost. But if rightly used and protected, the faculty constantly increases in capabilities, becomes an inseparable factor in character, and through life the fortunate possessor receives the benefit of the more or less intimate approach and guidance of angel friends.

Ambrose Buraker. Q. Must I believe that all things have a spirit life, and that these furnish food for each other as here?

A. While all living things have a "spirit life," it by no means follows that it will be prolonged after the death of the physical body. Only after a certain state of advancement is attained is individuality preserved in a continuous existence. The admission of this proposition gives as a corollary that all individualized life, represented in animal forms, below the completed human being, does not maintain individuality after the death of the body.

To believe otherwise, that all have continued existence, would be to have the repulsive condition of affairs, shadowed in the question of this correspondent. There would be immortal carnivora feeding on immortal herbivora! and the necessity of supposing that the latter although devoured by and nourishing the former, did not change or lose identity. From this tangle of absurdities no explanation or reasoning can free the advocate.

YOU'LL NEVER BE SORRY.

You'll never be sorry for doing good,
And leading a useful life;
For giving the widow a load of wood,
Or helping the poor with fuel and food,
In this cold world of strife.

You'll never be sorry for living right
And doing your level best,
For scattering kindness day and night,
For loving words make burdens light
And give to the weary rest.

You'll never be sorry for charity's sake
That you lenient judgment gave,
When the story started that gossips make
To cause the head and the heart to ache,
And hurried one soul to the grave.

Never sorry for looking before you leap,
For thinking before you speak,
For putting suspicion and scorn to sleep,
And burying slander oceans deep,
For the sake of humanity weak.

You'll never be sorry for courteous ways,
Or for lending a helping hand,
For uniform justice thro' all your days,
Without a thought of reward or praise,
From those who don't understand.

You'll never be sorry for standing by
Your principles firm and true;
For rebuking sin and that slanderous lie,
With a resolution to do or die
For those who befriended you.

For being generous to a foe,
When fortune gave you power,
Instead of filling his life with woe,
You just forgave the wrong, and so
Had peace in your heart each hour.

You'll never be sorry for dealing fair
In business with other men;
For keeping your promises on the square,
Your word as good as your bond, and there,
You can bank on promises then.

For you see, dear boys, what such things teach,
And integrity, better than gold,
Will make you independent in speech,
And your neighbor you never will overreach,
Be he rich, poor, young or old.

So now I'll leave you this little rhyme
Of things that will cause no sorrow,
And write more verses another time,
And hope you'll never stoop to crime,
And never trouble borrow.

WANDERING EVANGELISTIC NOTES BY MOSES HULL.

I once heard of a horse which was so terribly afraid of a hole he saw in one side of a bridge, that he always shied off into a worse hole in the other side. That reminds me of some Spiritualists who are so terribly afraid of the churches, and that they would do something for them, that I sometimes almost wonder that they eat, drink and breathe for fear of being like the churches.

If the churches are our enemies, I believe in learning from our enemies. If not, let us learn from them as friends. I never capture the guns of the enemy to spike them, but to turn them with deadly force against them.

RELIGION.

Some are even afraid of the word religion. I say to such religion never hurt anybody. It has been the theologies, and the wrongs practiced in the name of the creeds, that have resulted in this prejudice on the part of some good people against the word religion. When we fight creedism we may sometimes be doing good; when we fight religion in nine cases out of ten we are in mischief. Nobody knows exactly what the word religion originally meant; but it has now come to signify a belief that there is a power, or that there are powers above and beyond the mortal and material, to whom, or to which appeals can be made; and from which help may be derived in times of need. Yes, I am a religious man.

All this is preliminary to a thought on that word "evangelistic," in the heading of this article. The word evangelist means a traveling or an itinerant preacher. That is what I am at present. That word preacher is a good word; it means one who proclaims tidings; to urge by public teaching; to deliver a sermon. I use the word because I like it. The church has not dragged that word in the mire and filth more than some Spiritualists have the word lecturer.

REVEREND.

I once tried to get rid of the title Rev., and failed; now I am not sorry. That word, too, has come to signify a profession, it is a title given to distinguish those who wear it from those who merely deliver courses of lectures, or who follow other professions.

When I say I am a lecturer, then the next question is, "On what?" Astronomy, geology, catching fish, or shoeing horses? A public teacher on ethics and religious matters should try in his life and teaching to so conduct himself as to be worthy of the reverence of every good man and woman.

I notice many of our speakers who have fallen out with the title Reverend, assume the title Doctor, or Professor, when they have no right to either of them. The word carpenter means an adept at house-building; blacksmith, machinist, farmer, plumber, all signify certain occupations. Now can any one tell me why the one who studies and talks and writes on matters pertaining to man's spiritual condition should not have a title which signifies something? The word Reverend has a peculiar significance, and I believe in its use when applied to those who spend their time and study in a certain direction.

MY WANDERINGS.

My pencil has gone astray, as usual. It said all the above, not against my consent, but without asking me a word about it. I was going to tell the readers of The Progressive Thinker of my evangelical journeying. Over a year since I promised to spend the month of February in Pittsburg, Pa., and nearly a year ago I, with the consent of the Buffalo church, promised March to the city of Washington. When the time came to start I hated to leave the good church in Buffalo. They nearly all acted and talked as though they hated to see me go. They said they did, and I believed the most of them.

Those who have reported that the First Spiritual Church of Buffalo is going down, or that it is sick of the regular pastor business are charitably supposed to not know what they are talking about.

MRS. ATCHESON—W. V. NICUM.

During the first month of my absence Mrs. Atcheson, one of our local mediums and a member—in fact one of the pillars in the First Spiritual church, took my place, and did well. Not only did she have good audiences, and a good interest, but she took eight new members into the church.

I think, from what I learn, that she not only surprised the church, but she also surprised herself.

Mrs. Atcheson, and Bro. W. V. Nicum were both ordained by the State Association last May. Bro. Nicum is a traveling man and not only provides for himself and his family entirely by his own labor, but provides a good many dollars with which to help others; and, wherever he spends a Sunday, if he can find a Spiritualist meeting he gives it a lift. His voice is ever on the right side of every question.

Our church engaged Harrison D. Barrett to take my place during March, but the dangerous illness of Mrs. Barrett compelled him to cancel his engagement. I learn that F. Corden White is filling the rostrum in Buffalo to good acceptance.

APOTHEOSIS.

That was the word that the Greeks applied to some of their good dead. Apo, upward, theos, god. The word signifies gone up among the gods. I like that better than "died." What I was going to say, was that I have been called home once since I left, to attend the funeral of our good Brother Alfred Moore. Mr. Moore was one of the good old fathers in Israel. He had lived 77 useful years in this world; and, though he never put his light under a bushel, I believe he did not leave an enemy in the world when he left the form. He went out as he wished, very suddenly. He was riding in a sleigh with a neighbor, and met a friend, raised his hat, bowed and smiled, and in an instant was gone. He passed out leaving that happy smile on his countenance. I was called back to officiate at his funeral.

PITTSBURG.

Pittsburg is a city sui generis. At least, if there is another like it in the world, I have not seen it. It is one of the most thorough, thriving, go-ahead places I ever visited. Everybody seems to have plenty to do, and to get well paid for their work. The people of Pittsburg are more than ordinarily intelligent. They are, so far as I saw, a whole-souled and whole-hearted people. But, the city—oh, how dark! The smoke from thousands of chimneys blackens the air, and is to me perfectly stifling. I did not see one really bright day while I was there. In my room I generally kept a light all day and night, except while I slept.

The water they drank came out of those muddy rivers; and that, or something else kept me sick the most of the time. I am a Christian of the first water, and I believe in science, but my Christian Science would not digest that water, at least until it had been sifted. It was absolutely poison to me. A good flour sieve would strain out the larger bacteria, and I could manage the smaller ones. If it would not be giving Brother Stevens away I would say he tried—I will not say with what success—to persuade me to drink something a little thinner than Pittsburg water.

The society for which I spoke is a good one; if I was an itinerant, I would like a month or two there every year. Each member seems willing to do his or her part. The audiences were large and intelligent, just such as I like to have hear me talk. The Pittsburgers always try to have the best talent there is in the field on their platform.

Brother Stevens, to whom I referred above, is not the naughty man that my remark above would indicate. On the contrary he is just the reverse. He is president of the society, and the whole city might be searched in the attempt to find as good a subject out of which to make a presiding officer, but the search would be vain.

I am sorry they are now forced to leave the hall where they have been so long, but the building is to be torn down to make room for others, and they are to be driven to hunt a home elsewhere.

The Ladies' Aid holds meetings every Thursday afternoon, and the Society every Thursday night, in their hall. I do not know of a city, in the world where the Ladies' Aid meetings are so large. I met with them every Thursday except one, when I went to Buffalo, to attend Father Moore's funeral. That Thursday and Thursday night, I telegraphed for Mrs. Hull to take my place. I hardly think I will do it again. It does not pay one to work as hard as I did to get up an interest, and then send for his wife, and then be told by both societies, "Why, Brother Hull, your wife beats you;" "we were glad you was gone," etc. Such things hurt. A wife should never beat her husband; when they get to doing that it is better for the husband's health to leave her at home.

A FEW LONG RANGE SHOTS AT A SPIRITUALISM KILLER.

One of the Methodist parsons of Allegheny City took it upon himself to forever squelch Spiritualism; and if Spiritualism is not dead in the two cities, it is not his fault. The Rev. Dr. Thoburn advertised the thing largely, and made his onslaught; everything turned out just as the reverend gentleman supposed, except that his gun was wrongly loaded; it killed at the breech—not at the muzzle. When the smoke cleared away the Spiritualists were ready and anxious for the Doctor to try it once more; but the Doctor, as the boys say, "wasn't in it." By no persuason could he be induced to stand up and meet the issues he had raised. He had read the couplet that,

"He who shoots and runs away, may live to shoot another day,
But he who on the field is slain, can never, never shoot again."

No effort could inject into the Rev. D. D. the courage of his convictions. The result of all this was, that the society, at a heavy expense, secured "The Alvin," one of the largest and most popular theatres in the city, and got it crowded with people to listen to my reply. I cannot tell how many thousand people there were out; I only know the theatre was full of as intelligent and enthusiastic people as can be found anywhere.

Without a word of begging, the audience voluntarily contributed one hundred and eighteen dollars toward the expense of that meeting. Spiritualism stands higher than it did before the attack was made. The substance of the discourse was printed in the "Psychic Era," for March.

By the way I would feel condemned to stop this part of my report without saying that R. W. Simpson, a business man, has started in Pittsburg a fine-looking magazine, which he calls The Psychic Era. The success of the enterprise seems almost phenomenal. It always contains 72 pages, and some numbers as much as 96. I hope it will succeed; it will be a great help to Spiritualism. Mr. Simpson talks of opening a book store and publishing house in connection with his Era. Certainly there is room in Spiritualism for a first-class magazine.

WHEELING, W. VA.

Twice during February, I went to Wheeling, at the earnest solicitation of the church there. The first time I delivered three lectures in Odd Fellows' Hall. Notwithstanding the weather was the most severe we had during the winter, the audiences were large and the church well pleased with the results. The organization in Wheeling is young, and very enthusiastic, and it holds many noble men and women. Brother Brunhaus, the president, is one of the most earnest workers we have. Brother Dillon, the secretary, is equally as enthusiastic. The financial secretary, whose name has gone from me, is another hard and intelligent worker.

My second visit to Wheeling was in better weather and everything seemed to go more smoothly than before. Mrs. Hull went there and spoke on the last Sunday of February. The report of her lectures was much the same as that of Pittsburg; I could not stand that, so I went on Monday and tried to redeem myself with a few extra meetings. We opened each meeting with a half-hour's service of song; they all took hold in earnest, and everything went off well. Frank Ripley is serving the Wheeling church during the present month.

It would be wicked to close this article without saying I find everywhere a growing interest in our school, or schools, both at Lily Dale, and at Whitewater. At Wheeling we took a collection for the Morris Pratt Institute, in which we got in over $50. The Ladies' Aid, of Pittsburg, unsolicited, gave us a collection of $7.11, and the society of Pittsburg gave us in cash and pledges $217.64. All this shows an awakening interest in something which is calculated to make Spiritualism permanent. Clara L. Stewart is beating me in raising money, more than two to one, but then you know she is a woman.

Brother Francis, our school is bound to be a success. It will take hard work and a great deal of it, and much begging, and many sacrifices, but those connected with the school have "smelt powder" before, and are willing to work hard, and go without luxuries for the sake of elevating the work and workers to the position they should occupy. Our lives are not very long here, at best, but what there is left of them is to be devoted to this work. We did not put our hands to the plow to look back.

From Pittsburg I went to Washington, and Mrs. Hull to Buffalo, on business, and thence to Cleveland.

There is a good society in Washington, and I enjoy preaching to it. Audiences, especially at night are very large. Brother Keeler, the slate-writer, is perhaps responsible for that. He gives reading after my evening lectures, and people rush out in great crowds to hear them. So far as I can learn he hits the nail on the head every time.

In April I will be back to my Buffalo pulpit, which I am to occupy every Sunday, with perhaps, one exception, until July. I like to get home; I love my work there, and shall feel very badly when the time comes to part company with Buffalo Spiritualists. The college calls, and I presume I must go. If I preach at all after the camp-meeting season, it must be within easy reach of my duties at Whitewater, Wis.

The first of May we move to our cottage in Lily Dale, where we remain during the eight weeks of the Training School, and perhaps during a week or two of the camp. After camp season we may move either to our own home in Chicago, or to Whitewater. The future is with us, as yet, an unsolved problem. Promising to let you and your readers know of our plans when they are matured, I am as ever,

MOSES HULL.

NEW YORK NOTES.

Liberal Thought in the Great Metropolis.

I am very glad to say that Liberalism (in every sense of the word) permeates the very air of this great metropolis at the present time, and the great difficulty is, that one cannot attend all of the various services, and there is no excuse for one to attend an orthodox service unless their inclinations tend that way.

Hugh O. Pentecost lectures every Sunday to a large gathering at Mott Memorial Hall, on Madison avenue, and I occasionally go to hear him.

Henry Frank is at present delivering a series of lectures on Sunday mornings in Carnegie Lyceum, on Sociological subjects, his following is large. In this same hall, Sunday afternoons, Swami Abhedananda lectures on Vedanta Philosophy, and crowds the hall.

Dr. Minot J. Savage still crowds the Church of the Messiah to the doors, so many flock to hear his brilliant, grand discourses. I for one never miss a Sunday when Dr. Savage speaks, for I learn so much every time I hear him, it is food for the brain, soul and spirit, all combined. I often think what a wonderful man he is to get up in his pulpit every Sunday and deliver such great discourses without a single note. I have friends in the South and West, to whom I mail Dr. Savage's sermons; they often write me that they would so like to hear him deliver one sermon, so I really think I am blessed to know I have the privilege of hearing him every week.

Nellie Temple Brigham gives her meetings on Lexington avenue, every Sunday, and at her services you find the true Spiritualism in every way. Mrs. Brigham contemplates a trip to Australia the coming summer, to be gone some six months in all, so I understand.

Dr. Felix Adler delivers his lectures each Sunday before the Ethical Society in Carnegie Music Hall, and I have often thought it too bad that his fine lectures are not published, so people can read that are unable to attend.

I have just mentioned the above to show a few of our liberal services in this city. I notice an item in one of our daily papers that the 6,400 members of the police force of New York were very indignant the other day because they were paid in checks instead of currency as heretofore, and this item also states that the Sisters of Mercy will be the largest sufferers; on every police payday they visit the eighty-one police stations in Greater New York and collect about $2,000 a month from members of the force for charitable purposes. Under the check system they can get no money.

Dr. Savage was interviewed by a reporter of the New York Herald the other day, on his experiences with Mrs. Piper, the Boston medium, and he tells about receiving a message from his son Philip who passed away two years ago. The interview took up over two columns of the paper, with a fine portrait of Dr. Savage, but it only shows to the public that Dr. Savage is a friend to Spiritualism, as he said in this interview "That if you were to throw a stone at random in any part of this city (New York) you would be almost certain to strike a house in which at least some form of psychical phenomena has been observed. Perhaps there is only one member of the family who has made these observations and he may be keeping his thoughts on the subject secret from the other members of the family."

How true this is in many instances I know, where various ones would like to come out and tell their views, but keep silent on the matter because they think it best for themselves to do so.

Woman's Work in Municipal Reform.

Of late some of these ultra conservatives who profess to fear dreadful things if women should get mixed up in politics, have been praising these same women for the part they have taken in promoting and actually bringing about various municipal reforms. Unquestionably the praise is entirely deserved but it ought to occur to these level-headed opponents of woman suffrage that praise, even when merited, may be accompanied with some inconveniences. Suppose, for example, the women of New York City, after working for reform in that city, and after contributing in no small degree to the success of the movement, which every one hopes will result in reform, should take it into their heads that they might vote for what they want as well as to work for it?

To give women credit for raising money, making speeches and drumming up voters on election day is to make ridiculous any professed fear of what may happen when they "get into politics," for plainly they are there already. Of course this evident inconsistency has nothing to do with the practical question or the practical workings of woman suffrage, but it may have not a little to do with raising a laugh at somebody's expense. At any rate, the possible effect of so much praise of the women for their part in the New York election is worthy of consideration by the timorous.—Manchester (N. H. Union.

A SUFFERER FROM ASTHMA

Permanently Cured by the Use of Himalya
A Free Trial Sent to Every Reader.

It gives us great pleasure to announce the discovery of a positive cure for Asthma, in the wonderful Kola Plant, a new botanic product found on the Congo River, West Africa. The cures wrought by it in the worst cases are really marvelous. Sufferers of twenty to fifty years' standing have been at once restored to health by the Kola Plant. Among others, many ministers of the gospel testify to its wonderful powers. Rev. J. L. Combs, of Martinsburg, West Va., was perhaps the worst case, and was cured by the Kola Plant after fifty years' suffering. Mr. Alfred C. Lewis, Washington, D. C. Editor of the Farmer's Magazine, gives similar testimony, as do hundreds of others. To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1104 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Asthma. They only ask in return that when cured yourself you will tell your neighbors about it. You should surely try it, as it costs you nothing.

BEYOND THE VAIL

A Sequel to "Rending the Vail."

The two volumes together as a record of practically obtained facts demonstrating the claims of Modern Spiritualism as to post mortal survival, are unique and overwhelming.

Every communication is from a full materialized spirit form, in good light, and either spoken audibly or written in full view by the form. There is not an automatic or trance message in the book.

It is illustrated by several engravings, the originals of which were drawn in the presence of the circle by a full form materialized spirit artist.

BEYOND THE VAIL is, as a rule, the experiences of spirits in both worlds—their own account of their lives on earth and their progress after death to their present condition of freedom from earth conditions. The narratives are intensely interesting, instructive and often highly dramatic.

Coincident with these are the profoundly philosophical comments of the controlling spirits of the seances. Prof. William Denton, Thomas Paine, Dr. W. H. Reed and others—covering, law, medicine, jurisprudence, theology and metaphysics. There are no books in existence of like character or of higher authority. Price, by mail, $1.75.

THE BEAUTIFUL SOUVENIR VOLUME,

By A. LEAH UNDERHILL,
(Of the Fox Family.)

The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism.

Thirty-three chapters, 477 pages, superbly printed, and bound in colors and gold, 15 illustrations, 5 steel engraved portraits of the celebrated Fox Family, a full page engraving of the old house at Hydesville, which to this day, by the act of its wealthy and respected owner, Artemas Hyde, Esq., bears the inscription, "Here Spiritualism Originated in 1848."

A complete history of the initiation of the movement known as Modern Spiritualism, from the epochal period which dates from March 31, 1848. Since that day, starting from a small country village in western New York, Spiritualism has made its way against tremendous obstacles around the civilized globe.

Only a limited number of copies of this rare book, now out of print, are to be had, and these can be obtained only at this office. Those who remit at once will receive a copy, post paid, at the GREATLY REDUCED PRICE OF $1.

Note.—By failure in 1885 to complete contract with the author, a large portion of the edition was left unbound, and so remained for a number of years, when they were rescued and bound at additional cost, hence this valuable contribution to the cause of Spiritualism was not properly presented to the Spiritualistic public, and a host of investigators have not had the opportunity of securing a copy until the present time. Do not fail to send for copy at once. J. R. FRANCIS,

"THE UNKNOWN"

—BY—

CAMILLE FLAMMARION.

"The Unknown" created a marked sensation in France when first published and can scarcely fail to arouse the greatest interest in this country. It is an eminent scientist's study of the phenomena of the spirit world. In touching upon the various physical manifestations the author cites many absolutely authenticated instances, and chapters of his book are as weirdly fascinating as the most fantastic of Poe's tales. It treats on incredulity, credulity, hallucinations, psychic action of on mind upon another, transmission of thought, suggestion, the world of dreams, cerebral physiology, psychic dreams, distinct sight in dreams, actual facts, premonitory dreams and divination of the future, etc. 487 pages, cloth bound. Price $2.00.

History of the CHRISTIAN RELIGION to the Year 200,

BY CHARLES V. WAITE, A. M.

Fifth Edition—Revised, with Much Additional Matter in Appendix

A standard and reliable history of the earlier period of the church, giving facts that are not found in the so-called histories written by churchmen. This latest edition has been carefully and thoroughly revised, and it is a reliable magazine of facts, such as the honest inquirer wants. It opens up to the investigator and student a wide field of historical research in matters of fact wholly ignored by the regular church historians, and throws a bright glare of light on points heretofore carefully shrouded in darkness.

The Noted Chronist,
Is Now Located at

No. 1087 Boylston street, Boston, Mass., where he will be pleased to meet all who may call between the hours of 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. The wonderful work in healing the sick that Dr. Watkins is accomplishing is indeed most astounding; his patients live to testify to his wonderful powers as a healer. For the last year his work has been most wonderful. He says himself that his cures this year have been more than ever before in numbers, as he confined himself to only 30 new patients a month. Dr. Watkins attends personally to each case, and therefore he can do better work than if he had a great many assistants; no staff of visible helpers are in his office to annoy and suggest this and that. He knows what is the trouble with each patient, and knows the right specific to give. He prepares and puts up all of his medicine, and has no help in his medical treatments that is visible help. Write him to-day, and by return mail you will receive the diagnose. No charge made for diagnosing your case. Send age, sex and leading symptom.

THE EARTH A GERM.

Nature's Way of Development.

In considering the earth a germ, I will premise that there are only two primaries in nature—spirit and ether, co-eternal as positive and negative, in energy and substance. Out of these two we have four distinct germs, the mineral, vegetable, animal, and spirit germs. It is self-evident that the flora, fauna, and psychic kingdoms are germinal in origin. We will now offer evidence that the mineral kingdom begins from a germ embryo—and develops in volume by accretion through condensation of ether, and that the prevailing idea of a given mass of nebulous matter thrown off by the sun and evolving into a planet, is erroneous.

We will note the fact that germ development is nature's way in the three higher kingdoms, and should reasonably be no exception in the mineral. To follow the law of cause and effect it would be quite unreasonable to suppose the sun could throw off rings of planetary matter in relations and distances of the planets; and if it were possible it is non-demonstrable that the fiery rings would be other than luminous bodies like unto their sire.

The great distinction between the sun and a planet is, that the one is undifferentiated, and thus non-vital, and the other is highly differentiated and vital. The sun is electrical in quality, a homogeneous state of ether, while the earth is magnetic in vital power, and organic in growth.

The planets on the outside of earth are much older than the earth, and hence much greater in volume. Those on the inside of earth are smaller, and hence younger. The volcanic eruptions and mountainous upheavals are not absolute proof of a molten state, but are rather proof to the contrary, for in the germ theory the earth would incorporate much combustible material, which would become subject to ignition. All volcanic action shows combustion rather than primary molten matter.

The geological ages favor germinal development, for the excess of soil covering the serpentine and carboniferous ages denote accretion through growth, rather than placed by inundations. The distances between the planets favor germinal development, for where their orbits come into proximity, the planet germs coalesce into one. This is evidenced by the embryo planet germs that are continuously drawn to earth in the form of meteors and asteroids. It is reasonable that these bodies are incipient planet germs. The rock stratas of the earth denote development by growth, also the water supply in the earth's crust or surface. There is a continual addition to the earth by what is known as star-dust, or ether transformed to atomic matter, also by attracting embryo planets, that are continually forming in space.

When a planet-germ begins its revolution in ether, its frictional impact transforms ether to atomic matter by magnetic attraction, its vital force. The magnetic and electrical affinity between the earth and sun accounts for the seasons in the rise and dip of the earth's poles, by attraction when negative and repulsion when positive, also accounts for the moon's arrest of rotary movement by the double force of the earth and sun acting at once.

If the earth began in a germinal molecult, which is highly probable, what ons of time it took to reach its present size. From this view of the planets, as living organisms, it is reasonable that some planets possess greater magnetic vitality than others, hence their greater size and rapidity of growth, as Jupiter and Neptune.

WORDS OF TRUTH.

Automatic Writing, by Nannie B. Chambers, Oakland, Cal.

The field for action lies all around, and many hungry souls are waiting for the "bread of life." It is no easy task to work for a cause that has so much opposition, but all along the line you will meet those who will give the glad hand of welcome. The opposing forces are on everyhand but are slowly being brought into the ranks. Like all new ideas, opposers arise to thwart and hinder, but "truth is mighty and will prevail." A bright day is dawning all along the line of advanced thoughts; wise and true followers are carrying the banner of freedom into the rank and file of this great army of workers; there are coming men of power and force which the foes of science cannot thwart. Onward is the march and to victory; truth is the watchword and will triumph over every foe.

As the days go on, from time to time the unfolding of many wonderful things will come to light, much will be revealed to man that will be explained upon no other hypothesis than natural law, the workings of that mighty force so little understood to-day. Days of great and mighty power will dawn upon mankind. The world is growing wiser, only a few short years will elapse when many who now scoff and scorn will be walking hand in hand with truth and its fulfillments. The power of the spirit is far beyond mortal mind to understand. In this realm of ceaseless activities much is being accomplished for the betterment of the human race, the sunlight of eternal truth and love is growing brighter, the divine rights of man must be realized, so the necessity of ever-increasing energy, and the cultivation of the powers that now lie dormant.

Life in both realms (spiritual and material) is one ceaseless round of evolution, and its workings are in accord with laws governing all forces in nature. Man may theorize and speculate, but facts outweigh all theory. Continuous existence and its unfoldment is as natural as the unfolding of the beautiful rose, systematic and harmonious. Nature's laws know no distinction in race or color, the sun shines just the same for the black man as the white, for the cultured or uncultured, for the just or unjust, the natural forces help to develop and round out every child of creation. Everything of life and action, everything in the domain of life is governed and controlled by the same unchanging divine law in this and all worlds. Remember your earth is only an atom in the vast systems of worlds, worlds that cannot be computed by mortal mind. Human life as viewed from the higher life is so insignificant that well might the poet say,

"Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud."

"Death; the Meaning and Result."

Such is the title of a book recently published, from the pen of John K. Wilson, of Bradford, Pa., a member of the Pennsylvania Bar.

"If a man die shall he live again?" is a question asked by the lips of every man and woman since their advent in the world, and death known to be a factor in its affairs.

In this absorbingly interesting volume this question would seem to be answered, and is answered with a candor and evidence that adds a charm to the book; so much so that it might better have been entitled, "Positive Evidence of the hitherto Unknown Life." In this book the author makes the visitors from the other side of life so real to the reader that one seems to know and sympathize with their work and its scope—which is to ameliorate the condition of mankind.

Why they have hitherto failed to do so; and why such revelations were not successfully made before, is fully explained in a way that should convince the most skeptical. No one can afford to be ignorant of these facts.

What Lyman C. Howe, the logician and lecturer, says about it: "It contains as much valuable matter and remarkable newness of experience as anything that has appeared in the last decade. It is written in an attractive style, with the impress of truthfulness and integrity of purpose in every line. This book should make the author famous in literature."

Moses Hull, the author and lecturer, says: "I think whoever begins to read this book will pursue it to a finish, and then wish it had not closed so soon. Before I read a hundred pages I concluded it was a wonderful book."

F. Corden White, the lecturer and psychic, says: "I consider it one of the most marvelous books of the age, and as a public worker for years, I know of no one who has had such a wonderful experience as you have."

T. J. Mayer, treasurer of the N. S. A., says: "I am much pleased with the book and would gladly have many of my friends read it, and will be glad to help in its distribution."

W. T. Stead, author, and editor of the "Review of Reviews," says: "A very remarkable book, which I have read with great interest."

Rev. M. J. Savage, New York's great divine, says: "I have read the book. I as intensely interested. I can see no other way of explaining the facts except that which you adopt."

James H. Hyslop, professor of logic and mental science in Columbia University, says: "I have read the book with much interest."

Erie (Pa.) Dispatch says: "In a fascinating way it tells of spirit life from a common sense, apparently truthful, standpoint. The author writes vigorously and smoothly; in a way that shows he is earnest and truthful."

Light, London, Eng., says: "It is, in every way, intensely arresting, and goes to the front rank as a demonstration of spirit communion."

Philosophical Journal, San Francisco, Cal., says: "In fact it is a most remarkable book."

Handsomely bound in cloth, 560 pages, illustrated, $1.25, postpaid. For sale at this office.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Mrs. Caroline Talmage, of Toledo, O., passed to spirit life, after many months of suffering. She was only waiting for the change to meet the dear companion and friends who were waiting for her across the harbor bar. She leaves two daughters who will miss the dear mother. Her loss will be felt more keenly by the one who had been deprived of the sense of sight for eighteen years. A mother's tender love and care in a great measure had made up for her great loss. Words of consolation were spoken by the writer.

MARIAN CARPENTER.

Passed to the higher life, March 2, at Walton, Mich. Mrs. Harriett Knaggs, aged 65 years. She was a Spiritualist and a medium for many years, and knew that death was but a change that would unite her with the dear companion who had preceded her eleven years ago to the spirit land. Services were conducted by the writer.

MARIAN CARPENTER.

Near Fairfax, Mich., Feb. 25, John Henry Lowder passed to spirit life. He was a good man, a true friend, kind neighbor, a loving and faithful husband. He was ready at any sacrifice to himself to help others. He possessed the true Christ Spirit, ever doing the best he could. Services were conducted by the writer.

MARIAN CARPENTER.

Mrs. R. A. Town, of Montpelier, Ind., passed to the higher life, at the earthly age of 39 years. The funeral services were conducted by the writer,

H. J. MOORE.

Passed to spirit life, at Brighton, Michigan, February 8, 1902, John Tighe, aged 70 years. Services conducted by Mrs. LaGrange, of Detroit, Mich. He had been for many years a consistent Spiritualist. I am very anxious to hear from any relatives, as it may be for their benefit.

HEALTH RESTORED

The entire country is astonished at the wonderful cures perfected through the method originated by Dr. J. M. Peebles, the Grand Old Man of Battle Creek, Michigan. This science is a subtle force in nature combined with magnetic medicines, and called by the eminent doctor,

Psychic Science

It has been termed the greatest pain reliever ever known. In a perfectly natural manner it builds up the system and restores health. It makes no difference how serious or hopeless the case may seem, there is positive hope in this grand science. It has restored the deaf, blind and lame, cured the paralytic, and those suffering from Bright's Disease, Consumption, Stomach Trouble, Catarrh, Nervous Debility, Neuralgia, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Female Troubles, as well as men and women addicted to the liquor, morphine and other vile habits.

Geo. H. Weeks, of Cleveland, Ohio, sends heartfelt thanks for restoration to health after suffering from nervous prostration and insomnia for years; he says he now enjoys health and restful sleep every night. Mrs. J. A. Rust, of Itasca, Minn., cured of uric acid poisoning in two month's treatment writes: "I am better than in years, and each day brings new health and strength. I will refer all ailing ones to you." Mary A. Earl, Crawford, Mich., suffering from and it has been a success in my case. I am indeed grateful to you for my recovery." C. E. Davis, Woodman, N. H., who suffered all the miseries of a dyspeptic, writes that as the result of Dr. Peebles' treatment, he had not missed a meal since last March. D. W. Bridgman, of Del Norte, Col., writing Sept. 30, after three months' course. "When I began treatment with Dr. Peebles' Institute of Health I was a cripple, unable to walk but little with a cane. Now I am able to walk with ease. Some days ten or fifteen miles. My general health is excellent. I can hardly find words to express my gratitude, as previously I had tried everything I could hear of and got no relief. Mrs. Isaac Varney, Dover, N. H., a sufferer of spinal trouble and nerve exhaustion, writes that she would not go back to the state of health she was in before taking this treatment for all. I am well and a thousand times obliged to you."

written by Dr. J. M. Peebles, in a plain and concise manner, tells you exactly how and where you can gain perfect health; in fact, it gives you the key to the grandest knowledge known to man. Remember, this book costs you nothing, and it reveals wonderful secrets and makes the impossibilities of yesterday realities of to-day.

ABSOLUTELY FREE Send your name and address and leading symptoms to Dr. J. M. Peebles and his associates and you will receive full diagnosis without any cost whatever, as well as this grand book, which is beautifully illustrated, rich in all its details, containing matter which will be a revelation to you. It is a token which any one may be proud of. Write to-day and receive "A Message of Hope" and diagnosis of your case absolutely free. Address

Esoteric Lessons.

An Argument Against Physical Causation.

The object of this book, considered a most excellent one by some, is to establish what is commonly regarded as purely physical health upon a purely, psychical basis; to show that health is knowledge, wisdom, insight; that men suffer from so-called purely corporeal disease only because they form erroneous judgment; also, to show that the fundamental erroneous judgment is, that there is any such thing in the universe as physical causation, a belief in which leads both directly and indirectly to disease. Often directly in case of the individual, but more commonly indirectly as a race-belief held throughout the known history of mankind. This work is by Sarah Stanley Grimke. Price $1.50.

Womanly Beauty ITS ATTAINMENT OF FORM AND FEATURES

In the World Celestial

Is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance mediums, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer. This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement. Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold, and has a full page portrait of the angel heroine, from a spirit painting. Price, $1.00.

THE WOMAN'S BIBLE

PART I.--The Pentateuch.

Comments on Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy, by Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Lillie Devereux Blake, Rev. Phebe Hanaford, Clara Bewick Colby, Ellen Battelle Dietrick, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, Ursula N. Gestefeld, and Francis E Barr.

THE WOMAN'S BIBLE.--PART II.

Judges, Kings, Prophets and Apostles. Comments on the Old and New Testaments, from Joshua to Revelation. The comments are keen, bright, spicy, full of wit, the work of radical thinkers who are not ignorant of the higher criticism. There is not a dull page in either of these books, but each is a galaxy of the bright minds of the day and throw a new light on the Bible teachings relating to woman. Price of each, paper, 50 cents.

"THE DREAM CHILD,"

A Fascinating Romance of Two Worlds. By Florence Huntley. Price, cloth, 75 cents. Books like "The Dream Child" spur humanity on to make more and more demands of this nature, and will open up new heights and depths of spiritual knowledge.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Will, I believe, take its place beside Bulwer's "Zanoni" and the "Seraphita" of Balzac.—Daily Capital, Topeka, Kansas. Although simple and unvarnished with any inflammable descriptions, enthralls the mind to the exclusion of other thoughts, until reluctantly the reader closes the last page.—Minneapolis Sunday Times.

A Very Interesting Book for Aff. Philosophy of Spiritual Intercourse.

This work contains a graphic account of the very wonderful spiritual developments at the house of Rev. Dr. Phelps, Stratford, Conn., and similar cases in all parts of the country. This volume is the first from the author directly upon the subject of Spiritualism, and has stood the test of many years. Cloth, $1.20; postage 10c.

A MATTER OF VITAL IMPORT TO SPIRITUALISTS

Decision in the McIlroy Will Case—The First Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia.

To the Editor:—The McIlroy will case which has been in litigation since 1897, was decided on Tuesday, March 11, in the Court of Common Pleas, by the jury giving a verdict for the contestant. This means that the will was set aside, under the terms of which the First Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia was to receive a bequest of $30,000 to build a temple for Spiritualism, to be called McIlroy Hall.

The evidence was to the effect that the will had been made almost twenty years previous to the transition of Mr. McIlroy, and was reaffirmed five times during that period. He had occupied a responsible position in the custom house during the most of that time, and there was no evidence to show that he had not, up to the time of his decease, been capable of attending to his business affairs. There was no evidence of undue influence, but the contestants claimed that he was convinced that he held communication with his friends in the spirit world, and by reason of that they considered him insane and incapable of making a will. They admitted that in every other way he was thoroughly reliable. Mr. McIlroy's will was to the effect that his estate be held in trust until the transition of his daughter, and also his housekeeper, who were each to receive an annuity, and a house to live in, and his executors were to then transfer the property to the trustees of the First Association of Spiritualists for the purpose above stated.

The Judge's charge was to the effect that if the jury thought that he had been laboring under delusions and was therefore incapable of making a will, then the will must be set aside. So the verdict was to that effect.

Here is an opportunity for the N. S. A. to make a record for itself by pushing this case to a final decision before the Supreme Court. The will was upheld in the two lower courts, but the jury trial decided against it.

Too much credit cannot be given our counsel, Mr. Wm. H. R. Lukens, for his painstaking efforts in our behalf, while the plea of Ex-Judge Gordon, one of our most eminent lawyers at the Philadelphia bar, was one of the fairest presentations of the rights of Spiritualists in common with other citizens to dispose of their property as they chose, ever made before our courts, so we feel that nothing was left undone in the matter.

We are indebted to the N. S. A. for being enabled to secure the assistance of Mr. Gordon. We appealed to the N. S. A. for financial assistance, which was most generously and promptly rendered as far as it was in their power to do so. Every Spiritualist in the United States is personally interested in having this verdict set aside, and no efforts should be spared which will help do so.

As it stands, no Spiritualist can hope to have his will stand. The fact that for a period of nearly twenty years Mr. McIlroy attended to every duty, and transacted his business to the satisfaction of all those he came in contact with, had no weight when contrasted with the statement that because he believed that he could converse with his son who had passed from this plane of existence, he was of unsound mind and not mentally capable of making a will. However, we hope that the higher courts will reverse this decision and remove the stigma from Mr. McIlroy's memory placed upon it by the avarice of the contestants.

M. E. CADWALLADER.

The Evening Bulletin has the following in relation to the matter:

A verdict of a jury in Judge Davis' court a day or two ago set aside a will in which the testator had made provision that the residue of his estate, valued at $30,000, should, after the payment of some private bequests, be given to the organization known as "The First Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia." The purpose expressed in making this bequest was that the money should be used for the erection of a hall for the advancement of the interests of Spiritualism, and that the edifice, taking the name of the testator, should be known as the "McIlroy Hall." It was contended in the suit, which was brought on behalf of his family, that he had been under the undue influence of Spiritualists and that his mind was unsound, although it does not appear from the evidence that he was regarded by witnesses as mentally unsound on other subjects. James Gay Gordon in defending the will insisted that a belief in Spiritualism was as reasonable as opinions which are held concerning some other forms of religious faith by men who are not thereby presumed necessarily to be incapable of exercising their judgment. But John G. Johnson, in arguing that the will should not stand, took the ground that a belief in human power to commune with the spirits of the departed is to be regarded as a form of insanity, and the jury, who may also have been influenced by their impressions as to what they may have deemed the injustice of the will to the family, gave a verdict in favor of Mr. Johnson's side of the case.

Yet it is by no means clear that such a verdict, if based simply and entirely on the ground that when a man declares himself to be a Spiritualist or uses his means to propagate Spiritualistic doctrine, he must be deemed insane or unsound of mind, is in accord with general principles of justice. There is no doubt that a large proportion of the men and women who profess faith in Spiritualism are eccentric persons, that their belief is often accompanied by social vagaries or queer habits of living, and that not a few of them in addition are arrant impostors. But it is also a fact that other believers in the mysterious cult are apparently normal and well balanced in mind, decent in their personal behavior, capable of attending to their ordinary affairs in life prudently and sagaciously, and showing no signs in business or in contact with their friends that their general reason is perverted. To most of us, indeed, their faith in or their frame of mind toward the supernatural revelations or proceedings which they descant upon may seem foolish or irrational, an absurd tax upon credulity or a downright delusion. Yet there have been, and still are, not a few forms of religious belief or doctrine or action which might almost, or quite as easily, be subjected to the same imputation, as indeed they have been by the major portion of the community.

If we turn to the figures of the latest Federal census we will find that in this country the number of Spiritualists, or regular "communicants" in the churches or organizations of that "belief," is set down at forty-five thousand. This number—which does not include a larger number of persons who are in loose sympathy with its ideas but who are members of no society—is only a little behind the number of Universalists, about two-thirds of the number of Unitarians, more than one-half of the number of Adventists, and much larger than that of each of several minor sects. But it has not been uncommon to condemn the followers of most of these creeds at various times as visionary zealots or as victims of unsound reason, or as mischievous members of the community. It is said, for example, that the first little organization of Unitarians in Philadelphia was looked upon as a band of reprobates who ought not to be tolerated, and who had great difficulty in finding a public place in which they could hold their meetings; the Rev. John Murray, when he first came to preach to the Universalists in Philadelphia, found every door of every house of worship barred against him and his followers, and the Adventists with their prophecies were frequently pointed to as examples of the strange infirmity which a contemplation of the future may impose upon the human intellect. At one time it might not have, perhaps, been difficult to argue a jury into the belief that if a man deliberately chose to leave his money to any of these sects it would have been a sign that his mind was not sound. Indeed, even among the great sects of Christianity, there have often been witnessed among us examples of intense, ecstatic enthusiasm on the part of men and women who have seemed irrational even to their own brethren, and yet who have been entirely reasonable in all the other affairs of life.

It is thus unsafe to infer that because a man's mind may accept some seemingly outlandish notion in thinking out his course toward the great problem of eternity, he is necessarily a fool, incompetent to form opinions and to be dealt with as irresponsible when he comes to make his will. For the odd things which men whose sanity no one has doubted will do in expressing their wishes for the posthumous disposal of their property are continually exemplified in the Register of Wills office. A day or two ago, for example, a document was received in that office in which the testator had formulated his cheerful desire that on a certain day in each year his friends should assemble and drink "several glasses in joyful humor" to his memory. Yet it would have been no severe strain on ingenuity to have framed a plausible argument for proving that only a man of unsound mind could have taken so flippant or profane a view of the awful solemnity of death, in having ordered what many will regard as a desecration to his own memory.

Some years ago Mr. Henry Seybert, who was an enthusiastic citizen in his ideas of patriotism and Spiritualism, and who presented to the city a bell for the State House on condition that his name should be inscribed upon it, gave to the University of Pennsylvania a short time before his death some money sufficient to found a chair for philosophy, with the condition that the authorities of that institution should appoint a commission to make an investigation of all systems of morality or religion which profess to represent Truth, and particularly the system, so-called, of Modern Spiritualism. Such men as William Pepper, Horace Howard Furness, George S. Fullerton, Coleman Sellers, Joseph Leidy and a few others organized an inquiry and summoned all the mediums, specialists, table rappers, slate writers and toe crackers that were procurable. The report, chiefly the literary production of Dr. Furness, was a delight in the genial common sense and candor in which he analyzed the whole subject of seances and phenomena of communication with the beings of an invisible world. It was to have been succeeded by another report, but this I believe has never been made, or at least not published. Dr. Furness and his associates were unable to discover, so far as they went, anything which they could call a novel fact, or which justified in any scientific sense the faith of Seybert and his friends. But the commission thought that in view of the fact that Spiritualism was not decreasing—this was about fifteen years ago—that it has from the first assumed a religious tone, and that it lay claim to rank among the denomination faiths of the day, it was not a subject to be treated indifferently or lightly. Nor were they willing to assume that a believer in it, despite what they saw of its fraud and artifice, was per se a man of unsound mind. "We have fully recognized," they said, when they proceeded to sum up their reasons for failing to be convinced by evidence they collected, "that men eminent in intelligence and attainments yield to Spiritualism an entire credence, and who can fall to stand aside in tender reverence when crushed and bleeding hearts are seen to seek it for consolation and hope?" The inference which might be drawn from the commission's statement was that such men might be deficient in critical acumen but not in normal mental power.

The eager and often stupid credulity of persons who become infatuated with Spiritualism and who gullibly accept all the humbug and the fraud which are practiced under its name, is chiefly accountable for the popular opinion that a Spiritualist is presumptively a mentally disordered being. It is not unlikely that such credulity on the part of the testator who wanted to found "McIlroy Hall" in this city was evinced in the testimony before Judge Davis' court, or that the jury received that impression. Then, too, the vast majority of us who have never seen a ghost or heard from one, and who have no special inclination to be wasting our short time on earth in solving the riddle beyond the grave by calling in the aid of "mediums," find it impossible on any rational basis to reconcile our own experience with that of a man who declares positively that he has seen ghosts, that he has had communication with them, and that, therefore, he has come to believe that there are Marconis in the Spiritualistic craft who are able to carry on a system of wireless telegraphy between mankind and the multitude in the past who have gone to the great invisible Somewhere. Yet we cannot get away from the fact that despite all the chicanery and folly which enter into the cult, it has represented to some minds which are sober, veracious and at the same time skeptical; such manifestations as were inexplicable to them or could not be explained as the results of imposture or delusion. For example, Horace Greeley in the days when his intellect was fresh and vigorous, and when he took pleasure in puncturing shams of all kinds, was deeply mystified by some of the things which an investigation of Spiritualism disclosed to him, and at one period of his life, it was thought, might be converted to an open avowal of confidence in the miracles that were wrought at seances and in darkened rooms. Even after he discerned where he had been deceived, how the professors of the cult frequently showed in their own lives no benefit from it to their morals and what little avail it was at the best to any valuable enlightenment in the worldly life, he still admitted that he had seen "communications" which could not be explained on the hypothesis of juggle, collusion or fraud.

Consequently there is some evidence which tends to confute the dictum which John G. Johnson maintained in the McIlroy suit, that a belief in Spiritualism is a form of insanity or mental unsoundness. Indeed, if that great lawyer were reasoning the matter not in his professional capacity on behalf of a client, but as a philosopher, with his searching, comprehensive intellect, he would doubtless modify his statement in Judge Davis' court at least to the extent of discriminating between a "belief" which may be partly reasonable and one which is wholly unreasonable—between a man who may be seriously and honestly impressed with the idea that some truth or truths underlie what seem to him the spirit mysteries and a mere victim of hallucination or the tricks of charlatans. That distinction should certainly be kept in mind by judges and juries in determining whether "belief" in any religion, no matter how humble, or unpopular, or eccentric it may be, shall be accepted as proof that the believer is mentally incapable of doing with his own what he pleases under the law.

And this, it should be borne in mind, may be said in justice even by those of us who look upon "Spiritualism" as the absurdest of the superstitions to which our kind are prone.

The Small Voice Within.

Leo. Miller in The Progressive Thinker of Nov. 23, says of T. J. Hudson: "Now when the astute hypnotist gets hold of a hard case like this which will not fit his theory he is very prolific in discovering loopholes of escape,—Who or what hypnotized the negro?"

If Dr. Hudson made no mistakes he would be more than human. This applies with equal force to Leo. Miller. In support of Dr. Hudson I can cite similar cases.

In 1858 my father lost a horse, which diligent and continued search, offering of a reward, etc., failed to locate. He remarked to me one morning that he had had a presentiment that night that if he were to look for the horse that day that he would be successful, but that he had an appointment with "A" that day in town and did not wish to disappoint him. He asked my advice, which was to look for the horse, and I assured him that "A" would be inconvenienced in no way, for I was a firm believer in the certainty of the sign that had been given him. Father made long and diligent search was far from home, hungry, and with a worn-out horse, was about to give it up, when he met a man who told him that the horse was some miles from there. Father remarked that his condition and that of his riding animal hardly permitted further search, when the man remarked that he could come to his house and after partaking of food and feeding his animal, he would send one of his herders after the lost horse. Father did so and recovered the animal, which was fortunate, since one of the neighbor's men was leaving for Oregon in the morning and intended taking the horse which father had lost with him. Upon meeting "A" the next day after this incident, "A" said he was glad to have been without the interview on the appointed day, for he would have been unable to have transacted any business, "but I am in a position to-day to do so."

In another instance my grandfather with his household were about to leave on a short journey, when as he was about to step into the carriage he remarked that he thought he ought to go back into the house and look about. His wife tried to dissuade him, but he insisted that the "small voice within" told him to go back. He did so and discovered a smouldering fire up stairs. In the Army and Navy Journal are thousands of cases cited of warnings of danger and death during the civil war.

SPIRIT AND MATTER.

The Law of Manifestation.

The question is asked, "whether all spirit manifestation involves of necessity, manifestation through matter of some grade or degree?"

The question is important. Suggestions toward its discussion may be helpful. It is surely difficult to discriminate air from air in atmospheric space. That is to identify a quantity of air in free space. To show how one section of air might be able to manifest to another, or to identify or discriminate a similar portion from itself.

I believe that without the agency of matter in some state, spirit could not express itself. Remove spirit from matter and it becomes inert. Connect it with matter and it becomes full of life. It is spirit that creates or makes matter knowable.

It seems that matter and spirit will ever be so thoroughly wedded together that they will never be separated. If spirit is dependent upon matter for expression, matter then is of as great a necessity as spirit. Spirit passes through the realm of matter, changing its form, and carrying it from one state to another, higher and higher in the scale, but at the same time it progresses in its external characteristics in correspondence with the progression of matter.

While on earth we are a trinity—a three in one. We have the physical body which is the outgrowth of earthly conditions, and we have the spiritual body which is an evolution or outgrowth of the earthly body. (This is sometimes called the body of 'mortal mind,' or the "astral shell," or perispirite,) and we have the inner or divine life which is unchangeable, the same yesterday and forever. This inner life embodies in the powers of the will.

Mind, intelligence, is spiritual. It is not electrical, i. e., a form of physical force. The conscious personality is rooted, I believe, in the inner or divine cosmic life. Many so-called spirits, as well as men, fancy that matter by its development gains added functions that lead to develop spirit, but this is a misconception. Spirit itself is the organizing power, the cause of development, not the outgrowth of organization but the central power of life from which by its various laws and processes, organization must emanate. The life or intelligence is of light or spirit.

"There can be no light unless there is spiritual power first." Birth into true spirit is growth in the light. (Spirit) Theo. Parker said: "Everything from the mineral kingdom up to the highest spiritual, can be formed out of the atmosphere you breathe. It is the great repository of the life of this planet. It contains your gold, silver, precious stones. It contains all the elements of every form that is brought before your notice." * * Instead of talking about the atmosphere being a void, talk of it as a great repository of life—of all kinds of life." A Plenum. Radiant matter.

I have said that in our earthy bodies we represent a trinity of will, (or spirit) and mind and matter. As an illustration: In singing a song (1) the will acts by directing a force upon the vocal cords. The vibrations of the cords are propagated to the atmospheric air, which of course is matter; these vibrations come to our ears and are translated as sound, perhaps as music. But the circle is completed, spirit, mind and matter, back again to spirit or intelligence. This observation throws light upon the sayings of some Greek philosophers, such as "Opposition, contrast, is the father of things." "One thing alone the Gods (angels) cannot show us." Our knowledge comes through manifoldness. Pure Being, alone, is unknowable. See also the modern doctrine of the "Relativity of Knowledge." After the apprehension of that which is always changing, we may know "Being," the inner life, which does not change. We ascend from multiplicity to unity. From things which seem to that which is.

In the circle of vegetation we have the germinating seed, the plant, the blossom giving seed again.

The dogma of Trinity is regarded as a palpable self-evident error. A person cannot at the same instant be three persons and one person. Trinity excludes unity. Three minds or wills or persons do not constitute a god. It is a mathematical puzzle held in defiance of reason, even against the demand of spiritual faith, and is defended by a perverse ingenuity that is bound to make out a case. As the keystone of a theological system it must be defended and justified but its only supports are sectarian obstinacy and ingenuity. Yet originally the doctrine was intended to establish the actual personality of God, as the will above nature. Supreme over the spheres of necessary law.

"Probably no man ever realized what it would mean if the universe were a mere machine of mechanical evolution instead of being what it is, a field for the play of life, of living power and intelligent will. The living light forcing itself forward to expression in the heart," as Jos. H. Allen said.

"The supremacy of intellect is the universe, under whatever form of expression; is a fundamental principle."

As the mystics Iamblicus and others affirm, "The whole of things is not bound up in fate; there is a principle of the soul higher than nature, whereby we may be raised to a union with the Enonian" life or immortality and exempt ourselves from fate. "Fate follows the decrees of God," says the Asclepian Dialogue. And indeed as all the motions in nature are evidently the product of reason, it should seem there is no room for necessity—in any other sense than that of a steady regular course. That is the central mathematical mind in nature.

THE TRINITY.

Historically the doctrine attempted to state the belief that God was in the world and at the same time beyond it; was transcendant as well as immanent. Nature not wholly emanating divinity. Declaring an essential unity to the cosmos. The doctrine was an attempt to reconcile theism with pan-theism, unity with diversity, mono-theism with poly-theism. Its purpose was to affirm, not to weaken the divine personality.

Unitarians again regard as an error the doctrine of the deity of Christ. That one should be at once God and man was a contradiction in terms. If man, then not God. If God, then not man; one or the other, but to be both at once is out of the question. They are opposite poles of thought. God cannot compress himself within the limits of a human form; no human form will hold the spiritual contents of God.

But if we look deeper we perceive that the early believes felt an essential identity of their inner nature with the Divine. A life within a life. A microcosm within a macrocosm. The uterine system is an example of a life within a life. The baby life is an example, too. Man is the epitome of nature.

The early believers felt as religious men have always felt, as devout minds feel now, that there was a point where the divine and the human met and mingled. That when man (or woman) rose to his full spiritual stature he took on heavenly attributes.

Are we not conscious of this divinity within us? Are not the finest qualities equally characteristic of the human and the Divine? Thus exemplifying the words that "God is the Inner Life of all."

FLAMMARION.

It Is Not Probable He Has Recanted Spiritualism.

In The Progressive Thinker of March 15, is a quotation from a Lincoln, Neb., paper, representing that a few tricks of a prestidigitator has completely upset the faith of the distinguished astronomer, in the facts long established, which prove an after life and communion of spirits!

Without any other evidence than the improbability of its truth, I venture to assert that said recantation is a canard. It may be remembered two or three years ago, the New York World published a similar story, in the form of a direct letter, or cablegram from the astronomer himself, with his name subjoined. It was widely copied, and the astute and erudite editor of the New York Tribune, answering some queries about Spiritualism, repeated this charge, that Flammarion had been deceived by the supposed spirit of Galileo, and had renounced all belief in Spiritualism. The wise (?) Tribune man asserted, as if the question had been finally and forever settled by this one decision of Flammarion; and that there is no truth in the claims of Spiritualism. But in due time, we heard from Flammarion in a reliable way, and he repudiated the entire story! He had never written any such letter, or sent any such cablegram to the New York World, and his faith was unshaken and his facts were the same, as convinced him years ago! It is well. News mongers like to create a sensation and the interest felt in Spiritualism all over the world, makes it a capital means for supplying startling stories, by claiming a halt in its vigorous march against all obstacles, and nothing is more likely to excite wonder and create a lively interest in the sources of news, than to publish a story of a notable recantation. There is no probability that Flammarion has made any such announcement, or authorized anyone else to make one. He may have witnessed some feats of legerdemain that have surprised him, and shown how many ways there are for deceiving; but there is no probability that he has by a little smart jugglery been convinced that spiritual phenomena are all frauds. With much gusto the New York Herald published Mrs. Piper's "confession!" But any intelligent reader could see that there was no confession at all.

She simply stated, what every intelligent reader had known all the time, that she did not know anything about it. But the sensational heading misled thousands, and it went forth as a staggering blow to Spiritualism. It was a blow against the reputation of the press which so plays with the confidence of its readers, and wilfully, by suggestion, misleads the public.

LYMAN C. HOWE.

Immortality.

Immortality to me, is the greatest of all themes. There is no such thing as a man being mortal or immortal according to his belief, or behavior.

So great a thing is not left to the chance belief or behavior of the subject. It is very coincident that if a man is immortal there is no power that can take away his immortality.

Whatever has a beginning has an end. If we cannot prove that man always has existed, as an individualized being, we cannot demonstrate that he always will exist as such a being.

We have proof enough that man exists after the change we call death. But that does not prove his immortality. Fifty millions of centuries is nothing in comparison to eternity.

We talk of the immortal soul, and it may be all right, but I have failed to find any individual on either side of the great divide, that could give any positive evidence on that mighty question.

If there is any being on earth, or above the earth, that can give any positive evidence that any man or set of men are immortal, they will confer one of the greatest favors imaginable. Possibly I ask too much. I cannot be satisfied with less. It is not enough for me to know that I am a part of God, to be swallowed up in the great ocean of spirit, as my body goes back to the earth, from when it came.

I want to know that I am the same individual spirit, to all eternity; without beginning or end. Then I will have plenty of time to investigate.

HUMANITARIAN WORK.

The Home of the Little Mothers.

ITS WORK AMONG THE TENEMENT CHILDREN WHO HAVE TO TAKE CARE OF THE SMALLER BROTHERS AND SISTERS—THE INFLUENCE OF SURROUNDINGS—PRIDE THAT THE CHILDREN TAKE IN THEIR HOME.

There are many things of beauty in this world of ours, things that touch the heart side of one's nature, and stir emotions that blend into the spiritual being and tend to the betterment of humanity.

Among these may be enrolled the "Home of the Little Mothers," an institution the nature and workings of which are described in the New York Sun, which states that the lofty, mirror-lined rooms at 236 Second avenue, where the clever men and women of two continents used to assemble as guests of the British Consul, is now the home of 6,000 tenement reared young girls who make up the membership of the Little Mothers' Aid Association. They and their mothers come up nightly from the heart of the tenement district and sit in their club meetings under a wonderful cut-glass chandelier, bought by the Consul, and their shabby figures are reflected in three mirrors of Venetian glass.

"Pitifully as we need money," say the officers of the association, "we would not turn that glass and gilt into dollars. Its influence is really stronger than we are."

Indeed the sparkling chandelier has thrown its beams far into the dark of the East Side, and illuminated many a top-story home and brightened life for many a discouraged heart. The association's work is in its twelfth year. And many homes in New York owe to it gifts ranging from rent and bread to health and cleanliness, and the use of books.

"Our name ought to go to everybody's heart," said Mrs. A. C. Packard, the superintendent, to a Sun reporter. "Girls under 14 make up our membership, some of them 6 and 7 years old.

"Upon these devolve the care of two or three babies while their mother is out at work, and often of a neighbor's child, too. They are the little mothers, and they have had almost no childhood themselves."

When the association bought the great house, called the old "Canada" place, for $30,000, the officers chose it partly on account of its location, and partly because it is beautiful. Nearly all homes of philanthropic effort, they argued, lack the dignity and atmosphere which are powerful allies to actual effort.

The huge drawing room, the music room back of it and the library at the rear, connected by great carved archways and sliding glass doors; the enormous mirrors and chandeliers and the handsome velvet portieres sold with the house did not, they thought, make the "Canada" place unsuitable for their purpose. Far from that, it enabled them to prove that the children of the tenements are peculiarly sensitive to their surroundings; and to turn that sensitiveness to good account.

"We have wonderfully proved our belief in what would be the influence of the house," said Mrs. Packard. "The children were happy at first just to walk through the rooms. Gradually, when it was necessary we let them use the drawing room for their sewing classes.

"It is strange, indeed, to see the little pinched faces and plain gingham gowns working soberly on coarse garments in the rooms whose walls look ready to welcome at any moment a line of the brilliant guests whom they used to shelter. But I doubt if the mirrors, reflecting velvet-gowned and jeweled women in the old days, were ever filled with such happy faces as on the nights when the mothers of the little mothers decently shawled, slip in and sit breathless through an entertainment by their children.

"The personal pride of the children in the place is not only pride in their home, but pride because it is a beautiful home. Sometimes I enter the drawing room suddenly and find a little girl stepping delicately about with a dust cloth, lovingly touching the marble of the mantle or the gilt frames of the glass. They steal in unbidden to this task, and it is recreation to them.

"I never recall without tears the joy they had in the purchase of the house. We had outgrown the Stuyvesant street place, and the floors on Third avenue and the whole house in Twenty-first street, and the classes were sadly cramped for room. After we bought the house one of the little mothers came to a temperance meeting with a newspaper in her hand.

"'Girls,' she said, 'now we're rich. We've bought a house.'

"I said: 'Is it true we have bought a house? Well, then we're very poor because we've got to pay for it.'

"So I put up a box on the wall for their pennies, to go toward the new house, and in an incredibly short time they had saved $15—these children who have nothing.

"'This is our house,' they tell visitors now. 'We helped pay for this house.'

"Indeed they did help, with cents and with tears. One bitterly cold day while the box was yet unfilled two little girls came, bringing their tiny brother.

"'Baby would come,' they said; 'he has a penny for the box.'

"So they stood him on a chair and he dropped in the cent; and Lizzie, the sister who had earned it, turned her wistful face to me, the tears kept bravely back, as she said:

"'Well, it'll help buy the house, whichever one puts it in.'

"I believe the love and reverence those children have for their home is a great deal owing to their delight in its real beauty. If we let them in here for a day we influence them. It is not only another world in spirit, but to them it is another visible world.

"Briefly, our aim is simply to take care of these little girls who are entrusted with the duties of mothers before they can speak plainly; to constitute ourselves a day-nursery for their baby charges so that they themselves may go to school; and then, when school is over, to welcome them home to bread and milk, and two hours of class-work in cooking and sewing and general housework.

"The lessons in personal cleanliness, in care of clothing, and in morals; the loaning of books; the mother's club; the sheltering of those turned out of doors at night by drunken parents, the summer outings for them all, and the daily care and amusement of the babies brought from dark tenements to our sunny nursery, clothed in clean gingham and taught their letters—these are some of the things we try to carry on. The life of a little mother is the essence of sadness of the entire tenement house district.

"At half past five o'clock they come here mornings, and sit on the steps, and on the lions on either side of the door, waiting patiently to get in. The house opens at eight o'clock.

"By that time we have from a dozen to twenty little women, carrying one-year and two-year-old baby brothers and sisters, all waiting for their breakfast. We let them in and feed them, and send the babies up to the nursery where there is a wonderland of toys such as most of them never dreamed of. Then for a little while we 'mother' the little mothers.

"Every one of them has successfully to pass inspection before she can go to school, and their markings for both appearance and conduct mean money to them. Their markings earn their clothing.

"When we look over a little mother and find her hair brushed and neatly braided, a hat on her head, no rips in her clothing and every button on her shoes, then she gets eight marks. Eight is the highest number she can get in one day. Deductions are made for any defect in cleanliness or tidiness.

"They are taught to count their marks as they would pennies, for we give the marks definite purchasing power. Eight marks will buy a handkerchief; twenty-four will buy a waist; forty-eight will buy a petticoat; and seventy-eight will buy an entire dress. This system preserves their independence and wonderfully improves their personal appearance and their deportment.

"One of their traits is their wonderful unselfishness. Often when twenty-four, or forty-eight marks have been patiently won and entitle the little holder to a new waist or skirt, I have seen her go out in the ragged dress she wore when she came in, but carrying a warm flannel skirt for baby, or shoes and stockings for the little sister at home.

"While we are giving them summer outings this spirit is manifested nearly every day. 'Oh, yes'm,' said one of the little girls as we were starting on a day's trip last summer, 'we're poor, but I know somebody poorer.' And she darted off and returned presently with a forlorn little thing whom she tucked in her place in the line.

"Another time when we were leaving a little girl ran after us and said: 'Oh, I've got this afternoon off and it will be my last chance to go. Can't you take me?'

"We can only take a certain number, but I said: 'Is any one willing to give up her place to Millie?' And there, with our lunch baskets all packed and the sun shining, seven stepped instantly out of the line!"

The two hours between school and dinner time are busy ones at the home. Down in the basement a tableful are happy over the cooking lesson. They are taught to make simple, wholesome dishes, whose preparation by the children at home has revolutionized many an East Side dinner table. They are also taught to put together garments which shall bear more than a semblance of fitting.

Against the drunken and shiftless among the fathers and mothers the association does its best to protect its little mother members. Often late at night the doors are opened to admit a tired little girl, who comes demanding admittance, and to the question with which she is met there is always only one answer:

"Father and mother are both drunk. They turned me out."

There are on the third floor of the big house thirteen tidy white rooms, always ready with fresh linen for those who come up out of the dark streets from the darker homes they have been forced to leave.

They are harbored until morning. Before breakfast they creep back to their homes for the small charges, to whose care they are absolutely loyal. After breakfast, they spend the day in the usual inspection and school and afternoon classes, and then they go quietly home as if the night before had not happened. But often they return for shelter, with the news that "they ain't over it yet."

Such is the account of the "Home of the Little Mothers," and its beneficent and humane work. Few or none of the readers of The Progressive Thinker but will accede that this work is beautiful, and in harmony with the work of angels. It is indicative of the genuine spirit of true Spiritualism, which is an uplifting and ever-helpful influence. Let it not be forgotten that it is in keeping, too, with the objects of the Mediums' Home project at Reed City, Mich.

The Preacher Got the Dog.

A minister passing along the road one day, observed a number of boys in a circle with a small dog in the center. He inquired what they were doing, when one said they were telling lies, and he who told the biggest lie got the dog.

"Dear me," said the minister, "I am ashamed to hear of you telling lies. When I was a boy like you I never told a lie."

"Hand him de dog," said one of the boys. "He's won de prize."—Ex.

LIFE AND EXPERIENCE IN SPIRIT LAND

A Series of Letters From Prof. William Denton, Through the Mediumship of Carlyle Petersilea.

REMARKS BY CARLYLE PETERSILEA.

When my wife read the foregoing letter to me, as is her custom (I really think no one else could make them out, for they are simply a scrawl written with lightning-like rapidity), I listened to the reading of this message from the departed with bated breath.

"Excellent! Most excellent! Still, I do not think that Mr. Denton has yet quite proved that we are immortal beings. Not that I doubt immortality, but faith is one thing, positive evidence an other; and even if all he has said is true, still, what should hinder the developed soul-germ, as he is pleased to term it, or we will say the intelligence and soul, or the life principle, at the death of the material body, from again returning to first principles, from once more becoming atoms and germs or going back into the infinite ocean of ether, spirit, matter, life, intelligence; in other words going back to God, or Om, from whence they emerged? And this is really what Madame Blavatsky taught, when with us in the flesh, and her numerous followers still teach and believe. Such is one of the fundamental doctrines of Theosophy.

"They say that a shell, or astral body, remains for a time without the soul principle; that has returned to Om—the Christians say to God. You don't think, my dear, that Professor Denton has become a Theosophist since he departed this life?"

"If that were the case," she answered, "how could he control you to write?"

"True enough," I said, "how could he? Would it be possible for the astral to control a sensitive?"

"No," she answered. "If soul and intelligence had departed and were again but drops in the abyssmal ether, they could not control any person to write."

"Well, my dear wife," I said, "you and I believe, as do thousands of others, that spiritual beings do control many sensitive persons here on the earth, but all people do not believe this. How are we to know, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that these letters have really been dictated by the spirit of William Denton, professor of geology? You know that Mr. Hudson and many others think that there is a subliminal self, submerged within the selfhood of each one, and that when this becomes active, one is apt to think that the spirit of some one who has departed this life has taken possession of one."

"Well," she replied, "I do not know that we can prove, to anyone, that spiritual beings control you, yet, I personally, know it to be a fact; but, tell me, once more, just how you feel when this power comes upon you."

"Different spirits act upon me in different ways. No two are the same, which is one evidence to me that it cannot be subliminal consciousness, for my own personality must really forever be the same whether it be my subliminal self, or otherwise. But, first, let me say that all spirits who control me first present themselves to my inner sight, and they look as real to me as anyone in the material does to my material sight. One spirit is often introduced to me by another, just as we here are presented to one another. It is seldom that any spirit controls me without first being presented by some other who has been, perhaps, writing through me for some time, and they differ as much in their personal appearance as people here do. When a spirit begins to take control for the purpose of writing, I have very strange sensations. Sometimes I feel a strong pressure on my brain, inside my skull, as though an invisible hand were squeezing it together more compactly; then a film passes over my eyes, my own selfhood becomes partially unconscious, and I become oblivious to time. At this juncture my hand is seized by an invisible power and commences to write with extreme rapidity, so rapidly, indeed, that my half-paralyzed mind cannot follow it, and my filmy eyes cannot read it until after the power leaves me. Again, I feel the pressure of a hand on my shoulder, and words and phrases are whispered into my ear; then, again, the voice is audible to my inner ear, or sense of hearing, sweet, silvery, clear and distinct, like no earthly voice. This phase enraptures me like the most delicious music.

"Sometimes the most beautiful scenes open out before me, as though a cloud parted, or a thin veil of mist, and I behold what I believe, and what the spirits tell me to be, actual scenes in spirit land or the celestial world. Sometimes the power controls me to write out a description of these sights, and at such times I see, perhaps, hundreds and hundreds of spiritual beings.

"Now, how can all this be the submerged, subliminal self? Why, it is much more consistent and reasonable to think it is just what it says it is, than to think it subliminal consciousness. I hope the professor of geology will write more, for I do not think he has yet proved immortality, or rather, the preservation of the self-conscious ego. Will you be kind enough to ask him to do so when he again takes the control?"

"Still, I think he has proved that man has a body of matter, spirit, soul and intelligence, and that these never had a beginning," said my wife.

"Yet," I objected, "none of these were self-conscious entities, and we are self-conscious beings."

"Yes," said she, "but that is just where the great law of evolution comes in to play its part; after the involving of the germ each germ then commences to evolve, unroll, develop. Why, I believe Denton is with you now!" she exclaimed.

"I think he is. There is another curious thing connected with spirit control. When a spirit commences to write, such spirit seems to continue with me, for a certain length of time, like a guest that one entertains at one's house, and during its stay I am conscious of an invisible cord connecting it with me, which does not break until the spirit departs and, when, at length, it takes its leave, I feel this cord snap asunder and at such times I often hear a whirring sound as of a bird flying rapidly away.

"But let us see if Mr. Denton will not write again."

CARLYLE PETERSILEA.

LETTER NUMBER FIVE.

Dear Friends and Readers of The Progressive Thinker:—Mr. Petersilea has promised me that he will send my contributions to that most excellent paper. He says that he also feels sure that the editor, Mr. J. R. Francis, will give me a place among his contributors. This pleases me more than I am able to express. Give us an opportunity, we pray you, and before we have done you will have reason to be glad that you were so kind. Do not look upon us doubtfully, as though we had no existence outside of the imagination. It grieves us sorely that many are inclined so to do.

Now we don't like you to say that we ought not to give our names. We want you to accept us in our own personalities. I don't want to write to you under an assumed name. I don't want to sign myself Tom, Harry, James or John, when I am really William. I would like to be truthful if you will allow me.

But, even at the risk of not having these letters published, I will not call myself other than I am. I have previously written four letters and addressed them to Mr. Petersilea, not knowing that I should be admitted among the staff of contributors to The Progressive Thinker.

If there had been a Progressive Thinker when I was with you in the flesh, it would have delighted me more than I am willing to admit to have been one of its many writers, for I then could have reached thousands who never heard my voice. Well, I used voice and pen, to the extent of my ability, when with you, and I used to think that if I, too, should join the great army of the departed and departing, I would most certainly move heaven and earth to let you know where I was and how it was with me.

Ah, me! I have tried many times but have not succeeded as well as I could desire. The fault has not been mine, I assure you; but I have not always been able to find the proper conditions or the right medium. Spirits, in order to write what they wish to, must have a medium whose mind is not warped in any particular direction—one who will write what the spirit wants written and not what the medium desires to write. I have at last found such an one.

My friends, I used to fight the devil with all my might and did my best to knock the bottom out of hell, or at least to dig an underground passage of escape for the poor creatures shut up within it, and as our Brother Petersilea says, I sometimes thought it would lead me to the door of starvation; but I would have walked through it unflinchingly rather than give up that which I knew to be true. Let us have some more of you who are willing to do this, and our cause will prosper. Don't creep behind some door to shield yourselves from the odious, or supposed to be odious, name of Spiritualism, but stand forth boldly and call the world to battle—battle for the truth.

Don't wrap yourselves up in cloaks of Unitarianism, Universalism, Episcopalianism, Methodism, or Catholicism, you ministers who stand in pulpits, for fear you will lose prestige and your bread and butter, and from thence throw little handfuls of salt at your hearers, just enough to give a slight relish to your hash and rehash, a little of that salt which you know to be true Spiritualism. Throw off your cloaks and stand forth like men and valiant soldiers to fight for truth. Don't be skulking cowards, I beg of you. If you can't earn your bread and butter by telling the truth, earn it by the sweat of your brow, and be men, brave and noble men and women.

Now the medium calls upon me to prove immortality, according to the promise I made in one of my former letters, and I shall proceed to do so to the best of my ability.

We have already stated that all things exist in their primal elementary state within the luminiferous ether—that matter and spirit coalesce or marry—unite—and thus uniting form the atom, that is the two become one, and that is a true type of all right marriages. We also stated that intelligence and life, or soul, united and thus formed the germinal atoms. Now here we have two kinds of atoms composed of different primal elements; one kind might be called lower than the other, one being composed of spirit and matter, the other of soul and intelligence, yet, after all, there is no lower or higher, for all are necessary in the great endless chain of progress; and we have also shown how, after worlds have been formed from atoms composed of spirit and matter, there comes a time, at last, when the germinal atoms come into play. We have also shown how, and why; and now comes the great question; what hinders these developed germs, or human egoes, from being again absorbed into the ether, thus losing their identity on casting aside their bodies of matter; and we will now try to make this as plain to you as possible.

Franz Petersilea wrote, many years ago, the truth as it is; but, it was not he alone who instigated the writing; he controlled the medium but he was associated with a large band of spirits, and the truth was given through him to the medium. You all ought to read, carefully, "The Discovered Country," together with the book, "Oceanides;" but, thus it is: You have all supposed that at death the atoms composing a body fell apart, and this is true. You have all, thus far, thought that the atom was simply matter devoid of spirit, but as we have shown, the atom is composed of spirit and matter; but, at death, that is when the ego composed of soul and intelligence leaves the body of matter, it draws forth every particle of spirit from the atoms, leaving the atoms dead, inert matter; that is, in developing, the intelligent soul-germ or ego has clothed itself with spirit and matter; but now it casts off only one of its garments, dead matter, devoid of spirit. You see in developing, it has grown strong, and raised itself a whole decade. So, now, we have an intelligent soul, the union being still intact between the soul and intelligence, and as it has taken spirit along with it, is now three in one, that is, an intelligent soul-germ, or as it now may be properly called ego, clothed with spirit; and everything that lives goes through the same process, and everything rises outward from the solid globe of matter, forming lovely, beautiful, spiritual spheres, that life and intelligence may be happy and content. The soul-germs first descend from the ether and clothe themselves with spirit and matter. As they develop they throw off matter, retaining spirit; and thus the earth itself is constantly giving up its spirit to form the heavenly spheres.

A woman or a baker mixes dough out of flour and water and bakes cakes, but try as he or she may, they cannot put the cakes back into primal flour again, neither into the first form of the kernel of wheat; a change has been wrought and nothing goes backward.

"Well," the medium says, "but how may it be when at last the intelligent soul casts off spirit? Perhaps then the intelligence and life return to their primal state in ether, and thus immortality may be but a dream after all, that is the immortality of the self-conscious personality or ego."

Self-consciousness does not reside within the primal soul-germ; it is only through growth and development that a soul-germ becomes self-conscious, and after it has become self-conscious—conscious of its own being—such consciousness can never be wiped out, that is, thus I am taught by those higher than myself, and thus I believe; but, of course, as I am yet within the spiritual spheres, I do not know, beyond the shadow of a doubt, and I have not met with any soul who does, but all believe immortality to be a great truth. Of course, all elements are immortal, never having had a beginning they can never have an end. It is simply the fact of self-consciousness, or identity. But my identity and yours are becoming larger and broader all the time; experience after experience, truth and knowledge are being added thereto constantly, and I have seen angels so bright, glorious, dazzling and beautiful, that their appearance was God-like; and one cannot conceive of such beings losing their identity. This is about all that I can say on the subject of being absorbed once more as unconscious, primal germs, into the ether.

Of course, all things exist at the present time, as they are, within the ether, and I do not believe that the life principle ever takes a retrograde movement. All things, so far as I know, are forever being pushed onward and upward by this intelligent force: God, Om, Ether, Infinite Intelligence; call it what one may.

From one who dwells as a conscious, living soul, within the never-ending ocean of ether—the ethereal and celestial world.

SPIRITUALISM--THE SCIENCE OF SCIENCES

An Address by the President of the Devilless and and Godless Club.

It has been denied that Spiritualism has risen to the magnitude of a science, and, therefore, it was claimed that it properly belonged to the vagaries of imagination. Locke, the great mental philosopher, defines spirit as "a substance in which thinking, knowing and a power of moving do subsist." It becomes evident, therefore, that the manifestations of these forces, the application of their powers, and the demonstrations of their character, furnish a proper formula for a scientific basis.

Has Spiritualism presented any hitherto unknown facts to the world? Has it offered any truth for the investigation of mankind which can be practically applied and produce certain results? Has there been, through the impulse it has given to thought, any thorough inquiry into the facts of a continuous existence beyond the grave, to which a clear and definite response has been given, leading to a more comprehensive knowledge of the certainties, powers and possibilities of the spirit in its continuous existence in the life beyond? These are all pertinent questions; what is the answer?

How was Modern Spiritualism heralded to the world? Unannounced it came, with manifest token which commanded recognition. It uttered an audible sound, and gave evidence of accompanying intelligence. Here were two important facts presented for investigation—viz.: power and intelligence—a hitherto unknown force, guided by intelligence—producing sound in regular and systematic order, and challenging investigation. These sounds asserted they were produced by a conscious individuality, an entity, a spirit, through natural laws pertaining to spirit life. They came in response to inquiries; they gave information through the alphabet, rapping as the correct letter was called out, and spelling out correctly sentences conveying a higher order of thought than was possessed by the circle of investigators. To test the correctness of this, Prof. Hare constructed his dial, the letters on the face of which were unseen by the medium, while he recorded the letters pointed out by the unseen force operating the pointer of the dial. Facts were thus obtained, and unmistakable proof of spirit return and personal presence was furnished him.

But sound and movement did not cease here. Heavy articles were moved in such a manner as to demonstrate a force stronger than the law of gravitation, or setting it at defiance. Here was a new fact for investigation. The Carpenters undertook to explain it on the theory of "unconscious cerebration," or to dispose of it on the ground of "impossibility," "predisposition," or "hallucination;" the Beards on "the unreliability of human testimony;" and the cashiered Surgeon-General Hammond on "the diseases and abnormal action of the nerves and brain." The Holmeses and Clarkes stored it away "in memory's cells," ready to be uncorked, like wine at wedding, whenever the guests were ready for the feast. And yet phenomenon has followed phenomenon, and wonder succeeded wonder, until these bigoted, self-constituted Solons have been left behind in the march of Science, standing like tombstones in a graveyard to mark what has been.

Prominent among its many facts are raps, table-tipping and movement of tables when no visible hand or other appliance is touching them; the playing of musical instruments when no visible musician is touching the keys, the controlling of the hand to write unconscious of the will of the medium, and that, even, as has occurred where the medium was a child that could not compose or write the sentences itself when not under control. To this add psychography, or independent writing, the independent voice and materializations, and the Carpenters, Beards, Hammonds, Holmeses and Clarks are called upon to "rise and explain."

The great truth Spiritualism has presented and verified is immortality. It has brought us our friends alive from the realm of the silent dead," as we had previously been taught to consider them, and opened the door of communion between this world and the supernal spheres. In the millions of cases where the presence of loved ones has been realized and verified, the truth that our friends live, that they can and do come back to us, demonstrates to a mathematical certainty that we shall live also—and that in the laws of being, when we have attained to a proper understanding of them, there are provisions which will enable us to return after we have cast off this mortal body and manifest our presence in like manner as they have manifested theirs.

It has advanced knowledge into the psychic realm, and taught us many truths connected therewith. Abstract principles in regard to the laws governing the action of mind on mind, and of mind on matter, have been presented in form, and can be studied, applied and practically demonstrated. The power of mind over bodily ailments has been abundantly proven. The question, "Who hath a medicine to minister to a mind diseased?" has been answered. The calm and vigorous mind, cultivated in the use of its powers, holding its forces under strict control, acting in a healthy and harmonious body, has the medicine which, when rightly applied, can control nearly all pure mental disorders.

Through thorough investigation of its revealments and the knowledge thus obtained, inquiry has been carried into the fields of the future life, and the philosophy of a future state has been established upon a permanent basis. The law of compensation running through the entire universe, has been found to reach its culmination in the Sphere of Justice, where the soul will sit in judgment on itself and award equal and exact justice for every thought, word, act or deed.

All intelligent and cultured minds, who have communicated from the other life, have borne united testimony to the power of unselfish goodness in elevating the spirit and advancing it along the corridors of knowledge into the supernal fields of light and wisdom. Thus heaven has become the sphere of goodness, love and purity to which ever increasing knowledge lends added charms. When the incarnated hell which the spirit has borne along with it from this life to that, like a shell upon the back of a tortoise, is gradually broken off from the spirit, and when that individual spirit has fully rendered compensation for all wrong doings here, it will arise in the newness of life, into those harmonial relations with other beings, and with the entire realm of mind and matter which will constitute a heaven in the soul.

A. J. Davis has presented his "Views of our Heavenly Home," searching with the cultured vision of the seer for a knowledge of life as revealed from the home of spirit. Hudson Tuttle has lucidly given his extended views; Mrs. Maria M. King glimpses of "Real Life in the Spirit Land," and other authors have contributed their scientific investigations of another life, as revealed through Spiritualism.

Of the powers and possibilities of spirit but little may be claimed as known. That "It is the spirit that quickeneth," we have positive knowledge. That it possesses a power over matter of which human science is ignorant has been demonstrated the world over. The wonderful achievements in important discoveries, inventions, and general advancement in every field of science since the advent of Modern Spiritualism, attest its all-potent influence in the grand onward march of the human race.

Thus the progress of mind in unlocking and bringing out for use the treasures of hitherto unexplored recesses of Nature under the impetus of spirit influence, has demonstrated that unknown powers, reaching towards the Infinite, are the yet uncultivated possessions of the spirit.

Linking back to molecule and atom on the one hand, the cosmos of all between atom and himself, the complement of all their forms,—the concentration of all their powers, standing midway between atom and Deity—or Infinite Spirit, through his spiritual development, man forms the connecting link between the mundane and supermundane world, with the powers and possibilities of both. These powers may be latent, yet partaking of the ethereal elements and vital energies of both worlds, they must necessarily be stored within the personality of spirit, and be capable of being brought out into active operation.

We know that the human mind is capable of attaining and accumulating knowledge during the entire period of the earth life, gathering lessons from experiences under difficulties and amid embarrassing surrounding circumstances; even while the spirit is imprisoned in its outer physical tenement, and acting within and through its animo-mineral structure. When, therefore, that spirit, which has possessed the powers to attain to such God-like intelligence while yet in the physical, is relegated to the realm of causes in the invisible world, where intelligence knows no limit, and the endless aeons of eternity are before it, to what sublime heights of intelligence and power may not that Master Spirit attain? You must limit eternity and the field of Infinite Causes before you can limit the powers and possibilities of the human spirit.

Before the pseudo scientists disclaim farther against the claims and status of Spiritualism as the science of sciences, let them patiently inquire at the threshold of Infinite knowledge for the interior revealments of truth and wisdom which are locked within her spacious chambers, and which can only be revealed in spirit through spirit investigation, and they will be dumb before the majesty of science to be revealed.

The gathering and combination of spirit energies, the concentration of forces, as arranged in the councils of Supernal Wisdom, and the shaping of human events by those forces, will inevitably lead those obtuse bigots, now known as materialistic scientists, to place Spiritualism at the head of all sciences, or else will conduct them to the rear of the Grand Army of Progress, and leave them behind, as "The truth goes marching on."

Thus you have our views of Spiritualism which is now agitating the whole civilized world. The Godless and Devilless Club having no God to worship and no Devil to fear, are wonderfully receptive to the truth, and embrace it cordially wherever it presents itself. Each member is expected to do a certain amount of humanitarian work every year, for that alone in a great measure will redeem the world. The sister who adopted a homeless little girl, showering down upon her the rich fruitage of her affection, and directing her aright in all the duties of life, is acting a wonderfully beneficent part in the magnificent drama of life. The fact is, if others would do the same amount of humanitarian work now efficiently performed by this club, there would not be a suffering man, woman or child on the face of the earth to-day. Away with all isms, all creeds, all cults, all sects, all religions that do not lead its members into humanitarian work. The children of the poor must be carefully educated. The orphans must have homes. The destitute aged must be tenderly cared for. Those who are unfortunate in the Battle of Life must be rendered assistance. In fact, the most important duty for each one to perform is to lend a helping hand to those who are in some way crippled, and cannot cope successfully with the burdens heaped upon them. Poverty and crime are continually acting as a disturbing element. Relieve the world of them, and the long-looked-for millennium would be ushered in at once. But that can only be accomplished gradually. Poverty is increasing; crime is becoming more general in consequence of the large influx of ignorant foreigners, and the great problem now is before us—how can the world be placed upon a plane where poverty and crime shall practically cease?

HIGH SCRIBE.

Neither Science Nor Religion in Spiritualism.

To the Editor:—The old adage is that it is better late than never. I have read your symposium with a great deal of pleasure, and find in it as many opinions as writers, and on account of the sickness of my wife I have not been able to contribute my mite until now.

Is Spiritualism a science or a religion? Science is defined as a discovered truth, or a scientific discovery. Can we class Spiritualism with that? Was it a scientific discovery? Was it discovered as such? The tiny rap that first heralded in Spiritualism was not scientifically discovered, but a production of a natural gift developed in the little Fox sisters. Study will not develop it. It is as natural as the tree of the forest, as the beautiful flowers that come and develop through the mediumship of earth, air and water, and the operation of the necessary heat. It is a natural mediumistic gift and can only come when the proper conditions exist. All of the applications of science and study will not produce a single demonstration of spiritual phenomena, but let the medium appear on the scene and the proper conditions existing, and your rappings and phenomena at once appear.

I therefore conclude it is not a scientific demonstration and cannot be produced by science or classed as such.

Neither can it be classed with the religions of the world. Religion is defined as "the performance of our duties of love and obedience towards God; piety; and a system of faith and worship."

While we love and cherish our loved ones that have gone on before, we do not worship them as a God or Infinite Intelligence; we do not call upon them for special favors in prayer or hold them up as deities with superior powers; there is nothing in Spiritualism pure and simple that would indicate or that would lead us to divine reverence of any object, either known or unknown. Spiritualism is simply a fact demonstrated through natural mediumship just the same as any other fact of nature. Every act of our lives is demonstrated through some natural or artificial medium. We have to use a medium for thought, for conversation, the vocal organs given are not by science or religion but by nature and we can do no act without the proper conditions and the medium, science or religion, notwithstanding. Spiritualism is a demonstrated fact, not by science or religion, but our loved spirit friends that have gone on before.

They demonstrate that they retain memory, intelligence and individuality, retaining all of their faculties of earth life, with the added experience of the great beyond. But the skeptic comes and says they lie over there, some spirits tell untruth and prevaricate; that may be to some extent true; they are only human spirits, and as I said before they retain their individuality, memory and character to a certain degree. Yet that does not disprove Spiritualism because some spirit may tell us an untruth. It does prove this, that spirits retain their individuality even after the change called death.

I must conclude this short article by asserting that I can discover no element of a religion or science in Spiritualism or its phenomena.

Lastly all of the eight Valuable Books here announced are sent out all postage prepaid, for $2.50—a price never offered before by any other publisher.

Read This Carefully Before Remitting.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and their price, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

These eight books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printer's art, will be furnished to our subscribers for $2.50, a price which modern machinery and enterprise has rendered possible. Sending out these books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, inview of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter.

REMARKABLE OFFER.

EIGHT REMARKABLE BOOKS FOR $2.50.

Total price to our subscribers, $2.50.

The Progressive Thinker one year and the eight Divine Plan books, $3.50.

In order to assist in forming a Spiritual and Occult Library in every Spiritualist's home, these eight valuable books, substantially and elegantly bound in cloth, are furnished to our subscribers for $2.50. We are able to do this, from the fact that the authors make no charge for the vast amount of labor bestowed on these works, and which extended over many years. That is why you are getting these intensely interesting books for the price you do. We are only carrying out the Divine Plan, inaugurated only by The Progressive Thinker. There are thousands of our subscribers who have no Spiritualist or Occult library, and this inducement is offered in order that they may commence forming one at once, and thus keep in line with the advancing procession. The postage on the above books and expense of mailing is about 95 cents, hence you are receiving them at an exceedingly low price—simply the result of modern enterprise combined with a desire to do good.

"After Her Death. The Story of a Summer." By Lilian Whiting. No mind that loves spiritual thought can fail to be fed and delighted with this book. Beautiful spiritual thought, combining advanced ideas on the finer and ethereal phases of Spiritualism, leading the mind onward into the purer atmosphere of exalted spiritual truth. A book for the higher life. For sale at this office. Price, cloth $1.

"Right Living." By Susan H. Wixon. The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principle of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in Children's Lyceum. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. Cloth $1 For sale at this office.

"Poems of Progress." By Lizzie Doten. In this volume, this peerless poet of Spiritualism may be read in her varied moods, "from grave to gay, from lively to severe." It is a book to be treasured and richly enjoyed by all who love genuine poetry, and especially by Spiritualists. The volume is tastily printed and bound. Price $1.

"The Pantheism of Modern Science." By F. E. Titus, Barrister, Toronto, Canada. A summary of recent investigations into Life, Force and Substance, and conclusions therefrom. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"The Kingship of Self-Control." By Wm. George Jordan. It treats of the crimes of the tongue, the Red Tape duty, the supreme charity of the world, the revelation of reserve power, etc. Price 30 cents. For sale at this office.

"The Gospel of Buddha, According to Old Records." Told by Paul Carus. This book is heartily commended to students of the science of religions, and to all who would gain a fair conception of Buddhism in its spirit and living principles. Spiritualist or Christian can scarcely read it without spiritual profit. Price $1. For sale at this office.

SPIRIT COMMUNICATIONS.

One is struck by the awe, even reverence, with which so-called communications from the dead are received. They are accepted often as pearls of wisdom, while the same utterances from one clothed with flesh would be disregarded. Advice received in this way is treasured and acted upon, because it is so received, when it would be very carefully considered before put into action were it given by some visible personage. A misplaced reverence leads to a misplaced dependence and robs one of necessary self-reliance. This is one of the results observable as a consequence of belief in the spiritistic explanation.

This is not without truth, and also not without value. One of the gravest defects of the Old Testament is that the persons, whose sayings and actions are recorded, too readily received every spirit as "as the angel of the Lord" or "the Lord" himself. The result of that may be seen in spiritual monstrosities and ethical catastrophes that are now threatening to drag the church and religion down; and, in like manner, excessive reliance upon spirit messages may drag Spiritualism down. At the same time there is no necessity whatever for a carping spirit, or for chilled receptivity, as though the one thing needed were suspicion. There is here a "golden mean."

MEDIUM TRACES A MISSING MAN.

On January 13 last a young man went to a party and proceeded to his office the following morning without returning to his home. He left his business as usual on the 14th, parted from a friend, and ran to catch a tram car, and thereafter disappeared from all who knew him. The case was put into the hands of the police, who, however, utterly failed to discover any trace of the missing man.

In their despair, the relatives of the unfortunate young fellow requested a friend of mine to consult a medium. My friend visited a private medium well-known to me, but whose name I am not permitted to mention. The medium passed under control, and, after holding a necktie which my friend had given to him to serve as a link for psychometric connection, the latter, or his spirit "control," said: "You will never see the young man to whom this tie belongs any more, for he is drowned, and lies in the water. I see him enter a tram car—it is a strange one. He drops asleep and goes to the car terminus. He stumbles out and wanders about, more asleep than awake. He stumbles against something and falls into water. The spirit is now here, although apparently unconscious.'

The medium further said that there had not been any violence, neither had the young man been robbed; nor was the deed premeditated. It was an accident, and had happened late at night. My friend said that the latter statement was wrong, as she was under the impression that it must have occurred early in the evening. In the course of his description the medium saind that he saw a lady who was the young man's sister. My friend again contradicted him, as she believed that he had no sister; but she has since learnt that she was in error.

The body of the young man was subsequently found in the Thames, and the statements of the medium were confirmed in every particular, as his rings were on his fingers, and his watch and other belongings were still in his pockets, and the watch was found to have stopped at one o'clock! Surely here is a case in which Spiritualism has been of service to those who were suffering. I enclose the names of the medium and of my friend for the satisfaction of the editor, to whom they will be pleased to give any further particulars that he may desire.

REMARKABLE PREVISION.

On May 6, 1901, I called on Mrs. Manks at 11 a. m. She was entirely a stranger to me, never having seen or heard of me before. She said, "Your mother is very ill, and is almost in the spirit world; when the leaves fall in the autumn she will pass away. I see your sister nursing her; your sister is weary, has a pain in the right knee, and feels as if she could sink into the ground."

I arrived home on May 7, and on asking my sister how she was on May 6, at 11 a. m., she said she had a sharp pain in the right knee, and felt as if she could sink into the earth. She had nursed her mother over six years continuously. My mother passed away on October 26, as had been foretold by Mrs. Manks, and it will be remembered that last year the autumn leaves began, in the Northern counties, to fall earlier than is usually the case. This was attributable to the early frosts at night. These facts can be all verified.

MRS. BESANT ON PRAYER.

The chapter on Prayer in Mrs. Besant's "Esoteric Christianity," illustrates as well as anything could do the essential unity of Theosophy and Spiritualism in relation to the one supreme fact which dominates both—perception of the nearness and activity of an all-pervading spirit world; but, in connection with that supreme fact, the word "Theosophy" seems unnecessary. Names apart, however, here is a bond of union which, even though we do not recognize and outwardly act upon it, exists. It perhaps matters very little that we should act together; but it does matter a great deal that we should all, whether Theosophists or Spiritualists, keenly perceive that this supreme fact should be kept supreme in our consciousness and in our calculations; for the perception of the nearness and activity of an all-pervading spirit world must be a hundred times more important and germinal than any one of the hundred doctrines or notions connected with it.

On this subject Mrs. Besant is happily very thorough and very clear; no Spiritualist more so, as the following sentences show: "In the invisible worlds there exist many kinds of Intelligences, which come into relationship with man, a veritable Jacob's ladder, on which the angels of God ascend and descend, and above which stands the Lord himself." "All the world is filled with living things, invisible to fleshly eyes. The invisible worlds interpenetrate the visible, and crowds of intelligent beings throng around us on every side."

It is here, then, that Mrs. Besant gets foothold in her search for the rationale of prayer. The modern spirit is, as she truly says, antogonistic to prayer; and even the modern man who prays and believes is sorely puzzled to understand how prayer can be effectual. It does not help much to say that God hears and answers prayer, while we try to retain the old crude anthropomorphic notions of God; for, in reality, those old notions are precisely the hindrances, the conscious or unconscious hindrances, in our way.

Help comes the moment we have our eyes opened to the tremendous fact of spirit activity on our plane of being. That prayer is answered we know; and that even trivial prayers for external things are answered we know. "In connection with charitable undertakings, especially, there is plenty of evidence of help prayed for in urgent need, and of speedy and liberal response," even to the detail of blankets and boots; and, of course, science and sense snigger and pass on; but the operation is not stayed. And yet the explanation is a simple one—simple but immense.

We are "surrounded with a great cloud of witnesses," and witnesses of all grades, all occupations, and all affinities; and prayer is nothing more than the expression of an ardent wish. Then what happens? The thrill of the mental or spiritual desire, sent forth, is a force in the spirit world, and may "ring up" a helpful being who can, will, or may execute the commission. If it is a George Muller who prays for blankets and boots, out of his generous, simple and believing heart, nothing is more likely than that the can, will, and may will be forthcoming; that some person with a check book and a heart may have his "brain vibrations" telepathically started, with results as definite as any that Marconi can procure.

It is, at all events, in form, a scientific explanation—granting the existence of the spirit world; and everybody must admit that the explanation is adequate as a hypothesis. There is something fascinating, too, in this superb sweep of thought; in this daring postulate; and he who would cherish contempt for it is a negligible quantity. Even in the severest fields of science there is a recognized margin for the scientific imagination. Why not here? It may, indeed, be denied that the problem exists, and we may be told that our premises are fanciful; but it cannot be denied that if the facts concerning prayer are as Mrs. Besant states them, her attempted solution of the problem is on sound scientific lines.

But Mrs. Besant goes much farther afield, and, though some may hesitate, we very willingly follow her, tentatively, but "without prejudice." We are already familiar with the hypothesis that, in addition to "ministering spirits," we ourselves are forces, mostly unconscious forces, in the vast ocean of spirit life around us. "Man," says Mrs. Besant, "is himself a constant creator of invisible beings, for the vibrations of his thoughts and desires create forms of subtle matter the only life of which is the thought or the desire which ensouls them; he thus creates an army of invisible servants who range through the invisible worlds seeking to do his will." We should prefer to state this truth on a lower key, and to modify "a constant creator of invisible beings;" but the underlying notion we believe is correct. Man, in fact, may answer his own prayers, and in more ways than one, and sometimes, in the most important way, unwittingly.

The thought which follows this, in Mrs. Besant's essay, is one which, as our readers know, we have long indicated as carrying us beyond all phenomena, and all human hope and fear, to the ultimate hope for us all. We call the Ultimate Reality "God," and Mrs. Besant points us to "the ever-present, ever-conscious Life," "potent and responsive at every point of his realm," "that all-pervading, all-embracing, all-sustaining Life and Love, in which we live and move." As usual, Mrs. Besant is here very definite and picturesque. She must always be definite and positive; but here this is helpful. "There is a Being," she says, "whose consciousness is present at every point of his universe, and therefore can be affected from any point. That consciousness is not only vast in its field, but inconceivably acute, not diminished in delicate capacity to respond because it stretches its vast area in every direction, but is more responsive than a more limited consciousness, more perfect in understanding than the more restricted."

Of course this is, on our plane, ungraspable, but it is not entirely inconceivable; and Mrs. Besant helps when she partly escapes from her picturesque descriptive suggestion of an all-diffused being, and compares him to the central man which receives from nerve cells, nerve-threads and muscular fibres the vibrations that suggest thoughts, and which then uses the brain centers and sensory nerves to give effect to its desires; "so many myriads of Intelligences be the agents, but it is God who knows and answers."

Mrs. Besant finally ends on a high plane of thought indeed. Ideal prayer is prayer for spiritual enlightenment and spiritual growth, merging in the still higher form of prayer when it "loses its petitionary character and becomes either a meditation on, or a worship of, God." With this, there will always be (as was perfectly the case with Christ) full surrender to the Highest. Then the overwhelming triumph is secure, because the surrounding spirit is identified with God and has his forces at command, not so much as his own, but as the devoted agent and servant of Infinite Power. Hence that saying of Christ's: "I and the Father are one."

BLESSINGS OF SPIRITUALISM.

It gives me much pleasure to testify to the truth of a remarkable experience. Several weeks ago some friends of mine, who have a family and live in the North, lost their child of ten years old in the following manner: The child simply disappeared from his home one day, leaving no trace whatever, just as though the earth had swallowed him up; and during two whole weeks his family, almost distracted with grief, ransacked the country in every direction, but in vain. An accurate description of the child was given to the police in the neighboring towns and villages, with orders to search, but all to no avail, and the father concluded that the child was dead, probably drowned in one of the neighboring ponds or lakes. I was informed of our friends' distress and was impressed to consult a medium. I therefore visited Madame Florence Montague, taking with me the letter containing the distressing news, this being the only object I possessed likely to serve as a point of contact. After placing the letter to her brow, closing her eyes, and remaining a few moments in silence, Madame Montague assured me that the child was alive and well; moreover, that he was being taken care of by nice people, having strayed from home, and in some strange manner lost his memory, and been unable to give an account of himself. Madame Montague advised that the loss of the child should be announced in the local papers, with a full description of him, which she felt certain would lead to the child's restoration almost immediately. I wrote directly to my friends and advised them strongly to advertise as suggested by the medium. They followed the advice at once, with the result that the next day the family received a telegram from a gentleman in a neighboring village who had given the boy shelter, and had tenderly looked after him until he could learn who he was and where he came from, which knowledge he obtained by the notice in the paper. The boy is now happily at home, much to the joy of his friends. I am glad to give this testimony to the blessings of Spiritualism and the value of mediumship.

JUDGE ARINGTON.

His Demonstration of the Existence of a God.

In The Progressive Thinker, No. 637, is a largely extended article on at least a portion of Andrew Jackson Davis' Arabula. Through the kindness and consideration of Mr. Hiram Barber, and the means of the truly Progressive Thinker, the truth about one part of Arabula has been brought to light. The article is interesting from every standpoint.

Where the Judge dives into and essays to make so clear the "first cause," he was writing at a time when the age of reason was in its dawning. Theology was then an unexplored realm. Free thought was then so feeble as to be unable to prevent the strangling of all reasoning on holy subjects, and the Judge easily finds himself at home in the lap of the church. His expressions prove it. Let us revert to a few of them. He calls persons "dunces because they haven't learned that three angles of a triangle are always equal to two right angles." Again, speaking of assigned force, he says, "such an evolution is an act, not of philosophy but of madness." Again, in referring to the transient manifestations passing immediately before our eyes, he says, "No one but a fool will ever ask what was before the eternal." It is evident that he hadn't learned that it is as legitimate to ask for a God-maker as for a Nature-maker.

Again, he speaks of the "folly and insanity of atheism." Compare such language with the exalted and pure style of science.

Again, let us see if the great legal-minded Judge would not have made a fairly good Methodist exhorter. He says, "I beseech thee, O, my brother! The infinite hopes hang upon it, and all time and eternity—the everlasting, and the loves dearer than life itself. Fly not for refuge to barren logomachies. It will not thus be resolved. Answer me not that these are only the effects of law. Say not, with Ralph Waldo Emerson, it is Order which does it all." It is possible that the exhorting art wasn't new to him. As far as Emerson is concerned, it may now surprise the Judge, in his new home beyond the grave, to see Emerson oft quoted and revered, while himself is scarcely noticed.

The great learning of the Judge, in works of the by-gone masters, is entertaining and useful. It is profitable even for the prophet to take occasional glances backwards. It enlightens his bearings. It is not, however, food for the present-day mind to believe that truth, mathematical law, space, substance, motion, order, intelligence, etc., could not have been their own cause, as well as that God could have been his own cause. It is as easy to think of truth and mind as being causeless as of a causeless Deity.

The Judge says, "a machine implies a maker." He clearly did not reflect that man is a machine, and that if man is made in God's image then God is equally a machine. He admits that Nature is difficult to explain. Everyone will agree to that. He calls "The Book of Nature," written by Dr. John Mason Good, "absurd, a strange medly, and pompous." The Judge felt himself competent to be a judge of Dr. Good. Again, he calls Shelley mad because he said "If there be a God he must be the author of all evil." He says, "such blasphemy is horrible." He finds Nature difficult to explain, but shows no doubt of his perfect understanding of God.

The Judge evidently had been extremely horrified to have heard the suggestion of a religion of Nature, and a worship of the intelligent soul of Nature, and the belief that such a church system would be more substantial and soul feeding than any of the Protestant and Catholic systems that he endorses. It is considerably in evidence that the Judge would have called Denton's "Soul of Things" wickedness, satanic, and rot.

That the Judge was honest is unquestionable. He had strong convictions and desired to benefit the world. He had an active mind and wanted the truth. In his now many years' home in the beautiful Summerland he is doubtless getting more of truth. He will at least have learned that the next life knows no supernatural. Given time enough and he will be a bright, beautiful spirit.

It may be further added that if the theory is true that whatever has a beginning will have an end, then the universe, on the church teaching, will have an end, and Judge Alfred W. Arington's poor, pitiable, supernatural God will have another long spell of loneliness.

Spirits on Food, Etc.

Among the sensational messages from the spirit world there are none perhaps more valuable to the average person than those giving spirit advice on our foods, drinks, luxuries, vices, etc. We admit that the spirit advice will vary as will the intelligence of the spirit giving it. Low, sensual, earth-bound spirits will crave and advise rum, tobacco, meat, grease, tea, coffee, opiates, alcohol, etc., but when we come to consult the higher and more progressed spirits or angels, we find that they always advise, when possible, for a person to eat a vegetarian, fruit, cereal, milk, cream, egg, nut diet. They oppose the eating of pork, meats or other animal foods, but do not object to milk, cream, cheese, etc., when not adulterated by animal fats or lard secured from pork or meat products. The spirits oppose tea, liquor and all coffees except so-called wheat-coffee or similar drinks, made from roasted grains or cereals. All personal indulgence in alcohol, nicotine (tobacco), opium, tea, wines, etc., is highly condemned as very injurious to the human system. This evidence has been secured by experts, who have spent thousands and thousands of dollars in exploring, investigating and making researches into the spirit world, with its strange, superhuman inhabitants. No money, thanks or even gratitude is asked or expected in giving the results of these researches to the world. They are given generously, "without money and without price." If people will accept them, obey the common, natural laws of health, breathe pure, fresh air continuously, bathe early and often, think kind, happy thoughts, bask or walk or ride in the sunshine, and live a half-way virtuous, respectable life, we predict that all pain, sickness, disease and gluttony, etc., would be reduced 95 per cent, and people would feel 500 per cent better. Will you try the spirits' advice for one month, and let The Traveler know how you feel? Eat rice, Indian meal, grains, cereals, vegetables, honey, milk, eggs, oatmeal, breads, fruits, nuts, etc. Give 'em a show.—G. Lothrop, in Boston Traveler.

A CLERGYMAN WHO SEES AND BELIEVES IN GHOSTS

An Editorial of the New York Journal, and an Open Letter in Reply to the Same.

The Reverend Minot J. Savage thinks that he has received spirit messages. He and Professor Hyslop believe in each other and they also believe in ghosts.

A certain interesting woman appropriately named Piper who has the faculty of leading moderately intelligent men to indulge in innocent dreams, talks to ghosts and tells her worthy customers what the ghosts have to say.

Dr. Savage's and Professor Hyslop's childish gullibility is published so extensively that it is worth while, if not absolutely necessary, to pay some attention to their notions.

When a Reverend Dr. Savage or a learned Professor tells you that he believes in ghosts and spirits, you must not take ghosts and spirits any more seriously than before. You must say to yourself that even reverend gentlemen and learned professors are easily victimized when they meet the right kind of a Mrs. Piper and feel a sufficiently deep interest in the ghost question.

To make a man believe in ghosts all you have to do is to show him or tell him something that he can't understand.

Among ignorant savages if a cow dies of colic they declare somebody a witch and burn that somebody alive. They can't understand that a cow should die of colic.

If the Reverend Dr. Savage's cow died of colic he would not believe in ghosts. But if a clever woman tells him some childish fairy story about a dead relative and succeeds in puzzling his little brain, then you have a clergyman talking solemnly about the reality and the mystery of spirits.

Flammarion, the astronomer, recently ranked among the intelligent gullibles. He has just discovered that the ghost stories told him were common lies and cheating. He has recanted and apologized for his foolishness. The gentlemen now telling strange stories about Mrs. Piper will find, in time, that they have been classing themselves among the voodoo worshiping negroes, or else they will settle down to a happy, misty, dreamy career of believing in nonsense.

This globe, eight thousand miles in diameter, is a solid real proposition.

It is one of the millions of planets, one of the many millions of atoms in a great universe, one of the small items in the list of God's vast possessions.

Men are put here to cultivate the earth and take care of it. Their spirits, if they have spirits, are put in solid bodies, with arms to dig and legs to walk and brains to plan machinery, and canals and sowing and reaping.

Their activity, on this earth at least, is limited to digging and draining and developing the earth and themselves, physically and intellectually. The body goes back into the ground, and the work of that individual ends, at least until the force which animated it is made active once more in another material body.

We know absolutely nothing about creation, nothing about what follows death, nothing about the mystery of life, except we take such matters on faith from our variously revealed religions.

But this we do know—that no stone is turned, no deed is done, no line is written, no word is spoken on this planet except by a living human being, made and living according to God's law, subject to the law of gravitation, subject to the law which says that no force can act except through matter.—New York Evening Journal, March 10, 1902.

An Open Letter to W. R. Hearst.

Dear Sir:—In your issue of March 10, you give your readers a dissertation on Modern Spiritualism to which many of your intelligent readers will, without doubt, take serious exceptions. I beg to class myself among "intelligent readers," not only of your esteemed paper, but of many others, also; and, in my humble way, I would add my mite to the vast store of intelligent thought on the subject of Spiritualism which is finding expression these days in both press and pulpit, and to call your attention to some things, in the editorial above referred to, which, to my mind, are at variance with truth and with the best thought of our age.

The free press of our day and country is a great boon to humanity, since through it millions are taught, and the thought of the masses is largely molded. You stand, then, in the position of one who has great power and influence, for good or evil; and, since I am an optimist, and would not judge any man harshly—nor at all, unless I knew whereof I spake—I am willing to give you the benefit of honest doubt, in the matter of this subject, and say that I believe you mean to wield an influence for good through the columns of your paper; but I am of the opinion, at the same time, that you are not posted in the matter whereof you presume to speak with such certainty. In writing this letter, I do not seek to pose as your equal in matters intellectual, nor to bring into question your ability as a journalist; for your paper is well edited and bears marks of its editor's having a wide field of experience.

But, it seems impossible for any one man to know all there is to be known, these days, even if he is a well-posted journalist in the greatest city of modern times.

In your editorial you take to task the Rev. Minot J. Savage and Prof. Hyslop, as well as the great host of their colleagues and followers in thought, for their belief in "ghosts;" and, from the manner in which you handle the subject, I would be willing to venture that you have never invested any money, to speak of, or a day's time in the honest, intelligent investigation of Modern Spiritualism. If this I may be wrong; but appearances would lead to the effect that I am correct.

The two gentlemen named are, so well known to the reading and thinking public of this and other countries, that I will not undertake to defend them against your attack; since they do not need it; nor, for that matter, would I presume to pose as a champion of Spiritualism as against your scoffing attack. It does not, really, need it; and, if it did, there are hundreds, aye, thousands, more worthy and competent to do the work than I. This fact you may prove to your entire satisfaction if you will but take the pains to get Numbers 638 and 639 of The Progressive Thinker, as well as a world of other good reading matter on the subject, and "read up." In the numbers of the paper referred to you will find a Symposium of the thoughts and ideas of a vast array of our brightest men and women of to-day which all go to show that, in their belief and knowledge, Spiritualism is an uncontrovertible fact; that there is a life hereafter; that disembodied spirits can, and do, return to the haunts of men and give intelligent and unmistakable evidences of their actual existence; that Spiritualism has the dignity of a religious science and of a scientific religion; that it differs and varies from other so-called revealed religions, principally, in that it is based on facts of actual experiences open to the sight, hearing and touch, while others are a matter of simple faith alone, supplemented by dogma.

It seems but natural and human that we should look askance at all things which we cannot understand; but it is our bounden duty as intelligent beings, to patiently search for the truth in all things, for our own good and for the betterment of our fellow beings, and to be honest and tolerant in order that only truth and knowledge may result from our investigations. It shows a narrowness of intellect to deride and hold up to ridicule any system, or any persons who believe in it, simply because it may seem untrue, or cannot be understood by the party who pursues the study of it. Calumny and scoffing are not intelligent argument and will have no weight with bright, seeking minds. The opinion of any one individual or class, is of no practical value, these practical times, unless it be re-enforced with practical proof.

You have assumed to belittle those who are convinced of a fact which you do not know or understand, and you say that the sources through which they have obtained their proof are not trustworthy and truthful. But you would have a very hard time to substantiate this statement in the minds of those who "have seen a great light." As for Mrs. Piper, I have never seen her, though I have often heard of her and the excellent work to which she is devoting her life. If she be honest and genuine, she is above your scoffing; but, if she be not so, then it is for you and everybody interested to ascertain the truth of this fact before condemning her and her work. I submit that your course is unmanly and is unfair; you would say the same of it were it to be so used against you in either your religion or your business. You have butted up against a wall that is stronger than you and that is higher than you can surmount; you have brought into question minds that are so far above your own that you do not understand them, at all; you appear ridiculous!

Truly, you would not wish to be classed as among those who sit in the seat of the scornful; and you would not wish to be known as one who is a scoffer at truth and science. That would ruin your business, if for no other reason. Even Robert G. Ingersoll, held in contempt as he was by those who did not understand him and believe as he did, was above giving the "lie" to any fellow-man; but, where he did not know, he was frank and bold to say so, and to give his opponent the benefit of honest doubt. And where he did know of wrong, he opposed it manfully; but, where he was in possession of facts and truth, he expressed it fearlessly, and so he gave to his fellow-men the greatest thing within the gift of man, honest doubt.

Subtract from any religion, beginning with so-called Christianity of to-day and going as far back as we have any record or knowledge of mankind's religions, Spiritualism—the belief in things unseen—and what have you left? Dogma and creed without a foundation, merely!

When the Great Teacher of Christianity is quoted as having said, "Blessed are they who have seen not and yet have believed," it is admitting that there was that which was real, yet unseen; and there is an implication in the saying, too, that is was possible, to some, to see the so-called unseen. He claimed as the source of his great power not his own talents, "but the spirit which dwelleth in me." And He said that men could see and know greater things than He did for them and told them, because the time was not then come for men to understand the things spiritual. Surely, we have now come to see a great light, as it was foreseen and foretold by the great Seer of old! We are a race of progressive beings, always trending toward more perfect light; and the light of Modern Spiritualism, which light is as old as God himself, is but just now beginning to rise upon all the people to show them the way more clearly, and to establish the fact that death does not end all, but that man is, like the source whence he sprung, immortal and never to cease his intelligent existence. The truth is mighty and must prevail.

You surely believe in God, or some first cause of all life, call it what you will; and, to your mind, that God, or cause, must be spirit, since you cannot, with your material senses, comprehend Him or it. Then, all that is lacking to make you, regardless of creed or sect, a Spiritualist in the true sense of the word, is to commune intelligently with the unseen and unheard. This can be done, and is such a well-established fact that no thinking, intelligent man or woman of to-day dares to deny it.

Your materialistic utterance, where you say, "No force can act except through matter," is but an admission of spirit existence and power; for force is spirit, and without it no matter can be either made or moved.

You have the right idea of the object for which man is placed here; but you think better than you know! What would be the use of man's taking care of the earth and developing his talents and powers thereby, or how could he do so, were it not for spirit power?

"We know absolutely nothing about creation," yes; except that it must have been a fact at some time and in some manner—the when and how is of no particular moment to us now; but the Cause, the Why, is of vast import to mankind's inquiring mind. He can approach it only "in spirit and in truth;" and it is of this truth, revealed by every day life, that men are now flocking to the light of that science, that religion of all religions, where, alone, it is possible to KNOW of the future and of the past, as well. All religions, in their day, have served their purpose and have done their meed of good; but blind faith is no longer necessary, as "The people who dwelt in darkness have seen a great light!" Read up, my good brother, and join the ranks of God's intelligent and knowing ones. Be ye no longer in darkness, but know the truth, "And the truth shall make you free.

A BROTHER IN THE LIGHT.

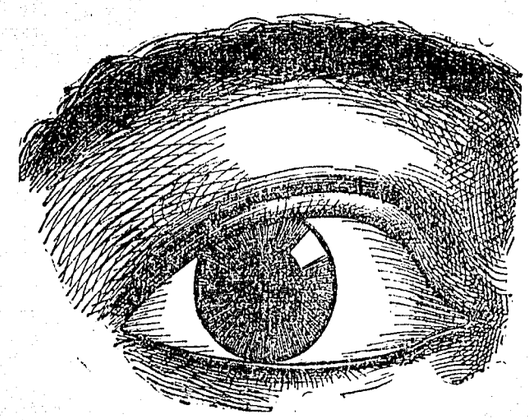
Rev. Minot J. Savage, D. D., has read Dr. Bland's book, "In the World Celestial," and under dates of Feb. 26, he writes a letter in which he says: "The book is intensely interesting, and gives a picture of the future life that one cannot help wishing may be true. If one might feel sure of a destiny like this, it would make one patient with the conditions of the present life, and would take away all fear of death. I incline to believe that we are on the verge of demonstrating that existence continues after death, and if this be true in a universe whose general law is progress, then perhaps we cannot hope too much as to what may be ahead of us." This delightful book is for sale at The Progressive Thinker office; price, one dollar.



THE HYPNOTIC EYE

How It Fascinates and Controls the Human Mind.

WEIRD THINGS DONE UNDER ITS MYSTIC SPELL

Can You Look at It Five Minutes Without Being Hypnotized?

READ THE DIRECTIONS BELOW AND TRY

If you wish to ascertain how susceptible you are to hypnotic influence, place yourself in an easy sitting position and look steadily and intently at the black spot (pupil) in the center of the eye above for five minutes. While looking at the eye count very slowly to yourself, one, two, three, four and so on to five hundred. Do not permit your eyes or mind to wander for one moment. At the end of five minutes, if your eyelids feel heavy or tired: if you feel slightly drowsy; if you have a slight tingling sensation in the arms or hands: if you have a peculiar sensation in the head; or if you feel during the time an inclination to wink the eyelids, you are quite susceptible to hypnotic influence, and you should at once learn the science for your self-protection.

The eye of a person who understands hypnotism is a thousand times more powerful than the cold, lifeless picture given above. To tell how susceptible you would be to a real hypnotic eye, multiply the effect you perceived by 1,000.

The most eminent specialists of modern times have just written a marvelous new book on Personal Magnetism, Hypnotism, Magnetic Healing, etc. 10,000 copies of which are to be given away for the benefit of the public. The book is richly illustrated by the finest half-tone engravings, showing various positions of subject and operator.

By the late methods to which this book calls attention, any one can learn hypnotism and acquire wonderful magnetic power in a few days at his own home, and use it on his friends and associates entirely without their knowledge. The person affected does not dream that his mind and will have been taken possession of and controlled by another. The most obstinate chronic diseases are speedily cured by this mysterious force, and bad habits banished, never to return.

Mr. Y. T. Greenwood, of 753 Brook street, Beloit, Wis., wrote for the above book, learned hypnotism, and immediately cured his wife of a complication of diseases from which physicians said she must surely die. Mrs. Effie M. Watson, of Martinsville, Ind., says. "I advise every woman in this country to write to the American College of Science and get the grand work it is giving away. It has been of incalculable benefit to me." Mr. John M. Gard, of Palmer Lake, Colo., says: "The book is far beyond anything of the kind I have ever seen. I now use hypnotism every day of my life. Your splendid methods of instruction enable me to get in touch with people and wield an influence that I did not dream it was mine to possess."

The book will be sent absolutely free to any address. It divulges the whole truth about the most mysterious and useful power known to man. It reveals the true secret of all personal control; it lays bare the mysteries of the dark ages; it gives to man that knowledge of himself that is essential to his health, happiness, financial and social success. It is full of startling experiences, and makes many wonderful disclosures regarding the mind and soul of man, the power of silent thought, the development of will-power, nerve force and hundreds of other things of intense interest to every man and woman who would get the most out of life.

Write for the book to-day. Remember, it's free. Address American College of Sciences, Dept. 91 S, 420 Walnut street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Life of

WILLIAM M'KINLEY,

Our Martyred President,

With Short Biographies of Lincoln and Garfield, and a Comprehensive Life of President Roosevelt.

Edited by

RT. REV. SAMUEL FALLOWS, LL. D.

The book contains 453 pages, weighs a little more than three pounds, is printed from large clear type, has 51 illustrations, including half-tone portraits of Mr. and Mrs. McKinley, and his mother, the author and members of his cabinet and warm friends, Lincoln, Garfield, President Roosevelt and family; battle scenes of the rebellion in which Mr. McKinley participated; also a photo of the assassin, scenes of the tragedy, the death-bed, Mrs. McKinley's leave-taking of her illustrious and devoted husband, and other interesting illustrations.

This massive work contains a complete biography of the martyred President, and many of his masterpieces of eloquence as a statesman, and a record of his beautiful home life and untiring devotion to his wife and mother. It also contains sketches of Lincoln and Garfield, and a brief history of Anarchy, its purposes and results.

LIFE BEYOND DEATH

Being a Review of

The World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling,

Leading to the Question as o Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact.—To Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BY MINOT J. SAVAGE, D. D.

8vo, Cloth, 342 Pages.

After a review of the beliefs held in the past concerning life beyond death, Dr. Savage takes up the present conditions of belief and considers the agnostic reaction from the extreme "other-worldliness" which it replaced, which was in turn followed by the Spiritualistic reaction against agnosticism. He points out the doubts concerning the doctrine of immortality held by the churches and the weakness of the traditional creeds and the loosening of their hold upon the people. He then considers the probabilities of a future life, probabilities which, as he admits, fall short of demonstration. The volume includes a consideration of the work of the Society for Psychical Research and also an appendix giving some of the author's own personal experiences in this line. Dr. Savage holds, as a provisional hypothesis, that continued existence is demonstrated, and that there have been at least some well authenticated communications from persons in the other life. The chief contents of the volume are as follows:

Primitive Ideas—Ethnic Beliefs—The Old Testament and Immortality—Paul's Doctrine of Death and the Other Life—Jesus and Immortality—The Other World and the Middle Ages—Protestant Belief Concerning Death and the Life Beyond—The Agnostic Reaction—The Spiritualistic Reaction—The World's Condition and Needs as to Belief in Immortality—Probabilities Which Fall Short of Demonstration—The Society for Psychical Research and the Immortal Life—Possible Conditions of Another Life—Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

Four Remarkable Lectures that will Interest Spiritualists and Do Them Great Good to Read.

We take pleasure in announcing that we have secured reports of four lectures on highly important subjects from the leading minds in the occult world of thought. C. W. Leadbeater, the great English psychic who travels in the astral and gathers important facts, will talk about "Dreams and Their Significance." Countess Constance Wachtmeister, a lady of remarkable psychic powers, who has won distinction in this country and Europe, will discourse upon "Psychic and Astral Developments." The gifted Mrs. M. T. Longley, Secretary of the National Spiritualist Association at Washington, will favor you with an exceedingly valuable lecture on "The Spirit World, Where Is It? Its Conditions and Employments." Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond's Guides will discourse on the "Twentieth Century Fulfillments." This will be especially interesting. The Progressive Thinker leads today in everything that pertains to Spiritualism and Occultism. These four lectures will alone be worth more than a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker. Call your neighbors' attention to the paper, and get them to subscribe and thus aid us in the great work in which we are engaged. Those who do not and will not take the paper, will still remain in ignorance of what is going on. These lectures will begin appearing in The Progressive Thinker next week. Poor indeed must be the Spiritualist who will not pay two cents a week towards the support of the Spiritualist press. Our efforts for truth should have the support of all.

An Outrageous Decision.

Do the Spiritualists of this country and of the world realize the import of the decision of the Pennsylvania court in the McIlroy will case? In accordance with that decision there is not a Spiritualist in our broad land whose belief in the salient features of Spiritualism has been openly expressed, who may not be incarcerated in an asylum as an insane person, not capable of being intrusted with the care or disposal of his property, by will or otherwise. Certainly this statement is true, if a belief in Spiritualism, as in Mr. McIlroy's case, is legal proof of insanity and legal incompetency to devise by will what shall be done with the property he has accumulated and of which he is possessed. The Spiritualists of our country should take note of this vicious, and unjust decision, and every society should utter such vigorous condemnation and protest as shall cause the ears of such courts to tingle with shame for such disgraceful travesties of justice.

Spiritualists, let your voices be heard in no uncertain tones. The animus of this decision is such that Spiritualists must be brought to consider the question whether Spiritualists, as Spiritualists, have any rights which Anti-Spiritualists are bound to respect.

The jurors in this remarkable case are probably, if not professing Christians, of the class of non-professors that believe the Bible is the "word of God." In view of the decision in this will case, it is pertinent to ask a few questions.

In Genesis, chapter 18, it is said that Abraham saw "three men" standing by him. These men were spirits. Abraham believed he saw them and conversed with them. Was he insane?

Jacob wrestled with an angel—so he believed. Was he insane?

Many other Old Testament incidents of similar nature might be cited, and the same query uttered.

In the New Testament it is stated that on a certain occasion Jesus with some of his disciples were on a mountain and there "appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with him."—Matt. 17th chapter. Were Peter, James and John insane?

When Paul, on his way to Damascus, was converted by a vision, were he and his companions insane?

If those who believe they have seen and conversed with spirit entities are insane, how much short of insanity are all the multitude of those who "believe" in the truth of such occurrences mentioned in the Bible or elsewhere?

On the same principle, are not all Bible believers insane?

We put these queries in this way, to demonstrate the absurdity and viciousness of such decisions as that rendered in the McIlroy will case, as set forth on the first page of this issue of The Progressive Thinker.

A King Under Church Ban.

Now his royal highness, the King of England, and Defender of the Faith, is under ecclesiastical ban. Rev. Joseph Barker, in a late sermon in the City Temple, "administered a pointed rebuke," says the press dispatch, to his majesty, and, worse still, "the speaker was loudly applauded by the congregation."

What had the King done to be rebuked by the servant of God? Why, he desecrated not the holy Sabbath, the day the Babylonians and Assyrians made sacred to Baal, otherwise the sun, but the day after. The pious doctor of souls continued:

"If the king, who is head of the church and defender of the faith, can violate the English Sunday, what can people do but follow in his steps? I would rather give a great sum in gold than appear to be disloyal; but I can not be disloyal to Christ; and it is better that these things should be said."

The Rev. Doctor ought to have told his auditors, when, where, and under what circumstances, his Christ to whom he wished to be loyal, directed sun worship. And, while about it, he should name the text wherein Jesus even suggested that the day Constantine afterwards set aside as "sacred to the sun," should be observed as a day of rest.

The fact is, Sunday is an ecclesiastical holy day, unknown to Jews, to Jesus, or the early Christians, taking their Bible and pretended church history for authority.

A Brave Thinker.

Wrapped around a package, a few days ago, was a torn and crumpled newspaper page, which proved on investigation to have been part of a late issue of the Chicago Record-Herald. Our eyes fell on an article headed "Methodists and Miracles," followed by a sub-head: "Truth and Error Abide in all Religions." A proposition so truthful seemed suggestive that the author was a thinker. Dropping the eye to the close of the article, we noted it was from the pen of Mrs. Lottie C. Rudman, of Galva, Ill.

Mrs. R. started out with the proposition that "If every miracle in the Bible was proved spurious the churches would go on as before and grow stronger by the new environment. The whole article is so different from that usually found in the secular press we are prompted to copy most of it, and the good author will allow us to say, if she is not already a reader of The Progressive Thinker, she ought to be, as also a contributor to its columns. We copy:

One by one the churches have been forced to give up cherished ideals, and each surrender has left them purer and more humane. There is ground for hope that they will eventually become completely emancipated from all superstition, and gather the children of men as a hen gathers her brood. T. Darley Allen in the Record-Herald says many cultivated skeptics have been convinced of the truth of the scripture through investigation. True. And many cultured Christians have become skeptics from the same cause. Religion is a subject that does not admit of argument. Being all "faith" it is always the other fellow who is mistaken.

Does the Methodist church believe in the miracles of the Bible only, or does it believe in miracles as a principle? Christ was not the only one who wrought miracles. We read of Apollonius of Tyana, Simon Magus, Alexander Abonotichus and others. Is it not strange that Christian and profane writers never mention the miracles of Christ until the second century, while the casting out of devils was a common thing long before Christ, or at least was so believed, and belief in miracles was common in all parts of the world? Krishna rose from the dead, also Mithras of Persia, Quexalcote of Mexico and Osiris of Egypt. Crucifixion was a common form of punishment, and many nations have a crucified Savior. The fall of man, eternal punishment, original depravity, are found in many ancient religions. Sprinkling with water was practiced in ancient times, and the golden rule was taught long before Christ.

Religion is the effort of man to solve the mystery of birth and death. That all religious beliefs are full of errors is a given fact. It cannot be otherwise so long as man is not all knowing and infallible. Herbert Spencer in his "Ecclesiastical Institutions," traces the purely human origin and growth of all religious creeds and forms, and in my estimation is a stronger foe to Christianity that all the so-called infidels put together. His are the arguments of a man wholly without prejudice, totally unbiased, and with a common sense that must appeal to every thinking man and woman.

It is all a matter of evolution—the medicine man of the American Indian, Zoroaster of the Persians, Buddha of India, Isis and Osiris of Egypt, a Grecian Zeus, a Roman Jupiter, a Jewish Christ, and Mohammed. Progression is the keynote of the universe, and religious beliefs are not exempt from its law. The man who attacks his neighbor's religious belief attacks not his neighbor, but Father Time.

Who dares say all other religious systems are wrong and just ours is right? Is there not much of truth and much of error in them all? Is not the time coming when all that is good and true and lasting shall be extracted from all religious systems and incorporated in a moral code that shall safely carry us into whatever is beyond; when men shall study the art of living and let the dying part take care of itself?

No Respect for Error.

Abuse and violence never help any cause.—Correspondent.

This is a position The Progressive Thinker has ever maintained, and it greatly regrets that any writer should deem it wisdom to assail the person of another by voice or pen. It denounces Error with all the force it is capable, shows its origin, its cruel action, and its tendency; but endeavors to be silent as to the individuals who teach it. The paper has always a kind word for those who inculcate the Right. Persons are at liberty to entertain false conceptions of Truth if they will, it being our mission to enlighten them as regards their defective creeds and those who made them, trying at the same time to prevent their general acceptance.

Are all correspondents as careful as they should be, to avoid abuse and vituperative denunciation of opponents when writing for the press? We fear not, hence bad blood has been engendered where peace and harmony should reign supreme.

Dogmas and creeds which antagonize common sense, whether taught from the pulpit, or by holy books, are just subjects of animadversion, and we ask for no restraint on the pen in denouncing them.

Can't Extinguish It.

"It is a thorough and able application of the law of creation, 'the fundamental law of science,' to the theological dogmas of creation. * * * No one for years ever thought of answering that book; any more that one would think of standing on his head, or answering the multiplication table, because every intelligent person saw and felt that it was unanswerable as soon as they caught its scientific bearings. It became, therefore, the recognized remedy and cure of the old 'creation lunacy,' that some god made everything out of nothing."—The Torch of Reason, Silvarton, Oregon.

The above refers to Mr. W. H. Maple's book, "No Beginning," which is having an extensive circulation, and is for sale at this office. Price 75 cents.

A Word for the Young.

Our correspondents seem to rise higher and higher, step by step towards the summit of spiritual science, molding the opinions of men far enough advanced in years and education to understand their language. This is all very well. But let us not forget the young.

Many of the old time Spiritualists insist that it will not do to talk Spiritualism to the children who are going to school and studying the rudiments of a business life, but are you aware, dear brothers and sisters, that Catholicism and old Theology lurk around the playground and the school-room ready to tell your children of the advantages of Christian children over any others; how easy it is for children of Christian parents to get all the best positions to be had which are only waiting for the school days to pass—the graduation of the Christian's children, etc?

Are you aware that modern Christianity is a bitter foe to Spiritualism, and its teachers take pride in prejudicing the young against your philosophy?

It would be as easy for you however, to make skeptics of your children as it has been in the past for the Christians to make infidels of theirs, by attempting to force your doctrine upon them; but if they are taught the impossibility of truth in many passages of the scriptures, for instance, the flatness of the earth, and the Jonah and Noah stories, etc., when they come home with any of the orthodox ideas for your opinion upon them, it might go far towards making them think for themselves and preparing them for your own higher thought when their minds become strong and ready for the investigation of the great eternity and their future state.

Help your children to help themselves. Keep in fellowship with them. Show your parental affection in your everyday communion with and treatment of them. Go with them, be with them in soul and body, keep in close touch with them. Live honest, noble and peaceful lives, and in time they will see that you are what Spiritualism teaches. Your action toward them will build an impenetrable wall around their moral faculties, their principles and their future lives.

The Question of Education.

There are other phases of the question of education versus ignorance, than those we have hitherto presented. When ignorance, or lack of education is presented as preferable to education, as pertains specially to mediumship, it is well that all should view the matter broadly and candidly, intent on striving for that which is best when considered in its broadest aspect.

We state it as a definite principle, of universal application, that all should seek to improve their minds by the acquisition of knowledge; they should as a matter of moral duty to themselves, strive to add to the mere mental endowments given by nature, the growth, the mental stimulus and enlargement of their faculties, which can be gained by the most generous education reasonably within their power.

We cannot, no person can, depend upon the spirit world to do for us the work we should do for ourselves. The farmer might as well and as reasonably sit on the fence and ask the spirit world to plant his corn, dig his potatoes, reap and thresh his wheat, milk his cows and feed his pigs, as for a human being to neglect study, the application of his mind to the acquirement of education and knowledge, and expect the good angels to cram the needed education into his mentality, without his own effort to obtain it.

The good angels are not engaged in that sort of business.

Furthermore, if they were thus engaged, it would be a detriment to the human race. It is in accord with Spiritualism, and common sense philosophy and the facts and fitness of things, that man shall work out his own salvation, shall rise by his own efforts; in short, as J. G. Holland expresses it,

"We build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit round by round."

The good angels can assist us, but they cannot grow for us, nor be educated for us, nor mount the ladder of mental and spiritual progress for us. It must be our own individual work.

Make whatever claims we may for the educational work of the angel helpers, allowing all that they may do for us, their work will not excuse us from striving with reasonable earnestness after the mental and spiritual culture that is to be gained by and through the education derived from earthly schools and teachers, and the channels of general intelligence, such as books, newspapers, etc.

Especially should one who aspires to be a public exponent and representative of Spiritualism make earnest effort by practical study of needful branches of education to fit himself to fill the position with due advantage to himself and the cause, which can not be the case when he makes public exhibitions of gross ignorance of the common elements of a fairly good education.

Education and mental, moral and spiritual expansion are not acquired by having them poured into us like molasses into a jug, but by the exercise of our minds and faculties, helped as we may be by angel or earthly teachers.

It may be recognized as a fact, that although mediumship is a spiritual gift, that may be developed and perfected by experimental work in conjunction with spirit influences, and though it may not be within the scope of schools to educate into mediumship, still mediums, incipient or more advanced, may receive valuable instruction that will guard them against dangers, and aid them in correct methods, whereby they may achieve most satisfactory and successful results.

N. S. A. AND PHENOMENA.

Some Thoughts for the Benefit of Spiritualists.

While I have at times severely criticised the action of the N. S. A., I never desired to kill it, or in any way cripple its action. On the contrary I have desired to see it live, become in all respects healthy and thus do the work intended by its originators. One great desire why I wish to see it live, flourish and exert a beneficial influence over the great mass of Spiritualists, is because Chicago is the home of a few of its most active enemies. Opposition to that growing organization constitutes the only song they can sing. Were their numbers in proportion to their noise they might be really dangerous, but fortunately their own estimates of their actual influence serve to furnish amusement to the level-headed Spiritualists, who constitute a great majority. Mature in physical stature, the malcontents are sadly dwarfed, in character, and in mental and spiritual development. Never rising to the lofty plane of doing battle for principles, they content themselves in the wallow of personality. No one is surprised that misstatements are the main weapons in their windy arsenals.

One of the chief claims is that the N. S. A. is rapidly disintegrating, and is already at the point of dissolution. None but the ignorant or the ill-informed believe them. Seldom, if ever, in its history, has the annual convention of our great representative organization been so largely attended, or a greater interest manifested in practical ways than at the one held in Washington last October.

Money was given cheerfully and generously.

Never before has it been able to employ so many and such capable missionaries as are now working at large in its territory. Confirmation of its broadening devotion to real Spiritualism is found in its recent purchase of property at Reed City, Michigan, which is well adapted to use as a Home for disabled and worn-out mediums. The recent bulletin from Secretary Longley's office announces a gift of fifteen hundred dollars by two persons towards the operating expenses of that institution. The Spiritualists of the country are asked to raise a like sum, and those of Chicago are moving to do their share.

In its philanthropic undertakings the N. S. A. is entitled to great commendation.

We rejoice to know that its financial footing was never so secure as at this very moment.

It will grow and endure long after the tombstones of local Spiritualists of the mosquito variety in this city, have crumbled back to dust.

But the other cry is that the N. S. A. is trying to kill phenomena.

On the contrary its every effort has been to purge that which now exists and grow a kind whose purity shall be unquestioned. There is no misunderstanding its position after reading the resolution at the Washington meeting, which was adopted without a dissenting voice. Here it is:

"Be it resolved by the delegates here assembled, that we believe in and stand for genuine spirit phenomena of every reputable phase."

What honorable man or woman can find anything halting or unfair in that language? Shall we look to the unanimous utterances of its duly accredited delegates, or allow falsifiers to define the N. S. A.'s views upon this question? The insincerity of those who misrepresent in this matter is brought to light by the fact that the most blatant of them cross themselves and solemnly proclaim they have never seen a dishonest medium, and yet they have for years danced obedience to the call of such as Mabel Aber Jackman, whose career as a medium was fully outlined in The Progressive Thinker of March 8.

The whole question is, shall we unhesitatingly swallow everything the tricksters offer us as genuine Spiritualism, and proclaim there can be none other? The enemies of the N. S. A. want everything calling itself phenomena accepted at their own estimate—it is not to be weighed, measured, nor analyzed. True Spiritualists will not be ready so to do until Chicago freely surrenders its municipal interests to the domination of the levee, or New York finds no purity in politics except among its Tweeds and Crokers.

Any man or woman in Chicago, who tells you that the N. S. A. is opposed to phenomena, is either an actual trickster, or a tool or a dupe of the fakirs.

Chicago, Ill. TRUTH SEEKER.

Good By, Dwarf.

Who is the dwarf? Is it he who grasps a boundless universe, and sees in every star a sun around which countless planets revolve; who sees in a speck of matter, a world of life, and light and beauty; whose God reigns supreme, his presence everywhere; his throne nowhere; who believes life once begun will never end; or is it he who swallows the story of creation as told in the Bible; whose God has a throne just above the clouds of earth; who directs all the machinery of the universe by special interference; who became a fornicator; sired a son by a Jewish maiden; then allowed that son to die on a cross to appease his anger to the children of men?

The dwarf is a pigmy in size and intellect. His God is as diminutive as is his person, and his hopes are narrowed to the same dimensions. It is he who should take the lesson he imparts to himself, and not he whose conceptions of Infinity has expanded with his knowledge of material matters.

1848 An Anniversary of Deeds, 1902

NOT WORDS ALONE.

Chicago Spiritualists and their friends are invited to make ready to attend a benefit for the mediums' home established at Reed City, Mich., by the National Spiritualists' Association. It will be given on Saturday evening, April 5, in the Auditorium Hall, No. 77 Thirty-first street.

The programme from 7:45 to 9:30 o'clock will consist of music and messages by excellent talent, after which there will be dancing until 2 a. m.

Every medium in the city is asked to co-operate towards the financial success of the enterprise. The object sought is of greater importance than the gain of any individual, or single coterie of men and women. Let there be no jealousies but rather a worthy rivalry as to who most can work and best agree. No other sect wholly neglects its worn-out workers.

Admission to programme and ball, 50 cents. The tickets of admission will be tasty in design, and belong to the purchasers as souvenirs of the evening. Friends in the city or state who are unable to attend may add their contributions by sending orders, accompanied by cash, to Geo. B. Warne, chairman, 4203 Evans avenue, who will return souvenirs to the applicants.

All mediums who will aid in this effort, are asked to forward their names and numbers forthwith, to W. J. Elmo, 3117 Wabash avenue who will see that they appear on the advertising matter which will be widely scattered.

Executive Committee: Geo. B. Warne, W. J. Elmo, A. H. Bliss, A. J. Cutler, Ervin A. Rice, J. Kirby Smith, T. S. Russell, Charles E. Quinlan, Mrs. J. R. Francis, Mrs. H. A. Cross, Mrs. Ella Johnson Bloom.

HOME CIRCLE EXPERIENCE

According to my experience and observation the most interesting and reliable mediumship for spiritual manifestations has been developed in the home circle.

It was in the fall and winter of '57 and '58, at the farmhouse of these progressive, spiritually-minded people, Isaac and Lucy Severance, in Eagle, Wis., where having heard so much about spiritual manifestations, we held our first home circles.

None but truth-loving investigators composed that circle. Each heart and soul implored the good angels to come to us, and they came, proving their identity as clearly as you can prove yours to a distant friend by writing a letter.

Not until the third or fourth sitting did we get any manifestations; which at first came faintly through rappings. But these became more and more distinct and positive, until by our calling over the alphabet, names of people who had passed away, some of them many years before, were spelled out and circumstances given to prove their identity.

Messages were also given regarding friends and acquaintances living miles away in distant towns and villages; and so deeply interested were we to find if they were in fact true that, Mr. Anson B. Severance, who subsequently became one of the most noted of mediums, would drive twenty or thirty miles to distant places to learn if such messages were true; and in every instance they proved to be mainly so.

Our home soon became headquarters for investigators from the towns and country for many miles about. Many were the tests they received, and many a message was given to arouse thought and lead the progressive mind upward to a still higher plane of unfoldment.

One day the town supervisors having met and transacted some official business, said, "We will now go down to Severance's and see what we can get from the spirits." The party consisted of Mr. Snover, Mr. Hinkley and an Englishman whose name I cannot now recall.

This was a most interesting seance. Name after name was given. Short messages, one after another came through the raps and all were acknowledged as singularly correct, and beyond doubt evidences of spirit power and intelligence. The invisibles had not given any name or message to the Englishman, however. He sat with an amused and doubting air, and finally said to the other gentlemen, "You are fooling; you are trying to play it on me." They insisted that they were not trying to mislead him.

"Well," said he, "why don't I get something? Can't spirits talk to me as well as to you?"

Then three very loud knocks like blows from a hammer were made on the table directly in front of him.

"That's all right," said he, "but I want a name rapped out for me."

Presently a name was given him. He looked surprised, but would not say he recognized it. It was a woman's name, and was rapped out again, and the name of an English town was given. He persistently refused to recognize it, until on their way back to the village he finally acknowledged it was correct in every particular, and that he did have an experience with a young woman by that name in England, and she considered herself greatly wronged.

Other phases of mediumship became developed. The old Indian chief, Tecumseh, finally gained so full control of Anson B. Severance as to leave no doubt in our minds of its genuineness. Never, save upon one occasion, could we prevail upon the grand old chief to talk to us in English, at which time it seemed that we had never listened to such noble oratory. After a short address he said he merely wanted to convince us that he could speak well in English, even if it did take him back into the old sphere of war and antagonism, which, since his upward growth in spirit life, was distressing to him.

Automatic writing, a phase we had never heard of before, soon proved to be a natural development for me. It took the place of that slow process of receiving messages through raps. Many a test was given to convince the skeptic and investigator; many a message of comfort to bereaved and troubled hearts; many a promise and prophetic revelation to cheer, strengthen and encourage those who had become fearful and doubting through adversity and disappointment; many an uplifting thought to bring the reflective mind into the realms of spiritual knowledge and harmonious unfoldment, and frequent prescriptions for the sick and suffering; restoring to health several whom the doctors had given up as incurable; one of whom was a consumptive daughter of Mr. Snover, chairman of our board of supervisors.

The automatic writing was sometimes given in German, and had to be taken to a farmhand at a neighbor's farm to be interpreted; and it often verified to him the presence of deceased relatives who had passed away in Germany.

On one occasion when we were greatly troubled regarding an important business affair and knew not what to do, an automatic German message came, with instructions to take it to our German friend at once, which resulted in his coming to our rescue with a sufficient accommodation to relieve us from our dilemma.

So interesting and practically helpful was the automatic writing that, when after a further development of my mentality, my mind would catch in advance whatever was being written. I regretted it, oh, so much, for I felt that my mind would interfere with its reliability.

But the progressively inclined medium must not be expected to remain so very long in any one phase of development. He or she will as naturally pass out from the physical phases into the mental, as does the tree which grows from the seed gradually to its full maturity and then bud, blossom and finally bear its fruit.

And now allow me to digress a little, by remarking that in the growth of the Spiritualistic tree, let us study our lessons well, think carefully and cautiously, so it shall not become so badly hybridized with old religious notions, popular errors, foolish forms and ceremonies and vague conceits, as to bear a mongrel fruit.

One of the first tests of my mental development came in the night time. I was awakened by a spirit saying: "Hold yourself perfectly receptive. We have something important to tell you. The spirit of George Martin is here. He wants you to go to Mr. Fischer's, the shoemaker, at Little Prairie, and call for a cobbling bill he has against him. You pay it, and he will in some way reward you well."

I was only too glad to call there. I told Mr. Fischer how I had been requested by the spirit, Geo. Martin, to call and pay a bill he had left unsettled; that Mr. Martin had died a few weeks before in the soldiers' camp at Madison, Wis., and he could not rest contented in spirit life so long as there was an unsettled bill against him.

"Oh, mein Gott in Himmel!" exclaimed Mr. Fischer, his voice trembling with awe-stricken emotion, as with trembling hands he opened his account-book and showed me that Mr. Martin did leave an unpaid account there; which proved that what had been told me by direct spirit talk in a silent hour of the previous night was no delusion.

I was more than glad to pay Mr. Martin's indebtedness. And am also glad to have worked many years so faithfully in my psychometric, impressional and prophetic mediumship, which has elicited from my many friends, correspondents and patients, many expressions of thankful appreciation.

Saved by a Spirit Dog.

One day I had an occasion to visit the western part of our little village, and as I was walking slowly along, meditating, I perceived a large dog sitting in the middle of the sidewalk, immediately in front of me. I had not noticed the animal until I came suddenly upon him. I stopped for a second, hoping he would move away, as he was very large and also fierce-looking. But as he continued to hold fast his position, I thought I would not disturb him, but step off the walk and go past him on the grass. But as I attempted to carry out the idea, the animal growled, showing a shining row of white teeth, while he crouched for a spring at me.

I was greatly frightened, but dared not turn my back on the brute, for I knew he would spring on me before I could run any distance. Not a person was anywhere visible, or a club or stick within my reach, and I began to feel my case was getting desperate, with those terrible eyes glaring at me; and I said, "What shall I do?" What I did sounds rather foolish, but the effect was magical. I threw out my hand toward the dog, and exclaimed, "Get out, you ugly dog!" He gave one jump to the middle of the road, and ran as long as I could see him, as if pursued by unseen foes. I never was so astonished as I was at this proceeding; and thankful beyond all telling for my escape, from death, no doubt. For I learned afterward this dog had attacked many people, and would have killed a child had not some persons seen her in time to rescue her. As it was he tore her clothing badly.

Now the question is, why did he run away from me? He surely was not afraid. I will give my explanation: I have always desired to own a large Newfoundland dog, and have been told repeatedly that a spirit dog of this class accompanies me in all my walks, and watches me faithfully, the same as if clothed in mortal form. I was told he was with me on this occasion; and as I spoke and waved my hand, the spirit dog flew at the mortal dog, and chased him away, leaving me to go my way in peace. This I firmly believe. Some persons who do not believe that animals survive the change called death, will scoff at this article, but this experience is to me proof that animals do exist in spirit life, and are visible to animal life on the material plane.

MEDIUMS' HOME BENEFIT.

Few Chicago mediums have failed to signify their practical sympathy with the benefit for the Home at Reed City, Michigan, which is to be given at 77 Thirty-first street, Saturday evening, April 5. The disaffected ones will find themselves lonesome. The directory of mediums on the advertising circulars is worthy of preservation.

The first order for souvenir tickets which was received from outside of Chicago came from L. V. and L. S. Burdick, who write from Texas, Mich.: "We think the move a good one and wish it success."

Fifty cents each from many at one time is going to aggregate a sum which few individuals could spare. None will miss the small amount.

Mrs. Dr. Cross donates a handsome piece of hand-painted china which will be presented to the person who sells the most tickets for the benefit.

Every Spiritualist in Illinois who sends fifty cents or more, will be recognized as present in spirit, and receive a souvenir of the past and present in return.

If you do not dance, come and enjoy the readings by the mediums. If your friends do not care for that feature, invite them to come and dance. If you can not come at all, be sure and send remittance for a ticket to Geo. B. Warne, chairman, 4203 Evans avenue.

Priests and Levites still pass by on the other side, blinded by their own conceit, but the real Samaritans are helping the sufferers and not neglecting those of our own faith.

Leave the grumblers alone with their colic—the N. S. A. will carry its movement to make disabled mediums comfortable and save them from fear of the poor house, to a successful outcome.

Two persons have pledged $1,500 towards running expenses of the Home. A like amount is necessary from other sources. You are asked to give fifty cents towards the second sum. Will you do so?

Let us do that which lies nearest to us, without looking further afield. We now have a near-by opportunity to help on a good work.

The souvenir tickets are tasty—buy one.

Camille Flammarion.

The Progressive Thinker recently copied from a Lincoln, Neb., paper what was said to be a recantation of faith in Spiritualism by Camille Flammarion, the eminent astronomer. The sensation was first set afloat by Heart's New York Journal, just as the falsification of Mrs. Piper's views of her own mediumship were first used by the New York Herald. Promptly on its issuance President Barrett, of the N. S. A., asked Flammarion himself if there was any truth in the report. He answered:

"None whatever. I am yet deeply interested in Spiritualism and am assured of its truth. I am forced, however, to the conviction that there is an absolute necessity of careful study of its phenomena lest deception be practiced upon the unwary. Greater care should be, and by me will be taken hereafter in my analysis of them."

ATTENTION, HEALERS!

The Illinois State Spiritualists Association would like at once the name of every person who is or has recently been actively engaged in the practice of magnetic healing, either in Chicago, or in the state. Kindly send name and address to the undersigned at 4203 Evans avenue, Chicago, without delay. Matters of personal interest to every individual identified with that line of work will follow from compliance herewith.

"The Mysteries of the Formation of the Earth, the Rising and Sinking of Continents, the Introduction of Man, and His Destiny Revealed in God's Own Way and Time." A work of deep interest, given through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley, by an advanced band of ancient spirits. Price $1. For sale at this office.

"Spiritual Fire Crackers, Bible Chestnuts and Political Pin Points." By J. S. Harrington. A pamphlet containing 79 pages of racy reading. Price 25 cents. For sale at the office of The Progressive Thinker.

"The Commandments Analyzed." By W. H. Bach. The Commandments are not only analyzed, but contrasted with other Bible passages, showing great incongruities. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. For sale at this office. Price, 25 cents.

Man's Aural Self. = By Charles Dawbarn.

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN.

The Philosophy of Healing.

If we are to claim all the privileges that inhere to our manhood, our success will depend upon careful study of the organism we call mortal. It is part of our selfhood, and is the nucleus of the individual humanity which offers us the phenomenon of spirit return.

Whenever units blend we have a nucleus loaded with possibilities; but we do well to remember that every achievement is the fruit of unit energy and intelligence compelling raw material to its service. If there be personalities around us to whom all experiences of earth life are unknown, still they must have had their nucleus—their first blending—amid conditions that permitted their present unfoldment. Homo discovers within himself many an intellectual center over which he exercises little more than an influence. The heart vibrates; the liver secretes; the lungs aerate the blood; and the vast sanitary canal has its organs for filtering and absorbing all that can be utilized by Homo, and discharging the rest. Intelligence and trained skill are needed at every point, with a police force of phagocytes ever ready to seize and destroy the unwelcome intruder.

It is never chance that allots each unit to its special labor, nor do we know of any presiding intelligence with power or skill for such a task. It is evident that Nature's fundamental law of association is all-sufficient. Every unit attracts and repels; and with those likeminded he works in harmony. We have the old axiom that "tastes differ," as the key to the diffusion of labor. The units in the heart or the brain, and every other organ, are with their fellows of like tastes for the special work. It is just as in the city and nation. The welfare of the whole depends upon each unit doing his own work in his own way; and the better he does it the more perfect is the civic strength and health. The clash of mortal life consists in the strife of personalities and not of their units. It is nation against nation, city against city, man against man. We hold man to account but we go no further. The hand may murder, but we hang the whole man. Most certainly the units in his heart, his liver, his lungs, were not guilty, but the personality as a whole has become obnoxious and must be broken up.

We are only, at this time, noting this fact in nature to emphasize the further natural fact that units from the entire personality are constantly passing into the aural man, each with his individual experience, and not one with the experience of the form we know as Homo. If they could, as supposed possible by heedless thinkers; once again blend into a form with similar organs to those of Homo, we might imagine such organs peopled by units of earth experience. Thus the heart units of Homo would be attracted to the heart units of the aural man; and the same distinctive tastes and experiences would be expressed throughout the new organism. But we have already seen that our mortal form would be impossible to the aural self, although it has always been so pictured by mortal imagination in all cases of spirit return. Nevertheless there is a very important point here for the student to note.

We all know that the specialist in earth life is even less likely to be expert in other lines of thought. The skilled physician is not necessarily the best man to calculate an eclipse. That physician's special attraction will be, first, towards those with like tastes to himself, and next, to those needing his skilled services. The units by which we know the man, the units of his intelligence and not those of his several organs, will be the units by which we must recognize our acquaintance after death, if he pose in spirit return. If we can open up to such a physician sufficient of his old experience, he can still play the doctor, and perhaps utilize forces and wield powers not yet grasped by the mortal. But his new experiences in his new life will be of no service to him in the work he attempts to do for mortals as a returning spirit.

Of course if the reader persists in picturing the spirit as wearing a replica of his mortal form, such a form might be liable to dyspepsia, measles and malaria as in days of old, and he be continuing to collect professional fees for his services in his accustomed manner. But upon those who persist in thinking of a spirit as necessarily in mortal form and shape, our previous chapters have been wasted. We have no lesson can profit such minds. Yet herein is a most important truth for the earnest truthseeker. Let us learn its lesson.

It is obvious that something passes from outer to inner man other than the perpetual outflow of units recognized by science as leaving Homo every second of his life. There is no such entity as "nothing." A thought has to be built up of units, as certainly as bone and muscle. So we have as a starting point the fact of a great outgoing stream from Homo to his own aural manhood. We have also a return tide, very much more limited, flowing back into earth life. These currents are necessarily, as we have said, composed of units. But these units, unlike the units attracted to Homo from Cosmos, come and go, bearing with them certain individual experiences gained by contact with Homo. With this fact as a starting point we can easily discover the truth we are seeking.

To take an illustration, here, at this moment, certain units are leaving me whose experiences have been those of the liver and its secretions. I do not know anything of the special duty they are now fitted for in my aural selfhood, but, most assuredly, if for any reason they should take part in any return stream, their immediate affinity would be with my liver rather than with my heart or my lungs. They will return freighted with their new experiences whether of harmony or disharmony. The effect, although unknown to Homo and therefore unstudied, must be absolutely certain. It is the return to a regiment of its old experienced warriors rather than of untrained raw recruits. But such return is not an everyday occurrence. The discharged unit, like the discharged soldier, does not lightly again enter the ranks. There must be a loud call for him, and he brings with him not only his old training but the experiences he has gained since he left the regiment.

Herein we have entered the realm of the treatment of the sick, and can discern at a glance the fundamental distinction between the drug of the educated physician and the much denounced mental treatment of the present era. In every case the drug is introducing into Homo's system molecular compounds of blended units, which units are without any previous experience of Homo's organic necessities. So far from being chosen as likely to be harmonious, the drug is usually expected to start a battle. It must be driven out or the organism will be destroyed. The effort necessary to do this is called "stimulating the system." It is a life and death battle. Nature usually gets the better of the drug, and the exhausted patient climbs slowly back into health. The process is called convalescence. The whole effort of the educated faculty is to fight a battle with some foe. The boast of the 19th century has been that these foes have been discovered, with microscopic assistance. The next thing is to tap them on the head with a shillalah. Such is the conspicuous side to the training of a skilled physician. Every effort by which he endeavors to strengthen Homo against such hidden foes is another side to his training, and a very different matter, demanding our unstinted praise. The whole realm of hygiene is a crown of glory to the medical profession. But its drugs!! They are simply successful attempts to introduce unwonted and unwanted units into the organism of Homo. The result is unnatural, and therefore unscientific.

Now we turn to the practice of the so-called "mental healer," who has been groping through the centuries in darkness, and ignorance of the nature of his own efforts. Sometimes he has startled himself with an apparent miracle; more often there has been a progressive recovery for his patient, with but a very brief period of convalescence. There have been myriads of cases, unrecorded by the faithful, not only without benefit but even with positive injury to the unfortunate patient.

By the term "mental healer" we are including every system of treatment which excludes drugs, be it theological or antitheological. Each form of religion usually has a divine patent on its own particular process, with a saint or an angel as superintendent or chief operator. The independent workers, recognizing that the effect they seek to produce must spring from the power of thought, are advertising absent treatments, and claiming many a success. Their failures are buried in silence, and the cemetery.

These successes and failures must not be pooh-poohed. We are herein facing the fact upon which rests the personality of Homo, for these workers in the mental realms are, all unknowingly, producing a wonderful effect by the creative power of thought. They are unwittingly calling upon aural man for a return of some of the experienced units that had passed outward from the mortal form of Homo.

This must be so. Thought consists of the vibratory movement of units. It is the power by which Homo shapes both the planet and his own form. It is intelligence in activity. But intelligence can destroy as easily as it can build. Homo as a nation of harmonious units is Homo healthy and happy. When Homo's units are disharmonious, Homo becomes a sick man, although it is still intelligence in activity which dominates. Since Homo would never deliberately think himself into sickness, we see that such disharmony is the result of ignorance. He may either have failed to keep out disharmonious units, or he may by some bad habit (thought) have discouraged the workers within. The healer recognizes this dimly and insufficiently, and tries to reach his patient by sending him units (thoughts) that have been harmonized, and enough of them to overcome the foe. It is at this point his ignorance becomes very conspicuous.

A thought is to a healer just a thought, and nothing more. Think of health, think of harmony, think of the patient; what more could anybody ask or need? But, alas! a great deal more is needed. We grant that every thought is composed of blended units, and that unlike the drug of the physician, they are units, accustomed to expression in Homo. But if Homo in Chicago is waiting a message from New York on some business matter it will not do for Homo in New York to send the first message that is waiting despatch. The message must be just what is needed and asked for. We have seen that the units in Homo have their own special experiences. They have also their special harmonies and disharmonies. For instance, the brain units may be in most harmonious activity, manifesting their intelligence with brilliant effect. At the same time the units in the stomach of poor Homo may be quarreling and fighting over their several duties till the entire system, over which Homo has but a suggestive control, is in a state of active mutiny. Under such conditions the ignorant healer may send thought units not in the least adapted to the case. It is very difficult to make this clear without descending into almost wearisome details. It must suffice that we keep in mind that units from the entire mortal form are outpassing every moment of our lives and that each unit is by taste and experience better fitted for a certain duty than for any other labor. Homo may have but a suggestive control, but that is in itself a mighty power if properly exercised.

The ruling Ego can concentrate the energies of the intelligent units under his immediate control on any portion of his mortal organism. He can mentally concentrate his thought power upon his toes, ascending inch by inch and organ by organ if he so wills, producing a wonderful positive effect. But he is doing more than he himself is usually aware. He is by this concentration upon a particular organ placing himself in sympathetic connection not only with the units of that organ but with like-minded units throughout Cosmos. And as those specially like-minded are the units that have recently left that organ and passed into his own aural selfhood, he is issuing a call, and offering a channel for their return to their old duty. We thus see that if the healer thinks of Homo only as a sick man both his sympathies and his attractions are mere generalities suited to a general state of exhaustion, but not to particular cases.

The fundamental thought is that Homo can invoke for his own benefit the return of units to any particular organ—units already experienced in the desired labor. But if he would succeed he must, by practice, have long concentrated his thought upon his own aural manhood, and learned to both receive and interpret the vibrations which respond. This may be mere selfishness for his own individual benefit, and if so soon reaches its limit. But when incidental to constant aspirations after some desired knowledge or experience for the benefit of others the aural manhood becomes itself purified, and can do its work with increasing power.

The effect we have been depicting is but the outreach from Homo to his own aural self, and grand as may be its results it does not compromise the experiences of telepathy. Telepathy is communication between one selfhood and another, without the use of the sense organs of mortal Homo. We know fairly well the limit of each mortal sense. A few miles for sight and hearing are the supposed boundaries wherein man may communicate with his fellows. When waving his flag, or sun-flashing his thought, intelligence is talking to intelligence, but it is through mortal sense, and is therefore not telepathy. Units may flash to and fro, but they carry no tale of an aural selfhood. But when a scene actually passing in a distant city is seen and described in minute detail we know some other sense than mortal sight has become active. And if what is said yonder is also recorded with accuracy, we know that Homo's ear never responded to such vibrations. We are in presence of telepathy pure and simple, and in a detail that is not as limited as that of aural man in communication with his own mortal self. Another self is at work, and we have to note that we enter another realm of life when we thus recognize communion between one aural self and another.

We must carefully draw the line between Homo and his aural self.

Intelligence that compels electricity to girdle the earth, or is flashed without a wire, is still but Homo to Homo. Mortal sense is at work at either end. We know just what to expect. But as soon as we are in touch with our aural self there are powers at the other end utterly unknown to us, and from whom we receive only as much as we can interpret. We thus sense and absorb all we can use. By self education we learn to receive more and more. Now comes the question as to who is the actual worker when I am exchanging telepathic thought with a distant friend. It is certain it is not an outreach of mortal sense. Yet mortal sense must play the interpreter or nothing will reach Homo. So I sit in the silence in America, first impressing on my aural self that I desire to reach my friend in distant England. By holding my friend mentally before me I aid my aural self in its task. But once again, we see the aural self will have no direct relation with the Homo friend I am seeking. My aural self may blend soul to soul with the aural self of my friend, but that is not necessarily an opening into his earth life with its details. Thus we see that the necessary link demands either that my friend be also seeking oneness with his own aural self, or else his mortal form must be so passive that that self can respond to mine.

For the most part real interchange between mortal and mortal is rare. One or the other remains unconscious of the communion. Soul may greet soul but the mortal brain is silent. That such greeting is possible on both sides is well known to the student, but in such case both Homo in America and Homo in England will be sensitive to their own aural selfhood. It is then that most interesting and instructive phenomena take place, of which we will speak in our next chapter.

Weak Eyes

All Imperfections of the Eye, Even Blindness, Cured at Home without Use of Knife or Painful Methods.

No oculist living today has had so extensive a practice in the curing of cataracts, granulated lids, failing eyesight, cross eyes and all imperfections of the eye as the eminent specialist, Dr. F. Geo. Curts, of Kansas City, Mo. His cures are perfected at your own home through his Mild Medicine Method, without knife or Pain. Any reader afflicted with eye trouble, or have friend afflicted, write today and receive absolutely free, Dr. Curts' wonderful book "Treatise On The Eye." It tells you how his many wonderful cures are made. Address DR. F. GEO. CURTS, 427 Shukert Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five percent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advise free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. Address New York & London Electric Association, Dep. Discovery of a Lost Trail
BY CHARLES B. NEWCOMB,
Author of "All's Right with the World." Cloth 270 pages. Mr. Newcomb made a distinct success with "All's Right with the World," which continues in the front rank of the Metaphysical books that are now so popular. The great number who have been cheered and strengthened by him will welcome another book by this wise teacher whose words of help are doing so much to make the world better by making men and women better able to understand and enjoy it.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail"
is a simple study of that strange and beautiful thing called life, but grand in its scholarly simplicity. It will be in demand by many who have not previously read metaphysical writings. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

THREE PITIFUL STORIES.

Sad, Yet Beautiful Incidents in Everyday Life That Call for Our Deepest Sympathy.

The following sketches of three very pitiful incidents in every-day life are taken from recent issues of the Chicago American. But few of the readers of The Progressive Thinker outside of Chicago, ever see the interesting chronicles of these little incidents unless they are close readers of the daily papers, and there is something so very touching in these three stories, to the sensitive people known so largely to exist in the ranks of Spiritualism, that I give them in full:

DIED IN A HOVEL.

"Two hands folded across the breast and labor is done."—Russian Proverb.

Louis Christenson died without suffering. He fell asleep peacefully in the hovel he called home at 19 Twentieth Place some time early yesterday morning. He died alone, except for the presence of his aged brother, and forgotten, yet no braver hero ever lived than this same Louis Christenson.

Those who took his body to its last resting-place will not soon forget the story of his beautiful life. The story of a love as pure as it was perfect, a love like that of David for Jonathan.

Years ago, in a village in far off Norway, Louis' father said to him, "Protect and love your smaller brother." It was a sacred charge and sacredly he kept it.

All his life long he kept watch and word over his brother Amos' welfare. His guardianship only ceased with death. Behind him he leaves a record of unselfishness and self-abnegation.

When both were young they went to sea. Because Amos' eyes were weak he had to give up his occupation. Louis also ceased to be a sailor. Thirty years ago they came to this country. After traveling about the country they settled in Chicago. That was twenty-two years ago.

The condition of Amos was such that he needed a constant companion. Louis never married and was willing to forego the companionship of other men for his brother. Together they toiled in lumber yards and factories. Years went by, but their devotion did not falter.

Finally Amos' eyesight gave out entirely. He could not work. Then Louis obtained a position as a night watchman. Amos always stayed by his side through the long hours of the night.

They were poor, very poor. The pittance Louis earned barely kept body and soul together. At length he fell ill. He could work no more. The brothers had no savings. They had earned only a bare living.

When the sickness came they knew it was the end. Therefore they lay down on their cots in the same room to await the coming of death. They prayed it would find them together.

On Tuesday night a county physician found them. He ordered them both sent to the County Hospital. The ambulance was to call for them yesterday morning. But death came first. It came to Louis. He had been crying and coughing. Presently both ceased.

His brother smiled at the silence. Louis had fallen asleep. But when hours passed he still made no sound. Amos called to him. There was no answer. The sightless eyes could not see that the sleep of death had come. He called again and again. He was too weak to rise. When the ambulance came the attendants found him still calling.

Then they told him that Louis had passed away forever. Amos was taken to Dunning. He is heart-broken and cannot live long. The friendship of years will soon be formed again beyond the grave.

STORY OF A DRUNKEN GIRL.

Out upon the tainted air of the Harrison Street Police Court yesterday morning there floated a woman's voice, carrying clear and strong an aria from one of Gounod's operas.

With a startled look the riff-raff of the city's slums straightened up from slouching attitudes to listen. The court hesitated and looked inquiringly at the officers. They look back in wonder.

Before the weary grind began again the singing stopped, but immediately the full, rich voice broke forth again, this time slow, with the mystical music of the church.

Then, while judge and clerk and blue-coated police sat entranced, and the be-draggled mob scarce breathed, the beautiful words and music of "The Holy City" thrilled up from the dark, rat-infested cells of the cellar below.

Mary Gavin was the woman who sang. Mary Gavin had never sung to such an audience before. Hitherto her audiences had been delighted listeners in the drawing-room of her father's home in St. Louis, or fashionable congregations in her native city, or the music lovers who attend Theodore Thomas' orchestra recitals.

But the spirit of music was inborn in the heart of the delicately nurtured girl, and when she awoke in a cell with the charge of "drunk and disorderly" against her, she found her only consolation in the music to which she had devoted her life.

Several thieves were held to the criminal court. A wife-beater was ordered to the bridewell. Two sad-eyed girls in flashy finery were fined and dismissed. A few drunkards were disposed of, and then the former opera singer was led to the dock.

Tall and proud, with the easy air of the stage artist, tempered with the embarrassment of her surroundings, half shamed and half suppliant, Mary Gavin faced the judge.

And then she told her story, told it simply and plainly, with no attempt at concealment or exaggeration.

"Love of drink has caused my downfall, and as my thirst has increased I have seen everything I love in this world pass from my grasp. Fame, wealth, luxury, husband, family, reputation—all, all have passed from me.

"My father was for many years secretary of the board of police commissioners of St. Louis. Our family home at 2619 Elliott avenue was the center of a circle of musical and artistic people. I passed through a happy girlhood, with every advantage that wealth, social position and ability could give me.

"It is not vanity that allows me to tell now that I became a splendid musician. My voice was pronounced a wonderful contralto and I had engagements thrust upon me in the most fashionable churches of St. Louis.

"From singing in church choirs I went into opera, and for several seasons sang with the Thomas Orchestra. My life was filled with everything to make a woman happy. I had crowned it with success attained in my chosen field. I was passionately fond of music.

"To sing and to play were not work to me, and I saw still greater things ahead when I found to my horror that I was dividing my passion between my profession and the cup. The love of liquor overcame everything else, and then—my happiness began to slip away.

"I had married. John Wolkewitz was my husband, but three years ago he secured a divorce. George and John Gavin, my brothers, and my sister took me home and tried to reform me.

"Oh! How honestly I have tried to reform! But it was no use. My thirst seemed to have become a disease. At times I would become mad for whisky and would break from the house and go on long debauches.

"Finally my relatives sent me to the House of the Good Shepherd. They thought the kind sisters could reform me, but even they were compelled to give me up. Then I came to Chicago and entered the House of the Good Shepherd here. For a time I was happy.

"In working to reclaim others I forgot myself and my troubles. Teaching the piano, the violin, the guitar or singing I found a pure delight. In the little operas the sisters gave I took the leading male roles, and in my small world lived over again the triumphs of the happy past.

"Once more the old curse returned and I lost control of myself. Time and again I did the same thing, until the sisters were compelled to turn me over to the police, who took me to St. Luke's Society Sanitarium, 1710 Indiana ave. nue. There I have been taking the drink cure, but it appears to have affected my nerves. It makes me sick. I ran away. I drank. That is all I know until I awoke here this morning."

When the justice had heard Mary Gavin's story he returned her to St. Luke's Society, where another attempt will be made to reform the woman.

What the woman told of her life is true. Dispatches from St. Louis tell of her career there as a beautiful singer and society woman. Her family was politically and socially prominent and as a girl Miss Gavin was noted for her beauty and vivacity. After her divorce she took back her maiden name.

POVERTY SEPARATES THE OLD COUPLE.

After fifty years of married life John Tohldorf and his wife bade each other an eternal farwell yesterday. For half a century they have lived together. Together they have met the troubles which God gave them, and together they have laughed over each other's joys.

It had been the dream of both to be together till the hand of death should be laid upon them. But poverty—the grim stage manager of the poor—willed it otherwise and now, loving each other still, each must wait for death in loneliness.

A year ago Tohldorf was stricken with paralysis. Since that time he has been helpless. Each day he grew worse. He is a cobbler by trade, and it was impossible for him to do any work. The little money they had toiled so hard and long to save went quickly. One must have food, and doctors' bills are large.

Soon they were penniless. Starvation looked them in the face and the husband was terribly in need of medical advice. A neighbor notified the police, and a physician who was called said the husband must be moved to the county hospital.

Gently the news was broken to the old couple. The wife begged pitifully to be taken with him. When she was told that it was impossible, both broke down and cried together. The old woman threw her arms about the man she loved so well, and sobbed that they should not take him from her. She is sixty-eight, two years younger than her husband. So it was necessary to send her to Dunning.

The old couple took leave of each other on the sidewalk in front of the little home where they had been so happy. Tohldorf was brought out on a stretcher. His wife stooped over him.

"Good-bye, Johan," she said. "We will never meet again."

She leaned down ad kissed him. The helpless man looked up at her, and his eyes said all that could be said. Then he was placed in an ambulance and driven to the hospital, while she turned her face toward the poorhouse.

So, after fifty years of deep and tender love, Johan Tohldorf and his wife parted to meet no more until the day breaks and the shadows flee away.

IN DEEP SYMPATHY.

I pause here to weep, my soul doth o'erflow,
My heart is bowed down with the weight of a woe;
Ah, why should I weep? Because I can feel
Some sorrowing soul's pathetic appeal;
Because I can sense down in this great Whole
The deep, bitter anguish of some kindred soul.

Yes, here are recorded three cases that call
For tears from the tender and notice from all.
I cannot help weeping though weep I alone,
When sadly I gather each sob and each moan;
Each sigh of deep anguish, each twinge of despair;
My soul bows within me in deep, silent prayer.

While life may be real and earnest and true,
For some it is brightness, for others all blue;
For some there's a palace, for some but a hut;
For some ease and comfort, for some a deep rut;
Though all should as brothers in sympathy be
The world is neglectful of true sympathy.

Just think of two brothers, devoted and true,
Beset by misfortunes when pleasures seemed due,
Thrown out of all labor, no hope but to roam,
Made helpless by sickness, a hovel their home.
Still clinging together, eternally wed,
Devoted while living, one blind and one dead.

Just think of a daughter, a beautiful girl,
An artist of talent and more to unfurl,
In social life tempted, in pleasure's boat tossed,
Till, innocence, character, womanhood lost,
She lies in the gutter or jail, yet the throng
Is held in sweet rapture by her still charming song.

Just think of two people who lived fifty years
In sweetest devotion through joys and through tears,
By poverty severed, divorced by old Fate,
The sick-bed and stretcher, the poor-house old gate;
Loving and parting and pleading to stay
Together till parted by death on the way.

Oh, weep for those brothers, who, coddling in death
And starving were parted with love on each breath;
Oh, weep for the spirit that cannot transcend
The spheres of temptation, and hold to the end;
Oh, weep for the sorrow of heart-broken age
Whom poverty crushed at the end of life's stage.

Oh, weep for the earthly now lonely and blind,
Whose loving protector has left him behind;
Oh, weep for sweet girlhood whose sweetness lies dumb
And whose pride is dethroned by demons of rum;
Oh, weep for old lovers whom poverty ground
In this land of plenty where joy should abound.

Tears are not childish, but sacred as dew
From Heaven's grand domain, from souls that are true.
Weeping is manly as well as relief,
If born of a brother's or sister's deep grief.
Fear not the derision cold hearts may apply,
For tears of true sympathy vibrate on high.

"Why I Am a Vegetarian." By J. Howard Moore. An address before the Chicago Vegetarian Society. Price 25 cents.

Right Living Is Religion.

To the Editor:—A. H. Nicholas defines religion, "right living." Why can't Spiritualists accept and adopt this comprehensive and brief definition of religion?

The many letters published in No. 638 of The Progressive Thinker are full of good thought and very helpful. But A. H. Nicholas has given us a star paper. It contains the whole thing, beautifully expressed and I would that The Progressive Thinker would keep it in type, and publish it entire every month for a year.

Spiritualism is none the less a science, because it is a religion, too. We need a religion to hold us together—to extend and spread sympathy and mutual assistance. The success of the church does not lie in its creed, but in its organization, in the efficiency of its working members together with its minister.

The religion of Spiritualism leads in the fullness of heart work, and in all the things which make life sweeter and better. But in the nature of things the seance-room cannot develop and disseminate the good things which should flow from a healthy, energetic enthusiastic society presided over by a minister whose life should be devoted to continual effort in the society for an exalted morality and the curbing of excesses.

Spiritualists should imitate their orthodox friends in the management of the affairs of the church, to the end that it shall be known by all people that the church of the spirit is a power for good, and that its affairs shall command the respect of the public, by its dignity and the consistency of its purposes.

The great power of Henry Ward Beecher was not in the support of the church creed, which he pronounced horrible, but in his earnest; eloquent, unselfish appeals for the betterment of humanity. His power lay in the grandeur of an almost perfect manhood.

Following close to Henry Ward Beecher was Robert Collyer, the blacksmith. The passing away of these is not the passage of the race. There will be other Henry Ward Beechers and Robert Collyers who will be just as sure to drift into the church of the spirit as are the sparks to fly upward.

The church of the spirit should pronounce with no uncertain sound its detestation of the accursed saloon. And for the accomplishment of successful work along this line, and for all other things which make for the betterment of life, and the highest and best work possible for men and women, the church of the spirit should make equal suffrage second to no other work which might come before it until the Mrs. Stantons and the Miss Willards shall occupy desks in the U. S. Senate; and the moral atmosphere in the state legislatures shall be purified and their mental capacity improved by a membership composed of both men and women.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require. Every item sent to us for publication, should contain the full name and address of the writer. We desire to know the source of every item that appears. This rule will be strictly adhered to.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Bear in mind that all notices for this page are cut down to suit the space we have to occupy when received.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Bear in mind, please, that Isa Wilson Kayner's address is at No. 112 Winchester avenue, Chicago, where she can be addressed.

Mrs. Amy Buchanan writes from 112 East 8th street, Jacksonville, Fla.: "I am at last located in a place of my own once more. Our society is growing very slowly, but we are very harmonious and all the members are working earnestly and zealously for the good of the cause."

Word comes from Berlin, Germany, that in the valleys south of Stuttgart, known as the Swabian country, owing to the frenzied preaching of the Second Adventists, many farmers and peasants have declared their intention of leaving Wurtemberg and starting off to await the second coming of Christ. Some have sold their houses, farms and stock, others have given away all their possessions. The advance guard left Wurtemberg about ten days ago for the Caucasus, where the second coming is expected. There is a division of opinion among the leaders as to the exact spot where the second advent will take place, but all are united in believing it is somewhere in southern Russia, and they want to be on the spot at the time, as they believe the end of the world will follow immediately.

Chicago is wrestling with the problem of taxing church property at the present time, and, as usual, a great furore is being raised over the matter. It is not intended that property actually used for church or educational purposes shall be taxed; the movement is directed against the property held by these institutions as assets or for speculation. It cannot be denied that the Christian sentiment of the country that so earnestly favors the promotion of churches and schools has been at times abused. These institutions not infrequently go into the real estate business, and as they can purchase whenever a bargain is offered and hold it without cost to themselves they have a material advantage over other people, which is unjust.

Mrs. Taylor Newlin writes from Robinson, Ill.: "Mrs. Alice Baker, of Cleveland, Ohio, is here at my house, lecturing for us and holding seances, and giving us a spiritual feast from the angel world. She is a noble woman; a woman of culture and refinement. Her home address is 261 Pearl street, Cleveland, Ohio."

Mrs. Nathan Hall writes: "I have been an investigator of Spiritualism for forty years, and have never read anything that touched the keynote of real life like the lecturette of Hudson Tuttle in No. 642 of The Progressive Thinker. It is the real basis of our religion, for you see I have a religion. It voices my thoughts of the real Spiritualism. I am poor in this world's goods, but this universe is a great house we live in, and I am glad and thankful I have a place in it. To me money is good only as we make a good and wise use of it."

J. B. Kennerley writes from Evansville, Ind.: "We have organized a new society here and hold services in the A. O. U. W. hall on Fourth street. Sunday, the 16th, was our third day since beginning. At the morning services Dr. J. W. Ruminer delivered a short but pointed address, followed by J. A. McElroy. After his lecture he gave messages, which were recognized. At the evening services he again took the platform and under control of his guardian spirit, Dr. W. P. Bradshaw, spoke upon man as a co-worker with God in controling the universe. After he had concluded his address James Van Dyke took the platform and spoke upon the transfiguration of Jesus and the materialization of Moses and Elias upon the mount, followed by a full form materialization seance by his wife. Mrs. Van Dyke was escorted to the ante-room by a committee of three ladies who made an examination of her person and clothing, and reported that not as much as a white handkerchief was upon her person. After placing her in the cabinet, which had been examined by three gentlemen, the lights were lowered, but left burning bright enough for all present to get a good view of the cabinet. The audience then began singing America, and finally the beautiful form of Mary Elizabeth Watts, a cabinet control, appeared in long white robes, followed by nineteen more full forms which were recognized by friends. We are going to continue these meetings and make a permanent organization under the name of The First Church of Spiritual Communion."

With hand outstretched and finger pointing solemnly at a gray-haired man near the pulpit, on Sunday, the Rev. Dr. W. R. Wedderspoon, pastor of the First Methodist Church of Asbury Park, N. J., with trembling voice exclaimed: "What will the reaper do for us this next conference year? Will it take that old gray-haired man there, or will it be the man who is trying to preach to you to-night?" The body of the old gray-haired man was yesterday found lifeless on a couch in his room. He was Howard D. Coleman, who, when Asbury Park was a wilderness helped to hew down the trees and lay out the town. He was eighty-two years old, but had no thought of death until he heard these words. He went home and, it is believed, brooded over the occurrence. To a friend on Tuesday he said: "My time has come." That night he locked his door and was never afterward seen alive. And now all Asbury Park is wondering what influence pointed the finger of Dr. Wedderspoon at Coleman, and how this old man, who had occupied a seat in the church year after year, should himself, while apparently in full health, predict his own end.—Chicago American.

Harrison Ogborn writes: "I think The Progressive Thinker thinks the thoughts that ought to be thought by all thoughtful thinking thinkers in these thinking, thoughtful, throbbing times."

Harrison Ogborn writes from Indianapolis, Ind.: "The question, Should Spiritualism take its place among the great religions of the world, or be assigned to its proper position in the domain of science? is suggestive and leading, the latter half especially. I thank you very much, however, for the answers that it provoked; it shows nearly every form of belief, from rank, rock-ribbed, ragged orthodoxy, to the most advanced spiritualized Spiritualism. It shows that we are full of ideas, and that we have our eyes turned toward the light, and our ears open to the truth. Well, I guess religion is to be spiritually minded; be good and do good."

J. M. White writes from Marshalltown, Iowa: "Having terminated my engagement with the Psychic Research Class of this city, I am now open for engagements for camp-meetings in Iowa and Nebraska during the coming season. My work with the Psychic Research Class was demonstrations in trance mediumship. I am now working with the Iowa School of Psychic Science, at 407 East Main street, at which point I can be reached at any time."

L. writes from Detroit: "The Earnest Workers at 333 Michigan avenue, enjoyed a profitable game and fish pond jolly on Thursday last, and will give a grand masquerade for the benefit of the building fund on April 3. The Ladies' Aid is doing this, and more too. Mrs. Rose Ferris spoke during the month at the Sunday meetings except one. This accomplished speaker is beloved by everybody, and is in every way in demand for all good work on the platform or in the circle. Her addresses sparkle with gems in verse, sweetly unnoticeable, for it is not her manner to be pronounced, yet the grandeur of her thought carries conviction to the soul. Mrs. Margaret Lagrange speaks eloquently and gives tests Sunday afternoons and evenings at Prismatic Hall. Mrs. St. Omer Briggs is holding spiritual revival seances at 55 Grand River avenue, and the Spiritual Unity Mission is breaking the way at 130 Labrosse street. Mrs. Rose Ferris will answer calls to adjacent towns or cities. Her address is 307 Bagg street, Detroit, Mich."

Stella A. Keyes writes from Worcester, Mass.: "Mrs. H. E. Millan was with the People's Spiritualist Society last Sunday. Her article reading is something wonderful. Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding will be with us next Sunday, as a lecturer and test medium. She, too, is a very fine medium."

Frank T. Ripley writes from Wheeling, West Va.: "The First Society of Spiritualists of Wheeling, W. Va., will celebrate the 54th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism at Odd Fellows hall, Sunday, March 30, at 3 and 7:30 p. m. Lyceum at 2 p. m. Lecture and spirit messages at 3 and 7:30 p. m. Frank T. Ripley will give the anniversary address, with spirit messages. All the Spiritualists of the state and those of Pennsylvania are invited to attend. Good music. We intend to make this occasion one of great rejoicing."

The Christian church at Glendora, twelve miles northwest of Niles, Mich., has been filled to its capacity nightly. Farm people have flocked from miles around to hear George Powell, a young man who declared that the voice of the Lord commanded him to go forth and drive out devils. Powell, who is twenty-one years old and uneducated, declares that he was a great sinner and that the Lord called him and he fell on his knees and adored his Maker, whereupon the devil appeared before him and rolled away a barrel of sin. Powell also declares that a voice commanded him to go to Glendora and drive out devils and that he will remain there until the Lord commands him to go elsewhere. He says he has found the location of hell, which is situated at a depth of five miles in the bowels of the earth, and that the Lord inspires him. He is uneducated, but expounds the Scriptures with the greatest fidelity, and has great fluency of speech when in the pulpit. He resides at St. Joseph.

H. E. Pomeroy writes: "Although I am a pessimist and see the need of reformation in all directions, I still believe there is one source from which all proceed. And though I am not a Spiritualist, I do think their teachings come nearer to meeting the great necessity, spiritually, of all classes of humanity than any sectarian creed ever formulated by prophet, priest or potentate."

Geo. W. Mosey writes from Elwood, Ind.: "W. C. Jessup has closed a five weeks' stay in our city and has made a large number of converts out of the church circle people that looked upon Spiritualists as curs and Spiritualism as the work of the devil. The Spiritualists of Elwood, Ind., have had a hard road to travel, but are gaining ground fast at present. Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague reorganized the society here Sunday evening, March 15."

Word comes from Frankfort, Ind., that after trying for two years to conduct school in a schoolhouse said to be haunted, the trustees and members of the school board of Carrollton Township have decided to abandon the Elkins schoolhouse, twelve miles north of this city. A few years ago Omar Green was hanged by a mob in the school yard for the murder of his sweetheart. Shortly after this strange sounds were heard by the teacher and pupils, they seemingly coming from the left of the building. At times the doors and windows would rattle, as though some person possessing superhuman strength tenings. Many of the pupils contend that their desks would shake and that were trying to tear them from their fastheir books would be knocked from their hands. The school board ridiculed the idea of the building being a habitation for ghosts, and to allay the fears of the children remained in the building over night. The same strange sounds and other mysterious manifestations were heard and seen by them, and two of the more timid ones refused to remain in the building. Their acknowledgment that "something" was wrong with the place only served to increase the fears of the children, and the attendance began falling off. From 175 the attendance dwindled down to 15, and efforts to increase the enrollment failing, it was decided to abandon the school. Property in the vicinity has depreciated in value because of the ghost scare, and several families have sold at a sacrifice and moved out of the neighborhood. The schoolhouse cost about $3,000 and has been offered for sale for $300.

Mrs. Dr. Edwards is now located at 1234 Michigan avenue, where she will be pleased to see her friends.

Joy N. Blanchard, president, writes from Delphos, Kansas: "This society will hold camp-meeting in our beautiful grove, August 8 to 23 inclusive. We would like to be put in communication with a first-class platform test medium; also one first-class speaker for the entire camp. Address me as above."

"Formerly I was a hardened skeptic in matters of psychic phenomena," said a prominent lawyer of Pennsylvania, the other day, "but I was converted by an experience that has made me an ardent believer in things supernatural. One night recently I was on my way to Towanda on horseback. While passing through a long stretch of woods I suddenly saw just ahead of me, the figure of a man. He seemed to be surrounded by a fierce fall of snow, which was apparently hurled against him by a terrific gale of wind. As the man struggled along feebly against the storm my horse stopped suddenly, pricked up his ears, and pawed the ground impatiently. All around, except in the small space surrounding the figure of the man, was clear and calm. I rubbed my eyes and made up my mind that the man was some drunken fellow on his way home from the village, and that the storm was an optical illusion. I called out to him, but no answer came back. I shouted again, and again, louder each time, but the struggling figure gave no response. At last the man fell as if exhausted, and the fierce gale whirled the snow around him. Knowing that if the fallen man was drunk he would freeze to death if I left him lying there, I jumped from my horse and ran to help him up, intending to take him to the nearest place of shelter. As I reached the prostrate figure I saw the face was turned upward. I started back and almost fell fainting in the snow. The face was revealed in the darkness as clearly as if it had been broad daylight, and it was that of my brother, who lived in Dakota. When I recovered from the shock and turned again to the body, it was gone. There was not even an impression in the snow where it had lain. Bewildered and much unstrung, I finally mounted my horse and rode on. I gradually recovered my composure, and at last convinced myself that I had been the victim of a strange and unaccountable hallucination, but a strange foreboding of evil haunted me. A few days later I received a letter from the town in Dakota where my brother was, and which informed me that he had been caught in a blizzard while on his way to his cabin and was frozen to death. The letter gave the date and time of his death. It had occurred at the very hour and night that the apparition of the man struggling against the storm appeared to me on the Towanda road and I recognized my brothers face as he lay dead in the snow."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Programme for services of Progressive Spiritual Society, to be held at North Avenue and Burling street, Easter Sunday, March 30, 1902. Afternoon service, 2:30, prompt. The following persons will participate: Mrs. Hilbert, Anna Bennett's Blossom Club, Dr. George B. Warne, President State Association, Mrs. K. Abram, Miss Ida Rice, Mr. Wm. Lynn, Anna Bennett, Mrs. Schwann, Mr. C. B. Knoth, and the president. Evening services, commencing at 7:30. Afternoon program repeated, with the following changes: Addresses by Mrs. Ella Johnson Bloom, secretary State Association, and by Mrs. C. B. Hitt.

Will J. Erwood writes: "I would like to make engagements for camp work during June, July and August, and would be glad to hear from the secretaries of the various camp associations regarding the same. Will make terms reasonable and give references where required. Address me at 1334 Pine street, La Crosse, Wis."

Emma M. Nutt-Moore writes: "For the past five Sundays I have been speaking for the Jackson (Mich.) society. Meetings have been well attended. While there I gave several circles for the benefit of the society. These gatherings tend to bring together not only those who are Spiritualists, but those who are investigators. The officers and members are very kindly, and under the able instructions given by President Andrew Watson, the audiences never fail in giving the speakers the very best conditions for their work. The remaining Sundays of March, Mrs. Amanda Coffman, of Grand Rapids, will speak for the society. At the close of my work last Sunday, Mr. Watson, the president, presented me with a large bouquet of handsome flowers, with the following endorsement, signed by the officers of the society: We the undersigned in behalf of this association, thank Mrs. Emma M. Nutt-Moore, of Elwood, Ind., for her ever ready and efficient service done in our behalf, and the cause of Spiritualism. The flowers may wither, but the perfume from the beautiful thoughts sent with the message to me will live forever. Let us as Spiritualists act as one in the uplifting of our beautiful philosophy. Let us lay aside selfishness, and forgetting self, work for Truth."

Phantoms, conjured at a seance held by the family of the late Horace Sutton, at Houck's Mills, in Baltimore county, Md., pointed the finger of suspicion at J. Duncan Almony, a leading business man of Belair, Harford county, and to-day he was taken to the Towson jail, accused of the murder of Sutton. The charge is made that Almony killed Sutton because the latter had declared he "knew things about Almony which would cause the whole state to rise in horror." Almony was arrested last night at Belair on a warrant sworn out by Detective Charles P. Bartholomew, chief of a Baltimore detective agency, and who was engaged to take up the case immediately after the alleged message from the spirit land, which accused Almony of the murder. Sutton was found dead on the night of December 5 last, and the coroner's inquest resulted in a verdict of accidental death. Testimony at the inquest was to the effect that Sutton's death was due to a fall or from a blow on the head by "some blunt instrument." Some attention was directed toward Almony at the time, but there was no motive apparent, and all suspicion was brushed aside. On the evening of December 5 last, a party of gentlemen, which included Sutton and Almony, returning from a hunting expedition, gathered in Houck's flour mill to rest and divide the game. During the confab in the mill Sutton withdrew, and shortly after he left the room Almony also went out. A half hour later Sutton was found lying in the cellar ten feet below an open trap door. His skull was fractured above the right ear. The wound was a deep one and about four inches in length. Sutton never recovered consciousness and died the next day at the City Hospital in Baltimore. Almony's high reputation and standing induced Judge Burke to admit him to bail this afternoon, and he was released in bonds of $10,000, and declared he could furnish ten times the amount if necessary. Mr. Almony declared the accusation was absurd, as he and Sutton had been friends since boyhood. He is about 35 years old, and has an interesting family.—Philadelphia (Pa.) American.

Secretary writes from Detroit, Mich.: "Next Sunday the society of Spiritual Unity will celebrate the 54th anniversary by holding afternoon and evening meetings. Address by the pastor, Rev. St. Omer Briggs, Mrs. M. E. Jenkins, L. B. Smith and others. Visitors to our city invited. Our meetings are very well attended, taxing the full capacity of the hall."

Muncie, Ind., March 14.—The charges of obtaining money under false pretenses and grand larceny, against Wm. H. Thompson, former Muncie business man, were dismissed in the circuit court Thursday. Thompson threatens to retaliate with a big damage suit. Six months ago Charles Hawkins was charged with procuring $4,000 from Miss Sarah Williams, aged 52, on a promise of marriage. He left immediately and has not since been located. It was claimed that Thompson was implicated in the deed. Thompson and the Williams family are devout Spiritualists. Prosecufor Dearth says that the suit was dismissed at the instigation of Miss Williams since developments made a few nights ago at a spiritual seance. The late Judge O. J. Lotz, former member of the Appellate court, was a member of the law firm of Gregory, Silverbaurg & Lotz, representatives of Miss Williams in the prosecution of Thompson. It is told that at the spiritual seance Judge Lotz came back in spirit form and advised Miss Williams to dismiss the suit against Thompson.—Terre Haute (Ind.) Gazette.

E. G. Benson writes from Seattle, Wash.: "I was sitting in a circle in May of 1900, and while listening to what some others were saying I looked up and saw General Ulysses S. Grant. He said to me: 'Listen! The next four years there will be all kinds of disasters. There will be wars and rumors of wars, famine and plague, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, tornadoes, storms and floods, accompanied with great loss of life and destruction of property. So much of it has come true that I can't help wondering what is coming next. I saw an account of a tidal wave in Central America that came without a moment's warning. It brought the prophecy strongly to my mind."

Dr. L. H. Freedman writes from 3036 Indiana avenue: "I am again at my office and thoroughly recovered from the surgical operation. I also want to say to the investigators of Spiritualism that Mrs. Bliss, the materializing medium, is in Chicago. From the many experiences I have had with this medium, I regard her as one who gives positive evidences of this phase of mediumship. Mrs. Maggie Waite is here and as a test medium she needs no praise from me. I am glad they have come amongst us to strengthen our noble truth."

C. M. Folsom writes: "Josie K. Folsom has received the appointment as missionary for the state of Iowa. She will be glad to correspond with parties in that state with a view to holding meetings and organizing societies. Mrs. Folsom is well known in the state where her inspirational speaking and spirit messages have brought the glorious light of truth to many. She can be addressed for the next thirty days at 1136 Robberson ave., Springfield, Mo."

Dr. H. C. Andrews writes from Jonesboro, Ind.: "I shall lecture at Balbec, Ind., March 30, and conduct the anniversary exercises. I should be pleased to hear from any societies in Indiana wishing to employ a good lecturer and message medium. I have also a few open dates for camp meetings. Correspondence solicited. My permanent address is Jonesboro, Ind., Box 135."

G. H. Brooks returns to Newport, Ky., for the month of April.

D. W. Hull will speak the Sundays of April at Villa Ridge, Ill., and would like to arrange for lectures in May in Illinois, Indiana, or Missouri before returning to Kansas in June. Address him at Villa Ridge, Ill.

L. S. Carroll writes from Wheeling, West Va.: My idea of Spiritualism is to look to the future, and the only way is to educate the rising generation through the progressive lyceum. The society of Wheeling, W. Va., has organized a lyceum of 18 children, also a class of adults. We have with us for the month of April, Frank T. Ripley, lecturer and test medium. Under his inspiring influence we feel able to do a grand work. We have had the pleasure of having Mr. Kayton, of Washington, Pa., an excellent trumpet medium."

Drofnas writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "Doubtless there are many better localities than this, yet we desire not to be erased from the map, as we have many good mediums and workers in the cause whom we love, and we are rapidly increasing in numbers under the good work that has been done and is still being done in our midst by noble and able speakers. D. H. Herrick, of Alliance, O., was with us for two months, and was followed by Dr. Paul LeMar, both of whom have done good work. Dr. LeMar is here at the present time conducting independent meetings. He has many warm friends here. This city is large enough to maintain two good societies. We are well blessed with good mediums who are ever ready and willing to lend a helping hand. Mrs. Coffman served the society here for the first two Sundays of this month. Last Sunday Dr. Batdorf was the speaker, followed by Mrs. Emma Blake with messages. Mrs. Blake will conduct the meetings for the last two Sundays of this month. Mrs. Blake was recently invited to the Soldiers' Home to conduct the funeral ceremonies of Asa W. Ballou, one of the inmates. The chapel was too small to admit the throng who sought admission. This was the first funeral ever conducted by our people which has brought out many favorable comments in reference to the kind and convincing utterances of the speaker. Following this was the passing out of Mrs. Dr. Drollinger, and as the Doctor and his family were admirers and friends of Mrs. Blake, she was invited to conduct the funeral, which she willingly did, but as Brother Herrick was in the city, she invited him to assist, which offer he kindly accepted and his timely remarks were very appropriate. The music and singing was conducted by Mrs. Ella Kinney, the esteemed pianist for the society."

G. W. Kates and wife can be addressed at 3125½ Franklin avenue, St. Louis, Mo., March 29 to April 6. They desire dates in eastern Missouri for April, and in the western part of the state during May.

F. L. Jobson writes from Richmond, Va.: "It has been a pleasure as well as a benefit to our society to have had with us Mrs. H. C. Webber, of Boston, for the past three Sundays. She came to us a stranger, and by her fine lectures, beautiful teachings of spiritual philosophy and most excellent proofs of spirit return, has won the gratitude and love of our society."

G. W. Kates and wife report very successful meetings held by them in Fort Worth, Texas, March 10, 19, and 23. The Spiritualists there own the finest appointed Temple that is owned by any of our local societies. It is a beautiful structure, well seated with opera chairs, electric lights, frescoed walls, pipe organ and piano, and a large painting as the background of the platform. The temple is entirely paid for and the society has no debts. Judge John W. Wray is the earnest and capable chairman, and seems to be the right man to keep the proper control over the management. He presides with grace and manages with careful executive ability. Mr. and Mrs. Kates speak highly of the hospitality given them by Judge Wray and the Temple society. Mrs. Brown has been the regular speaker, but is not at present holding meetings and the Temple needs good workers to come this way. Fort Worth is a splendid field for a capable and earnest speaker; as indeed all Texas needs that mediums and speakers shall utilize this fertile field for the organized cause. All over the state good work can be done and in several localities resident mediums are needed. Profitable circuits can be formed and the state association will encourage all who can take up the work of love, confiding in the ability and trusting to human generosity that is sure to follow.

John C. Hemmeter writes: "March 16, 1902, Der Erster Deutscher Spiritualisten Verein, of Cleveland, Ohio, had the impressive ceremony of installing its ordained speaker, Sister Gertrude Helmsohn, who became affiliated with this society at its organization, some sixteen months ago. The hall was beautifully decorated with flags, ferns, evergreens and palms. The procession consisting of a lyceum boy, upon his arms resting a beautiful decorated velvet cushion, containing the papers of her ordination, four flower girls, dressed in immaculate white; the president of the society and the ordained Sister Helmsohn, arm in arm, followed by Brothers Thomas Black, president of the Ohio State Spiritualist Association, Thomas Lees (the wheel horse of Modern Spiritualism in the state of Ohio), and C. A. Sollinger, an ardent worker of this German society, as masters of ceremony, followed by mediums, Sisters Lena Wolff, Ida Buchwald, Mrs. Cook and others, filed in the filled hall in the order named, up the main aisle, the flower-girls strewing flowers along the passage way and the orchestra, led by Brother Grabau and Master Fischer, playing an appropriate instrumental overture; upon arriving at the rostrum, the procession filed right and left, leaving an open passage way for the officers of the ceremony to pass to the foot of the rostrum where the ceremony of the installation took place, Brother Black leading, followed by Brother Sollinger, in delivering their several charges, the former in the English and the latter in the German language, and presented the installed with her papers of ordination; whereupon Brother Lees delivered an oration on the philosophy of Spiritualism, with credit to himself and honor to the cause, closing his discourse with a poem in German. After congratulations, speaking, interspersed with music and a soprano solo by Sister Scherwelt, the newly installed speaker of the society repied with an eulogy on Spiritualism, closing his discourse by saying, the deeds of this life become the building material of our spiritual houses. Our deeds are projected into the spiritual atmosphere and cannot be effaced, so we shall have to meet them, every one. There is no way to obliterate them, only by the one atonement, to cease to do evil and learn to do good—a change of purpose and life. After concluding, the speaker was followed by the several mediums mentioned, who demonstrated their several psychic powers in a number of experiments, all of which were successful and well received. As some of our sisters may be anxious to know how our newly installed speaker was dressed, the writer will state that she was dressed very becomingly for the occasion, nothing ostentatious or gaudy, wrapped with a beautiful black velvet princess robe."

James Kent writes from Winthrop, N. Y.: "Some generous soul has sent me The Progressive Thinker a number of weeks. He has my unbounded gratitude, for it was like being taken from the mire and placed on solid ground. Spiritualism has been my belief or knowledge for fifty years, but it must pass through the sifting ordeal ere its greatest usefulness. It is natural to want sympathy and aid in sorrow. My experience is that when mortals fail to give it, our spirit friends respond. Could you behold the writer, you would see a happy man in comparison with former years. My age and infirmity prevent a full expression, but I feel that little acts that cost no sorrow, pain or affliction to-day or to-morrow, are treasured by others as a most sacred boon, comes a part of the soul and in heaven will bloom."

WHEN SOMEONE WHISPERS: "I'M WITH YOU."

Sometimes with an aching head,
When the rest are all asleep,
Retiring to my humble bed,
I lay awake and weep,
Until my soul is sobbing, too;
Then someone whispers: "I'm with you."

And while 'neath foreign skies I roam
Along some lonely shore,
Mourning the friends I left at home,
Who since have gone before!
Yet seem to walk beside me, too,
When someone whispers: "I'm with you."

Then often my father below,
And my mother above,
Appear like visions in a glow,
To hear the voice they love;
Yet neither recognizing who—
When someone whispers: "I'm with you."

And when I think of Mabel dear,
The tears begin to fall—
And when I kiss her picture here
Which hangs upon the wall,
I seem to feel her warm breath, too—
Then someone whispers: "I'm with you."

A WORKER'S OPINION.

On the Education of Our Public Exponents.

To the Editor:—Having read with interest both articles, one by Moses Hull and the other by Clara Watson, concerning the advisability of educating our workers before they are authorized to take up public work, I wish to mention to the readers of The Progressive Thinker a few points that have recently come under my immediate observation. Before I do this, however, I wish to say that when my name was presented to a certain local society for recognition as an authorized speaker, one of the oldest male members of that society affirmed that I should not be ordained until I was controlled by a spirit. My answer to that objection was that, if a spirit could control my hand in writing or my brain in thinking and my vocal expression in clothing my thoughts with words better than I, all well and good, as they were welcome; but if they could not do better than I was able to do, they may wait until they could. Well, I have not as yet had any evidence sufficient to convince me that I at that time took the wrong position with regard to spirit control.

In my opinion it is the purpose of the promoters of Morris Pratt Institute to encourage all the spirit help possible, but not to have the departed friends come back, and through our speakers bring our cause into disrepute. Just because a person has passed out of the body, it is no evidence that they know any more than those left in this expression of life. Let us get rid of the idea that the change called death makes us a God or a perfect angel.

I have had conversations with spirits that I would no more permit to control my organism than I would believe that the world is to pretty soon come to an end, as our Adventist friends think.

Then again, I have listened to messages from departed friends that excel my own discourses by probably ninety-nine per cent, and it has always been my desire that some day this kind of spirits would be able to control my organism.

Now to the points to which I referred in the beginning of this article. In my recent travels around the state of Indiana I have been able to observe that there are several places where we could establish circuits, and if we had the young talent to take hold of these places we would be able to excel all other religions. There are now three young men that belong to my church that are contemplating going to the Morris Pratt Institute and fit or qualify themselves to take charge of these circuits. I wish to ask this question of Clara Watson: Would she be willing to take charge of one of these circuits and build them (the societies in its district) up to good societies? Does she know of any speakers that have received all their instruction from the spirit world, that would like to do or undertake this task?

I will venture to say that she does not. Well, let me say that this has got to be done if we as a religion want to live as a distinct movement.

Now again, I wish to say that Mr. Moses Hull has been our able defender for a great many years, and it is not advisable for any calamity-howler to try to decry any movement that will tend to give us prestige and establish us before the public as a people that is doing something. I am proud to say that I have taken out a life membership in the Morris Pratt Institute, and I will do all I can to send young people there and qualify them for the work that will naturally devolve upon them when they take charge of these circuits. I will venture to say that the Morris Pratt Institute will live when all the people that have opposed it have passed into the life where they think all intelligence must come. I wish to say that every speaker and medium is duty bound to support this institution in every way. HARRY J. MOORE.

American Press Writers' Association.

The American Press Writers' Association is peculiarly well adapted to the work of promulgating the fundamental truths of spiritual philosophy through the pages of our great daily and weekly newspapers. Hundreds of short articles have probably found their way into a prominent position through this agency, which otherwise would never have been written.

The Association is practically a free and open field, accessible to all, no matter what their ideas or principles may be. We have a variety to suit to the taste of all, yet many of us have special subjects to write upon. One of my subjects being Spiritualism, I would like to receive copies of papers or publications containing articles adverse to our cause, that I may either write an answer myself, or forward to some other writer. Sometimes our articles are refused by editors, but for the most part I believe when couched in proper language, without abuse, they are received and consequently read by thousands who never had an opportunity, perhaps, to hear a lecture or read a spiritual publication.

The ice is being broken in many places through this agency and it would be well for Spiritualists to see to it that any articles in their local papers derogatory to our grand truth be answered by one or many writers. It will have a tendency to excite an interest in our philosophy among all classes of people, and will therefore be productive of good.

The Association is growing rapidly and is already a power in the land; many of our members do not write but assist in many ways by sending marked papers to writers and helping in the distribution of our printed matter which can be had by writing to the secretary, A. C. Armstrong, 17 Leroy street, Dorchester, Mass. The association's work being entirely of a voluntary character, and quite expensive to some writers who are classed among the most active workers, it is considered simply a matter of courtesy to send postage for replies to questions; and articles in answer to opponents.

BY

EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storiettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than seven years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive Communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt. D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I send communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose graves are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

NEW EDITION

THE LYCEUM GUIDE

BY EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

Do you want to organize a society for the social, intellectual and spiritual advancement of the children and adults?

furnishes all you desire.

Do you want a self-sustaining society, founded on the basic principles of the spiritual philosophy? You have it in THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM. It furnishes a system of evolution by internal growth; not the old cup and pitcher Sunday-school. It has something to interest and advance every member, and those who are most active in teaching are the ones who learn most.

NO SPECIAL INSTRUCTOR REQUIRED.

THE LYCEUM GUIDE gives every detail needed for effective organization, and for conducting the society when established.

It has Golden Chain Recitations; the prettiest songs and music; choral responses; a service for a Band of Mercy; calisthenics; how to make the badges, flags and banners; marching exercises; full instructions in conducting the exercises, with parliamentary rules, etc.

Many Spiritualists living in isolation, have formed Lyceums in their own families; others have banded, two or three families together, while large societies have organized on the lyceum platform, and found great interest in this self-instructive method.

Do not wait for a "missionary" to come to your assistance, but take hold of the matter yourself, procure copies of the GUIDE, and commence with the few or many you find interested.

Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle (address, Berlin Heights, Ohio) will answer all questions pertaining to lyceum work.

The price of THE LYCEUM GUIDE is 50 cents, postpaid, or by the dozen, 40 cents each, by express, charges paid by receiver. Address

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Signor Alvarez: Q. Can the mosquito which has been demonstrated to be the source of yellow fever, be destroyed, and if so, will it not be one of the greatest triumphs of medical science of the times?

A. It by no means has been demonstrated that the yellow fever always has its origin in the bite of the mosquito. That one species of insect is alone capable of absorbing the germs of a special disease and conveying it to man is not consonant with the order of things. But admitting that the destruction of the peculiar species of mosquito will obliterate the dread scourge of yellow fever, we ask what disturbance in the economy of life will be the result from the destruction of the insect?

Animals of numberless species thronging land and water have by the terrific struggle for existence which has been going on through the past ages, gained an equilibrium, a balance which if disturbed, no one has sufficient knowledge to know the results.

In illustration of such disturbance, the introduction of the European sparrow may be given. A few pairs, introduced to destroy insects, found so few enemies, and conditions so favorable that they multiplied until they rapidly dispossessed the native song birds, and bid fair to become as devouring as the locust.

The few rabbits taken to Australia became intolerable. Cats introduced to prey on the rabbits, attacked the native birds instead, threatening their extinction, and the foxes imported for the same purpose, plundered the farm yard and the sheep fold.

What function has the mosquito in the economy of this balance of living beings? That is too obscure for us to fully know, yet it cannot be unimportant. During a greater part of its life it is aquatic, the eggs being deposited on the surface of the water, and the "wigglers" swarm in the water infested by them. They are voracious feeders on the minute, almost if not quite, microscopic beings, which inhabit stagnant water. Thousands of these are devoured daily by each growing wiggler, and the destruction is continuous, for eggs are being constantly deposited as the wigglers reach maturity and change into perfect insects. All summer long this destruction goes on, the infusoria multiplying and being devoured by the wigglers, which in turn furnish food to other insects and fishes. By this means the most stagnant waters are purified. In pure water the wiggler cannot live. It would starve because of the absence of infusoria. It is probable that disease germs also multiply in such waters, as malarial, typhoid germs and yellow fever, and are taken as food by the embryo mosquito, and then its bite might transmit the germs to the blood of man.

Now what will happen if the surface of the watery wastes which are the breeding places of the mosquito are covered with a film of oil? The wigglers which breathe air and must rise to the surface are destroyed, but the beings on which they feed, the infusoria and disease germs, will not be affected. The fishes should they come to the surface will be killed by the oil, and if they do not they will be deprived of their food supply. The balance and adjustment will be destroyed, and it is impossible to predict the result. Possibly the pest of mosquitos is more endurable than the conditions that would prevail.

Of that realm of living beings which is revealed only through high magnifying powers, or is dimly seen by the unassisted eye, including the germs of many virulent diseases, and others beneficent in their activity, little is really known. From the reports of discoveries, and of the cultures of these germs, their antitoxin destroyers, and the merciless experimentation of physicians, it would be concluded that the subject had been mastered. Yet constantly the most positive theories are shown to be dreams, and the truth is obscured by a vast accumulation of rubbish. This is known, that the air, water and food, all things are thickly sown with germs, some deleterious, others beneficial. So great is their number, so hardy their vitality, that it is almost impossible to completely sterilize any substance. Whenever these find nourishing soil and right conditions they multiply with amazing rapidity. It may be germs harmless or beneficial, or those baleful in results, depending on the environment furnished. Of the combat constantly carried on by the swarming myriads of this unseen world, more relentless than that of the jungle, no one knows, and hence blind, haphazard interference might promote the growth of the virulent forms at the expense of the beneficial.

J. A. Gash: Q. What are elementaries? What planetaries? What is the astral body?

A. These are all terms constantly used by Theosophists, and are elusive of definition, probably because they represent nothing but a chimera of the brain, which shifts into forms new and strange with every one who professes to believe in that cult.

The Century Dictionary defines the astral body as "a living form composed of astral fluid; a ghost, wraith or double." We now inquire what is astral fluid? The answer is "od, biogen." What is biogen? "Hypothetical soul stuff!" The astral body is then an imaginary ghost made of "hypothetical soul stuff!"

According to the fancy of those who accept the doctrine, the real spirit at the death of the physical body is removed from earthly life until it again enters it by being reincarnated. But there is a reflection, a sort of ghastly shadow remaining, which draws from the body sufficient elements before it departs, to form an astral shell, or body, in which it for a time continues to exist and may appear. Only for a time, for it is doomed to disintegrate and cease to exist. This is the state of all the spirits who converse with mankind. They are not the spirits we think, only their astral shells! Planetary spirits are these same shells, only they have wandered far from their respective planetary homes. They are liable to evaporate before they return.

Such is the doctrine which proposes to substitute itself for Spiritualism! Such is the doctrine built on fancy and supported by the imagination which arrogates superiority over the demonstrated knowledge of spirit existence furnished by the new science of life here and hereafter.

J. G., Minneapolis: Q. When attending materializations, my spirit friends come, should they be able to understand me when I address them in the language of the foreign country where they were born and died, and should they not reply to me in the same?

A. A "materialized" spirit should be able to converse in the language it used in earth life, and to understand such language when addressed. If they cannot, it is indisputable evidence that they are not those whom they claim to be. It is deception on the part of the medium, or of the spirits.

A. C. Fisher: Q. It is said all men are born equal. If so, how explain the great disparity of capabilities, as between the splendid singer and one who has no voice, or musical faculty? Who is responsible for the deficiency?

A. The declaration does not mean as this correspondent understands. It is not that all men are alike, with the same powers of mind and capabilities of body, but they are equal in their rights, have equal heirship in nature's heritage of air, water, earth and her stored wealth and energy. In these political rights the beggar was equal to the king. One may have muscles trained to physical exertion, another a keen and reflective mind. One may have perfect vocal organs, another be unable to give a musical note. Who is responsible? Not the individual, for no one made themselves. They would, had they been given a choice, chosen differently. Not the parents, or grandparents, for they were under the necessities of hereditary from time immemorial. As the resultant of an infinite series of causes, reaching their end with many wrecks and failures, instead of speculating in an attempt to shift responsibility from ourselves, we should be thankful that we are not more deficient. We are confronted by the knowledge that there is perfect compensation. If we fail in one direction we are endowed with capabilities for success in another. If the vocal organs do not respond with musical notes, the hand is skilled with the touch of an artist; if the mathematical faculties are weak, perhaps the subtle faculties of imagination clothes nature with the garb of poesy. Each has his or her gifts, and should not repine because they are not as others, but gladly and cheerfully make the most of that which is theirs.

ASPHODEL BLOOMS AND OTHER OFFERINGS

BY

EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume, containing a selection of Poems by this gifted author, is now ready for delivery. Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle has been too long before the public as a writer of verse of exquisite thought and measure to require more than an announcement of this her latest work. It contains 285 pages, beautifully printed on elegant paper, with six full page engravings, including one of the author; is finely bound and embossed. It is a gift book that will please. Every Spiritualist in the land should have it.

THE TWIN CITIES.

Notes of the Mediums and Workers.

I am making a canvass among the speakers and mediums of these two cities, and so far as I have gone there is but one decision among them. With joyful expression they proclaim, "We are happy in doing our work, for the angels are always around to assist us when required."

Mrs. Tryon has a hall on Seventh street, where she holds forth twice on each Sunday to fairly good houses. She gives reading through the week to many orthodox Christians, who are earnestly inquiring for their loved ones that have crossed the river of death. She has a happy way of calling them back to these loved ones on the earth. While in the convention Mrs. Tryon was called on to ordain three ladies to preach the doctrines of Spiritualism. She was calm and deliberate, but intensely enthused while engaged in the ordination.

There is a growing interest in these two cities in the Morris Pratt Institute; something over one hundred dollars was subscribed in a very short time. I heard Mrs. McKay say that she intended to take a course of instructions in that college in order to prepare herself for a speaker. She is a fine inspirational medium, but her early education was neglected. She and her worthy husband are readers of The Progressive Thinker; they recommend it to all inquiring minds.

Mrs. McCollum, also of St. Paul, is a devoted reader of the paper. She is a fine test medium, and the outlook for her is very good.

Mr. Edwards renewed his subscription for The Progressive Thinker and speaks very highly of it. He has wealth and has already put his name down for fifty dollars to aid the Pratt Institute.

Capt. Edward Simonton has renewed for The Progressive Thinker and its premium books. He has a strong mind, is college bred, a good lawyer and is devoted to the materializing and physical phases of Spiritualism. The Captain is a co-worker in the cause and his influence goes a long way in calling the attention of the well-to-do class, for he mingles much with them.

Mr. and Mrs. Whitwell, Mr. and Mrs. Sauers are the leading Spiritualists of St. Paul. They are old-time workers, and much devoted to the cause.

Mr. M. T. C. Flower—let us make our bow to him, before going any farther. His age, his early work and his devotion to the cause entitles this venerable hero to the highest respect of all who know him. The Progressive Thinker is his Bible and instructor to the higher life. His devoted wife, who is now in spirit life, is his guardian angel. She is overlooking the construction of his new home that will be completed on the very day that he leaves the earth life.

Miss Harrison is a young but a very bright medium. If she could take a year's instruction in the Pratt Institute she would be better prepared to do a good work.

There are other mediums in St. Paul that I have not had time to call on, but I hear that they are sanguine and full of hope for the future for our philosophy.

Mrs. Pruden is entitled to much praise for the good work she has accomplished in the twin cities. She is not at home. She has been called away to attend a sister that is very ill. Mrs. Pruden is a trance speaker, her lectures are ablaze with eloquence.

The children's lyceum has found in Mrs. Pruden a leader of much ability.

Ah, yes, there is Mrs. Tolent, a promising medium and speaker. I have not seen her for some time. They subscribe for The Progressive Thinker and speak of it in high praise.

Mr. Norman and Mr. Winans are blessed with gifts of a very high order. Mr. Norman has a gift that took him ten long years to obtain. I can explain it best by telling what he gets, and how he gets it. He has a closet with only one door to it. The door is thrown open and a black curtain placed before it. The canvas for a large portrait is placed upright behind the curtain. No one is within the closet. In the adjoining room are seated twenty-five people, all facing the closet door. The lights are put out and darkness is supreme. The music-box plays its sweetest melodies. The paints are enclosed within the closet, but no brushes of any kind are required, the spirits furnish them free of all cost. The work goes on in silence for just twenty minutes when the curtain is removed, when lo! the most lovely portrait of a little boy stands revealed. A halo of light surrounded it that made it appear like the Goddess of Liberty touched by the divine hand of God.

Last Saturday night I was invited to attend one of Norman and Winans' developing circles; there were thirty people in attendance, besides the spirits who were constantly at work with such a power that I could scarcely undure it. Mr. Norman and Mr. Winans were both in the room with us. We could see and hear them all the time. Different voices were heard talking through the trumpet. At least twenty-five handkerchiefs were handed Mr. Norman, and as fast as he could dampen them and hand them to little Maude (the spirit in the cabinet), a spirit picture was drawn for each owner of the handkerchiefs. Some of the pictures were recognized; others were not. These twenty-five likenesses were all produced in less than 25 minutes. Little Maude seemed to know who each handkerchief belonged to, for she was constantly engaged in conversing with the owners.

I saw a number of slates folded up in black cloth, and when exhibited they had portraits and different colored writing on them.

Mrs. Shaft, of Minneapolis, is a fine medium and a good speaker. She is well pleased with your premium book.

My next call was on Mrs. N. M. Hardy, who is one of the best mediums in these two cities. She and her beautiful daughter are Southern ladies. I refer briefly to one of her seances for physical manifestations. She takes her seat in the cabinet under test conditions. After a few words of greeting from the cabinet controls and more songs of harmony, my name was called. I was placed in position to hear who it was that called. I heard: "Papa, I am Ella, your long-absent daughter, who has called to see you." A mutual greeting followed, with many caresses, and sweet kisses were heard by many in the room. Then commenced the process of manufacturing silk out of some substance in the air. It had a soft, lovely texture and the aroma partook of the spices of heaven. The room was filled with it. I was completely enveloped with this silk, and the hands that did the work were those of my darling Ella who passed out of this life nearly forty years ago.

Many who doubt the truths of our modern philosophy go away from Mrs. Hardy's and other mediums convinced that they have met their loved ones from the other shore of eternity. Death levels the whole of humanity, while the living soul returns to proclaim the glad tidings that the soul never dies.

ECHOES FROM ENGLAND.

By Alfred Kitson, Secretary of the B. S. L. U.

Once more I essay to pen you a few lines concerning the movement here in England. Although the broad Atlantic rolls between us there is a cord of magnetic sympathy that binds our hopes and aspirations together, and causes our hearts to warm towards each other, thus prophesying the Brotherhood of Man and the Fatherhood of God.

I may say that I am deeply interested in all that relates to the welfare of the children, and my life and energies are devoted to their welfare, as will be apparent from a perusal of the article appearing in The Spiritualist, a marked copy of which I mailed you.

I have noted with pleasure your several appeals in The Progressive Thinker for more attention to be devoted to the children belonging to the American Spiritualists. I trust you will not be allowed to appeal in vain. It is of no small moment where our children go on the Sunday. In my opinion those parents who send their children to the orthodox Sunday school to be taught—well, that which is not true, should refrain from singing such hymns as "Hand in Hand with the Angels," until they make up their minds not to leave their children behind. Suffer little children to walk with them too, for of such is the kingdom of heaven. Are they of so little consequence that they can be left to care for themselves? Is their future welfare in all that affects their moral and spiritual natures of no importance to their parental hearts? Have they no desire to save them from the keen disappointment they themselves experienced on learning the facts and teachings of Spiritualism. The future of Spiritualism largely depends on how we educate the children. Feed them on the husks of orthodoxy and their mental conceptions and attitude will partake of the same unsatisfactory nature. Feed them on grain and grain will grow from what they sow, and fruitful harvest yield.

The Children's Progressive Lyceum movement in England continues to make satisfactory headway. A few more years and all the societies will have lyceums attached to them. Of the 53 societies affiliated with the National Spiritualist Union, 47 of them have lyceums. And out of the 33 societies who are affiliated with the Yorkshire Union, 24 of them have lyceums. True of the above societies are members of both bodies. But the above figures are significant of the growth of the Lyceum movement.

The Lyceum Union has lately issued a four-fold pledge book, against intoxicants, tobacco, gambling and swearing—all of them insidious vices, which are desire to save our children from contracting, and win those who have become addicted to them back to sobriety and self-respect.

There are danger posts to warn cyclists of dangerous hills and the skaters of thin ice—why not erect danger signals along life's pathway to warn the young wayfarer of the dangers he will meet? Some temperaments are more easily influenced to enter the paths that lead to ruin, and the loss of self-respect. These should have our special care and should be fortified with a pledge to lean upon till they have grown strong enough to resist the tempter. And so, we not only desire to instruct our rising generations in the facts, morality and philosophy of Spiritualism, but help them to grow up sober, self-respecting men and women.

The executive of the B. S. L. U. visited Acrington on Feb. 15, 16 and 17. The first and last dates were devoted to business connected with the Union. The 16th was a veritable red letter day. There are four Spiritualist societies in the town, each of which has a lyceum. These combined and engaged the large town hall, said to hold 3,000 people. The combined lyceums held an open session in the morning to which the Spiritualists and public were invited, and interested visitors flocked to listen to, and watch the children in open session. The press being represented. The hall was too small to accommodate all the lyceumists, so that only the females could go through the marching and callsthenic evolutions. The sight was grand and impressive. Members from each lyceum contributed their quota to the success of the programme.

Propagaiida meetings were held in the afternoon and evening, addressed by Messrs. S. S. Chiswell (chairman), J. Clarke, and the writer. Special hymn sheets were used, and freely distributed among the audience. The singing was hearty and soul felt, ably led by an efficient choir, accompanied with a good selection of string and reed instruments. The press gave a three-column report of the day's proceedings.

An indication of the growth and vitality of the movement may be derived from the year's sales of Union's goods, as certified by the auditors. They are as follows: Lyceum Manuals, 1477 copies; Outlines of Spiritualism, 151 copies; Physical exercises, 858 copies; Spiritual Songsters, 285 copies; Is the Bible Opposed to Spiritualism? 93 copies; Reminiscences by Mr. Alfred Smedley, 792 copies.

The cause of Spiritualism generally is making steady progress. The various unions and federations are all tending to bind and consolidate our forces for more effective service.

The Yorkshire Union of Spiritualists has outgrown its constitution once more, and has lately adopted a new one of ampler capacity. It has an auxiliary association of speakers, known as the speakers' committee, which is allowed a constitution for its own government. Its objects are: The promotion, development and improvement of platform speakers. And up to the present it has done good work in promoting study and literary culture amongst the speakers.

Lancashire, too, has its Mediums' Union, which is independent of any other organization. Still its objects are similar to the above. Both of them will receive the moral support and hearty good wishes for their success.

The Spiritualists' National Union continues to win adherents, and is prosecuting its propaganda: missionary meetings in the various counties. Efforts are being made to raise 10,000 shillings for propaganda, and other purposes.

Since writing you last the publication of the Keystone, Sunderland, has been suspended. It was a bright, up-to-date monthly, and was well liked by its subscribers.

Mr. J. J. Morse, the well known, and highly respected editor and publisher of the Lyceum Banner and Spiritual Review, is shortly to leave us, accompanied by Mrs. and Miss Morse, for Australia, to fill a twelve months' engagement with the Melbourne Society. Miss Morse has developed fine psychic powers, and no doubt will exercise them during their tour. They will probably call on the American Spiritualists on their return journey, and no doubt receive a warm welcome in renewing their former ties of friendship.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Spiritualism in Okanagan Valley.

Vernon, as some of your readers may know, is a small town of about 800 inhabitants, in the beautiful Okanagan Valley, in British Columbia.

The circle of Spiritualists numbers about fifteen, and we are doing what we consider exceedingly well, considering that we are such a very young camp.

We held meetings for about two months last spring, but broke up in the summer owing to sickness, commencing our meetings again last October; and in the short period since that time have received many manifestations.

Our medium is a young girl of fifteen years, who has joined our meetings only the last three months. Before that time she was not a believer in Spiritualism, although her hand had been controlled sufficiently to use the psychograph. She said she did not know who was making her hand move, but she did not believe there were such beings as spirits. Her mother was a devout Methodist, but relented considerably before she died. Her father is one of our leading Spiritualists.

About a week after her mother's death she had a vision in which her mother, propped up in bed, and her departed sister, were shown to her. This vision convinced her of the errors of her religious belief, and of the truth of her father's doctrine. She then centered her mind on becoming a medium, and has developed to such an extent that she is at present clairvoyant, clairaudient, an automatic writer, and her feet can be and are controlled so as to enable her to execute the most intricate step dances. Not being a trance medium, she is able to converse with the spirits around her, and to speak with those in the circle.

We had a visit from Madam Blavatsky, December 8th last. Some of your more advanced Spiritualists may wonder why she came to a small circle like ours instead of the larger ones in the East. I will explain the reasons she gave for coming to us; she, being such a strong spirit, was specially requested to come and develop a young girl in our circle, who, though very sensitive, had a will so strong that some of our guides could not break through it. Though she has been coming quite regularly, she has not succeeded as well as might be expected; but with a few more seances we hope to have everything satisfactory.

Many questions have been asked from time to time, and all have been answered to our satisfaction.

One night, on returning from a meeting held at a friend's house, our medium witnessed a most beautiful sight. It was repeated the following week; and I will here describe it to the best of my ability, though no words are capable of expressing the splendor of the sight. Madam Blavatsky was in the lead with a large light, the others following with many colored lights and dressed in garments of many shades. They ascended in a circle, going round and round, sending flashes of light back to the earth in their upward flight. They also waved their hands and shouted good-bye to the medium and her father. The latter could not see them, but could hear their shouts of farewell.

On the 8th of January we had a visit from Queen Victoria and Prince Albert. The Queen sat on a round white velvet throne, and was dressed in a loose white robe trimmed with silver braid. Prince Albert was standing by her side, and they were accompanied by two ladies-in-waiting, one of whom had died a short time before the Queen. This visit was by request.

Our medium had Jesus of Nazareth reflected to her, and the following is a description of the sight:

At first there seemed to be a tunnel about the width of the eyes at the beginning and growing larger as it extended into the skies, and its termination appeared to be miles distant, and of great circumference. This, we were told later, was a spirit telescope. The lenses were shown to the medium and seemed to be about four inches thick. In the large space at the termination of the telescope there appeared at first a white pony with gold trappings. As the medium's eyes grew accustomed to the silvery clouds overhanging the reflected space, there appeared a man sitting on the horse, and a large crowd was assembled around him. His appearance was very similar to the description usually given by ministers of the gospel. His hair, which hung in waves to his shoulders, was of a brown shade, as were also his beard and eyes. His nose was of a Grecian style, and his forehead high and slightly slanting. He wore a plain gold crown, and his white gown was embroidered with gold and red. His sash of gold and red passed over his right shoulder to his left side, and hung to the ground. His sandals were decorated with gold strappings.

What we need here is some good speakers to hold public meetings, but we who are believers are all limited in this world's goods and cannot raise the money to procure the much-needed help.

Hoping you will give this space in your valuable paper, I am yours in the good cause. M. M. S.

THE ROSE TREE IN HEAVEN.

In heaven's mansion, I pray you,
Plant a fragrant rose so true,
To keep all life's record of me,
Both the good and bad I do.

May its blossoms be purest white;
Its leaves be eternal green,
And there in that heavenly light,
May it ever bloom serene.

When kindly deeds of good I do,
Oh, may it bloom in gladness,
When paths of evil I pursue,
May thorns pierce through in sadness.

May there blossom many roses,
Within that heavenly sphere,
And where'er a thorn reposes,
Loving angels drop a tear.

From houses beyond, dear friends, each day,
Look on with your starry eyes,
Show me the truer, better way,
Teach me the truth to prize.

All loving words and kindly deeds,
Oh, help me to understand,
Are little precious, priceless seeds,
That bloom in the spirit land.

BEYOND THE VAIL

A Sequel to "Rending the Vail."

The two volumes together as a record of practically obtained facts demonstrating the claims of Modern Spiritualism as to post mortal survival, are unique and overwhelming.

Every communication is from a full materialized spirit form, in good light, and either spoken audibly or written in full view by the form. There is not an automatic or trance message in the book.

It is illustrated by several engravings, the originals of which were drawn in the presence of the circle by a full form materialized spirit artist.

BEYOND THE VAIL is, as a rule, the experiences of spirits in both worlds—their own account of their lives on earth and their progress after death to their present condition of freedom from earth conditions. The narratives are intensely interesting, instructive and often highly dramatic.

Coincident with these are the profoundly philosophical comments of the controlling spirits of the seances. Prof. William Denton, Thomas Paine, Dr. W. H. Reed and others covering, law, medicine, jurisprudence, theology and metaphysics. There are no books in existence of like character or of higher authority. Price, by mail, $1.75.

THE BEAUTIFUL SOUVENIR VOLUME,

By A. LEAH UNDERHILL,
(Of the Fox Family.)

The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism.

Thirty-three chapters, 477 pages, superbly printed, and bound in colors and gold, 15 illustrations, 5 steel engraved portraits of the celebrated Fox Family, a full page engraving of the old house at Hydesville, which to this day, by the act of its wealthy and respected owner, Artemas Hyde, Esq., bears the inscription, "Here Spiritualism Originated in 1848."

A complete history of the initiation of the movement known as Modern Spiritualism, from the epochal period which dates from March 31, 1848. Since that day, starting from a small country village in western New York, Spiritualism has made its way against tremendous obstacles around the civilized globe.

Only a limited number of copies of this rare book, now out of print, are to be had, and these can be obtained only at this office. Those who remit at once will receive a copy, post paid, at the GREATLY REDUCED PRICE OF $1.

Note.—By failure in 1885 to complete contract with the author, a large portion of the edition was left unbound, and so remained for a number of years, when they were rescued and bound at additional cost, hence this valuable contribution to the cause of Spiritualism was not properly presented to the Spiritualistic public, and a host of investigators have not had the opportunity of securing a copy until the present time. Do not fail to send for a copy at once. J. R. FRANCIS,

"THE UNKNOWN"

—BY—

CAMILLE FLAMMARION.

"The Unknown" created a marked sensation in France when first published and can scarcely fail to arouse the greatest interest in this country. It is an eminent scientist's study of the phenomena of the spirit world. In touching upon the various physical manifestations the author cites many absolutely authenticated instances, and chapters of his book are as weirdly fascinating as the most fantastic of Poe's tales. It treats on incredulity, credulity, hallucinations, psychic action of one mind upon another, transmission of thought, suggestion, the world of dreams, cerebral physiology, psychic dreams, distinct sight in dreams, actual facts, premonitory dreams and divination of the future, etc. 487 pages, cloth bound. Price $2.00.

History of the CHRISTIAN RELIGION to the Year 200,

BY CHARLES V. WAITE, A. M.

Fifth Edition—Revised, with Much Additional Matter in Appendix

A standard and reliable history of the earlier period of the church, giving facts that are not found in the so-called histories written by churchmen. This latest edition has been carefully and thoroughly revised, and it is a reliable magazine of facts, such as the honest inquirer wants. It opens up to the investigator and student a wide field of historical research in matters of fact wholly ignored by the regular church historians, and throws a bright glare of light on points heretofore carefully shrouded in darkness.

The Noted Chronist,

Is Now Located at

No. 1087 Boylston street, Boston, Mass., where he will be pleased to meet all who may call between the hours of 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. The wonderful work in healing the sick that Dr. Watkins is accomplishing is indeed most astounding; his patients live to testify to his wonderful powers as a healer. For the last year his work has been most wonderful. He says himself that his cures this year have been more than ever before in numbers, as he confined himself to only 30 new patients a month. Dr. Watkins attends personally to each case, and therefore he can do better work than if he had a great many assistants; no staff of visible helpers are in his office to annoy and suggest this and that. He knows what is the trouble with each patient, and knows the right specific to give. He prepares and puts up all of his medicine, and has no help in his medical treatments that is visible help. Write him to-day, and by return mail you will receive the diagnose. No charge made for diagnosing your case. Send age, sex and leading symptom.

HELL IS ALL RIGHT.

One Church Where the Word Is Not Obsolete.

If we want to know "how the cat jumps" we must keep within hearing and seeing distance of the "cat," so if we want to know how far a church has progressed, we must observe the preacher, for the style of the minister is an index to the intellectual and spiritual status of the congregation to which he ministers, particularly to the more wealthy portion of them. His sermons are a sort of mirror in which we can behold the occult countenances of the people.

In most cases the pulpit is taught more by the pews than the pews by the pulpit. In fact the paymaster is boss over the man who works for pay, whether he be in the vineyard of the Lord, the wine-press of man, or the distillery of the Devil. But the intellectual, well-informed preacher is entitled to sympathy; "he cannot dig and to beg he is ashamed," and he is compelled to work at his allotted task, for which in the days of his youthful ignorance he had been fitted—and thereby unfitted for any useful occupation.

In most cases he has a wife and family dependent upon him, and for their sakes he may be compelled to sacrifice truth on the altar of ignorance. Too often the purse-proud ignoramus or vulgarian tyrannizes over his sensibility and culture, and a heart which desires to be sincere is unwillingly pressed in the embraces of deception and slang.

In this century and country preaching is a poor trade and will continue to be so until the preacher gets liberty to read and study in any field he pleases, and then inform his congregation on Sundays of the knowledge he had acquired "with none to molest or make him afraid." If I could make my voice heard in the churches, I should plead for the "open door" in religion—I should cry "give the men liberty or give them death," for mental subjugation is the worst kind of slavery.

I recently attended the Sunday morning services in an M. E. city church, and was surprised to hear the preacher refer, in his sermon, to "Hell;" he didn't "mouth it" or apologize for using a word which has long since been voted as vulgar by refined people, but spoke it out as if to please some one, or more, in the congregation. I had been used to hearing that word when I was a boy, and was often terrified by the word-pictures which illustrated that tropical climate. This minister, however, was not quite as vehement as those old-time Methodist preachers, but his style and method of sensational "argument" was pretty much the same as theirs.

He used the word many times in his sermon, which much surprised me, as the members of the congregation seemed well dressed and I knew many of them to be respectable. When leaving the church after service I walked with a gentleman, a prominent member of the Methodist body. I said to him that I was rather surprised to hear, in the sermon, a word used which I thought had been tabood long since.

"What word was that?" enquired the gentleman.

"I refer to the word Hell," said I. "I haven't heard it before, in a sermon, for many years."

"Well," said he, smiling, "if you will attend the services here, in our church, you will hear it pretty often, I can tell you."

"The word is usually softened into Tophet," said I, "or it is referred to as 'the final abode of the wicked,' or the place where 'their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched,' but for a long time I have not heard a minister use the words 'Hell' or 'damnation'—indeed I thought such words were obsolete."

"Not with us," he replied, and added, "If you will attend our sermons regularly I can promise you a kindly welcome and then you will find out that Hell is all right."

I thanked him for the invitation and turned my steps homeward.

A Book on Mediumship.

"Mediumship and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle, is a work which should be read by every investigator, and especially by all who have an unselfish desire to make the most of their spiritual gifts.

To place the organization and management of circles and the development of mediumship on a scientific basis, so far as it may be done at this stage of our knowledge, is the evident purpose of the author. His extended experience as a medium, his wide observation in the field of phenomenal Spiritualism, his profound study of its philosophy, together with his literary attainments and unselfish desire to build up the cause to which he has given the best energies of his life, all fit him in an eminent degree for the task he has undertaken.

Mr. Tuttle well says: "The circle is the primary school for the study of spiritual facts. There under conditions which being known may be complied with, spirit friends may come in closer contact with mortals. * * The quality of mediumship developed depends largely on the circle, thus making it obligatory on those interested to become thoroughly versed on the subject."

Very properly the home circle receives early and thoughtful attention: "Of all methods of study and investigation the home circle is preferable. The members know and have confidence in each other, and the disturbing elements of distrust, hate or fear do not enter. If there is one place in all the world where the spirits are pleased to come, it is to the sacred hearth, and the table around which they once gathered."

Reduced to their briefest form the following suggestions are given for the guidance of beginners, and for all who would improve the character of the circles they control:

1. Form a circle of from four to eight persons, at least two of negative, passive temperament, and preferably of the female sex, the rest of a more positive type. Sit positive and negative alternately, secure against disturbance, in subdued light, round an uncovered table, the hands flat upon its surface, touching or not as may be convenient.

2. Sing or play gentle, inspiring songs, engage in cheerful but not frivolous conversation, avoid dispute or argument, maintain a prayerful, but not over-anxious spirit, yield not to intense grief, or display unreasonable skepticism.

3. Hold circles at stated times, not oftener than twice a week, be regular in attendance, prompt in beginning, patient while waiting for manifestations, and tranquil when they come.

4. Limit the unsuccessful circle to one hour or less, and in no case allow a circle to be protracted to exhaustion. It may be well to appoint a leader to keep everything in working order, to head off irrelevant questions, and to act as adviser.

The above suggestions, presented without their contexts, are far from satisfactory, and I ask space for one entire paragraph:

"The principal benefit of music, at the commencement of a seance, is to harmonize and unite the minds of the members and prevent rambling conversation, which distracts and confuses. There should be no feeling of restraint, nor should idle gossip or conversation be indulged in. There should be a full realization of the momentous fact that spirits of those mourned as dead are present, and that the hour and place are made holy by their coming. There should be love and kindness in every heart, and no word but of gentle affection spoken. A circle is not an idle hour for diversion, but an opportunity of rare value, and if there is one place more sacred than another, it is the table where communion is held with the departed."

Circles organized and conducted in the manner, and in the spirit indicated above, would give results highly satisfactory to intelligent Spiritualists, and would attract honest, refined skeptics, now, alas, frequently repelled by "manifestations" of both mortals and spirits, but little above the plane of a "cheap show."

All of the important phases of mediumship, and many closely related subjects, receive attention. To improve mediumship along all lines is an aim worthy of any author, and it seems to me that Spiritualists would do well to encourage the wide circulation of his work. A wider and deeper knowledge of the laws and conditions governing intercourse with the spirit world would give a new impetus to the cause nearest our hearts, depending as it does upon the character of the evidence we can furnish a doubting world.

SANFORD NILES.

Minneapolis, Minn.

Awful Disease, Cancer of the Lip.

The most frequent location of terrible disease in the male caused from the constant irritation produced by smoking or chewing tobacco. Dr. Bye, the Specialist on the Treatment of Cancer, Kansas City, Mo., advises early treatment in such cases, as most cases terminate fatally after the lymphatic glands become envolved under the chin. Mr. N. H. Henderson, of Wilsey, Kansas, was recently cured of a very bad cancer of the lip by the Combination Oils. Persons afflicted with this disease should write the Doctor for an Illustrated Book on the treatment of Cancer and Malignant Diseases. Address Dr. W. O. Bye, 9th and Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

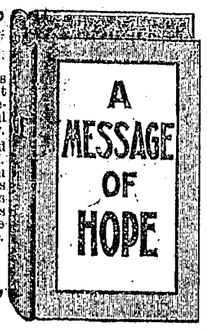
HEALTH RESTORED



The entire country is astonished at the wonderful cures perfected through the method originated by Dr. J. M. Peebles, the Grand Old Man of Battle Creek, Mich. This science is a subtle force in nature combined with magnetic medicines, and called by the eminent doctor,

Psychic Science

It has been termed the greatest pain reliever ever known. In a perfectly natural manner it builds up the system and restores health. It makes no difference how serious or hopeless the case may seem, there is positive hope in this grand science. It has restored the deaf, blind and lame, cured the paralytic, and those suffering from Bright's Disease, Consumption, Stomach Trouble, Catarrh, Nervous Debility, Neuralgia, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Female Troubles, as well as men and women addicted to the liquor, morphine and other vile habits.

Geo. H. Weeks, of Cleveland, Ohio, sends heartfelt thanks for restoration to health after suffering from nervous prostration and insomnia for years; he says he now enjoys health and restful sleep every night. Mrs. J. A. Rust, of Itasca, Minn., cured of uric acid poisoning in two month's treatment writes: "I am better than in years, and each day brings new health and strength. I will refer all ailing ones to you." Mary A. Earl, Crawford, Mich., suffering from pronounced female difficulties and kidney disease, says: "I took your treatment three months and it has been a success in my case. I am indeed grateful to you for my recovery." C. E. Davis, Woodman, N. H., who suffered all the miseries of a dyspeptic, writes that as the result of Dr. Peebles' treatment, he had not missed a meal since last March. D. W. Bridgman, of Del Norte, Col., writing Sept. 30, after three months' course: "When I began treatment with Dr. Peebles' Institute of Health I was a cripple, unable to walk but little with a cane. Now I am able to walk with ease. Some days ten or fifteen miles. My general health is excellent. I can hardly find words to express my gratitude, as previously I had tried everything I could hear of and got no relief. Mrs. Isaac Varney, Dover, N. H., a sufferer of spinal trouble and nerve exhaustion, writes the world. Solomon Fried, of Vanderbilt, California, cured of neuralgia and catarrh, says: "I am well and a thousand times obliged to you."

written by Dr. J. M. Peebles, in a plain and concise manner, tells you exactly how and where you can gain perfect health; in fact, it gives you the key to the grandest knowledge known to man. Remember, this book costs you nothing, and it reveals wonderful secrets and makes the impossibilities of yesterday realities of to-day.

ABSOLUTELY FREE Send your name and address and leading symptoms to Dr. J. M. Peebles and his associates and you will receive full diagnosis without any cost whatever, as well as this grand book, which is beautifully illustrated, rich in all its details, containing matter which will be a revelation to you. PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

Passed to spirit life, from Verne, Mich., March 8, 1902, Alvin Tracy Crosby, aged 67 years. He was a convert to Spiritualism in 1852; a veteran of the Civil War; a dear brother of the writer, with whom he fought for three long, weary years to preserve this glorious Union. He leaves a widow who sincerely mourns her loss.

ALBERT CROSBY.

Flushing, Mich.

Henry Goodcell passed to the higher life from his home in San Bernadino, Cal., March 11, 1902, aged 79. He was a man of crystal-clear sincerity and integrity of character, through which ran a deep undercurrent of esthetic taste and feeling. For many years he has been a believer in the spiritual philosophy, and being mediumistic, has been fully convinced that he enjoyed communion with loved ones gone before. By his dying request, the writer officiated at his funeral which was held March 13, from his late residence, under the auspices of the San Bernardino Society of Pioneers, and was largely attended.

ELLA WILSON MARCHANT.

Mrs. Susan Wakeman passed to spirit life, Feb. 26, 1902 at Mendon, Mich., She has been a firm believer in Spiritualism for forty years. Funeral services were conducted by F. M. Aunks.

C——.

Passed to the higher life, March 7, 1902, Mrs. Mary Kase, at the ripe age of 88 years. Mrs. Kase was the wife of the late Simon P. Kase. No doubt every Spiritualist is familiar with the name.

Mrs. Kase has been a Spiritualist since the early days of the Fox sisters, and has made many sacrifices for this great truth; she was ever kind to the mediums and humanity at large and many times her generous impulses and sympathy were called into action.

"Mother Kase," as she loved to be called, had charity for any misgivings in another. Strange as it may seem, for several months prior to her transition, she lived a lonely life, everyone drifted out and away from her. Just a short time before her flight to the spirit realms, friends came into her home to cheer and comfort her—she seemed so happy with her new found friends, they were so kind to her, but she could no longer remain in her earthly abode. She was called to her bright home, made so by her good deeds done while in the earthly form.

The funeral services were held at her late residence, 1601 N. 15th street, Philadelphia. The air was laden with the perfume of sweet flowers.

Remarks were made by Mr. Hugh R. Moore, Mr. Samuel Wheeler and Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn, and were appropriate and befitting the occasion. Songs she loved were sung by those she had often listened to while in her earthly home.

The writer hopes that she will find perennial peace, joy and love to the fulness, and some day come and exclaim to us, Well done! M. H.

Esoteric Lessons.

An Argument Against Physical Causation.

The object of this book, considered a most excellent one by some, is to establish what is commonly regarded as purely physical health upon a purely psychical basis; to show that health is knowledge, wisdom, insight; that men suffer from so-called purely corporeal disease only because they form erroneous judgment; also, to show that the fundamental erroneous judgment is, that there is any such thing in the universe as physical causation, a belief in which lends both directly and indirectly to disease. Often directly in case of the individual, but more commonly indirectly as a race-belief held throughout the known history of mankind. This work is by Sarah Stanley Grimke. Price $1.50.

In the World Celestial

Is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance mediums, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A. Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer. This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement. Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold, and has a full page portrait of the angel heroine, from a spirit painting. Price, $1.00.

THE WOMAN'S BIBLE.

PART I.--The Pentateuch.

Comments on Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy, by Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Lillie Devereux Blake, Rev. Phebe Hanaford, Clara Bewick Colby, Ellen Battelle Dietrick, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, Ursula N. Gestefeld, and Francis E Barr.

THE WOMAN'S BIBLE.--PART II.

Judges, Kings, Prophets and Apostles. Comments on the Old and New Testaments, from Joshua to Revelation. The comments are keen, bright, spicy, full of wit, the work of radical thinkers who are not ignorant of the higher criticism. There is not a dull page in either of these books, but each is a galaxy of the bright minds of the day and throw a new light on the Bible teachings relating to woman. Price of each, paper, 50 cents.

SCIENTIFIC PROOF OF SPIRITUALISM

Clear and Forcible Presentation of the Subject, That May Be Studied with Profit.

By A. J. Weaver, of Old Orchard, Maine.

This is a phrase which is on the tongue of every Spiritualist. What is its meaning, and how does "scientific proof" differ from other proof? Why do we use the word scientific? Why not say Spiritualism is proven, and let it rest there?

A skeptic remarked to me, You say spirit return is proven. Then why is it doubted by anybody? The very fact that it is doubted shows that it is not proven. Every rational being through all the world accepts the assertion that twice three are six, but this is not true with Spiritualism. Is not the fact that spirit return is not believed by many who investigate, conclusive evidence that it has not really been proven?"

To answer this question and to try to define what is meant by "scientific proof" is the object of this article. There are in the intellectual world three kinds of proof by which truth is tested. These are the mathematical, the syllogistic or deductive, and the scientific or inductive.

Mathematical proof is absolute and infallible. Nobody doubts it. There is no chance for reason to disagree or deny. The proposition that "the three angles of a triangle are equal to two right angles" has never been questioned by any rational mind who examines the proof. That "twice two are four" is a fact which has been accepted and never doubted in all countries, among all races, since man has become a rational being. Out of this kind of proof has grown the saying that "figures won't lie." In mathematical proof there is no increase or decrease of proof. It is eternally fixed and changeless.

The proof of spirit return is not of this kind; because if it was everybody who investigates the phenomena would be convinced. Furthermore, no intelligent Spiritualist ever claims that it is proven mathematically like a problem in algebra or a proposition in conic sections. Alfred Russel Wallace says it is "scientifically proven," but he never says it is mathematically proven.

The next kind of proof in use to test truth is syllogistic proof which is known in logic as deductive reasoning. As an example of this I will take the following syllogism:

All animals have life.
A horse is an animal.
Therefore a horse has life.

This kind of reasoning, like the mathematical, allows no doubt or uncertainty; it is infallible, if the syllogism is made so as not to violate any of the six rules of deductive logic. I might say:

A horse is an animal.
A bird is an animal.
Therefore a horse is a bird.

This is false reasoning, because Rule III. is violated. But if I say:

All animals that crawl are inferior to men.
Worms are animals that crawl.
Therefore worms are inferior to men, it violates none of the six rules of the syllogism and is therefore true. It is not only true but nobody can question the truth. It is as certain as the proof of a proposition in Euclid. If either of the premises is false the conclusion will be false of course, but the reasoning itself is infallible and therefore all the world accepts it.

But spirit return does not rest on this kind of proof, and no intelligent Spiritualist ever pretends it does. If it did I could put the proof on a black-board before an assembly of skeptics and convince every one that the messages we get are from the spirit realm.

The third kind of reasoning by which truth is found is called the inductive. It means reasoning from facts which are gathered from observation and experiment, to find out the causes of those facts. This is called the scientific mode of reasoning, because it is used by scientists. It is the kind of reasoning which has always been used in the common affairs of men; if a man was murdered it was the kind used to find out who did it; if a house caught fire, to find out how the fire started. About 600 years ago in Europe some thinking men like Roger Bacon began to apply this method of reasoning to finding out things in nature; why objects in the air would fall to the earth; why the sun rose and set; why it was lower in the heavens in winter than in summer; what caused the rainbow and the tides, the earthquake and the thunder, which phenomena had always been attributed to the special act of God.

In this kind of reasoning the first step is to gather all the facts and especially all the antecedent facts connected with a certain phenomenon in nature. Then a theory is invented to accounts of these facts. If the theory fails to account for all the facts it is thrown aside as not being the true one and another is sought for.

There were many theories, one following the other, invented to account for the revolution of the planets around the sun, but they were cast aside. The last but one was the vortex theory, which was that a vast whirlwind carried the planets in their orbits around the center of the solar system. But when it was observed that comets went through the track of the whirlwind and were not in the least affected, that theory was discarded. Then Sir Isaac Newton proposed what he called "the law of gravity." But the existence of such a law is only a theory. There is no infallible certainty about it. We cannot see it, nor taste it, nor touch it, nor smell it. There is only one reason for believing it exists, and that is, if it does exist it accounts for the well-known movements of the heavenly bodies, which no other theory has been able to account for. Yet sometime some other theory may take its place.

This is called inductive reasoning, and any one can see that it lacks the absolute and exact certainty which belongs to the other two modes of reasoning. Alfred Russel Wallace says "Spiritualism is as well demonstrated as the law of gravity," and Crookes, that it is "scientifically demonstrated." What these men mean is that the spirit theory will account for all the phenomena and no other theory will, and is therefore the most reasonable.

But some reader will say, "I know my spirit friends come to me as well as I know a tree stands in my front yard." I have no doubt of that. But do you know that a tree stands in your front yard and can you prove it? Not as you know and can prove that twice two are four—not with absolute certainty, because there are thousands of people as intelligent as you who will deny it. At the World's Fair in Chicago, talking with a Hindoo priest, I pointed to the lake. "Humph," he exclaimed, "there is no lake there. Your senses deceive you." Bishop Berkely wrote a book to prove there is no such thing as matter. Many eminent men agree with him. It is well known that Christian scientists take the same view.

Another reader will say, "I know that I get letters from my mother in spirit life as well as I know that I got a letter this morning from a friend on earth." But you do not know with mathematical certainty that the letter by this morning's mail came from the friend whose name was signed. Some one else might have written it and imitated his handwriting, for some cause unknown to you. It is not probable, but it is not impossible. In fact, outside of mathematics and deduction, there is very little, if anything, which we absolutely and infallibly know to be truth. Our knowledge is mostly relative and uncertain.

To make this matter very clear, let me carry the difference between deductive and inductive proof a step further. Deductive reasoning is to discover the effect when the cause is known. For example: Suppose we know that there is a force in the sun which tends to draw all bodies in space towards it. Suppose we also know that the earth is a body in space. Then it follows, as infallibly certain, that the earth would fly towards the sun unless prevented by some counteracting force. This is reasoning from cause to effect. This is deductive reasoning.

Inductive reasoning is just the opposite. It is reasoning from effect back to cause. It is finding out the causes when the effects are known. In Spiritualism we have effects, and the object of investigation is to find out the cause or causes. Hence its study comes under the head of inductive reasoning and can be under no other. All science comes under this head and only this, because its object is to start with effects, which are found in nature, and reason back and discover the causes.

All law cases, or nearly all, come under this head. The object is to find out causes. For example, a robbery has been committed. The officers at once set to work to trace the deed back to its source. A will is contested. The whole force of the trial is to get back to the maker of the will and find out if he was of sound mind and no undue influence was exerted upon him. Every doctor uses this method when he diagnoses a case.

Now this kind of reasoning differs from Mathematical and deductive in the fact that its proof is fallible. It is based on the honesty of the witnesses and their exemption from mistakes, and so is liable to be erroneous. Many an innocent person has been proven guilty by the law and evidence, and many a guilty one set free. Scientific proof is necessarily fallible or more or less imperfect, because it is based on the evidences of the senses, and the senses are unreliable to a greater or less degree. Hence true scientists are never dogmatic and make few assumptions. They present the evidence for what it is worth and let others judge, each for himself. Consequently a truth demonstrated scientifically the world may accept very slowly or not at all. The evidence which convinces one may not convince another. What is proof to one is not to another. It was 200 years before the Copernican theory of the universe was accepted by Europe. The evidences for evolution are accepted by some as proof, but rejected by others.

How different is all this from mathematical and syllogistic demonstration of a truth! The truths of geometry are fixed and final and infallible. No new evidence can overthrow or disturb them. They are crowned and enthroned and secure. Also a truth, demonstrated by deductive logic, stands the same through all ages. No additions can strengthen it. What is proof to one is proof to another.

We are now prepared to answer the skeptic when he said "The fact that Spiritualism is not accepted by all is proof that it has not been proven." It is proof that it has not been proven in the sense that "twice two are four" has been proven. But it has been proven in the scientific sense, that there is no other theory yet known which will account for all the phenomena. This proves it in the same sense that the existence of the law of gravity is proven.

THE BALM IN GILEAD.

A Lecturette by Hudson Tuttle.

We all come at last to the shore of the Sea of Infinite Silence, brooded over by darkness, without a star in the sky or a beacon gleaming through the fog thickly settling down over the darkness. We have bowed with agonized hearts when those we have loved best have passed into the cloud shadows. We have watched by their couch of pain during the terrible struggle, and with trembling hands wiped away the dew of mortal agony. We have watched the change, the pallor, the fleeting breath, and vainly sought a last whisper from lips of clay! Then all the world grew dark, and it seemed a sin for the sun to shine in the heavens, for the birds to sing, or any one to have joy in his heart.

By this dreary sea is there no hope? Is there not something beyond the shadows? When night gathers on this life, will not the sun rise on the morn of a to-morrow? Cannot science, philosophy or religion solve this question?

Invoke philosophy with her robes of snow, pretending to a knowledge of the world and infinite destiny. She will tell you of the cycle of being; the succession of generations; that life and death complement each other, and that all we can hope for is unceasing change as the abiding law, and he who grasps to hold will find but shadows in his grasp. "I speculate," says philosophy, and others speculate. There has been speculation for these many thousand years, and this is the conclusion reached: Nothing is known except nothing can be known. If the sea before you is darkness, why complain? Is not the past equally dark? Of the present, even, what does anyone know?

Ask science, claiming to resolve the earth into its elements, weigh the stars of the heavens, and calculate the pulsations of thought in the living brain. It replies with a sneer—What is there beyond? Transformation — nothing more. What do you expect—individual existence? Know then, these clouds rest over oblivion—utter and complete negation of being. Mind, soul, intelligence are of the body and perish with it. Life arises from co-ordination of conditions, and when these cease it no longer exists. Do you hear the music of the instrument after it has been reduced to ashes? Nay, and no more should you expect intelligence after the brain which produces it is dead.

Most terrible if this be true! If our hearts are strung to the tenderest touch of feeling; to respond to the sweet influences of love, only to feel the rude and blasting hand of pain, what a mockery is life, what a sham this fair and beautiful earth?

Is this all? Is there then no hope? Must the aspiring soul go down with the beast into silent dust? Does the same fate await man and the worm beneath his feet?

Suffering soul, there is hope! There is a guide out of the wilderness of doubt into the clear sunshine of immortal light. It will lead us to the headlands overlooking the murky fogs, and we can look far out into the infinite beyond.

THAT GUIDE IS SPIRITUALISM.

By this term I mean vastly more than the phase of phenomena. I mean that which goes down to the fountain of creation and ascends to the throne of Intelligence; which is commensurate with the Universe; from the attraction of atoms to the formation of thought; from the birth of worlds to the ascension of an angel.

This Spiritualism is the fountain of all the religious systems of the world; without it religion is impossible, for the basic fact of religion is immortality. It runs through all systems as a golden thread, woven into diverse patters, always bright and beautiful; however dark the background against which it is revealed. It forms the essence of all poetry; the pivotal facts of history, and the overshadowing motive of mankind.

It is the essential doctrine of all sacred books, without which they have no significance. The Christian churches repose on the demonstration through Christ of immortality, and the Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, is a record of the intercommunion between spirits and mankind.

WHAT IS THE SPIRITUAL THEORY?

That beneath all the fleeting phenomena of the world is the realm of pure spiritual energy, out of which and by force of which all existence flows. If the body of man may be traced to a fragment broken from the world of matter, so his spirit is a fragment broken from the realm of spiritual force, and enabled to sustain its identity. It is not from "Matter and its attributes," but from the infinite spiritual energy, that creation flows as an outward expression of inward conception.

Would I take the Bible to teach this doctrine? Yes; I would take all the sacred books; I would repeat from Paul, most subtle of the apostles, and who best understood the reach of this conception. He says: "There are also celestial bodies and bodies terrestrial.... It is sown a natural body, and is raised a spiritual body....Now this I say, brethren, flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption....for this corruption must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." When this is done he says will be brought to pass the saying that is written, "Death is swallowed up in victory."

Paul enunciates the Spiritual Philosophy, and only unlocks the secret of the grave. There is a duality; a spiritual body contains a terrestrial or physical body.

The terrestrial cannot inherit eternal life, which is the inheritance of the celestial. Death is the severance of the silver cord which unites these two bodies. The physical returns to mother earth, the celestial receives the shining robes of an angel. Hence death works no change, save in condition. The individuality is no more affected than by stepping from one room to another, or by casting off worn garments. Immortality is our birthright.

A materialist said that we are traveling between two bleak and barren promontories, the Past and the Future. In the light of Spiritualism the headlands of the Past are crowned with blessed memories, and the future, instead of a bleak and barren headland, toward which we drift in fears, rises above the shadows of this life, and, on its purple slopes, we behold our fathers, mothers, wives, husbands, children, friends who have left us in the night of the years, all these with garments of light, extending their arms to welcome us.

Spiritualism presses to the quivering lips of grief this cup of precious nectar, distilled by the angels of heaven.

The great and ever-enduring lesson taught by this view of life here and hereafter, is that the present is the shadow of future realities. We are spirits to-day, and we shall be the same to-morrow after the body has fallen from us. We have already begun the infinite journey, and are not to wait until death to begin the formation of character. When that event takes place the chaos of this life will fall from us; its objects; its vain ambitions; estates, bonds and title-deeds, fall ashes, and the spirit stand alone, holding fast the treasures of such thoughts and actions as had relation to its immortal life.

Never was wiser command given, than to lay up your treasure above.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

A SPIRITUAL GARDEN.

"As Ye Sow, So Shall Ye Reap."

I believe this has been quoted oftener than any other verse in the Bible. Why? Because it teaches the law of compensation. Can we learn a lesson from this? Let us try. When we sow seeds for sweet peas in our garden, we confidently look for sweet peas, not nasturtiums, and we know that if the seeds were right, the sweet, fragrant flowers that we expect will surely reward us.

Can we not imagine our thoughts as seeds planted in our spiritual garden? Let us make the experiment and it will amply repay us. Do you love flowers? Then sow the seeds of sweet peas by sending thoughts of peace to the neighbor whom you feel has not used you just right. Sow the seeds of the fragrant violet by some loving action for the one who is sad and lonely; sow the seed of the modest little forget-me-not by something done for one who feels her friendlessness, no matter whether you think she will appreciate it or not. It is not your business to care about appreciation; it is for you to sow the seeds and then keep out the weeds, and when your spiritual flowers begin to show forth, cultivate them with care, and your pleasure and happiness will amply repay you for your efforts.

It is not necessary, nor is it advisable in your work at cultivating a spiritual garden to obtrude your services on your neighbors in season and out. Try and learn the value of thought as a working force and you will not need so many spoken words. In this connection I hope the following will help you:

Guard thy thoughts; thoughts are unspoken words, but have the same potency as the spoken word; they go wherever they are sent, and, if evil, return and sear the soul!

How little do we realize the great truth contained in the above statement. "Why should we guard the thoughts? Is it not enough if we guard the tongue?" How often do we hear people say: "I would not say that what I heard is true, but I can think what I please." Can we? Dare we? Not if we believe that unspoken words (thoughts) go where they are sent, and return to us in the same spirit that they leave us!

Thoughts of love and sympathy for our neighbor reach him on the etheric wave and rebound, returning on the same wave direct to the sender. Have you not seen a child playing with a little wooden ball, to which is attached a piece of rubber? As the child throws the ball out into space the rubber draws it back to the hand. Can we not imagine thought going out in the same way? The wooden ball returns a wooden ball; it does not change a particle; it cannot. So when a thought of envy or malice (which we will liken to the wooden ball) is sent out, can we reasonably expect it to return to us a thought of love (pure gold)?

No! "As we sow so shall we reap."

Let us look a little deeper and learn a little more of the work of the thought on returning to its birthplace. The force with which the thought is sent out determines the force of its return. If then, the thought be evil (unkind or uncharitable) it sears the soul.

Look up the meaning of the word sear. One of those given is to wither, to make callous. Does this not teach us that if we would beautify the soul, and restore it to the "image and likeness of God" (good) we must guard our thoughts always, not once in a while, but at all times. This is by no means easy, as we will learn, but when we commence earnestly, then only will we know its importance.

Let us, then, be up and moving,
Walking ever in the light,
As we journey through life proving Thought has ever wondrous might.
Let us not by the wayside falter,
Ever to the Light be true;
We have no fault we cannot alter
Into virtue's glorious hue.

Lovingly your sister,
RUTH.

AN UNFAIR DEAL.

Life is a little game, that's all;
The shuffled cards are dealt around;
To some the welcome aces fall
And here and there a king is found.

We seldom like the cards we've got,
And many lose, while few may win—
Ah, Fate, I fear has slipped a lot
Of useless, extra two-spots in.

HOME CIRCLE EXPERIENCE.

The writer, who has devoted considerable time to the investigation of Spiritualism, both its philosophy and phenomena, believes that upon spirit phenomena rests the foundation stone of Spiritualism. For is it not a fact that Modern Spiritualism owes its birth and growth to phenomena? And is it not evident that its life and strength will be perpetuated by the same means? Without the continued development of phenomena, and proof of spirit return, can we expect to make new converts to the doctrines and truths of Spiritualism?

Nowhere better than in the home circle, with a few congenial companions, and by regular weekly sittings, can one find more satisfactory and convincing demonstrations of spirit power. The writer will attempt to narrate as briefly as possible, his personal experiences and observations in the matter of spirit phenomena as produced in the home circle only, and without the aid of any professional medium so-called, excepting what was developed in the mediumship of some one of the circle.

The writer with a half-dozen or so friends, ladies and gentlemen, has been in the habit of sitting in an upper room of his home once a week, on the same evening regularly so far as possible, for a number of years. One of the ladies, who was the most sensitive, sat in an improvised cabinet, consisting of a curtain of dark material drawn across one corner of the room, with a musical instrument, a guitar, standing on the floor by her side. It should be stated that this lady had some time previously developed some psychic or mediumistic power, by going involuntarily into trance conditions, when some well-known spirit friend or relative, and sometimes other intelligences, would personate through her, while she was wholly unconscious. Soon after taking a seat in the cabinet, this lady would drop into a deep sleep, or trance. After sitting patiently for some time, we were rewarded by getting some interesting phenomena. First we heard distinct raps on the wall inside the curtain, and sometimes outside the curtain. Next was heard independent music playing on the guitar, and keeping time to our singing. There was heard an independent voice in an audible but low tone singing in time and turn with the guitar.

Next we heard an independent voice whistle a tune loudly like a man. Then other independent voices talking to us, at first in whispers, afterwards in louder tone, these voices being recognized and identified by two members of the circle as the voices, in tone and inflection, and otherwise, of their children; thus giving them positive proof of their children's spirit presence, these three children, from 16 to 20 years of age, having passed out some years ago, and being unknown to the medium. Next was heard the guitar coming out of the cabinet, without human hands, and playing beautiful music independently, while lying on the floor at our feet; then lifted up to the laps of several of the sitters, and there playing music without the aid of any one in the circle, the medium being behind the curtain all the time, some four or five feet distant, and wholly unconscious all the time.

The room was made dark during these manifestations. Of course we could not see the instrument moving out and around the room, but we could all hear and feel at times its movements, as well as the music played upon its strings. After finishing this, the instrument would return behind the curtain and resume its place beside the medium, very quietly; more so than if one of the circle undertook to replace it there, dark as it was in the room. All this time the instrument was not handled either by the medium or by any one in the circle.

Next could be seen forms of light, ethereal substance coming from the cabinet, and advancing towards certain members of the circle, although these forms are not yet sufficiently made up so as to be seen distinctly by all. But we are promised that they will be, if we continue to sit patiently for some time longer. During the progress of these manifestations, some spirit friend would personate and talk to us and give us beautiful messages from the spirit world. We would know at once whether this speaking was done through the medium's vocal organs, or whether the voices were independent of the medium.

During all the time of these various phenomena, lasting about two hours each evening, the lady in the cabinet continued to remain in a deep sleep or trance, and knew absolutely nothing of what had transpired. When she returned to her normal condition, as if waking from a deep sleep, she was surprised when informed of what had been going on while she was asleep.

Besides the regular weekly meeting of our circle as above detailed, we have also adopted the plan of meeting together in the same place, on another evening in the week, for the purpose of developing the mediumship of another member of our circle, a gentleman who was found to be a sensitive and easily influenced by spirit power, and was pursuaded to sit in the cabinet. After a short time, we were able to get from this source also some interesting phenomena of a similar character, in some respects, as that above narrated, thus showing that patient and regular sitting in a well magnetized room will generally develop the powers of all mediumistic persons.

Therefore, from his personal observations and experiences, as above set forth, in order to get the best results and positive proofs of spirit return, as well as for instruction and entertainment, the writer is convinced that nothing is more satisfactory than what can be produced in the Home Circle. And if the members are all harmonious and sit regularly at least one evening in a week, in the same house and room, and have the most sensitive member selected to sit behind a curtain, and so continue to sit regularly and patiently for weeks and months without interruption, if possible, there can be no doubt that those who comply with these conditions, will in due time be rewarded by the appearance of spirit phenomena that will prove most satisfactory and convincing. The devotion of one or two evenings each week to this matter need not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of business or domestic affairs.

In conclusion, the writer says that he knows that the phenomena he has witnessed in the home circle are not produced by any operation called sub-consciousness on the part of the medium so-called, or by hypnotic conditions on the part of the members of the circle, or any one of them. He is convinced, and so are all the ladies and gentlemen present that the phenomena are just what they represent themselves to be, no more and no less, to-wit, communications and messages and exhibitions of power from the spirit side of life. Of this we have not merely prima facie, but conclusive evidence sufficient to convince any reasonable being.

IS MY SOUL IMMORTAL?

Viewed in the Light of Deductive Reason.

Is my soul immortal?

If all which now exists cannot be annihilated, then it reasonably follows that it never had a beginning, hence it was in existence before the world was a nebula.

Now we will ask what is the individual nature of that spark, and from whence came it of itself, that is found necessary to quicken or fecundate the egg?

If it never had a beginning, what was it doing, and how came it an occupant of space? Was not this spark the advanced soul of some other body that had been projected into spirit and thence into a soul from a world that existed before this present world?

Did this spark at the time it first entered the egg of our world remember in the slightest degree a previous existence in a lower world? We think not.

Then upon this hypothesis let us assume that the spirit and soul of things of this our present world may gradually drop their memory or individuality as they advance out from this world to again become one of the sparks or units that is now being gathered together, (spirit world) which will in the fullness of time become sufficiently large to form the body of another nebula.

If this were the case, how much of our own personality would we retain as a spark for the quickening of another egg in another world?

Assuming it as a reasonable hypothesis from a human point of consideration that the soul is immortal, and we accept this as a point of departure in our investigation as to its probable truth, it would appear to us that the first question to be established would be, "Is a soul an existing thing of itself, apart from any other thing? and if so, in what definite manner does it appeal to the human sense for a recognition of its own existence as an entity?"

"Ex nihilo nihil fit."

If out of nothing nothing comes, and that which is cannot be reduced to nothing, then this spark that is found necessary in the quickening process of nature to produce an organized body in this the earth planet must have existed eternally.

Question:

1. Did it exist as a soul of something?

2. Is soul a thing of itself apart from thought, force and substance?

3. Does my soul (or I am) have an eternal existence as C. H. Foster?

In beginning our investigations as to the truth of immortality, we should endeavor to confine our researches within a rational course of reasoning; that is, our deductions should have a probable base of departure. In other words, we should not assume a promise of a condition without some one recognized thing now or then existing from which this promise may lead us to a reasonable expectation of the thing promised, i. e., something readily recognized as existing must precede a promise.

What is a soul?

Before inquiring as to the truth of the immortality of a soul, we must first endeavor to establish as a fact that such a thing as a soul has an actual existence of itself. In other words, "You must first catch your rabbit before you can make a rabbit stew." In order to do this, we should discard all previous notions, beliefs, opinions or hereditary teachings and confine our inquiries within the limit of human comprehension. Then let us begin at that point where relative knowledge begins, the unit one (1) or last division of an existing thing, i. e., the ultimate atom.

While it may be readily understood that the effect of the combination of Thought, Force and Substance when acting together produce the effect which is called Life, and while this is the ultimate limit of human comprehension as regards to relative knowledge, yet it does not necessarily follow that it will always be so, nor does it disapprove or negative the probable existence of an infinite atom, spark or soul of things.

In the application of philosophy to questions of metaphysics, we are obliged to confine our deductions as to the law that seems to govern things, to the things themselves as they present themselves to our five senses of cognition; for instance, if the sense of sight recognizes the fact that a certain body has changed its relative position to some other body, our reasoning faculty (which is the product of one or more of our five senses) teaches us that there is in existence such a thing of itself as force, and while this may be and probably is a fact, yet it is after all only a rational conjecture, for no man has as yet proven in an absolute manner that force is a thing of itself apart from any other thing. Nevertheless, no reasonable mind will deny that all the evidence that can be applied up to date substantiates the fact.

Now, it is our intention in dealing with the soul to apply the same rational law of deduction, for the soul of things, like the force of things, if it exists as a thing of itself, necessarily must so exist as something superior to human or spirit comprehension. Hence the student, we hope, will understand that whatever the line of reasoning we may place before you for your consideration, it is only offered as a reasonable theory.

We will begin our remarks by assuming first that there is in existence such a thing of itself as a soul; that this soul, like matter, is composed not only of ultimate but also infinite parts, and that this last division or the one (1) of the thing is the point which we must endeavor to discover.

We are accustomed to say that this and that attracts, such as the attraction of gravity, sympathetic attraction, etc., etc. First it will be necessary to determine whether or no such a thing as attraction has an existence of itself apart from any other thing, or does it owe its apparent existence to some other thing. If we were to allow ourselves to be governed entirely by Mr. Newton's one idea, that there was no other force but that which was seemingly produced from physical matter acting on other physical matter, then should we be compelled to start our investigation at this point.

But we are satisfied that we have made it perfectly clear to the student that force of itself was in existence before matter could have possibly come into existence, i. e., the birth of matter as it is first presented to man for his cognition in the matter of extension is also recognized as the first appearance (or birth) of the first dimension of space (length) which, reason teaches us, must precede the second dimension (breadth), which in turn must precede the third dimension (thickness). This will serve to show that attraction (the spark) had to be in existence to quicken the thought that directed the force that in turn imparted the motion of one atom toward another. Therefore, we shall contend that the esoteric meaning of the word attract is the fourth principle in nature, the infinite spark or the base of the soul of things.

While such evidence as we have up to date would appear to show that soul itself is immortal, it being a single entity of itself, this does not establish as a fact that the personality of a soul is eternal, i. e., as a certain John Jones or Richard Roe, for we recognize that an atom of substance, though a thing of itself, may and probably does have an eternal existence. But this is no evidence that the body, of which it at one time was a part, is still an existing entity, but quite the contrary is evidence that while the matter may be destroyed or annihilated, yet not so the atomic substance of the matter.

From this course of reasoning we claim that we are following out a reasonable line of deductions when we assert that a fully developed thought, a developed spirit or a fully developed soul owes its present condition to the consent of its ultimate parts or unit one (1), for this alone would fill the meaning of the term developed from something necessarily lower than it now is.

And we shall here caution the lay student that it is his bounden duty not to ignore this very particular part of the obligations that are unavoidably placed upon the philosophy of a profound thinker by asserting that this is splitting a hair (so to speak) for your duty to your own power of conception, if you wish to arrive at the last base of departure, is to split this hair until it can no longer be split in your mind. In this article we are endeavoring to cross the dead line of comprehension, which at most is only a rational theory, and we only offer it to the student of Psychology as a probable base for future investigation.

UNSEEN FORCES.

The forces worth while, in our lives to-day,
That bless us, or curse, in their given way,
Are forces unseen, and they rule our fate,
From youth in its prime, till the years are late.

Close woven within all the deeds we do,
Are threads of the good, or false, or true.

No thought can we shape, or a word express,
But bears, in itself, an unseen impress.

The love, or the hate, or the gruesome greed,
Is grown in our lives, from the viewless seed.

The powers that build for a nation's might,
That shapen the state, by the laws of right—

The powers put forth, in a single life,
That bud, and that blossom, in peace or strife—

Wherever we look—'tis the unseen side,
That sends out its waves, in a mighty tide.

All force that we know, is a force unseen,
And flows from one source, in a ceaseless stream—

And worlds must all follow, the world of cause—
The heart of God's centered and unseen laws.

LIFE AND EXPERIENCE IN SPIRIT LAND

A Series of Letters From Prof. William Denton, Through the Mediumship of Carlyle Petersilea.

LETTER NUMBER SIX

To the many readers of The Progressive Thinker—Dear friends, one and all, I am that fearless being whom you once called William Denton. Some called me Prof. William Denton, but titles never fitted my shoulders easily. After having been addressed as professor by numerous friends, together with smiles of approbation or frowns of dissent, sympathetic hand-shaking or cold, hard, dry shakes, I often retired to a little grove, not far from where I at the time made my home, to shake off the professor, to shake off the hard, dry shakes and frowns, and just be simply Will, or William, or Denton; and there, in that quiet retreat, throw myself down on the fragrant ground, among the mosses and pine needles.

Ah, how beautiful, how delicious, how fragrant; the low, sweet hush of night all about me; the crickets chirping softly, the frogs joining in a louder chorus to the deep bass of the inflated bullfrog. Lying there, in an ecstasy of calm delight, flat on my back, gazing up at the stars as they smiled, twinkled, and sparkled, peeping down at me through those tall pine trees, a gentle breeze sighing a soft anthem among their numerous boughs. By this time I had shaken off the odious professor, had forgotten him entirely, and once more my mother's voice called, "Will! William!" or, as she often playfully said, "My Sweet William. Will, Will, where art thou? Come in my child, or you will get a bad cold in the head."

At the sound of her voice I smiled dreamily. Mother, mother! Where art thou, darling mother? Are you up there among the stars, sweet mother?

Then methought a voice whispered softly from out the chorus of sweet sounds: "No, William; not there."

Not there, but where, mother?

And is my lamb with you?

"The lamb is here, with fleece as white as snow;" and then with the rustling leaves mingled the soft rustle of angelic forms. Methought that gentle hands were laid upon my aching brow, my eyes closed, my inner sight opened, and there, in all their bright loveliness, stood my angel mother and my spotless lamb.

"Courage, my sweet William," said my mother; "courage, my boy. Bang away at the doors of hell. They will yield after awhile and a multitude shall come forth."

I call on the world at large to answer me: Have not a great multitude come forth out of hell, or given up their hell and killed the devil? This was the prayer of my soul, morning, noon and night. "In the name of humanity, let us all rise up, put out the fires of hell and kill the devil."

I once wrote a poem entitled, "The Devil Is Dead." I would to God he were dead, wholly and entirely so, but he has more lives than the cats of Kilkenny and when you think the monster is dead he bobs up serenely where one least expects him.

Now I would like to quote my poem. I used to think it pretty good. I suppose I may be pardoned for looking backward a little at my former self. Men sometimes look backward with smiles of pity, amusement, or contempt, to the days of their boyhood, thinking what foolish little fellows they were. I look back now to the days of my mortal life and think, "What a foolish fellow you were, William. But you did the best you knew or could have done then." But for the poem:

THE DEVIL IS DEAD.

Sigh, priests; cry aloud, hang your pulpits with black;
Let sorrow bow down every head;
The good friend who bore all your sins on his back,
Your best friend, the Devil is dead.

Your church is a corpse; you are guarding its tomb;
The soul of your system has fled.
That death-knell is tolling your terrible doom;
It tells us the Devil is dead.

'Twas knowledge gave Satan a terrible blow,
Poor fellow! he took to his bed.
Alas! idle priests, that such things should be:
Your master, the Devil, is dead.

You're bid to the funeral, ministers all;
We've dug the old gentleman's bed;
Your black coats will make a most excellent pall
To cover your friend who is dead.

Aye, lower him mournfully into the grave;
Let showers of tear-drops be shed;
Your business is gone—there are no souls to save;
Their tempter, the Devil, is dead.

Woe comes upon woe, you can ne'er get your dues.
Hell's open, the damned souls have fled;
They took to their heels when they heard the good news—
Their jailer, the Devil, is dead.

Camp-meetings henceforth will be needed no more;
Revivals are knocked on the head;
The orthodox vessel lies stranded on shore,
Her captain, the Devil, is dead.

But, friends, is he dead? Aren't some of you trying to resurrect him? Don't you think I am still needed to bang away at the doors of hell, for some of you are trying hard to close the doors once more—have closed them even now.

What a great iron door is the doctor's plot law; what a low, filthy door is the lymph injection. What a disgustingly nasty door is compulsory vaccination. And look at that great, horrible, cruel, degraded, devilish monster, ten thousand times more devilish and cruel than the old Satan himself, standing there at that blackest of all black doors, whereon in fiery letters appears the word Vivisection! Oh, monstrous hell! The Devil is not dead. Weep and gnash your teeth, oh, men of earth! The Devil is not dead. You are coddling him up again.

And now steps forth the scarlet woman, the Romish church. She stretches forth her arms and in wheedling tones, with smiles that are filled with guile, she begs all the little churches to come to her; she will take them all into her bosom and protect them from harm; they may still retain their names, if they want to, but what's in a name. "A rose by any other name would smell as sweet." She doesn't care what they call themselves if they will only return home and rest in her great, motherly bosom; and, when she gets them there—ah! when she gets them there, she will bang-to the doors—those great, strong, black doors of hell—and take her seat on the throne beside his Satanic Majesty, and hell and the Devil, together with his queen, the Romish church, will reign throughout a goodly portion of the world. Yes, their dominion will even extend into the spirit world.

Yes, I think I sang my song too soon. Many of these things have arisen since I left the mortal form. So do not say that I am not needed; do not say that I have progressed so far onward in the spiritual life that I can feel no further interest in earthly affairs. Was William Denton ever so selfish that his ears were deaf to the woes of humanity? Have I progressed so far onward into heavenly bliss that like the orthodox angels in heaven, I can look down into the fires of hell with smiling, happy face, and see my brothers writhing in torment?

Out upon such folly! No! No! A thousand times No! I will work hard and strike my blows wherever and whenever I find an opportunity. Heavenly, progressed angels, don't need me. Heaven don't need me. I am not called upon to sweep streets that are clean and golden. I am not called upon to overcome error where error is not, but to work hard in dirty places and to make them clean and sweet if possible. I do not care to smash pearly gates, but to bang open the doors of hell, as fast as I find them, one after another, and let the captives go free. The dirtiest and darkest hells are upon the earth, consequently my work is there. I have worked, and I still intend to work, where I am needed most; and I don't wish to be denied my name. I never was ashamed of it when in the mortal form, and never failed to sign it, in full, to anything that emanated from my pen, no matter how radical it might be. I never asked any man if I might be allowed to do this, that, or the other. I loved my brothers, all; and do so still, and much more, but I wished to strike the chains from every man's hands, and I abhorred the slightest thing that smacked of tyranny.

Be very careful, you who call yourselves Spiritualists, that you do not forge chains for your brothers to wear—that you do not erect doors that lead into hell. Do not tell spiritual beings what mediums they shall use and those they shall not. Do not tell the mediums through whom the spirits come to you, that they must subscribe to this tenet or that. Let the mediums give utterance to the voice of the spirit. Beware that you do not bind them in chains, for I most solemnly tell you, that if you do, the chains will be broken, the captives will go free.

Spiritual beings will not allow their mediums to be bound, and those who try to bind them will be thrown to the ground and blown away as chaff. The angels know what to do and how to do it. Beware that you stand not in their way. They asked no man whether they should choose learned or ignorant mediums, and they do, and have invariably chosen the ignorant ones—perhaps not those who were too grossly ignorant, but the uneducated and sensitive; generally children whose minds were unbent and unbiased by education. Through the mouths of babes and sucklings have the wise been confounded. The medium Jesus confounded the wise men in the temple, at twelve years of age, being wholly uneducated, unlearned, the son of a poor carpenter.

Andrew Jackson Davis was but little older, not more than sixteen, the ignorant son of a poor shoemaker. He not only confounded the wise men in the temples, but the whole world. The three Fox girls were but children, and their father a common farm laborer. Through them was established direct communication between the spiritual and earthly worlds, by audible signalling. Hudson Tuttle was a hard-working farmer's boy, not yet educated. These were all chosen while still very young, before they had been bent and biased by education.

As soon as you begin to rivet fetters, usefulness ceases. A bound man can accomplish little or nothing.

Freedom—freedom for all.

WHEN JIM DIED.

When Jim died all th' neighbors from fur an' near,
'Pears like to me they held him just as dear
As mother did an' me; fer they all came in to gaze
Once more on his calm, pale face, an' a sort of haze
Seemed to settle on their eyes, fer I seen th' tears
A-tricklin' down their cheeks—maybe th' fust for years—
When Jim died.

When Jim died, th' birds stopped singin' in the' trees,
Fur they missed him, you know; an' th' golden-belted bees
Flittin' over the meadows whispered to th' clover
It would kiss his bare, brown feet no more; and the plover
An' th' kildee in th' rushes and th' fen,
Seemed ever to be callin' that he'd never come again—
When Jim died.

Jim was a curious chap—not like other boys;
He had his own way o' takin' life with its joys
An' sorrows; he loved birds an' flowers, an' I'll bet
He never much as trod on a timid violet
That peeped shyly through th' grass. Like music of a flute
The birds sang to him, but their voices now are mute—
Since Jim died.

Since Jim died 'pears like to me mother ain't so spry
As she used to be; there's a sadness in her eye
An' voice that sort o' cuts me to th' heart; for Jim
Had allus been her pet sence he was born; she loved him
Better than the rest, he was her boy; she don't complain,
Mother don't, but then she's never been the same
Since Jim died.

Teach Girls to Be Home-Makers.

There has lately been a fresh crop of complaints in sermons and magazine articles that the young women of America are ceasing to care for the home. The higher education is supposed to be responsible for this, and when women get the ballot, it is predicted that the disastrous change will be complete. Those who fear that equal suffrage will give a death blow to the home should have their nerves calmed by the facts related at the recent National Suffrage Convention in Washington by Miss Theodosia Ammous, teacher of domestic science at the State Agricultural College of Colorado. She said:

"Since women obtained the ballot, work for many reforms has been taken up in the women's clubs, and has been carried on with great success. One of the chief lines of effort has been to establish industrial education. We propose to introduce domestic and sanitary courses in all schools.

"The women voters of Colorado do not neglect their homes. In everything we try to emphasize the home and to teach our girls to be good home-makers. We are laying stress upon scientific housekeeping. Believing that the home is the center of everything, we have started at the Chautauqua at Boulder a model cottage, to show the very best methods of housekeeping. It was said long ago that woman was the natural sanitary reformer. We are trying to introduce sanitation as nearly perfect as possible. Increased attention has been given in Colorado to home-making and improved sanitation since women have had the ballot.

"A large fuel and iron company employs women as instructors in the science of nutrition, domestic economy, etc., and is sending them around to teach these things in the great camps. The courses are free and anyone may learn. They are thus reaching the foreigners, who need such instruction most. I am always sorry to see women at the East sending in protests against equal suffrage. It seems to me a dreadful thing for women to do. They do not know what they are doing.

"In Colorado the women's vote has been very large in proportion to their numbers. The best, the most intellectual, and most representative women in our state are and have been believers in equal suffrage, and it was never so strong in popular favor as it is to-day. Those who have said the contrary have perhaps had some personal reason for speaking ill of women as voters. Certainly the facts will not bear them out."

SOME FRIENDLY CRITICISMS OF PARTICULAR CULTS

As Presented by J. J. Fly, M. D., of Pulleys Mill, Ill.

To the Editor:—In an article in the Metaphysical Magazine, page 244, Vol. 5, Mr. Frank Hartmann says: "The recognition of the One in All is the first step in the study of the superior science called the occult because it belongs to the higher self, not to the mortal part of man. Only after we have found the real self will the veil that hides the truth be lifted, etc.... To become holy and spiritual means to become unselfish,... and rise out of the plane of matter;... to grow out of that consciousness of self that belongs to the body, into that state that belongs to the Divine. The Master is in us and around us, and the more room we make for him in our hearts the more his presence will abide in us. The incarnation of the Divine self in us is not accomplished at the time when we enter the world; it continues through life as we progress along the path of wisdom, and if hindered, it may not be accomplished at all. For the purpose of enabling this power to take substance and form in us and to become manifest in our own nature, it is necessary that the delusions of self with all its outgrowths should be conquered, so that wisdom may enter the heart, and the mental horizon be expanded. This is not accomplished by pious dreaming, nor going out of ourselves and wandering through astral planes; but by remaining firmly within the center of our divine consciousness, and nourishing the fire of unselfish love, until it grows into a flame of knowledge whose light and power will radiate to the most distant stars."

This he calls the "White Magic" of the Rosicrucians. There is another kind, that he, with H. P. Blavatsky, calls "Black Magic." This latter kind is what he intimates belong to the public in general and consists of rappings, table tippings, and the wanderings of our clairvoyants, slate writings, etc., in fact all communications coming from the les developed spirits, whom he calls elementals. Such phenomena as comes from these, they say, should be kept from the public, and that therefore, the teaching of occult secrets should be excluded from the mob of vulgar scientists, in whom animal intellectuality and skepticism have been excessively developed.

Such a thought as this took possession of the priests of the Bible, and they made it a death penalty for the masses to communicate with these occult forces. I will ask these gentlemen whom Mr. Hartmann calls the true "occults," how it is that they know that one man dealing with the occult, knows that the forces he deals with are better than that of another? Further, I will ask, if it has not been proven that like men invite like forces, spirits, elementals, or discarnated human beings to them in their communications?

If Mr. Hartmann wants to be an ascetic, and retire within himself; exclude all worldly associations; if he has risen above a point in the struggle of existence, where he is above the cross currents coming from the masses; if he is so near the ideal of an infinite Divine, that the eastern wind and northern blasts of imperfect humanity, that knows no better than to, first of all, remember itself in the struggle of existence; to provide for the morrow, that the wolf may be kept from the door; to sense and feel the influences around it; to run here and there from this or that impression, and from all these gain a point as to the nature of its own being; he should not prohibit those who have not reached this point in development; from arising to his standard, if standard it be, by excluding the secrets of the occults from them.

For it cannot be that these men are different from the rest of humanity. If it should be that he is superior to the rest, it can only be so by his better training and mental organization. They could have never reached this state except by wading through the mazes of those below them. There is no royal road to the ascensions of diviner consciousness, but all must travel along the same pathway.

Now, a word about selfishness. Mr. Hartmann quotes an expression from one of his true "occultists": "Oh, for one unselfish person to co-operate with us in our work of humanity!" Further on he says, "a few have appeared, who from their works have shown that they seem qualified to receive instruction in regard to the lost mysteries of the past."

I suppose such as were taught by Paracelsus, the mystic Rosicrucian, and the imaginary claims of ancient alchemy and astrology, in which there was nine-tenths fiction to one grain of truth.

I think it is not surprising that they should be forced to raise the cry for unselfish men; for, as we have said, life is a struggle for existence, and if it turns out, there is no struggle, the problem comes to this; it is either death to the subject, or some other one must take the responsibility of that life upon themselves. If we engage in the struggle, what is it for, but for self? If a man should, or could lose himself, where would his individuality be? I suppose it would be absorbed in the great Nirvana, which is as near nothing as my imagination can conceive. At least it is nothing to the individual, and as for my part, when my individuality is gone, what care I for anything, either above, below or around me. Pure unselfishness is a thing that is difficult for me to think of. Am I not an individual? What was my individuality given me for, if not for myself? What is the first consideration of any individual, but for himself, and what use could he be to any one else, if it was not for this individuality. Unselfishness, purely, as these occultists contend for, is just as impossible as individuality is possible. "Do unto others as you would have them do to you," is the law of nature, as well as the golden rule, and I would add, treat every man with all the respect that is due him, no more and no less, and you have done all that is required of you in the race of life.

This is a plain, practical world, in which it must be that every man should work for himself, and with laws giving equal privileges to all, all should work, and what is work, but for self; if he works for others, he works for himself, and it is for the benefit of himself that he works for others.

Now all this rot about excluding the occult sciences from all but the holy and unselfish man and woman, is selfishness itself, pure and simple, born in the spirit of priesthood and egotistical indulgence. Mr. Hartmann would have his fellow-men even rise above all desires, for he says they are but the fruits of selfishness; even a desire for heaven, he abrogates. While men are men, they will desire; they may and must desire, and when the time comes they do not desire, they will no longer be men. It is the mystery of man and the brotherhood of man that concerns the mind of man to-day, and this great desideratum cannot be accomplished without the fires of flaming desires, and the selfishness of the individual, to lead him on to victory and the attainment of the good that is in him and beyond him. Now, I want to say something about the lower self and the higher self of these very earnest occults. According to Hartmann, the man on earth is the lower self, and the spirit in the spirit realms is the higher self—the real self. This real self is something to be found by the lower self, and to become holy is to grow out of this lower self and all of its consciousness, into this higher self which belongs to the Divine. He further says, that the Master is in us and around us, and if we make room for him in our hearts, he will abide in us. He is not born in us, but is gained by certain things the lower self can do, and if the lower self fails, the incarnation of this higher self may not be accomplished at all. He says, in his "White and Black Magic," that death cuts the link between the lower self and the higher self, and that the lower self perishes.

We confess that we do not understand the make-up of man as here defined. My higher self! My real self! my lower self! Who are these, if not myself? What is this mortal part—lower self—of my being? Has it a mind, or intelligence that differs from that unity of intelligence that constitutes my being? We know that the mortal body dies; that its elements are given back into impersonal elements of that energy from which we believe all life arose. Have these elements of which the body is composed an intelligence that gave it a personality or individuality as a man? No, except in potentiality. If they have not, there can be no lower self to die, and what seems to be death is only a dissolution of the outer covering of the man. This Mr. Hartmann calls the lower self. This Mr. T. J. Hudson calls the conscious self; but, he, like Mr. Hartmann implies that it has an intelligence; that it holds the waking mind of man, and is the one that buys, sells, trades and acquires experience here on earth; but, he, like Hartmann, says, this part of the human being dies with the body, and that it is the sub-conscious mind that is immortal.

Here again are two minds; two selves, all belonging to one man; a conscious and a sub-conscious mind of Mr. Hudson, and a lower and a higher self of Mr. Hartmann. Mr. Hartmann is a Theosophist, and Mr. Hudson is a hybrid between materialism, Spiritualism, and a little theosophy thrown in to make his philosophy appear complex and mysterious.

No doubt these men are honest, and doubtless they have penetrated into the nature of man's constitution farther than I have; but please let us have our say, and it is like this: In my opinion, there is no such thing as a duality of man; or for that matter, a trinity of man, God or devil.

I believe these thoughts are only the residuum of conclusions that were the outgrowths of the mind of primitive man; they are the mistaken conclusions that arose from improperly understanding the meaning of the first beams of light that illumined the chambers of his mind; they were the fruits of his assimilations of the phenomena of nature—of force and matter—of things visible and invisible, and, that in his vain attempts to understand them, he personified, individualized and deified them. Mr. Hartmann says, that man when he enters the world is not one with the Master (the higher self) though he may be, or may never be—all owing to the efforts of the lower self to incarnate the higher.

By this, we understand that the higher self is not congenital with our advent into this world, but is something that is to be gained by the lower, with a great probability that no such accession will ever be made; and this fact reduces the problem of man's destiny, with the exception of a few "true occults" to a parallel with the trees. They have a body and a life force within them that adapts their entities to appropriations from the physical world; they see, they feel, and are sensitive to the changes of the seasons, but are not conscious of their entities; they die; and not having personalities, return again to the impersonal elements. So it is with the conscious mind of Hudson; so it is with the lower self that has not a oneness with the Master, of Hartmann. This we call a strange medley; a useless complexity in the make-up of man; an unwarrantable conclusion, and misunderstanding of the cosmical energies, leading upward, outward, and onward to the climax of its own creative ability. There is but one life in one entity; that life is a thread of intelligence, a spray of energy arising from the divine substratum, whose involutions evolved a physical world and peopled it with physical beings. There is no duality in any entity; every entity is a one; a oneness with its own creator; a oneness with its master; before its physical manifestation, it was an invisible and impersonal force, yet divine because it was God. On its first appearance in matter, though it could be seen only by the microscope as a fleck of matter characterized by motion, it became an entity. It had but one life; the rudiment of but one mind, soul, force, or whatever we are pleased to call the progressive and unfolding principle of that entity. In man we find that the climax of physical life, as it is called, has been reached. In him we see characteristics of all that is below him in the creative scale, and from this we naturally conclude that he has arisen from all that is below him. It may be, that even his individuality could be traced as a stream of life descending down through the eons of time and creative changes to the lowest microbe; or, it may be that the species have always been the same species; individuals the same individuals, with power of unfoldment; and, that the end of each species is still a higher one, reaching up into the spiritual, to some place in the summer land, and crowned with immortality.

We don't know; but we believe all life below man, returns to the impersonal elements; that man is the end, the consummation or focal point of all below him; that he has but one mind; that it has grown to be what it is on earth, by being infilled and rounded out into form by its transition into matter; that matter is only another name, designating mind; and that the sum of the activities of the molecules of the body, through the economics and purposes of life, go into their own conservation and elevation, by building up a form—an image in perspective of that form and intelligence to which the substratum of all intelligence tends, and will forever be found as an individual working its way onward and upward as a part of the plan and purpose of all creation. It matters not that the shell is returned to the earth.

Nature is profuse in her work; how many perfect and imperfect life germs? how much wasted pollen? how many failures to one success along the line of evolution? and how many futile efforts in language, thought and deed, but all tending to the perfection of the ideal. But, all are necessary to reach perfection; they are all corollaries, whose activities are no longer needed when the ideal is consummated; the ideal remembers them as childish efforts in the vortex of evanescent forces of which one in a million penetrated the circle, that was destined to roll on forever as an automaton, self-sustaining and immortal.

Let me draw a picture of the evolution of life, the source of which, the reader may find between the lines.

In the dark arcanum of nature, I see a stream of moving particles; they are too large for atoms, they are molecules; these small bodies are without beginning, and they have no ending; they dwell in the immensity of space, where time is not counted and where light is perpetual, because they are the source of all light, life and intelligence. They are always in motion, because they are the origin of motion, or motion itself with every attribute of action.

They are always flowing outward from their veiled recesses, and are continually seeking expression by a process of infolding themselves upon each other, and making a roll whose involutions contain every property of life and matter necessary to life and personality. This we will call an ovum, and an expression for the first time, in what is known as matter; yet, because it can be seen now, does not mean that it contains anything different from what it did contain before their aggregation and involution into the roll that we now call a bioplasm. This bioplasm is fed from the forces of nature, like that of its own, until it arises into form and becomes transposed into the kind it was destined to assume. It springs forth from these realms to another, and laughs in a world overflowing in songs and wails, of flowers and thorns, and clear running brooks and muddy streams. It now begins to make a page in the history of man; the sheet is hung out and the world's history is written upon it; it may be full, or the footprints may be few; however the sheet is spread and the prints of time are written, and its experience is taken. But while this sheet is being unrolled at one end; when the evolution begins from its unfoldment, it begins to infold at the other, and the latter is as large as the former and more perfect indeed, is the last, for it is made from the best of the sheet, the essence of its infolded beginning.

As time goes on this sheet becomes old and worn; its freshness is gone, and its brilliancy faded; it has served its purpose, but the footprints, yea, every rustle of leaf, every song and sound, and idea of thought from the earth or spheres are recorded within; they are safely stored in the last involution; the one that arose from the first, that came from the world of spirit, to serve this new being that arose from the old. But the time has now come in the order of creation for this sheet to be torn from its folds, and it falls to the ground as a chrysalis; the more perfect involution arising anon, amid the greater scintillations from a myriad of suns.

STARTLING QUERY.

Is Materialization Produced by Hypnotism?

I clip the following from the Youth's Companion of January 16, 1902:

"Wonderful stories are told of the powers of the Hindu fakirs. Careful attention to their tricks has not discovered their secret with any certainty; but Capt. James Parker, the English traveler, who has just returned from a tour of India, gives it as his belief that hypnotism is the means by which they accomplish their most startling illusions. One incident which he describes seems to bear out his view.

"The trick which is acknowledged to be the greatest of these Hindu mystic performances, says Captain Parker, and the one that has been described by trustworthy persons too often to be doubted, is the one in which the fakir throws a ball of twine into the air above him, until it disappears from sight. The loose end of the string he holds in his hand, and after the boy assistant has climbed up the string until he, too, is out of sight, the fakir himself follows, with a knife between his teeth.

"The spectators, surprised when both boy and man climb out of sight, are horrified when the boy's severed head, arms and legs, followed by the trunk, fall to the ground, and the man slides down close behind. Their astonishment is increased when the fakir gathers the severed members and restores the boy to life.

"Well, I saw this performance once, and once I didn't see it; and the latter experience was more wonderful than the other. I had some London friends visiting me, and after having left them for a few minutes on the veranda of my bungalow, I saw, as I was returning, the same fakir and his assistant, whom I had seen perform the trick, standing about forty feet in front of my friends, apparently preparing to begin a performance. As I was about as far behind the natives as my friends were in front of them, and had not been observed, I stood quietly where I was.

"The man placed a drawn knife between his teeth, took the usual ball of twine in his right hand, made a motion as if throwing it into the air, and then stood perfectly quiet. My friends on the veranda were looking into the upper air with astonishment on their faces, which in a minute turned to a look of horror as their eyes came back to the ground. In another minute their countenances lighted up with pleasure, and they applauded roundly.

"They could not say enough about the wonderful performance they had seen, and they were astonished beyond measure when I told them I had been as near the fakir as they, and had seen nothing of what had so wonderfully impressed them.

"If that was not hypnotism, what was it?"

In line with the foregoing was an article which went the rounds of the great dailies East and West about ten years ago, telling the experience of a couple of "globe trotting" American artists in India. They saw the trick above described performed, and just as the boy had commenced to climb the small rope, one of them took a snap shot at him with a kodak, which was subsequently developed. The papers contained a picture of the scene as the artist saw it, in which the fakir is represented as standing with his arms raised, and the boy as a short distance up the rope; while in the picture as the kodak saw it, there is no boy and no rope—nothing but the fakir with his arms extended. This trick and others equally astounding, are being done every day in India, and it has been so for ages. Hundreds of hard-headed skeptical English officers, soldiers, sailors and travelers have seen them, and while they know that, as a matter of fact, they cannot be real, yet they are willing to swear that they never saw anything plainer in their lives. Now if the senses of such men can be so easily and so absolutely deceived; is it not possible, and perhaps probable, that those persons who think they have seen the materialized forms of their deceased friends, are in like manner deceived?

OUR PREMIUMS. THE.. DIVINE PLAN.. EIGHT REMARKABLE BOOKS.

Every Subscriber to the Progressive Thinker Reaps the Benefit of the Divine Plan.

We send many of our books by express. If you do not receive your order promptly by mail, inquire at the express office. If not there, notify us at once.

"A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," a most remarkable book, will be our leading feature until June 1, 1902, and will be the only one of the eight Divine Plan books sent out for 25 cents.

If you order only one book, and that one be the "Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," the price is 50 cents. If you order two books, and neither of them the "Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," the price of each one is 45 cents.

Any three of the eight Books you may order, Price $1.10.

Any four of the eight Books you may order, Price $1.50.

Any five of the eight Books you may order, Price $1.80.

Any six of the eight Books you may order, Price $2.10.

Any seven of the eight Books you may order, Price $2.35.

Lastly all of the eight Valuable Books here announced are sent out all postage prepaid, for $2.50—a price never offered before by any other publisher.

Read This Carefully Before Remitting.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and their price, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

These eight books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printer's art, will be furnished to our subscribers for $2.50, a price which modern machinery and enterprise has rendered possible. Sending out these books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, inview of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter.

REMARKABLE OFFER.

EIGHT REMARKABLE BOOKS FOR $2.50.

The Progressive Thinker one year and the eight Divine Plan books, $3.50.

In order to assist in forming a Spiritual and Occult Library in every Spiritualist's home, these eight valuable books, substantially and elegantly bound in cloth, are furnished to our subscribers for $2.50. We are able to do this, from the fact that the authors make no charge for the vast amount of labor bestowed on these works, and which extended over many years. That is why you are getting these intensely interesting books for the price you do. We are only carrying out the Divine Plan, inaugurated only by The Progressive Thinker. There are thousands of our subscribers who have no Spiritualist or Occult library, and this inducement is offered in order that they may commence forming one at once, and thus keep in line with the advancing procession. The postage on the above books and expense of mailing is about 95 cents, hence you are receiving them at an exceedingly low price—simply the result of modern enterprise combined with a desire to do good.

"After Her Death. The Story of a Summer." By Lilian Whiting. No mind that loves spiritual thought can fail to be fed and delighted with this book. Beautiful spiritual thought, combining advanced ideas on the finer and ethereal phases of Spiritualism, leading the mind onward into the purer atmosphere of exalted spiritual truth. A book for the higher life. For sale at this office. Price, cloth $1.

"Right Living." By Susan H. Wixon. The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principle of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in Children's Lyceum. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. Cloth $1 For sale at this office.

"Poems of Progress." By Lizzie Doten. In this volume, this peerless poet of Spiritualism may be read in her varied moods, "from grave to gay, from lively to severe." It is a book to be treasured and richly enjoyed by all who love genuine poetry, and especially by Spiritualists. The volume is tastily printed and bound. Price $1.

OCCULT MYSTERIES.

HYPNOTISM NOW USED IN NEW YORK SCHOOLS.

Dr. R. Osgood Mason Tells of the Marvelous Effects on Children.

Dr. R. Osgood Mason, member of the Academy of Medicine and author of "Telepathy and the Subliminal Self," "Hypnotism in Therapeutics, Education and Reform," etc., gives the following exclusive interview to the Sunday World.

He tells of the marvellous effects of hypnotism as used on New York school children to-day, and relates some remarkable cures and results in the cases of those of tender years as well as of adults.

Hypnotism is certainly a powerful factor in education. The very young even are susceptible to its influence, and I have succeeded in employing it in many cases where teachers have failed by all ordinary educational methods.

Hypnotism as a means of education is receiving more serious attention of teachers to-day—especially in the cases I mention—than is generally supposed. For instance, there are many children brought to me whose parents say: "Doctor, my child cannot remember anything; what ordinary children grasp with ease he experiences the greatest difficulty in learning."

"Our boy, eight years old," says another, "shows vicious tendencies, and has even taken to cigarette smoking. We have tried everything, even using the harshest means, but all is of no avail."

Now, here are two cases, radically different, where hypnotism may be of use. It is surprising, but some very remarkable "cures" have been effected by hypnotism among children in these and similar situations.

STRANGE EFFECT ON CHILDREN.

To give you a few notes from actual cases:

The names of the patients must, of course, be withheld, but each case is a bona-fide one.

Case 1—Her parents three or four years ago brought to me a young girl who, by the way, is now a prominent teacher in one of our public schools. This young lady was very fond of reading history and the best novels, but when it came to concentrating her mind on any one study or series of studies it seemed impossible to achieve anything. "The lessons," as her parents said, "went in one ear and came out of the other."

If she learned a lesson at home she forgot it as soon as she reached the class-room—her mind was a blank. She could write good compositions, but it was impossible for her to read them aloud in class.

Special teachers had to be engaged to instruct her, as she was destined, so her parents said, for entrance to the Normal College. All these teachers gave up in despair.

The girl was brought to me on March 30. Her examinations were to come off the following May.

I put the patient in a quiet hypnotic sleep, without loss of consciousness. Her eyes closed, and she lapsed into a peaceful subjective condition.

HYPNOTISM AN EDUCATOR.

I suggested to her that her memory would be improved; that she would be able to concentrate her mind on her studies; that she would lose her timidity and abnormal self-consciousness, and would be able to stand before the class and recite.

The girl was kept in this hypnotic state for half an hour at each treatment, and six treatments were administered.

On May 25 she came up for preliminary examination. Much to the surprise of everyone she passed with a mark of 70. In the following month she came up for final examination and entered the Normal College with a percentage of 88. As I have said, she is now a full-fledged teacher, and one of the best in the service at that.

Another case where hypnotism was used as a direct educational influence was that of a woman who experienced the greatest difficulty in spelling correctly. When she wished to write a letter she planted herself beside the dictionary and had to look at nearly every word. It was really pitiful.

This woman had been a sleep-walker, often putting herself in embarrassing and perilous situations.

I first treated her for somnambulism, curing the sleep-walking habit by one suggestion. I then attempted to remedy the defect in spelling. This was a more difficult task.

After placing her in a hypnotic condition I suggested this: "The correct form of every word you wish to write is in your mind because you can read. Now, when in doubt as to the spelling of any word do not try to think of its spelling; you will become passive and an impression of the correct word will come to you. You will write it without doubting or looking in the dictionary to see if it be correct."

In four treatments such progress had been made that she wrote me a four-page letter, none of the words of which was incorrectly spelled.

But this was not all. Her language had been painfully ungrammatical. She omitted her final "g s" and was ignorant of the commonest use of verbs and nominatives. In six hypnotic treatments these grammatical deficiencies were obliterated.

FOR JUVENILE TERRORS.

It is usually supposed that very young children are not amenable to hypnotism. But this is a fallacy. Not long ago a little girl, aged five years, was brought to me to be cured of a species of night-terror. Every night she used to awake screaming and saying that a black man was in the room trying to get her.

I placed the child in a chair in front of me, and putting my hands on the little one's shoulders, told her to look straight at a trinket held near her face. I quieted her with gentle passes and soothing touches.

Soon she was in the subjective condition. I then suggested in a sort of singing manner that when night came she would go to sleep, that the black man would be seen no more, and that she would have no frightful dreams.

The treatment was effective. The child has never since seen the black man, and but one treatment was necessary.

Another child who came under my care was seven years old. He was afraid of the least pain, and was a consummate coward and "crybaby."

I placed this child in a chair and put him into the hypnotic condition in the manner I have just mentioned. I found it very difficult to secure his attention at first, but soon got him in a quiet, subjective sleep. I then suggested that he would be a brave boy from that time onward; that he would not allow the other children to treat him badly; that he would stand up for his rights and would no longer be a whimpering "crybaby."

After three or four treatments, during which the same suggestions were impressively made, the child became a changed being. His manner among his playmates was assertive, almost aggressive. He never cried from being teased and he stuck up for his rights in a way that astonished his companions, who soon learned to respect him.

A CURE FOR CIGARETTE HABIT.

The curing of the cigarette habit by means of hypnotism is almost too well recognized now to need any confirmation of mine. I have boys brought to me, from eight to sixteen years of age, confirmed slaves of tobacco. I place these patients in a hypnotic state, suggest to them that tobacco is a vile thing and that they will abandon it.

If the "cigarette fiend" be a veteran I begin by saying, "You will smoke only ten cigarettes to-morrow." Then, at the next treatment, "You will smoke but five cigarettes to-day," gradually lessening the number, until I get it down to about one a week. After that the idea of smoking cigarettes at all becomes displeasing, and soon the former cigarette fiend abhors the idea of smoking. I have known such patients to actually become sick at the sight of tobacco.

Hundreds of persons come to me whose memories are defective, will power lost, power of concentration lacking, and who have contracted bad habits. In these cases usually all other means save hypnotism have been exhausted.

I find hypnotism is a powerful influence in education if properly used, and I have no doubt that before very many years have elapsed it will be in use as an adjunct to all education requiring special teaching of any kind.

As to the use of hypnotism in schools and reformatories, I might say I think it is as powerful an influence, if properly employed, as are many other methods of education. Why should we throw away so valuable a means of instruction?

I do not hesitate to say that in many, if not most cases where the conditions are more or less abnormal much can be accomplished by suggestion, even without the full hypnotic condition. Just the passive condition should be induced, where opposition, antagonism and resistance on the part of the child are removed. Suggestions are then received and become effective, where other means would be useless.

I am no miracle-monger. The Svengali business has done nothing but harm and brought discredit upon a most valuable means of treating abnormal conditions.

I look upon suggestion, either in the full hypnotic condition, or simply as a passive state, as decidedly educational.

"I'LL HAUNT YOU."

Citizens Frightened at a Specter.

Alma, Neb., March 22.—The peace of mind of the people of this city has been rudely disturbed during the past two weeks and all because of a ghost. Not the customary white appareled specter of fiction and precedent, but a black-garbed apparition.

The story is vouched for by half a dozen of the best men of the place, men whose freedom from superstition would naturally class them among the doubters. But they doubt no more.

One of these men is Congressman Shallenberger, who represents the Fifth District of Nebraska at Washington. Another is H. S. Wetherald, editor of the Alma Journal. Still another is Frank Griggsby, the leading carriage dealer of the place.

The specter first made its appearance some three weeks ago. Mr. Wetherald was sitting at his office window working in the evening. The air outside was balmy and the window was up a few inches. Without warning his kerosene lamp was blown out. He looked up and saw standing just outside the tall figure of a woman in black. With true Western gallantry he proceeded to raise the window.

Mr. Wetherald says he kept his eye fixed upon the woman's form, but no sooner had he thrown the window up than she disappeared—melted away, as he expressed it. Suspecting a trick, he said nothing. A few evenings later, just as he stepped out of his office, the woman passed him, evidently in a great hurry. She had not gone more than thirty feet than—whisk, she had gone, disappeared in thin air. Mr. Wetherald confided in no one until a day or two later he met Congressman Shallenberger, who had made a flying trip home to look after some private business.

Shallenberger, in the course of the conversation, made some cautious inquiries about a strange woman in black. Then they held mutual confession. The Congressman said he had finished his work at the bank about ten o'clock and had started home. As he passed the first alley crossing he felt a sudden rush of air, a premonition of something uncanny.

DARTS OUT OF ALLEY.

The next moment a black-garbed figure, that of a woman, heavily veiled, darted out of the alley, passed him with a long, swinging stride and ten paces ahead of him vanished completely from sight. The street was but dimly lighted, but the vanishing occurred in plain sight of the banker. He says she could not have turned to right or to left, and the only way she could have gone was upward.

Within a week the "black ghost," as it is now known, had been seen by a dozen different men, and ghost-layers began the task of trapping the specter. It was at first suspected that it was a trick played upon one of the first to see the apparition by his wife.

WIFE SAID, "I'LL HAUNT YOU."

The man had been twice married. He promised his first wife on her death bed that he would not marry again. She told him she would haunt him if he did. He forgot both promise and threat inside of eighteen months. His second venture was not a happy one, and some of the townsfolk thought No. 2 might be trying to play even with him by living up to No. 1's threat.

But the woman was absolved from suspicion by convincing evidence within three nights. The ghost was seen by three young men at a time when the woman was known to be within doors at home.

Some of the scoffers have sought to catch the figure, but the most rapid pursuit fails. She vanishes before any one can come within twenty feet of her. Wiley Schultz, a deacon in the Methodist Church, was one of those who pooh-poohed the stories. Last Thursday night Schultz was pursued by the woman. He frankly confesses that the sight was too much for him and he took to his heels. Frank Griggsby, the implement man, is reticent about his adventure, but his experience is summed up in his explanation that the curious thing about it is that if it is pursued it will retreat, if one runs from it it will pursue.

The favorite pastime of the ghost seems to be to suddenly rush past some pedestrians. Homeward bound at unusual hours, evolving itself from some dark corner and vanishing after going a dozen paces. The figure is described as unmistakably that of a woman. The face is evidently veiled, as no one has ever boasted of having seen its countenance. No ghostly moans or rattlings, no words of any character does it mutter. No special person has been singled out for its visitations.

From a joking attitude towards the story the town has gradually come to accept it as gospel truth. Those who confess to possessing superstitious fears frankly admit belief in its genuineness. Others who feel inclinel to scoff offer no explanation. Too many have seen the woman to make it possible that it is a hoax. One man claims to have seen the ghost apparelled in white, but he has been hooted down as a sensation monger. All other stories agree as to her general appearance, habits and disappearances.

One theory solemnly brought forward is that it is the apparition of a well-known woman who died recently after a long, painful illness. The explanation is that she is still suffering and her unquiet spirit wanders back to her old home.—Chicago American.

PSYCHIC RESEARCH.

As Connected with Gospel Miracles.

Strange flotsam tosses on the sea of time. A Buffalo minister and a doctor of the same city, working together, have made a raft out of a lot of differing pieces of it, which they had collected, and boldly push out upon the unknown. Their effort in this curious book must be taken with mingled respect, amusement, consternation and hope.

The fact is that, since the old orthodox ship of theology went to pieces on the rock of evolution, there have been many astonishing fragments floating about. In the genuine progress of the science of psychology, the youngest of the sciences, there is much that indicates the rapprochement of science and religion, inevitable possibly, in the story of evolution in that larger sense in which Agassiz understood the word, even while materialists were impatient of his denial of materialism. But the cheerful way in which the present authors, an M. D. and a Rev., combine what science and religion they have and make assertions, is productive of great hilarity at times in the perusal of this well-intentioned yet often ridiculous volume. Our friends offer the world this "Study of the Evidences of the Gospel's Superphysical Features in the Light of the Established Results of Modern Psychical Research."

Now, one of these "established results" they declare to be the materialization of spirits by psychic force. They have seen "real folks" come out of cabinets and walk around, just as perfect physically as if they had, like Topsy, "growed," instead of spouting full-grown from the brow of Jove, as represented by some able and intelligent "medium." They know that they have not been tricked, just as many people who hear of the messages Dr. Savage has received from the dead through a Boston medium are sure that he has not been fooled. As none of these "results" is "established" in the scientific world, the book stands on rather shaky pins, to change the simile.

Psychical phenomena are now certainly arousing much popular attention; and the books of T. J. Hudson, which these authors abundantly quote, are valuable in showing that the laws of the mind are never defied in any of the once wholly unexplained marvels that from earliest times have met or puzzled the thinker or the credulous. But Hudson's books, although serving their purpose, are by no means conclusive from the scientific point of view, however satisfactory to the religious mind. The present writers believe that ten years hence a demonstrative work like theirs will be superfluous, for by that time religious thinkers will be looking upon super physical phenomena as commonplaces in Christian evidence. They believe in Christ as the great teacher and example of the pure use of psychic force; and they demonstrate to their own satisfaction how common are forms of this force at present used and more or less understood.

The "modern miracles" of telepathy, subliminal memory, subliminal intuition, telekinesis and psycho-chemicalization are discussed at length after a study of the old verification of history and a summary of the "new data." In waving aside "question-begging materialism," the authors give us an amusing description of the "leaven of materialism," even yet "powerful enough to discount in many minds the effect of the historical argument," a leaven that "went forth conquering and to conquer; holding in its thrall the chief minds whose studies were directed upon purely physical research":

With physicality in the zenith of thought, Mind went down into a dismal nadir; an assemblage of chemical elements of which ideas formed mere "secretions"—somewhat as bile is a secretion of the liver. In the brazen glare of the physical, the superphysical became a pale spectre, a dream of the superstitious who still clave to shattered idols.

These good gentlemen make some generalizations which may turn out to be true working theories in the young science of psychology. If only they would put them forth as hypotheses, instead of "results" and "conclusions." For example, this is of interest in their discussion of spirit in the realm of life, in a chapter which shows a smattering of Swedenborg (who bye-the-bye is an inexhaustible advance storehouse of all the new "new" thought). They make a lively variation on Faraday's great generalization in regard to force, and say "that in every phase or form of life the fundamental principle is superphysical or spiritual."

But they mix things all up again by pleasantly declaring that, as Christ had perfect spiritual intuition and the rest of mankind have but fitful glimpses of some aspect of spiritual truth, and as Christ holds in his grasp the keys to the kingdom of those who "keep the soul open and receptive to the light and life which come from the Father of Spirits," "thus we see that the key to the spiritual world is telepathy and clairvoyance."

That "we see" is all right for the two gentlemen in Buffalo, if they like; but telepathy and clairvoyance, as keys, will not do for all mankind to open all the mysteries just yet.

We do not deny that this book deserves the attention of people who are approaching the study of psychic phenomena from the modern standpoint. There are good things said in it, possibly true things, that are not yet believable in psychology, as, but yesterday wireless telegraphy was unbelievable in the practical world. The trouble with the book is its assumption of demonstrating with finality things that are mostly in the air.—New York Mail and Express.

NEW METHODS.

Spiritualism's Message to Humanity.

I have been for many years a staunch Spiritualist, with a never-flagging interest in its philosophy and phenomena, and the various methods whereby they are brought to the attention of an inquiring public. I have observed that many times our societies fall into a rut out of which it is almost impossible to lift them, because of a tiresome sameness that pervades their meetings year after year, or from an evident listlessness, or at best, mechanical effort on the part of the workers whose enthusiasm has seemed to have died out and left them without that keen appreciation of the needs of the present hour, which is so essential to success.

I have been much interested of late in the efforts of Mrs. Alice C. Barry, who for the past two months has been doing a very acceptable work for the Spiritual Association at Columbia Hall, 1325 Columbia avenue, this city. Instead of the regular afternoon lecture, she proposed to hold an instruction class whereby any and all who were interested could ask questions pertaining to mediumship, and the spiritual philosophy and phenomena. From the first, the class has included not only the congregation but many strangers. The plan was so successful that the answering of questions has been made a feature of the evening meetings also. The lady goes at her work heart and soul, as though it was a pleasure rather than a task, and while the answers are such as must appeal to the intelligent mind, there are times when she paints the most beautiful word pictures, portraying so much of love and sympathy for humanity, that Spiritualism seems large enough (which it is) to include the whole race, from the sin-stained soul, groveling in the gutter, to the highest archangel.

Another pleasing feature is her inspirational poems. An interesting scene occurred a few Sundays ago. Captain Keffer, the president of the First Association of Spiritualists, who is a fine rapping medium, was present and sitting upon the platform while Mrs. Barry was giving her poem, the subject of which was Spirit Rappings. The raps were distinctly heard by all present, responding to the beautiful sentiment of the poem.

We need to infuse more of life, of soul, of fraternal feeling into our meetings to make them successful.

Spiritualism has a message of the highest import to humanity. In spite of the fact that, in the first fifty years of its existence, it has been hampered by many crudities that are the inevitable accompaniment of all new movements, it has burst its shell like the butterfly, its chrysalis and emerged into the clear sunlight of a day that can never grow dim while any soul on earth is seeking for the knowledge it can impart. It feeds the hungry soul with the bread of life. It stills the wild cry of the bereaved mother by giving her back her lost little one. It has a message of hope for the weary and heavy laden, the toiling millions. It also has a message of warning to the oppressors of the oppressed. In its onward march it has walked hand in hand with science and aided in overturning the idols of theology. It was born in the land of freedom, the land of the Stars and Stripes, and it will not have fulfilled its mission until all the children of earth are mentally and spiritually free. ALLEN T. PARKER.

"God's Smiles, and a Look into His Face."

This is the attractive title of a splendid story by Mrs. Maggie Olive Jordan, of San Antonio, Texas.

One of her characters is made to say that she likes flowers, "because they are God's most beautiful smiles." The simile will awaken a response in many minds—for flowers so often likened to angels' faces, can also reflect God's smiles. This book is a philosophical romance, of more discoursive make-up, than the average novel-lover will appreciate; but it will appeal to every seeker after knowledge and lover of spiritual ideals. The author starts by quoting:

"Oh, for the simple truth to know,
Whence we come and whither we go."

This couplet gives a clear inkling of the search made by some of the characters. Spirit communion and Spiritualism are given much prominence. Nature is discussed and God is exposed as a law or force immanent and discoverable. Commentaries upon prevailing thought and dogmatic religions are frequent.

The book is really a healthful addition to our Spiritualist literature; and has been criticised and admired as a book combining philosophy, religion and occultism with romance.

There is so much to say of this book that I shall certainly use it somewhere as a lecture topic. Its arguments will help every student and be a valuable book to hand an early inquirer into the philosophy of nature as related to the occult. It is the first attempt of Mrs. Jordan—but will not be her only contribution to the literature that every Spiritualist will appreciate. She writes daily (as the spirit may urge her) and has another human and idealistic story ready, also a large collection of really meritorious poems. She is a woman of spirituelle character, and is a Spiritualist. She writes entirely under spirit control. This power has overwhelmed her and she has given herself to the "labor of love," trusting implicitly in her inspirers. Thus the spirit is working through mortals and proves that no opposition nor calumny can stop their efforts to help the world's people. "God's Smiles" will bring good cheer and higher ideals to each of its readers and will show how much we need to live a higher and better life on earth. Its worth to the young is manifold—and I trust each Spiritualist library will possess a copy. Published by F. Tennyson Neely Co., New York. This firm has freely assumed this publication and deserves that the book shall be well circulated.

Mrs. Kates and myself lately enjoyed the hospitality of Mrs. Jordan, and we feel that "God's Smiles" reflected in the woman, should illumine her readers, as indeed she brought good cheer to the spiritual pilgrims who visited her sunny home. G. W. KATES.

NATURE'S BALANCES.

A Study of the Constitution of Things.

In the physical universe the forces are balanced; otherwise the worlds and suns would not follow in their appointed tracks. Unopposed, gravitation would pull each globe to the center of its system, into its sun, and unchecked direct motion would send them away into "chaos and old night." Equality of these forces wheels them in circles with varying levels of their orbits, so that there is no danger with grade crossing collisions. Without lubrication of axles or cog-wheels, they move on in silence. The fabled song of the morning stars over the completeness of these great movements must have been as imaginary as the creaking of gudgeons where none exist. These motions are nature's greatest balance.

There are evidences on our little globe that the inclination of its axes was not always the same as now, of an "ice age," of upheavals and sinkings in its crust not yet wholly abated, showing that it has taken ages to construct it and that the equilibrium now attained was a thing of growth. The astronomers tell us, also, that world-building is still in progress.

The inclination of the earth's axis toward the level of its yearly track or route around the sun, together with the law that makes the sun's direct rays more effective in heat and its indirect rays less—though the latter travel a shorter distance to us in winter than in summer—give us back such a balance of seasons as this operating force and position of the globe effect.

The chemical constituents of the air we breathe, of the water we drink, and of the oceans that surround the continents and islands, are balanced and adjusted to sustain animal and vegetable life. Equations here, as always, are equal. It is said, too, by those who look wise enough to know, that the waters and lands are duly proportioned for the greatest good. Though the fishes have much the largest domain, less water would give less rain-fall on the land and more barrenness. Animal life as now constituted, without water would be impossible.

On the life side of these great equations there have been adjustments and adaptations to such laws and conditions on the other as must needs be inexorable and unvarying, showing the same inherent immanent Power operating on both sides in the adjustment. The genus homo makes his first appearance naked, and fixed conditions make clothing necessary; and he clothes himself to match the temperature. If he is one of the most helpless infants, more to learn with the then dormant but inherent capacity to learn it, does he not have the most tender and lasting mother loves, in his slow growth is he not provided with a longer parental guardianship? In the care of the lower animals inherent mother-love, while nearly as strong in infancy, is only proportioned to the quicker maturity of the species and is adequate. Mankind adapt themselves, though slowly, to their fixed environment. This adaptation is slowest in its movement, on the moral side of the adjustment; perhaps because it takes more wisdom on that side to discover the penalties of nature's violated law. These penalties are the pushers, and higher and higher ideals lead on toward an approximate balance.

Who dares to say that this gradual adjustment of the great scales in which all things are weighed, is not a prophecy of a still nearer balance in an infinite future? That these forces unceasing in their operation must produce their natural effect on the living that come after us; and if the dead live again and nature does not reverse herself, these factors will not cease to operate?

Nature in its inexorableness in many of its phases, seems cruel and unpitying. It does not stop to count the wrecks of its whirlwinds; the ocean's maw swallows ships and navies despite the skill of navigators, and its only tears are the rain-drops which are often copious enough to drown. The plagues that infest whole regions of ignorant and unsanitary peoples are contagious, while health is made to depend partly on constitutional inheritance of physique and more largely on our luck and ability to avoid these huge causes of pain and death. The contagion of good health comes slowly and chiefly from contemplating the destructive effects of its cruel opposite-disease. We may say nature's lessons are hard to learn and its penalties severe, but its severest penalties are most effective, and she has no other known remedies.

As far as our superficial examination can reach, in skimming over the verge of the infinite, in our allotted little space, we see causes and effects in an unvarying order. From this outside comparison, their constant and balanced relation we may fairly conclude that the same order extends throughout the vast unknown. Unless nature rubs herself out and inaugurates a new program, it must be so. Nature is the only constant thing we know; the only thing that balances its unbalanced accounts and regulates all its irregularities. It governs all things, includes all things, extends throughout all things, immanent, omnipotent, wiser and more benevolent than we can guess. It is God. Personal if we so call it, but at one and inseparable from nature.

These causes and effects in nature, the balancing of goods and ills in what is called the moral world—which, so far as we know, may be necessary for any human knowledge of what is, since comparison and contrast seem the only way we can measure and gain an understanding of things, the unvarying rule in the kingdom of morals and physics, though seen from our low-down point of observation are the surest and only index we have, that there are no misquits in the entire universe.

When we get to the limit of our sight and draw on our imagination for facts, we can fairly follow our pointers in the known; all else is irrational.

We question the utility of things that we do not know enough to see the use of. Pain is cruel, in our vocabulary, but its uses are seen. It is the captain of the guard that stands watch over the citadel of life. We wonder, too, why Mother Nature did not make us all angels in the beginning, if that was her final intent; from our low-down standpoint it seems it would have been so easy, for such potent power. Why could we not have begun our perpetual hallelujah songs when the morning stars began their fabled chorus? Why begin with earth clods, and why, as we erroneously conceive, turn the devil loose upon the first (alleged) human pair, so recently fashioned from dirt that they could not have yet learned obedience to any rule, to plague and everlastingly jeopardize the living and the dead? But casting the latter query aside as being based as fable, and continuing with a better basis; why could there not be good and doers of good without evil; good absolute and independent of its antagonist; good with no good to be done, no evil to correct or contend against? Why need there be hope and charity? If good consists in doing good, and can only be known by such occupation, then evil furnishes its only field of operation. If inoperative, good is a misnomer and no good at all, and out of evil comes its only opportunity to act and make itself manifest, it would seem that the two opposites were necessary to each other. Before we get far with our guesses in such case, we must answer the question, What would the doing of good consist of if there were no evil in the world? Neither hope nor charity could exist with nothing to hope for and no recipients of charity.

The magnitude of this vast plan, so perfect in its discovered outlines, discloses a power too great to be balked in its intent by devils or men, or any mixture of the two; too big a thing to justify our petty criticism. Devils (if they exist and men are part of nature's great output, and if they could by their opposition hinder a more intended beneficent order of things, and work out the moral ruin of the world, we must conclude that in this, the most essential part to us, there was lacking either power or beneficence in the make-up to produce a better condition.

Before firing off our little pop-guns at the existing order we ought to do our best to get in harmony with it. Mankind from nature and environment find their greatest enjoyment in the change called growth, which when taken in its widest sense includes all moral improvements. It is the only index of profit. This improvement could not be made if begun at a maximum or perfect state. We might turn our imagination loose and consider for a moment the utter deadness of our race with no evil to combat—equivalent to nothing to do, nothing to gain; no sickness and no further acquisition of kowledge or virtue; then judge, from what we know of how monotony kills enjoyment, of its do-nothing effect. We might figure out, if we would, the difference in such condition between ourselves and the stumps. The faculty of comparison by which all knowledge is gained would have to die from non-use. Without the contrasts of good and evil, light and darkness, joy and pain, sorrow and happiness, heat and cold, and the long list of balanced opposites or contrasts in life by which we measure and know things, we should find ourselves, perchance, in a fool's paradise; in an eternal and unbearable monotony of sameness, a condition which it is hoped and believed the angels do not have to endure in the upper kingdom, where infinite perfection is, doubtless, still kept in the far distance for their good.

To support these conclusions further; by looking a little below the surface we shall find a law of exact compensation operating throughout, as imitated in the compensating balance of a watch. Evil policies in government slowly work their own cure when their operation discloses their defects. Protective tariffs, when induced by a scarity of manufactures in a new land, selfishly kept in operation by the recipients of the bounty afforded, fill the vacuum by their stimulus to production, turn scarcity into abundance, and become their own antidote. So throughout the whole realm of morals, the penalties of evil are corrective; even the things ill meant by us do not result as intended. Nature exacts the last penny in keeping her accounts. The millionaire's appetite for gain becomes cloyed and he spreads again the millions like a Carnegie. We only see these balances by wisely considering final results. "The mills of the gods grind slow, but grind exceeding small" is old philosophy that should be more often recalled.

But why the grinding of these mills is so slow, is what puzzles us. Large movements are slow in the moral as well as the physical universe. We may wonder why nature does not make a three-year-old colt in a day, but with her fixed habits it takes three years.

The midgets, microbes and pestiferous insects are generated rapidly enough to keep us active in their suppression, and without activity we are naught. Without pests and ills we should at least lack the wisdom to overcome them. If it takes longer to build a city than to erect a smoke-house, and we as builders are as one of nature's factors, we may fairly conclude that nature as a whole is longer in accomplishing great results than in doing up the little details, because it takes greater work.

Though civilization makes slow progress, halting and retrogressing at times as if nature were loosening her hold to get a better grip, we need not be pessimistic when we consider from whence it has evolved. It is a long ways from a clod to a Shakspeare. Those who judge that life's compensations are too slow to be effective, must certainly not be counted with those who have adopted and are in love with the theory that all compensations—rewards and punishments, are to be dealt out infinitely in a future state; miscalled compensation, as nothing is great enough of a finite nature, to make a balancing offset. Such believers, at least, must consider delayed results most effective, but all other things rolled together would not make a sufficient weight to put in the other side of their scales to make them balance.

The geologist in the mountain upheavals of the rocks finds the periods of the earth's evolution. In the vestiges of animal life, extinct vestiges of animals that when alive Adam could not have named because he had not yet put in his appearance. That the "man age" when these vestiges had life, had not yet arrived, is proven by the fact that none of his remains are found with the remnants of previous animal life, though his remains are as lasting against the tooth of time as that of any animal of his size. The different species of different ages must have been each balanced by their environment, to have lived and by a changed environment to die and become extinct. These remnants of the past species are so numberless that had Adam been their cotemporary in life, and all added to those that came later and existed in the "man age," the naming of such an aggregate would have required a larger nomenclature to individualize them than has yet been invented. Our wonder as to where so young a man as he was got the extended vocabulary of names with which he checked off those he did name, had all that had been wiped out been added to his list, would be greatly increased.

If we believe "Whatever is, is right," it must be in the sense that whatever is was made to improve and grow better: that progress is only possible from less perfect to more perfect; that progress is happiness. Not that wrong is right in any sense but a necessary accompaniment of growth, and exists to be actively overcome by us.

A less strained imagination than that conjured up by the poet about the angel chorus on the first Sunday morning, might have heard the Great All-pervading, All-inherent Floor Manager's commanding call, to "Balance all and swing" in the dance of worlds.

What All the World's a-Seeking.

RALPH WALDO TRINE.

Each is building his world from within; thought is the builder; for thoughts are forces,—subtle, vital, irresistible, omnipotent,—and according as used do they bring power or impotence, peace or pain, success or failure.—From Title-page.

The above books are beautifully bound in gray-green raised cloth, stamped in deep old-green and gold, with gilt top. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

THE OTHER WORLD AND THIS.

A compendium of Spiritual Laws. No. 1, New White Cross Literature. By Augusta W. Fletcher. M. D. In this volume the author, in the thirty-nine chapters, discusses a wide variety of subjects pertaining to Spiritualism, from a spiritualistic standpoint. She evinces the powers of a trained thinker, both in matter of thought and fine literary style, and capability of thought expression. The subjects are well handled with conciseness and yet with clearness. It will prove a rich addition to any Spiritualist's library, and a most excellent book for any one seeking information concerning Spiritualism and its teachings. Price $1.50.

The Spiritual Wreath.

A collection of words and music for the choir, congregation and social circle. By S. W. Tucker. Comprises sixty or more gems of song. Price, 15 cents.

ASTRAL WORSHIP

By J. H. Hill, M.D. A valuable contribution to the current discussion of religious problems. The author by illustrations and a planisphere (a representation of the celestial sphere upon a plane with adjustable circles), traces most of the myths which lie at the base of Christianity to their origin in sun and star worship. The astronomical facts given possess great value, the illustrations rare and curious. The book is bound in only one style—heavy boards. Price $1.

The Christ Question Settled

Jesus, Man, Medium, Martyr. A symposium by W. E. Coleman, J. S. Loveland, Hudson Tuttle, Moses Hull, J. R. Buchanan, B. B. Hill, Rabbi I. M. Wise, Col. Ingersoll—and what the spirits say about it. By J. M. PEEBLES, M. D. Whether this book settles the question or not, it will be found eminently entertaining, and brings together a mass of evidence to establish the historical character of Jesus. A large volume. Price, cloth, $1.25.

Father Tom and the Pope

Or a Night at the Vatican. Written probably by Sir Samuel Ferguson. From Blackwood's Edinburg Magazine. This is a humorous account of a rollicksome visit to the Pope of Rome by Father Tom, an Irish priest, armed with a superabundance of Irish wit, two imperial quart bottles of Irish "poteen," and an Irish recipe for "conwounding" the same. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE TO-MORROW OF DEATH

Or the Future Life According to Science. By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French by S. R. Crockee. A very fascinating work. This fine volume might well have been entitled Spiritualism Demonstrated by Science. It is written in that peculiar interesting style in which French writers excel when they would popularize scientific subjects in adaptation to the needs of the general reader. The author says: "There is a true and respectable idea in Spiritualism," and regards as proved "the fact of communication between superhumans and the inhabitants of earth." Price, $1.50.

MAHOMET

His Birth, Character and Doctrine. By Edward Gibbon. This is No. 6 of the Library of Liberal Classics. It is conceded to be historically correct, and so exact and perfect in every detail as to be practically beyond the reach of adverse criticism. This work will be found intensely interesting. Price, 25 cents.

OUTSIDE THE GATES

and other tales and sketches. By a band of spirit intelligences, through the mediumship of Mary Thurston Shelhamer. An excellent work. Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

THE WORLD BEAUTIFUL.

Series one, two and three. By Lilian Whiting. Three choice volumes, each complete in itself, in which spirituality is related to everyday life in such a way as to make the world beautiful. Price, $1.00 each.

SPIRITUAL SONGSTER.

By Mattie E. Hull. Thirty-eight of Mrs. Hull's sweetest songs, adapted to popular music, for the use of congregations, circles and families. Price, 10 cents, or $7 per hundred.

INTERVIEWS WITH SPIRITS.

A real visit with friends on the other side of life, and a familiar talk. By spirit Samuel Bowles! Carrie E. S. Twing, Medium. Price 30 cents. For sale at this office.

A. SCHOPENHAUER ESSAYS.

Translated by T. B. Saunders. Cloth, 75 cents. "Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is; and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. This characteristic endows his style with a freshness and vigor which would be difficult to match in the philosophic writing of any country, and impossible in that of Germany."—Translator.

HARMONIES OF EVOLUTION,

The Philosophy of Individual Life, Based Upon Natural Science

As taught by modern masters of law. By Florence Huntley. An exceedingly interesting and distinctly valuable contribution to the literature of evolution, unfolding its laws from the deeper and clearer spiritual aspect, and indicating the defects of the Darwinian theory. Spiritualists and Materialists alike can gain much from its perusal. Price, finely bound in cloth, $2.

Why I Am a Vegetarian.

An address delivered before the Chicago Vegetarian Society. By J. Howard Moore. Price, 25 cents.

The Science of Spirit Return.

By Charles Dawbarn. A scientific rehearsal that is truly interesting. Price, 10 cents.

Why She Became a Spiritualist

Twelve Lectures by Abby A. Judson. This book should be read by every Spiritualist. Price, $1.00; postage 10 cents.

Out of the Depths Into the Light.

By Samuel Bowles; Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, medium. This is a very interesting little book and will be appreciated from start to finish by all who wish to gain spiritual information. Price, 25 cents.

THE DIAKKA.

The Diakka and Their Earthly Victims. By the Seer A. J. Davis. A very interesting and suggestive work. It is an explanation of much that is false and repulsive in Spiritualism, embodying a most important recent interview with James Victor Wilson, a resident of Summer Land. Price, 50 cents.

Views of Our Heavenly Home.

By Andrew Jackson Davis. A highly interesting work. Price, 75 cents. Postage 5 cents.

SPIRITUAL HARP

A collection of Vocal Music for the Choir, Congregation and Social Circles. By J. M. Peebles and J. O. Barrett; E. H. Bailey, Musical Editor. New edition. Culled from a wide field of literature with the most critical care, free from all theological bias, throbbing with the soul of inspiration, embodying the principles and virtues of the spiritual philosophy, set to the most cheerful and popular music (nearly all original) and adapted to all occasions, it is doubtless the most attractive work of the kind ever published. Its beautiful songs, duets and quartets, with piano, organ or melodeon accompaniment, adapted both to public meetings and the social circles. Cloth, $1.25; postage, 14 cents.

A Few Words About the Devil,

And other Essays. By Charles Bradlaugh. With the story of his life as told by himself, and the history of his parliamentary struggle. With portrait. Paper, 50c.

A Controverted Claim.

The following appeared in "The American Citizen," a Boston paper, a few weeks ago. It is from the pen of that critical student in ancient history, Wm. Henry Burr, Esq., of Washington D. C., to whom the literary world is indebted for many valuable facts which would have escaped observation but for his diligent research. He says:

"I found in a late number of the Boston Transcript the report of a lecture by the Rev. Wm. O'Brien Pardow, of New York, on 'The Bible,' from which I quote the following:

"The claim is made by Protestants that Martin Luther first translated the Bible into the German. To disprove this fallacy there exists to this day twenty-seven Bibles printed in German twenty years before Luther was born, one being in the Senatorial Library at Leipsic."

Luther was born November 10, 1483. The earliest printed Bible is said to have appeared between 1450 and 1455, which date is only conjectural. It was, of course, in Latin.

At the National Museum in Washington, D. C., is exhibited one of the twelve Coburger Latin editions of the Bible. It has no title page, catchwords, or initials. The initial letters of paragraphs are added by hand. On the top of the first page is written in ink: "Societatic Jesu Monachi," and in the middle of the page, "Approbata * * Canisius 1578." Canisius was a celebrated Jesuit missionary and scholar, the first of the order in Germany; and is said to have died in 1597.

No date of manuscripts or printed books prior to 1500 can be trusted. The early printed Bibles are undated. Luther was an Augustinian monk, twenty-one years of age, or older, when he first saw a Latin Bible. His translation of the New Testament is said to have been published in 1522, when he was about thirty-nine years of age. His Old Testament translation was published several years later. If there were Bibles printed in Germany twenty years before he was born, is it conceivable that he knew nothing of them?

There was no authorized edition of the Latin Vulgate Bible published until 1592, one hundred years after the discovery of America by Columbus.

Wicliff (sometimes spelled with two y's and one f), "the father of English prose," and "Morning Star of the Reformation," is doubtless a myth. He is said to have been born about the year 1334, and to have died in 1384. The quantity of literary work ascribed to him is prodigious. He is said to have translated portions of the Bible into English as early as 1382. His New Testament, based on the Latin Vulgate, was first published in 1731. John Leland, librarian of Henry VIII, ransacked the monasteries from 1533 to 1539, and could not find more than a cartload of books. He was England's first paleographer, and the first and only writer that alluded to the "Canterbury Tales" prior to the reign of Elizabeth, 1558-1603.

Librarian Leland says he saw few of the rumored Latin books of Wicliff, and says nothing about any English writings by him. The fabrication of Wicliff literature seems to have begun in the reign of Henry VIII. Dates were rarely given in early publications, and it was the policy of the monkish fabricators to assign as early dates to compositions as possible.

In 1816 a Douay Bible was printed at Dublin, with its unmerous notes and comments, under the direction of the priesthood, "corrected, revised and approved by Archbishop Troy." Its notes and comments offended the British Protestants. The Irish prelates were summoned before the parliament to answer for their work. They had to declare the book of no authority, because it was not sanctioned by the Pope or received by the whole church. The offensive notes and comments were doubtless the same as in my own Vulgate New Testament, reprinted in 1833 by American Protestants, and certified to be "an exact and faithful copy."

Resurrected African City.

Old earth is still giving up her concealed history of the past. Now it is over there in Africa, a veritable buried city, a la Pompeii. The excavations are at the modern city of Timgad in Algeria, anciently known as Thamugas. The boundaries of the ash-covered city have been laid bare on three sides. More than a hundred thousand square yards of earth were removed during the last year, exposing vast archaeological treasures, which, like the resurrected Italian city, places the world in rapport with a very remote age. A Roman mansion, magnificent in proportions and in construction, stands there perfect in all its parts, just as it was perhaps 2,000 years ago when it housed Sertius, its wealthy owner. The public baths, a fountain, a Byzantine basilica, with three aisles, a grand staircase leading to the upper part of a theater, a superb temple in marble, and eleven other buildings, with a vast collection of objects, such as arms, utensils for domestic uses, vases, etc., are there precisely as when entombed. Ancient gates to the city and numerous streets are already exposed to the light of day.

No report has yet reached us of the finding of any ancient literature. This may come in time; but in none of the buried and resurrected cities of the West has been found the literary treasures which seem common to the recovered cities on the Euphrates and Tigris.

Philosophy of the Permanent.

The following eloquent words we quote from a London exchange, where it appeared some time ago, with an entire lecture, from that brilliant orator, Rev. Dr. Roberts, of Kansas City, Mo. He says:

"The fundamental postulate of the philosophy of the permanent is that whatever is is, and always was, and always will be; that there was no beginning, and there will be no end; that God is not old, and was never young. The supreme fact of the universe is the fact of existence. What we look upon as change and variation, appearance and disappearance, are in no sense the essence of existence, but only incidental to, and not inimical to existence. The universe by a thousand tongues declares the supreme fact is the fact of being. To be or not to be is not the question. Not to be is unthinkable. Because we are childish we are blinded and beguiled by the circumstances of being, and we lose sight of the fact of being.

"Mutilation and change are but ministers and servants of life, not its destroyers, not its enemy. They are the method of the revelation of being. To be—there is nothing beyond, nothing higher than existence. Beyond the conception of being the human mind cannot pass; higher it cannot rise; lower it cannot descend. That is the supreme, the infinite, the universal fact. If we could once reach the firm conviction that being is the great fact of the universe, then time, change, age, the grave, death—all would become mere trivialties at which to smile.

"Time had no beginning, it can have no end, There was no yesterday. There can be no to-morrow. It is but an everlasting, infinite NOW. What we call time, the days, the years, are but variations by which the infinite "now" becomes manifest. They may come and go, or they may cease coming and going, but that now which they manifest will exist forever as it has always existed.

"The years are but the fringe of eternity's robe which we touch. They are the strands from which the planets, like shuttles, weave the garment of time out of infinite timelessness. Death has nothing to do with life, unless it be a form of its manifestation. Life is no part of death. We have imagined this body was life. By death we know the body is an incident of life; but we have not been able to think as apart from the body, so the grave has infinite sadness, and there is no consolation there. But if we could imagine life as a thing that is, and always was, the body the form of its habitation and truly subservient to it, life as transcendent after death as before, death would then be an incident. Give me a flower. I have said life always was, the body its manifestation, one of the lowest terms in which it can be made known. Before the flower was in its visible form, it was.

"Nothing was made, nothing was created, not an atom was added to the universal whole. It was somewhere, atom and petal and calyx and crown, hue and tint and perfume, it did exist; night brooded over the earth; the day came with its light; the falling snowflakes covered and couched the place where it slept; the sun's rays touched the waiting world; the mingled mimicry of dawn and twilight played upon the throbbing soil; stellar worlds and shining suns mingled and blent their rays with the moist, cool earth, and responding to the thrill of passion and of life, the earth manifested the flower. It always was. It was before ever the earth, like a mother, could take in her glad hand and press to her ample bosom the flower-child; it was when the star dust and the fire-mist in the illimitable vast were everywhere and universally diffused. How we may not know,- and need not care; but it was; and, having been before, who dare say it will not be after, when it is faded, drooped, and withered—when it is a thing of beauty and of joy no longer, and the housemaid throws it away? What has become of the flower? I do not need to know, and cannot know; but it is not destroyed. No atom has gone from the universal sum; no sense of ours may be able to trace its history further; we must leave it in the mystery; but the mighty genius of life that wombed it in secret and brought it forth in its glory will know its shadowed way, and will watch and keep it forever.

"I will believe in the immortality of the flower—of force, of matter, there can be no end; but our thought is upon the flower, and we say with Felicia Heman's, "Flowers have their time to wither"—and they do; but do they have their time to die and become extinguished, and naught? Had we sense fine enough, we might find the flower before there is a trace visible to the eye; had we sense keen enough, we might find it after it is withered, and has passed from mortal vision.

"If we could think of life, then, as a fact, and not as a form, we should think less harshly of death and the grave, care less for fleeting years, and rejoice in life. We take things too seriously. We lay too much emphasis upon the circumstance of life—too little upon the august fact. We are here, and here is the world, and here is all the mysterious power we call God. Now, being here, we are free from any responsibility of having come, or of going out. We are here—that is the main fact; and the universal laws or forces that called us into being, name them as we may, are responsible for us. Between the meanest clod, and the humblest thing that crawls and nothing, there is infinite distance. To be a part of the world's fact, an existence among existences, a being in its immeasurable vast, ought to be dignity and glory enough to make every man and woman stand up and rejoice in the fact of being."

The Points Are Well Taken.

A correspondent of the Record-Herald, in reviewing Prof. Pearson's repudiation of Bible miracles, took occasion to say:

"If the accounts of miracles in both the Old and New Testaments are false, then the books themselves are unreliable and of no authority. If the accounts of miracles are not of divine authority, then the great majority of us will have to depend upon Prof. Pearson or Prof. Some-One-Else to indicate to us what parts of the books (if any) are of divine authority and binding on our consciences."

That seems to The Progressive Thinker the exact length, breadth and depth of the controversy. If there was no creation of the universe, with all its suns, and planets and satellites in six days, not years or eons; if there was no general deluge which covered all the earth, including the highest mountains; if the Red Sea did not divide its waters on the command of Moses, and allow the Israelites to cross on dry land; if the sun did not stand still at the instance of Joshua so the slaughter could go on; if the thousand and one additional stories of the Old Testament transcending human reason are false; if a virgin never gave birth to a son; if the Devil did not take that son into an exceeding high mountain and show him all the kingdoms of the earth; if Jesus never walked on the water; procured money from the mouth of a fish to pay taxes; feed 5,000 with five loaves and two small fishes; then both Old and New Testament are incredible, and each book must be relegated to the domain of fable.

A falsehood is none the less false when told in a sacred book. Reason is the only standard to distinguish between truth and falsehood. That which is unreasonable is incredible. If God made man as we are told, and most of us believe, then he endowed him with reason to guide his action. And if with reason that which is not consistent with reason must be discarded as a myth.

Thought in Leading Strings.

"The Pontiff made a lengthy address, in which he condemned what he characterized as the excessive liberty of thought indulged in at the present time."

Such is the substance of advices from Rome. Instead of assailing action the Pope thinks THOUGHT should be discouraged. The world should only think as does the head of the church. Indeed the Pope wishes to monopolize that occupation, and do the thinking for the people everywhere. It is this feature of Christianity, common to all sects, that we oppose. Some bigot of a long past age formulated a creed, and told what he believed. That creed is a guide to thought, and he who dares entertain a conflicting thought is under the ban of the church.

Flogging Resumed.

Is this the inquisitorial age? Have we gone back to those old days of darkness and brutality? Those days of wars and butchery; or are we living in dreamland with some terrible nightmare upon us?

A young man in this city, aged 17 years, committed the cruel crime of getting drunk and painting the town red. He was arrested and taken into a police court and sentenced to be flogged, the judge deputizing two burly policemen to see the job done and his mother took the contract. The policemen stood by and saw that the mother, so-called, beat the son over the head and body with a good sized cudgel.

There are many human beings, parents who still believe in the old adage: "Spare the rod and spoil the child," but not since the days of the ducking board, the burning of witches and the use of the cat-o'-nine-tails, has it been the edict of a judge on the bench to inflict such brutal punishment, except upon slaves in the South before the war of the rebellion.

A man who is supposed to deal justly and lawfully with even the worst criminal and who should at least be humane in orders of punishment, but who will issue such an order as the above mentioned one is no more fit for the bench than a wooden man. He was probably brought up in the old hide-bound way, under the old Catholic or Protestant methods; methods hanging and clinging to the Bible instructions.

He forgot that he lived in the twentieth century, and so did that unworthy mother, and if that boy doesn't hold that in memory, every stroke of that cudgel, his memory will not serve him well.

Many boys are led by their chums to do such things and have braced up and remained straight by a few kind and loving words of advice having been administered to them from such a kind old Judge as Judge Tuthill, of this city, and who takes a loving interest in the children of this big city.

Those relics of the dark and brutal past should be dispensed with at once and such fossil Judges relegated to the doorway of permanent and complete retirement.

Responsibility of Society.

Students of sociology will find matter of interest and decided importance to the well-being of society, in an address by Judge Tuthill before the Social Economics Club of Chicago. He called attention in a forceful way to sources of corruption in the upper strata of society, and arraigned the criminal rich who bribe legislators, purchase venal aldermen and corrupt jurors.

His remarks concerning hereditary transmission of criminal traits of character, possess great public interest because of his experience in the administration of the Juvenile Court law, and because his views are radically different from past generally accepted beliefs of sociologists.

More than six thousand boys under sixteen years of age have appeared before Judge Tuthill, within the last two years, charged with all sorts of crimes and misdemeanors. His contact with these boys has brought him to the conclusion that fully 90 per cent of them can be made good citizens and useful members of society if they receive proper parental care.

Said the judge:

"I have heard much of hereditary transmission of traits of criminal character, but my long experience on the bench and as public prosecutor for both the state and federal governments does not permit me to place much credence in these claims as they are generally advanced.

"I believe that children are born into the world on an average nearly alike, and it is the neglected children, those who fail to receive proper parental care, who rapidly develop into criminals. This is so simply because society has neglected the fundamental principles which would wipe out the social conditions which make such things possible."

These views are in line with the more advanced students of criminalogy and sociology of the present time. Wide observation and experience has proven that human beings are far more largely the products of environment than was formerly supposed.

Indeed, very many observant scientists now claim that, while children may widely vary in mental capacity, the transmission of criminal or vicious instincts is impossible.

In any case, whether the judge's views are wholly or only partly correct, they place upon society a heavy responsibility to maintain social conditions and environments that shall conduce to the welfare of these children, and tend to form them into good citizens and helpful members of the social body.

What Was It?

On Easter Sunday, a volent storm wrecked several churches in and near Pittsburg, Pa., also in Tennessee and other places, injuring and killing a number of persons. It is in order to inquire: Was it a mysterious dispensation of Infinite Intelligence?

Most powerful is he who has himself in his power.—Seneca.

THE MIST BREAKING AWAY

Mrs. Maud Lord Drake Captivates the Catholics.

The funeral of Mrs. George J. Kinsky of 4544 Cook avenue, St. Louis, Mo., known in the West End as the devoted friend and protector of cats and dogs, was unique in that there was no officiating clergyman, though Mrs. Kinsky held strong religious beliefs.

Mrs. Maud Lord Drake, of Angel's Camp and San Francisco, Cal., a long-time friend, conducted the services, preaching a sermon from a Bible text.

Mrs. Kinsky was a Catholic, but for years had not attended any church. She became a Spiritualist and believed in the eternal continuity of the spirit.

Mrs. Drake also is a Spiritualist and a splendid medium, devoutly honest, and universally loved and respected. She is visiting in St. Louis with her husband, J. S. Drake, an old-time Iowa and Illinois newspaper man, now interested in California gold mining. The Drakes are guests of John R. Cross, of 4628 Page boulevard.

Mr. Kinsky, a former member of the St. Louis Stock Exchange, and at one time a member of the troupe of Mme. Adelina Patti, desired that Mrs. Drake, as an old friend of Mrs. Kinsky, should assist at the funeral services, the California lady having been ordained, years ago, as a Unitarian minister. The relatives of Mrs. Kinsky desired that a priest should be present.

Father McDonald of St. Ann's church, it is said, informed the family that he could not take part in the funeral should Mrs. Drake appear, unless he had a dispensation from the archbishop. He added that he did not care to ask for a dispensation.

"Then you may conduct the funeral," said Mr. Kinsky to Mrs. Drake.

Sunday afternoon the home of Mr. Kinsky was filled with friends. The casket was buried in flowers. When the appointed hour arrived, Mrs. Drake, Bible in hand, advanced and began her discourse.

She took for the text of the funeral sermon two passages, the second and third verses of the 14th chapter of John and the fourth verse of the 21st chapter of Revelation.

Mrs. Drake, in touching language, told how beautiful had been the married life of Mr. and Mrs. Kinsky, who for 32 years had enjoyed one unbroken honeymoon, each living to give joy to the other.

But Mrs. Kinsky, the speaker said, had lived to give joy to all creatures. For years her home had been a hospital for sick animals and in the back yard she had provided shelter for cats and dogs where they were fed and nursed.

Mrs. Drake said she felt sure that Mrs. Kinsky and all the dead are not really dead, and cannot die, but that they live and have their being after the transition called death. She said that to her there was no such thing as death. Her sermon was a presentation of proof of the spirit's immortality.

When she finished talking several of the staunch Catholics pressed forward and warmly shook her hand.

A quartet composed of Miss Julia Bunk, Miss Ella Becker, Ernest Reisher and Joseph Saler sang the anthems "The Radiant Morn," "Abide With Me" and "Come Ye Disconsolate."

Mrs. Kinsky, who died last Wednesday after a brief illness, was buried in Bellefontaine Cemetery.

Education and Mediumship.

The education question raises some matters for special inquiry and consideration. Among these, suggested by the apparent opposition of some persons to attempts to educate mediums and inspirational speakers in a fair knowledge at least of ordinary English branches, is the query whether it is necessary, in order to develop and retain one's gifts of mediumship, an uneducated and ignorant medium shall always remain an uneducated ignoramus. Must the children, the mediumistic "babes and sucklings," always remain ignorant children, babes and sucklings in mentality and knowledge?

Some years ago there was a medium of that sort in Chicago. Physically and in years, he was of mature age. Speaking with intent of high recommendation, a friend who acted as his sponsor and agent, said: "Why, he is just like a little child."

Yes, he had given his whole self up to his mediumship—and neglected the cultivation of his mentality, until, in fact, he might almost pose as a champion idiot, so far as any mentality aside from his mediumship was concerned.

And his agent was proud of the fact! Proud of his protege's ignorance and semi-idiocy—because he was a medium!

Now we do not hesitate to say that if mediumship is incompatible with liberal education, with the best mental culture, development and knowledge imparted by earthly educators, then mediumship had better be relegated to a state of desuetude, and the highest, broadest and most liberal education possible, given to every human being.

Shall children be denied school education, because they are mediums?

But there is no such alternative. Mediumship is not incompatible with broad and generous education and high culture of one's mental faculties. It is not necessary that mediumship be the synonym of ignorance—that medium be the synonym of ignoramus, or partake of the characteristics of idiocy. A good medium may be a thoroughly well-educated person—a highly learned person may be a good medium. And it is not reasonable to suppose that spiritual beings highly advanced in knowledge will seek an uncultured brain in preference to one that is highly cultured, to give forth light and truth to the world.

The mere gift of mediumship does not depend upon ignorance or non-ignorance—the fact or gift will reside in the person, whether ignorant or not. Ignorance will not enhance it—nor will knowledge destroy it. Knowledge will give greater latitude and capacity for usefulness.

There is no person that is not mediumistic in some degree. Some are better adapted for use in one way, and some in another way. Some are adapted for use on a more physical plane, others for more refined, mental, artistic, mechanical, inventive, or other fields of thought and mind power. Many are used by high spirit intelligences and do not know it. Much, very much, of the best, most helpful and uplifting work of humanity is wrought through the influence of this forceful yet silent pervasive inspiration from the unseen spirit spheres.

Hand in hand, yet unobserved and unrecognized, the kind angelic powers and co-workers with the earnest, brave and noble thinkers who devote their knowledge, their learning, their educational acquirements to the high and noble purposes of best good to humanity.

THE ONLY TRUE AND PERFECT WAY TO THE HIGHER SPIRITUAL ATTAINMENTS AND UNFOLDMENTS.

Unselfishness—Death of Mary Steadman.

I.

So far as we know every one in spirit life who is in the least progressive, is engaged in some philanthropic work to advance mortals to a higher plane. Everything in the physical world has a missionary work, and exists for some well defined object. The sun, how grand in its effects! How beautiful are the results of its beams of light! Every rainbow-tinted flower; every field of grain; every majestic forest; every coal bed deep down in the earth, and the beautiful panorama presented by nature are all the result of sunshine. In nature everything exists for a specified purpose, having for its object to supply man's immediate wants, or to exalt him to a higher plane. A cataclysm may engulf a continent or wreck a world, but it leaves higher and grander possibilities behind it. The crust of the earth formed thousands, yea, millions of times, before it became stable enough to resist the internal heat and convulsions. But whatever part an atom of matter may act in the economy of the universe, it is for a specified purpose. The golden fields of grain, the flower garden, the fruit tree and the fruit-bearing vines, all manifest their peculiar characteristics unselfishly. The sun has no favorites; the flower never suspends its incense because placed on the bosom of a Magdalen, nor the luscious fruit its nourishment when pressed with polluted lips, nor the air its life-sustaining qualities because breathed by a villain. The same golden sunset smiles benignly on the sage or the savage. The gates of the East at the morning dawn open up a radiance for king and peasant. The summer shower, shimmering with rainbow-tinted colors, comes for vice as well as virtue; and the flower-laden air never blushes when a polluted maiden in the open field drinks from it, as from a fountain of elixir.

II.

All nature is one grand evangel to all humanity, with no words of condemnation, with no words of approbation, with no words of good cheer or hate. The food you eat, the water you drink and the air you breathe come from one common receptacle, each atom of which has no choice whether used by a saint or a sinner. The rose-tints of the maiden cheeks find their counterpart in dens of vice, and the sweet voiced singer may be good or bad—it is all the same to the vibrations which conduct the voice to your senses. There is no selfishness in nature.

No selfishness in the sunbeams.

No selfishness in the Pond Lily as its opens its bosom for the inspection of mortals.

No selfishness in the dewdrop, or in the fruit-laden tree.

Nowhere in all of God's vast universe does that selfishness appear until human beings, lordly men and women, are ushered into existence, and in whom it takes definite form, resulting in wars, murders, thefts, and all kinds of licentiousness. The freedom of choice of good or evil is developed in man and woman; it does not exist in flower, vine or tree.

III.

It was an extremely cold night in mid-winter. The creaking of the moving sleighs indicated that Arctic coldness was sweeping over the country. The frost on the window panes has assumed myriads of weird shapes as if an artist from the celestial regions had visited this mundane sphere, in order to puzzle mortals with his wonderful skill and knowledge. The winds moaned most piteously, and the very air was biting cold, and the surging clouds of snow were blinding, and the accumulated frost on one's eyelids shut out nearly all the light that could guide the footsteps. There was one on the streets of New York who doubted the goodness of God. She had a warm, sunny place in her heart from which went forth radiations for all humanity! She was all aglow with divine love, as if her soul was illuminated with smiles of the Infinite! As she gazed around her, heard the sepulchral moaning of the Arctic winds and felt the cold clasp of the Arctic wave, the tears from her eyes fell at her feet in crystal drops of ice. A maiden not yet 23 years of age, whose early life had been cast in sunny places, was now adrift on the pitiless waves of adverse circumstances. She was adrift, at sea, without a home, without an anchorage of any kind that could settle her in some sunny spot where life would glisten with golden cheer.

Mary Steadman had seen better days, the daily papers said; but now adrift on the merciless waves of adversity, what could she do? She was returning to her attic home after her twelve hours' labor in a shirt factory, thinly clad and sick. Passing a pile of lumber she stops a moment and bows in silent prayer, a prayer that was brimful of tender pathos and loving kindness; she prayed for strength to endure her daily toil; for patience to withstand all the temptations of a great city, and for relief from stinging poverty, and then passed on and up the rickety stairs to her room. Wrapping herself in the one lone blanket of her bed, she sat down by the frosty window and glanced at the rays of light that flickered through the frosty panes, as if so many evangels to give her room a little radiance. She could scarcely move; her hands and feet were numb; she possessed a drowsy feeling that she could not overcome. She felt at peace with all the world. Weird lights and landscapes seemed to flit before her vision. She could not move. She was held in the rigid embrace of the Arctic cold, and gradually the physical was being subverted, and the spiritual assumed the supremacy. She fell into an icy sleep, from which there can only be an awakening in spirit life.

IV.

There is another scene. There are no weird, frosty panes of glass, no piercing cold, no howling winds, no biting frost, nothing to render life miserable. Mary Steadman awakened in spirit life. She is in a home of transcendent beauty and loveliness. Her friends, long since "dead," are with her, and the reunion thrills her soul with joy. Thus it is that the poverty-stricken, the slave toiler, the miserable victim of unfortunate circumstances, often awaken in the realms of spirit life, and find to their great astonishment that they are higher spiritually than a Vanderbilt or a Gould. By being good and doing good, one makes an investment in heaven; there is no other way to do it.

1848 An Anniversary of Deeds, 1902
NOT WORDS ALONE.

Chicago Spiritualists and their friends are invited to make ready to attend a benefit for the mediums' home established at Reed City, Mich., by the National Spiritualists' Association. It will be given on Saturday evening, April 5, in the Auditorium Hall, No. 77 Thirty-first street.

The programme from 7:45 to 9:30 o'clock will consist of music and messages by excellent talent, after which there will be dancing until 2 a. m.

Every medium in the city is asked to co-operate towards the financial success of the enterprise. The object sought is of greater importance than the gain of any individual, or single coterie of men and women. Let there be no jealousies but rather a worthy rivalry as to who most can work and best agree. No other sect wholly neglects its worn-out workers.

Admission to programme and ball, 50 cents. The tickets of admission will be tasty in design, and belong to the purchasers as souvenirs of the evening. Friends in the city or state who are unable to attend may add their contributions by sending orders, accompanied by cash, to Geo. B. Warne, chairman, 4203 Evans avenue, who will return souvenirs to the applicants.

All mediums who will aid in this effort, are asked to forward their names and numbers forthwith, to W. J. Elmo, 3117 Wabash avenue who will see that they appear on the advertising matter which will be widely scattered.

Executive Committee: Geo. B. Warne, W. J. Elmo, A. H. Bliss, A. J. Cutler, Ervin A. Rice, J. Kirby Smith, T. S. Russell, Charles E. Quinlan, Mrs. J. R. Francis, Mrs. H. A. Cross, Mrs. Ella Johnson Bloom.

JUSTICE, AND INJUSTICE.

Prompt Responses to Mrs. Whitcomb's Call--Helen Wilmans' Case--McIlroy Will Case.

I am pleased to know that my suggestions to societies to reciprocate favors, is acted upon quite liberally, for Mrs. Whitcomb writes, "I am receiving donations every day from your article." This is a good sign. It not only shows that up-to-date Spiritualists read The Progressive Thinker and other spiritual papers, but that the spirit of fraternal interest is active, and that readers appreciate what they read enough to act upon it, and become mutual friends and helpers, in ways that profit all concerned. Mrs. Whitcomb, Mrs. Matteson's daughter, is a practical women and something of a hustler when she undertakes any important work, and seems to lead the Bazaar to a wholesome success. I hope this spirit of mutual helpfulness and cooperation will extend and increase, until all societies in all localities, feel they have a common interest and a common cause. Mrs. Whitcomb and her co-workers appreciate these responses, and will make good use of the donations received. Let the Buffalo bazaar be a grand success.

I am also delighted to read that the supreme court has honored Helen Wilmans, and the barbarous bigots who sought to destroy her and her work, are rebuked and defeated. The importance of this decision can hardly be overestimated. It calls a halt to the villainous plots and evil schemes of the medical rings, and may open the eyes of some of the old fogy bulldozers, to "see where they are at." But all who love liberty and humanity should be on the alert, and checkmate the plots of the bigoted regulars, at every opportunity.

That jury verdict in the Philadelphia will case is another disgrace to the courts of law and jury trials, and though an attorney is expected to work for his client, it is not creditable to any man's intellect to claim that belief in spirit communion is evidence of unsound mind. A jury may be and often is a set of stupid blockheads, as in this case, who have no more idea of logical consistency than oysters have of medical science. That such a body of imbeciles, whose ignorance is authority over the fortunes of the dead, should be allowed to decide such a case is a black mark against our free institutions.

That no bequest can be made secure against the devices of contestants, is evidence that the whole system needs reforming.

This case again emphasizes the importance of disposing of estates while in the body and able to manage things first-hand.

LYMAN C. HOWE.

MEDIUMS HOME BENEFIT.

There is still time to lend a hand by purchasing one or more tickets, whether or not you attend at 77 Thirty-first street, Chicago, Saturday evening, April 5.

Why not join the crowd certain to be present then? More than your money's worth of real enjoyment will be had and the consciousness of aiding at the same time in a needed work will remain with you. We are often richer by what we spend than by what we have.

It is constitutional with some persons to oppose everything they didn't happen to think of themselves. Selfishness so dominates their mentality that they are wholly absorbed in self-glorification.

Mrs. L. H. Gurley, of Danville sends the committee a donation of five dollars, giving practical demonstration of her long-known sympathy for mediums. Many of them have had occasion to bless her for assistance in the past.

The one who is not satisfied with Reed City as a location for a Western Home has been heard from, but has not yet pointed out one other site that can be so quickly made comfortable for so many deserving ones, with so small an outlay of money.

Among the contributions received is one from John Wiley, of Jerseyville, Ill., which enclosed two well preserved paper fifty-cent pieces issued when fractional silver coin was out of circulation. One is of the earliest issue by the U. S. Treasury, bearing five heads of Washington and printed in green ink. The other, of later date, bears the vignette of Wm. H. Crawford, once secretary of the treasury. They are for sale at a premium. What do you bid for these reminders of the period when there was no coin in circulation?

These pieces of paper fractional currency remind one of Horace Greeley's famous prescription for returning to specie payments, viz.: "the way to resume is to resume." So the way for Spiritualists to have homes for mediums is to begin at once and each one do something to aid. The street car rhyme is pertinent: "Don't wait, lay hold, hang on and hump."

Try a new experiment: For the next three months talk only about that portion of the N. S. A.'s work which you can conscientiously commend. Voice some appreciation of President Barrett's past sacrifices for the cause, instead of only criticism of him. By the end of that time your liver will be active, your head clear, your heart merry, and yourself a blessing in words and deeds.

Do not miss the Benefit. You will see there a concourse of good-looking people brimful of the spirit of fun and sociability, hear some of the best mediums to be found anywhere, and enjoy the most pleasurable of dances. Come.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Brother Geo. W. Kates and wife, owing to change of route on their missionary tour for the N. S. A., can give a limited response to calls for work in Illinois during the last half of April and perhaps a few days in May. Write for them at once to 3125½ Franklin avenue., St. Louis, Mo. Do not delay. They are just the ones to encourage the struggling, organize the scattered, interest the indifferent and persuade all who think the cause dead in their own neighborhood that the danger is that you are deliberately planning to bury it alive.

GEORGE. B. WARNE,

LOOK OUT FOR HIM!

Among Chicago's Easter resurrections is a man who is calling on Spiritualists of the city for personal revenue only. He is described as spare in build, smooth face, brown hair, one tooth missing from upper jaw, a gold filling in one of his front teeth, wore a black overcoat, vest and cutaway coat and Derby hat. He has a stirring hard-luck story in which a sick wife is conspicuous and is seeking to borrow money with the date of repayment indefinite. His acquaintance with the names and addresses of local Spiritualists indicates that he has been a painstaking reader of the advertising matter now current among our people. He seems to have forgotten his own residence as he does not live at the number he gave. He is posted on people living in Wheaton. Use extra caution in bestowing charity on such as he. Introduce every impostor to the nearest policeman. That sick wife was also ill some six months ago.

The Spirit World, Where Is It, Its Conditions and Employments. A Lecture By Mrs. M. T. Longley, At Masonic Hall, Washington, D. C.

"The Spirit World, where is it, its conditions and employments," is the theme we have selected for our discourse this morning. You will understand, dear friends, that it would be impossible in one hour or less to give you a full and comprehensive description and exegesis of the spirit world, as it would be to give you a full description of the various nations of the earth, the various portions of this planet, its people and conditions; but we trust to give you somewhat of an idea of the spirit world, not as an abstract condition, not as a vague something that may exist somewhere with no tangible manner of expression and locality, but a distinct world or worlds—for there are many of them, just as there are many of the physical planets floating in space, rolling along their matchless courses in brilliancy and with power.

The spirit worlds that we shall deal with this morning are those which belong to this planet earth; that is, those to which pass the human entities who have dwelt upon, who now dwell upon, and who shall dwell upon this planet earth. That is quite sufficient as the theme for one discourse. We wish to say here that every planet inhabited by human entities in this broad universe of space has its own spiritual environment—its own spirit worlds, to which pass those human beings who belong to that particular planet.

First, we shall say that spirit life is a reality; spirit life is real life. The life of spirit is everywhere, consequently spirit life is right here in this room to-day, just as much as it is out in the great fields of space where many disembodied spirit entities dwell. You are spirits and are making your own lives day by day, creating your own conditions and environments, and living in spirit life just as much in one sense as you ever will in the great ages of the coming time. The spirit world is as real, as tangible, and as important and useful as is the planet earth or any physical planet that belongs to your solar system.

We shall say spirit worlds, for there are worlds. You may call them spheres, you may call them zones, you may call them anything you please that means tangible, palpable worlds. Very often spirits and those who seek information through mediumship confound the terms. Spheres are conditions. You make a sphere for yourself. You may live in a sphere of harmony, you may live in a sphere of discord, you may live in a sphere of art or science, and you may create for yourself a distinct sphere just as you create for yourself a distinct aura or magnetic environment which belongs to you and which will touch upon the environments or spheres of other individuals. So if you are dwelling in the sphere of art, or music, or science, or mechanics, whichever it may be, you may also touch upon other lives and the magnetic forces of individuals who are dwelling in a similar sphere of art, or music, or science, or mechanics. Therefore we desire you to hold this thought distinctly in mind; that spheres are creatable things; that you can create a sphere for yourself, dwell in it, and come in touch with others who are in the same rate of vibration, who are in a similar sphere or condition.

And then we have that which we personally would call zones or belts, but which many returning spirits and many Spiritualists call spheres, so that for convenience we will use the same term. There are surrounding this planet earth great zones or belts—which you may call spheres if you will—that are created by spirit forces and which are to a measure enfolded with and impinged upon by electrical, magnetic and even material forces from human beings here upon this planet or dwelling in those various zones or spheres.

Then there is still another spirit world, which we shall touch upon in a moment, but before that we will say that the first belt or zone surrounding this planet earth is created very largely of material elements or atoms thrown off by spirits in these mortal forms and they go out into this sphere of vibration of the first belt or zone. To this sphere gravitate those spirits who are not especially spiritualized, who are filled with elements that belong to the earthly condition. They have not unfolded a spiritual nature, and not having done this, they have not built up the spirit body of more ethereal atoms or forces, but the spirit form or covering is largely made up—wholly, we might say—of these more material atoms and elements which belong to the grosser life; consequently that sphere or world is of a dense, murky atmosphere compared to those of a more refined condition, because made up of this dense, murky material and only those dwell therein who are of a like character whose spirit bodies are made up largely of the earthly material, of the grosser elements, and who are unable, because of the law of gravitation, to rise to a higher or larger and more outward sphere.

Emanating from this first sphere is another surrounding of a more refined character—more spiritual, yet not ethereal—because there has been going out to it something better than went out to form the first or lower sphere as it is called, and this second—if we may so term it—is composed of more refined elements and material, and those who dwell therein are such as are a little more spiritualized, a little purer and more aspirational than those who are tied to the earthy sphere.

There are spirits who when they go out of the mortal body are at once qualified to enter the second sphere, and they pass through and beyond the first without any contamination, without knowing anything about the lower condition; and there are also those who become better, more purified, who have for a time dwelt in the first sphere, and they are, as it were, permitted or made ready to soar into the second condition or locality which we must designate just now as the second sphere. And so on through various gradations, each succeeding one in a manner further from the earth, until we find an innumerable number of spheres that are reaching out further and further into space and nearer and nearer in touch with the outward and grander circles or spheres or worlds of some other planet.

If we could go to the outermost circle of this wonderful system of worlds of progressive life we should undoubtedly find ourselves coming in touch with the outermost etherealized condition, locality, or sphere of some of the grand and beautiful planets which are moving along their course in space.

But we have another world to deal with, just as we have with these innumerable forces of spiritual, tangible or human habitation, and this we call the spirit planet. Now we dare affirm—and it is not the lady whom you see with your mortal eyes that is making this statement, for she knows nothing of these things, being tied to a mortal body just as you are with your experiences and conditions, but it is the spirit individual who has for many years dwelt in the spirit world and who has studied these laws and conditions, while at the same time seeking to do some good to human beings here and in the lower spheres; but I may be to you only a voice, a voice speaking out of the great spiritual atmosphere of the universe and asserting these things which are given to you to-day; a voice coming from the spiritual world being used only as a vehicle for the knowledge which has come to that individual in the spirit through persistent study, by observation and experience, and by contact with innumerable souls who are traversing space on every hand. So we dare assert that there is a spirit planet belonging to this planet earth, and not only that this earth has its spirit planet, but that every inhabited planet in all this wondrous universe has its spiritual planet which accompanies it through space and can never be separated from it under any circumstances.

More than this: We declare that this will be scientifically established before the close of the twentieth century. We believe that scientific research along the line of astronomical power and progress will have so far advanced as to be able to discern with its apparatus, with its far-sweeping glance and search of the heavens, the spiritual planet which accompanies each one of the planets in your solar system, and that an inhabitant standing upon Mars, or some other planet in the solar system, will be able to—and who knows but this may already have been done?—clearly discern the spirit planet which accompanies this planet earth in its march through space.

Well, then, where is the spirit planet of this earth? It is, as we have said, just as palpable, just as real, important and useful as is this physical planet which you are pleased to call the earth, and is its counterpart. Everything in creation that we know anything about has its counterpart. This is true in the spiritual life and in the material. The planet of which we are speaking has its counterpart here in the mortal. The spirit counterpart is a force more refined, more ethereal; it traverses the great circle of ethereal life and is made up of ethereal forces and gases and elements which belong to the atmospheric condition of the ether, and not of this circumambient air with which you are familiar and which you breathe in every day. The spirit planet is not here, close to the earth, inside so to speak, and environed by that lower sphere which we call the lowest sphere, nor the second, nor the third, but in the great space of ether between them. You may call it the sixth sphere and the seventh sphere; this great spirit planet exists and there is a magnetic cord, if we may so term it, that extends from the physical planet earth to that spiritual planet and which is in contact, there being no separation of its elements from the earth or from the spiritual, but this great magnetic cord of light and of spiritual element passes down through these various spheres or circles or belts of spirit life and activity which surround this particular physical body.

But see the spirit planet out there in space. It moves closely, clearly, beautifully with this planet earth which is attached to it, and is made up of ethereal elements that have been thrown off from the planet and by the various circles which surround this planet and is composed of rarefied and beautiful elements that make up its body and its life. Upon that planet spirit beings dwell, and those who dwell there are capable of living in what may be called the seventh sphere—there is a connecting link between the sixth and seventh spheres—they can traverse space and all spirit spheres as high as the seventh; some of them can reach out clairvoyantly—not physically—to those higher worlds. Now remember what we are telling you, because this is important, if you want to know about spirit life, its conditions and localities. We cannot tell you how many miles these spirit worlds are from the earth; some of them are millions of miles; some, especially this one of which we have spoken as the lower sphere, are close to you. Inhabitants of those near you can approach your atmosphere and impinge upon you and very often sap you of vital forces that you need for your own protection.

These worlds exist. We know these worlds—you may call them spheres if you like—merge one into the other, the first into the second, the second into the third and so on, therefore there is really no line of demarcation; yet those who pass from one to another pass through just as great a change of progressive life as you would if you were to pass to-day out of your physical body into this other world, because the spirit body itself, the spirit entity, must become freed from its grosser elements and conditions before it can reach into another higher and more ethereal planet. Remember, dear friends, that there is no up and no down to spirit life and the spirit world. We do say that our friends dwell "above;" we do ask them to come "down" into our life and to help; we do sing of the land "above" with its beauty and fragrance, and in the sense that it is above and beyond the material we can say that these high spiritual spheres and these beautiful spirit planets are "up there;" but in reality there is neither up nor down, because it is out in space and within the orbit of the spirit planet and the spirit spheres which extend outward always and ever from the planet earth; therefore there is no up nor down, no high nor low, only the Beyond, but outward the spirit circles and onward forever; that is spirit, and that is spirit life.

The spirit planet which is the counterpart of this world may be said to find its place and its orbit in the great spaces of ethereal life between the sixth and seventh circles or spheres of spiritual activity, and is dwelt upon by individuals who are helpful to their fellow men. Many, many of them gravitate there immediately at the death of the physical form, because their aspirations, their environments, their words, their thoughts, have given them the impetus for helping them to form the spirit bodies and the spirit home out there that will enable them to reach the spirit planet—the sixth or seventh sphere—and dwell in those beautiful places and among the harmonious conditions of those worlds.

It is not necessary for you to go into the first, second, or even the third spiritual world or sphere and then gradually, painfully work onward to a higher and more outward one, but you can do that; if you are not prepared to ascend higher you will have to do that. Many who are in earth will have to do that, because it rests upon their environments and life or growth and what is sent out from their bodies and minds day by day whether they create the hard conditions of the lower spheres with which they must contend and overcome before they pass outward, or whether they create the more ethereal, more beautiful conditions and elements of the spiritual bodies which enable them to float outward and rise into lovelier conditions and find more delightful homes.

We will at this time liken the spirit planet to the sixth or seventh sphere, because those in the sixth sphere can very easily pass on to the spirit planet, if they so desire, or can find just as beautiful homes on the sixth sphere and can pass just as easily to the seventh, so they can mingle and commingle as one beautiful family. There is no line of demarcation between them; they can come and go at will. They can also come and go to and from the planet earth at will, right into the outer spaces or spheres of spirit life, and labor with those who need them as they desire. They can come and they can go at their work, give their thoughts to stimulate minds to something higher and better here and elsewhere, and make life happier and sweeter.

I have been to the spirit planet myself, and am personally familiar with it, and it typifies higher conditions in these loftier spheres. As we have said, there are innumerable spheres.

There is no use for a spirit to come and tell you he lives in a particular sphere or is as high as he can go. There is no cessation to unfoldment or progression, and there never can be, or there would be death to the soul. There must be continuous outward growth in order for the spiritual human entity to continue to advance in greater powers of achievement and growth into grander glory, coming nearer to the Infinite. If a spirit entity comes to you and says that he lives in a certain sphere or on a certain plane and is as high as he can get, or even has to attain only one or two more in the great universe of space, you may set him down as knowing very little of what he says, as one who has not attended well to the teachings of the spiritual world, and that he is not what he claims to be, or at least he has not attained the height he claims to have attained, for if he has grown outward as far as he claims, he will know very well there are great spheres of activity and knowledge that have been attained by human entities who have lived thousands upon thousands, even millions of years, in space, and are still pressing forward, and no one who has been upon this planet in mortal form, with a mind to have attended upon these conditions of life within the last century, can possibly assert that he has come in contact with some of these outward spheres or has reached the same; consequently, if he comes to you and tells you he knows not what is the vastness of life in spirit, knows not and cannot tell what is to be attained by the unfolding human entity, but that there are worlds upon worlds beyond him out there in space that sometime every human creature may gain, you may know that he is a teacher, that he will give you the truth and you may listen to his words. We never yet have heard of a human entity who has gained perfection, who has learned all there is to learn in the universe, who has attained the grandest of all knowledge and wisdom, and until one has gained perfection and is infinite himself, is like the All-Supreme, Overflowing, Omnipotent Power, and, therefore, GOD, can he possibly tell what there may not be beyond him for exploration and achievement. Question seriously any spirit who comes to you claiming to know all there is to know, having gained all there is to learn; because it is impossible, only the Infinite can do that, and the Infinite cannot or will not communicate through human entities or genius of any kind, but the inflowing of the great infinite spirit is ever downward and downward through gradations and gradations of human conception and human understanding, and we have to receive just as we are prepared to receive and comprehend. We could not comprehend it if it came from the Infinite directly. We can only comprehend what we are adapted to receive and fitted to understand, and it may be given to us through the lips of a little child, through the inspired utterances of a humble being standing before you to-day to speak of the various conditions and grades of life that may touch you from the great beyond.

The spiritual planet is a real world, a palpable world, not an abstract thing, not merely a condition with no homes, employments or activities such as human beings—you and I—wish to create, to accomplish, to bring to bear as an influence upon human life. There are human spirits who live so largely in the subjective that they hardly become conscious of their environments and conditions—to the objective. But there are gradations of objective life that are just as real to the beings who deal with them as are these conditions of objective life around us, as this plant, or the table, or chairs, or the hall itself, are to you human beings in your physical forms dealing with objective things, and those in spirit life are just as real and substantial to them as these are to you.

The spirit planet, then, is made up of very many rarefied, ethereal, beautiful, and, as compared with those on this planet, intensely spiritual elements, but none the less they compose objective life upon that planet, and the human beings who are there are the real workers. There are plenty of human beings in some of the lower spheres who are idlers, who do not feel the necessity of working. They cannot die; they cannot starve to death or perish for want of food and shelter, but they can starve magnetically and may be depleted of that which goes to make up real life. There are many who are idlers until awakened to their condition and willing to do something, to be active and begin to throw off those conditions and elements that weigh them down, and they do so by wishing and trying to become better. But on the spirit planet, in these higher spheres, all are workers, even the children; and there are beautiful children there, many of them taken out of the slums of earth life, out of the homes of poverty and degradation—taken to that spirit planet and trained for work. Even they become workers, and many of your messengers who control the mediums and give you tokens of love from your spirit friends are dwellers on the spirit planet.

Let me tell you one thing that is a fact: In all the conditions and environments, in all the life of the beings on the lower sphere—this sphere made up of dense earthly conditions—there is no sign of childhood; no children are there. No matter what the conditions, no matter how degraded the life in which they come, no matter how terrible their environments and home training, no matter if they run the streets with filthy and ragged garments, with oaths upon their lips, the little poor children that are growing in your city slums, and to whom society here on earth should give shelter, protection and training, they are not waifs in the lower sphere of the spirit world. When they pass out from the body as children, anywhere from the earliest days of infancy to the years of responsible discretion, crushed out by conditions of earth life, they are taken in charge by tender, loving souls of the third or higher spheres or of the spirit planet and conveyed there to homes or sanitariums to be trained. There the influence and love given to the children make them grow into beautiful workers, helpful messengers to earth and its people. You may say, "What of their spirit bodies, are they not made up of the physical elements that will tie them down?" No, those little spirit bodies are made up largely of the magnetic forces that are sent to them by the vibratory influence of the higher teachers and missionaries of the spirit world, and all of the earthly material that is taken into those spirit bodies is simply the vibratory action of earth forces which has not the impetus and power with the children it has with those who live vicious lives for years in carnal conditions, and, therefore, it is soon eliminated under the care and training of the spirit teachers of the higher life.

You may understand something of the terrible conditions the lower sphere may have brought to human beings who can awaken to a sense of responsibility and to a realization of the conditions they are in when we tell you no flowers are there.

No flowers grow in that lower sphere. No children, no beautiful little human blossoms are there to give cheer and courage or call a smile to the faces of those who live in the lower condition. Those who live there go to their own places, for they have built the very world in which they live, they and their kind, and they can no more help going there than a stone that is dropped from the platform can help descending to the floor. They do not deserve the children and flowers. When they awaken to a sense of their condition, they are willing to reach out and ask for help, to work and to eliminate those forces which hold them down and prevent them from going where the flowers grow.

On the spirit planet there are children, thousands of them, beautiful children. Some of the most beautiful children are those who have been little outcasts or waifs upon earth. They are touched by the love elements, and that brings out the love element within, and they grow up as sweet and beautiful as lilies of the valley, scattering their perfume throughout the world. They are trained as workers; they desire to work.

Some of our Indian friends who come to you as messengers, through your mediums, dwell on that spirit planet or on the spheres akin to it, and they find their happiness in doing good. They come to you, and go to the lower spheres, and help with a sweet simplicity that brings blessings to all.

Teachers and workers, your mothers—sweet, unselfish mothers—are there, and on high ground, as we call it, sending out their influence. Some are teachers, some are care-takers of children, some are working in the beautiful gardens where they do not have to pull up the weeds, for there are none. Human magnetism makes the flowers grow, and if you neglect them they will die—that is, they will be dissipated into the atmosphere; you will not have any dead leaves left to cumber the ground, but the whole thing will be dissipated and lost as far as the outward sense is concerned, yet not lost, for they will be taken up again and into them will be breathed new life. Some of the dwellers here are gardeners who take care of the flowers by breathing upon them, and in that way magnetizing them. Human magnetism is life-giving. Some take care of the grounds; some erect buildings. Yes, we have buildings, and there are those who can erect the most beautiful buildings, but do not need to put into them the materials used in the physical world, or use upon them the crude implements of earth, but they have the chemical knowledge which enables them to bring together the atoms which exist in the universe and create the substances which go into the dwellings of the spirit people.

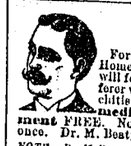
These are beautiful employments, with none of the drudgery and the hard, fierce, terrible competition that comes to human beings who have to do their daily work perhaps ten or twelve hours at a time; but sweet, congenial employments, with all material at hand with which to do their work and do it well. Artists are there who paint the most glorious pictures for the contemplation and inspiration of the people, and they can do it without brush or paint pot, for from the roses and lilies around they form the coloring of the whole life that surrounds them; they can extract this coloring and mingling it with the atmosphere produce the pigments and the various implements and substances which they desire, and can paint even the portrait or the landscape upon your wall. There are those who can do even more than this. They are so highly unfolded and can so concentrate their powers and direct the elements of material forms that they can by waving their hands and concentrating their wills bring out the picture for your contemplation. This may seem very strange to you, but it is all true and scientific, and we know it to be a fact, for we have seen it time and again. Some of these things we have taken a part in, and know it is a Godlike truth that man not only is immortal but is infinite in his power of expression and achievement as he unfolds, advances and rises step by step through self-effort, self-culture and growth to the uttermost bounds of power and of possibility.

These things, I say, are just out there, a little way from where we are speaking, on the spirit planet, in those outer circles of life. And what is beyond? Who shall ask? Who shall say? What is beyond all this in grandeur, in infinitude, in power?

Here, where these beautiful things exist, all gravitate to their own places. You will gravitate to your own just as sure are you are here to-day, if you are spiritually unfolded and are seeking that which is pure and good and true as you go along in your daily life.

Sculptors are there who never dreamed of making even an image or statue here on this earthly side, but they have it now. Some of you are natural sculptors, but perhaps you never have had an opportunity to make even a little clay model, and if you should attempt to do it the result would seem a very crude image and you might have to label it to tell what it is, but you have it there within, and just so sure as you have the talent and aspiration without limit, just so sure will you in time, perhaps not at once, but soon when you are ready for it and have studied enough for it, you will gravitate to that plane, that condition that will give an impetus to the indwelling power. At first you may make only little clay models, which you can do in spirit life; you can make this clay out of the elements there and mold it into form, and you will begin in that way, and by and by you will be able to draw the substance to you from the atmosphere and breathe into it your magnetic life, for everything there is breathed upon by the magnetic life from human intelligences who are pressing Godward, and that gives life to every creation to be found there, and you can breathe into the substance gathered from the atmosphere, and flowers will form, or anything that exists, according to your will and concentration. You can breathe into that substance and mold it into any shape you please, and when you shall have become sufficiently talented and skillful you will then create a beautiful image, a statue that will challenge the admiration of the world. So with the musicians, so with the singers.

Musicians are there who delight the multitude, who pour out song from the inner heart and life, and draw down inspiration from the higher spheres or grander spirit planets, and pour it out to the world to lift up and inspire their fellow men; and the musicians with the grand unfolding and inspiration from the beyond pour out the music of the spheres, glorious beyond description, grander than human tongue can tell, and as it rolls forth in sweetest volume its reverberations come through the surrounding spheres until it reaches earth and gives some harmony, some blessing, some glory and beauty to human lives struggling here upon the mortal world.



We have not time to tell you of all the environments and the various employments, for they are manifold. Every individual on earth who has a desire to create, to accomplish something in a particular line, or who has a taste for some special employment, if he was upon one of these spirit planets he would have the opportunity to develop that, at least of reaching out and giving expression to it, molding into external form and expression that particular line of thought and of employment; thus the employments or occupations there are manifold.

There are employments on earth that have no counterpart in the spirit spheres. The man who has to dig the street with a shovel and throw the mud out will not have to do that in the spirit, for it will not be needed and there is no mud. We have beautiful streets and all in excellent condition, kept so by the human magnetism of harmonious souls. But in the earth sphere, made up of grossness, sensuality, greed, filth, are those who have to dig their way out of the conditions which they have made for themselves, and they may have been in very high station in earth life, may have been considered great magnates, but grossness was going out from them, and every form of such emanations made the dirt around them in the spirit world, and they have to dig themselves out by high effort, and though there are beautiful beings that come to them from higher spheres to help them, yet they have to do the work themselves. Everybody will have to do their own work, though there are helpers and teachers all along the way.

We can always change our employments, so they do not become irksome. The artist does not need to be an artist always, but he can be an all-around worker. He need not worry and find himself debilitated by disease or anything that depresses, but there is harmony and fitness of things. Harmonious spirits are attracted to those spheres and they make harmony all around them, and so with each sphere.

What there is in the outmost sphere I cannot tell you, except what is brought to us by the spirit entities who dwell there, just as I come to-day to tell you what is here. Whatever life is in these outward spheres, there are glorious achievements, grand and uplifting influences. By coming in contact with those who are endowed with clairvoyance we can learn of those spirit spheres. We are all endowed that way more or less, we are all unfolded to some extent, as all have psychic powers, all have spirit perception. You are spirits and you cannot be spirits without spirit perception; you may be partially blinded, you may not be unfolded, but you have it. So in our spiritual realms we are psychically endowed and unfolded to an extent so we can all gain something from these outer spheres, and we can gain a grand and strong inspirational force from the teachings given from these spheres through those who are mediums.

Let me tell you old Spiritualists especially, we never have cause to distrust our mediums. We do not make conditions hard here. We give them the best we can, our love and sympathy; they have their sweet homes, beautiful environments, their temples of art in which they draw inspiration and in which they gather the forces and the visions from the higher outward worlds that they transmit to others, and thus we get a knowledge of other worlds for our edification, spiritual strength and unfoldment. We know we can sometimes go to these outward worlds. We shall not be confined to the spirit planet or the few spheres that surround it. We shall not always be held down to these conditions that are about us now, because we shall achieve, we shall grow, we shall learn, we shall work, not only for the purpose of going forward and outward but for the purpose of helping our fellow men below us, making them stronger, giving them light and love and enabling them to realize that good is everywhere, is within the human soul, even within those who are dwelling in the lower spheres in the conditions of this earth life, within the poorest, the humblest, the vilest of earth. Even in the lower spheres there is immortal good. When we have our friends realize this, as they will some day, there will be an outward growth and the first sphere shall all be dissipated, it will lose its power, the elements that compose it will scatter and be taken up by nature, by the physical planet or the great worlds of space, and made over into better, higher and more useful purposes, and those who dwell there will pass out, and when this planet earth becomes dissipated into space, as it may be in the aeons of the future years, those who dwell upon the spirit planet and in all these spheres surrounding it will have passed on to greater, grander planets, still more glorious in splendor, and to yet grander achievements nearer and still nearer to God!

Restores Eyesight

"Actina," a Wonderful Discovery Which Cures Diseased Eyes, No Matter Whether Chronic or Acute, Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. This wonderful treatment takes the form of a Pocket Battery and is known as "Actina." It is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient. There is no risk of experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable. This wonderful remedy also makes the use of spectacles unnecessary, as it not only removes the weakened and unnatural conditions of the eye, but gives it a clear vision.

A. O. T. Pennington, Massachusetts building, Kansas City, Mo., says: "Actina,' cured my mother of cataracts and cured me of asthma.

W. J. Reed, 500 Prospect avenue, Kansas City, Mo., says: My sister was STONE BLIND and "Actina" restored her sight perfectly after oculists had failed.

L. B. Bailey, New England building, Kansas City, says: "Actina" cured me of catarrh and is the best thing to cure colds.

W. R Owens, Adrian, Mo., writes: "Actina" saved me from going BLIND.

Robert Baker, 80 Dearborn street, Chicago, writes: I should have been blind had I not used "Actina."

This method of treatment has been given a thorough test and thousands have been cured after being pronounced incurable.

Advice FREE. FREE treatment at office. 'Actina" is sent on trial to out-of-town people. Call or write for Prof. Wilson's 100-page Treatise on the Eye and Its Disease and disease in general free on application. Address New York and London Electric Ass'n., Dept. T, 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require. Every item sent to us for publication, should contain the full name and address of the writer. We desire to know the source of every item that appears. This rule will be strictly adhered to.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Bear in mind that all notices for this page are cut down to suit the space we have to occupy when received.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Bear in mind, please, that Isa Wilson Kayner's address is at No. 112 Winchester avenue, Chicago, where she can be addressed.

M. A. Ratsey, of Fort Wayne, writes: "Dr. R. McL. Angus, of Cleveland, O., is now in Fort Wayne, Ind., where he proposes to revivify the waning interest in Spiritualism. There is a good field here for an earnest worker. He gave his first lecture in Elktron Hall on Sunday evening, the 23rd ult., to a large and appreciative audience, and made a splendid impression. In time he hopes to build up a strong society here. He gave a fine opening lecture, followed by tests which were all recognized. He will be open for camp engagements the coming season."

The Denver (Colo.) Post says: "It begins to look as if the Weick clairvoyant ordinance was of no avail, since the incorporation yesterday of The Christian Spiritual Society.' Only those who believe in the Bible and work every day for the advancement, elevation, purity and good of the human soul, are eligible to be ordained. The Weick ordinance, which levies a fee of $100, makes an exception of 'regularly ordained ministers of any religious faith,' hence the ordained workers in the new society will be exempt."

It is announced by directors of the Indiana Spiritualists Association that Harrison D. Barrett, president of the National Spiritualists Association, has accepted the invitation to open the next annual camp-meeting of the Indiana Association, at Chesterfield camp.

S. W. Gardiner writes from Pueblo, Col.: "The Progressive Spiritualist Society has been organized in this city, with a membership of forty-five, and increasing each week. Meetings are held every Sunday night in the Engineers' hall. Much interest is manifested. Many thanks are due Mrs. F. A. Golm for her assistance. She is a good test medium, an excellent trance medium, and the best trumpet medium ever heard in this city or elsewhere."

Major Perry, the "sleeping preacher," of Saluda county, S. C., is attracting a great deal of attention. He lives a dozen miles from a railroad and never leaves the immediate vicinity of his home, so is known to few outside that county. Major Perry is a mulatto, 45 years old. Both he and his wife are illiterate. When a young man, he says, he felt a call to preach, but disregarded it. He seldom goes to church and is not religiously inclined. About ten years ago, his wife says, Perry began to preach in his sleep. Sermons became more frequent until he now preaches five or six times a week. Perry goes to bed about 8 o'clock and within half an hour begins to preach. He first announces his text, chapter, verse or verses in the Bible correctly, after which he reads the text, always just as it is in the book. He then "lines" out, sings a hymn and prays, after which the sermon begins. Perry's sermon is declared by whites who have heard him to be better than the average negro preacher. It is grammatical and logical and takes from forty-five minutes to one hour in delivery. Sometimes during the delivery of the sermon the muscles of the body, especially the arms and neck, contract, producing a cataleptic condition. This stops the sermon. The attack lasts a minute or two and is driven away by the wife, who strokes with her hands the parts affected. When the tendency to catalepsy is banished he resumes his discourse, beginning exactly where he left off, even though it was in the middle of a sentence.

Jocken writes from Conneaut, Ohio: "We have with us as speaker for the month of March D. A. Herrick, of Alliance, Ohio. He meets the wants of the people. As to messages, Dr. W. O. Knowles, of Grand Rapids, Mich., is the best we ever heard. His descriptions in emblems and traits of character of those who return to their friends are complete and cap the whole matter. He gets full names and family ties. He is worthy of a prominent place in camp-meeting circles."

The Springfield (Mass.) Republican says: "The annual dinner and meeting of the New England Spiritualists' Camp-Meeting Association was held at the Mansion House in Greenfield yesterday. Judge A. H. Dailey, of Brooklyn, president of the association, presided. There were present besides Judge Dailey, Secretary Albert P. Blinn of Boston, L. F. Crafts of Whately, Byron Loomis of Haydenville, W. H. Lee of Troy, N. Y., and H. S. Streeter of Greenfield. Plans were discussed and perfected for the annual camp-meeting in August. Among the speakers already engaged are Moses Hull, Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds of Troy, N. Y., Mrs. May S. Pepper of Providence and Blanche Brainard of Lowell. Others will be announced later. The Schubert Quartet, of Boston, has been engaged through August. Nothing was brought up in regard to selling the property at Lake Pleasant to the Boston and Maine corporation or to the Greenfield and Turners Falls street railway company. An agreement was entered into by which the street railway company is to have the privilege of providing amusements from June 1 to October 1, the company to furnish a band of music for five Sundays in August and to have charge of the dancing. It was further agreed that the association should not hold its meetings so as to conflict with the interests of the railway company. The camp-meeting will be run on much the same lines as in former years."

An enthusiastic Spiritualist writes: "We have no regular speaker since Dr. Hewitt, our pastor, went to Kentucky, but good speakers are always provided. The evangelist, F. M. Stoller, spoke to us Sunday evening, and we hope we may hear him again, as he stands for all that is good and pure in spiritual progression. The one central truth that is ever put forth from this church is the one of brotherly love; that the quality of our thoughts and actions toward our fellow men determine for the uplifting and betterment of humanity. If this could but be instilled in our minds more and more, it would solve many questions of discontent and unrest of the human family. We have good music; last evening a solo, beautifully sung by Miss Dunlop, of the Chicago Musical College. Our conference meetings are interesting and instructive, and worthy of a large attendance. Other workers are always given a cordial welcome by Mr. H. F. Coates, the medium in charge of the hall. Mr. Coates' messages and tests are invariably recognized, clear cut, and of a high order."

The Milwaukee (Wis.) Journal says: "The Wisconsin Society of Spiritualists will hold its State Convention in this city, April 15, 16, 17. Mrs. Clara L. Stewart, president of the society, is here to-day making arrangements and has secured Lincoln Hall for the sessions. Dr. George B. Warne, president of the Illinois Association, will be the principal speaker, and Nellie C. Mosier, of Cleveland, Ohio, will act as test and message medium. Miss Mosier was once thought to have died, but just as the funeral services were to take place, came back to life, and since then claims to be able to talk, at her will, to persons in the other world."

Charles Morris writes from Philadelphia that Prof. W. M. Lockwood's lectures there were much appreciated.

M. M. Mangasarian, at the Grand Opera House, before the Independent Religious Society, speaking on the great scientist teachers of religion, said: "A scientific reputation is almost always a genuine reputation. Charlatanism in science can have no show of success. Herbert Spencer, Thomas Huxley and Ernest Haeckel are three of the scientific geniuses of modern times. Their thought is both clear and clean as well as comprehensive. These men have done much to destroy the three most stubborn foes of truth—ignorance, indolence and malice. The very essence of scientific genius is to propagate the truth, come what may. It is difficult to have one's hand filled with truths and to keep it closed from fear of persecution. But to fear such men as those mentioned because they shock our credulity, or to malign them because they break our images, would be a species of vulgarity. To be incapable of understanding and appreciating the thoughts of these great men would be punishment indeed. The one glorious message of these brave souls written in letters of gold is that religion is possible without superstition."

Scribe writes from Detroit, Mich.: "The fifty-fourth anniversary of modern Spiritualism was celebrated Sunday afternoon and evening in Knights of Pythias Hall, 55 Grand River, by the Society of Spiritual Unity, Rev. Marguerite St. Omer Briggs, pastor, assisted by Mrs. M. E. Jenkins, of Windsor, Ont., and Mrs. Rose Ferris. The hall was filled on each occasion. In the evening the seating capacity was taxed to the uttermost by a very intelligent audience. Dr. J. W. Briggs held the close attention of the audience by an address on 'The Spread of Spiritualism' within the last fifty years, and urged his hearers to read more Spiritual papers, and showed how many was published in the United States, England, France, Germany, and other European countries, as well as Cuba and the Philippine Islands. He spoke of the National and International Congresses, etc. Mrs. Briggs delivered the principal address of the evening, holding her audience spellbound by her flow of inspiration. Even the Detroit Free Press pronounced the celebration a decided success."

W. E. Slater writes from Pocatello, Idaho: "A handful of Spiritualists here are plodding along. At present we have no society, but are making preparations to form one and take a charter from the N. S. A. Brother C. J. Johnson is a hard worker, and while the dozen other members of our developing circle who have thrown down the bars of superstition, and are willing to have it made public that they have taken their stand for our noble cause, we hope to form an organization that will give a great impetus to Spiritualism, for I know there are a great many in our midst who are hungry for the bread of life. I desire to notify all mediums and organizers that if they will stop off at Pocatello while passing through they will be at no expense while here, and they could no doubt be the means of perfecting an organization here that would redound to their credit and the benefit of the cause. I will be glad to correspond with any medium desiring to make an appointment here. A platform speaker and test medium preferred."

Geo. Friend writes from Toledo, Ohio: "On behalf of the Independent Association of Spiritualists, I wish to say that in a previous letter to your valuable paper, I stated that it gave me great pleasure to announce that the association was making preparations for a greater dissemination of the truth of life beyond death, and as a matter of fact I wish to say that we have outstripped all previous attempts, for participation at this time was far greater than anticipation, although it is often said to the contrary. The spacious hall, which has a seating capacity of over eight hundred, was filled, and the front half was crowded to its utmost. The rostrum was bedecked with the most beautiful flowers the eyes ever beheld, and the display was simply grand, and the hall being lighted with hundreds of arc lights added greatly to the harmony of the great throng of people. At the afternoon meeting Mrs. Geo. Dailey discoursed, and was followed with messages by Mrs. Marion Carpenter. The evening session was opened by Mrs. Dailey, followed by Mrs. Carpenter, whose dissertation was such as can inspire humanity with a better hope, and which needs no comment from me. After Mrs. Carpenter came Mr. Carpenter, who, after a few well chosen remarks, took up the message work, and message after message was delivered with exactness and without one failure, which was gladly received. After Mr. Carpenter came Mrs. Carpenter again with more testimony from the so-called invisible witnesses, and in almost every instance they would impress the fact 'We are not dead, but live and love you still.' By Mrs. Dailey the fifty-fourth anniversary of modern Spiritualism was closed."

The postmaster of Carroll, Ind., writes as follows in reference to the ghost story which is said to have had its foundation there: "In regard to the ghost story, I will say that it is untrue, such a house and such parties being unknown to the people of this place."

Rev. Granville Louther, D. D., pastor of a local church at McPherson, Kan., was served with papers at a Methodist Episcopal conference charging him with heresy, and setting forth that he would be tried at Arkansas City, Kan., March 26. Mr. Louther is charged with making and teaching the following doctrines, which are set down as in violation of the confession of faith and the catechism: "That the serpent who talked to Eve was a man, one of the race to which she and Adam belonged; that he had not come into a consciousness of God, therefore, was classed with the beasts and that there were other inhabitants or members of the race; that if not, how did Cain find his wife in the land of Nod, where none of Adam's children except Cain had gone? If not, whence came the 'daughters of men' whom the 'sons of God' took for their wives? The reasonable interpretation is that the descendants of Adam were called 'sons of God' because, having entered into a conscious knowledge of God, they would claim him as their creator and worship him. The others, not knowing God, were called sons and daughters of men. That Adam and Eve, as first created, had no perception of their obligations of obedience; that in eating of the fruit of the tree of good and evil, they had done nothing except what others about them were doing, and what they themselves had formerly done, that is, live like beasts, but they had a higher vision of spiritual things than formerly, and consequently they felt guilt. That Christ died for men to show men how to die for man; that this willingness to die for man should be multiplied by exactly the number of disciples of Christ, and that the statement can never be completed until this idea prevails."

The 54th Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism will be elaborately celebrated Tuesday evening, April 1, at Handel Hall, 40 Randolph street, at 8 o'clock. This is for the benefit of the Old People's Home, which Mr. Cordingley is endeavoring to establish. Tickets 35 and 50 cents. Prominent speakers and mediums will participate.

Rev. Charles A. Brown, formerly of Toronto, a psychic and inspirational speaker, and who claims to speak under the inspiration of Martin Luther, delivered a couple of lectures at Hamilton, Canada, in Grossman's hall on the True Philosophy of Spiritualism. In the evening Mr. Brown took up the ministry of angels from a Bible standpoint, and discussed it in an able manner. At the close of the lecture questions were very ably answered, and the poetic controls gave a beautiful inspirational poem of seven stanzas on Truth, Love and Brotherhood, the subjects coming from the audience.

Flora Hardin writes from Anderson, Ind.: "Sunday, March 23, the Madison Avenue Spiritualist Society, of Anderson, celebrated the 54th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism. Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague arrived Thursday and stopped at the hospitable home of Mrs. Carroll Bronnenberg. Services were held each evening by them at the temple. Sunday morning the members of the society and their friends gathered at the temple with well-filled baskets. The morning hours were devoted to recitation, essays and music from the children and adults, and remarks from Mr. Sprague. A bounteous dinner was served in the lyceum room, to which everybody was invited. In the afternoon Mr. Sprague delivered one of the best lectures ever heard in Anderson, at the close of which he gave some excellent tests. Sunday evening, Mr. T. W. Smith, vice-president of the society, and Mr. Sprague spoke, followed by tests from Mrs. Sprague that were very successful. There were thirty-one new accessions to the society. Taken all in all, it was one of the best anniversary celebrations of the society."

John Jordan writes from Remington, Ind.: "We have Mrs. Maggie Vestal, a trumpet medium with us, and are having a glorious, good time. We believe Mrs. Vestal is a true and honest lady, and is doing good wherever she goes. She will leave here Saturday for her home in Chesterfield, Ind."

Localities desiring the services of G. W. Kates and wife as N. S. A. missionaries, will reach them by addressing 600 Pennsylvania avenue S. E., Washington, D. C. They have open time in April, May, June and July for the middle west.

A. C. Fawcett writes: "The clergy here are circulating an article purporting to be a confession of Camille Flammarion, that he has discovered Spiritualism to be a fraud. What is there in it? I would be pleased to receive an answer by letter or through your paper." There is no truth whatever in the statement that Camille Flammarion had discovered Spiritualism to be a fraud.

Mrs. S. F. DeWolf, the well-known medium, is now located at 704 Jackson Boulevard.

William E. Bonney is holding metings in Blair, Neb., and is desirous of obtaining engagements to lecture in Iowa during April. He is thinking of taking a journey to England during the summer or fall and wishes to correspond with secretaries of camp associations in the eastern states relative to securing engagements for the coming season. His parents who are quite aged, reside in Hampshire, England, and it is nearly twelve years since he last visited them. Societies through the eastern states would do well to write him. Address him at Blair, Neb., at once.

Ada Rainey sends a club of subscribers from Streator, Ill., for which she has our thanks. She writes: "I think your premium books are the grandest in the world. They are a comfort to all who read them, and you never will know how much I thank you. What we need here is a good lecturer and test medium to get up more interest. There has been a number of fakes here this winter. They do harm to the cause. We have no organized society here, and it would be a good field for the right person."

Lyman C. Howe writes from Fredonia, N. Y.: "Although I am busy preparing data for history, I am not confined to it. I am free to answer calls for platform work for long or short engagements, or for funerals; and I was never better qualified for good work than I am now. But I am not idle at home. The world moves and Spiritualism grows."

L. De Forrest writes: "Please give further notice through the columns of your paper of the continuance of the Band of Harmony Annual Experience Meeting, held at its rooms, Handel Hall, Thursday, April 3. All the delinquents are expected to produce the hard-earned dollar, and tell their story; the dollar, or more, however, will be joyfully accepted without the story. The usual good supper and program will be furnished."

Thos. J. Haynes writes: "Our fourth annual campmeeting at Briggs Park, will open July 6 and close August 6 1902. No pains will be spared to make the meetings a success. There are some open dates for this time, and I should be pleased to hear from some good speakers and mediums having open dates for that period, excepting from July 20 to 24, which time is reserved for Mrs. Loe Prior, who comes to fill her second engagement with us. I will write again soon, and inform you what days will be set apart for the N. S. A. and M. S. S. A."

Cheering words from Lafe G. Smith, of California: "It is with very great pleasure I write to express my appreciation for the eight premium books and The Progressive Thinker, just received. I think your Divine Plan is the noble work of God (Nature) as it puts the books within the reach of all who are looking for the truth. I was raised in the Christian faith, but have learned more truth from The Progressive Thinker in the last two or three years than I have in all my past life, for it tells me just what to believe and what to disbelieve."

B. Frank Schmid writes from Indianapolis, Ind.: "The First Spiritualist Church of Indianapolis, Ind., has had during the month of March Mrs Mary C. Von Kanzler as speaker. In behalf of the good lady, I would say that her discourses are fine and of the higher mental, along scientific lines of thought. The society will celebrate the anniversary of Modern Spiritualism, Saturday and Sunday April 5 and 6. During April we shall have with us Mrs. Josephine Ropp, of our city, one of the best platform test mediums in the country. She invariably draws large houses on account of her successful tests."

Will C. Hodge is now located at 619 South Hill street, LosAngeles, Cal., where he can be addressed for engagements to lecture.

Prof. W. M. Lockwood will leave Philadelphia for Pittsburg, Pa., April 4, where he has an engagement to lecture. Wherever the Professor goes, he attracts large and cultured audiences. His address while in Pittsburg will be in care of C. L. Stevens, No. 103 Sixth street.

C. J. Barnes, the well known trumpet medium, is open for engagements. Those who wish to develop trumpet mediumship, should write to him for terms at No. 818 Gallatin street, Marion, Ind.

The Society at Galveston, Tex., would like to engage a good, reliable message medium—one endorsed by the N. S. A. For particulars address John W. Ring, No. 2011 N½ street. Mr. Ring has been a prominent worker in Galveston for many years, and is now president of the State Association.

W. C. Jessup and Mrs. Alice Gehring hold public circles every Sunday and Wednesday evening, at No. 773 Sixty-third Place, Chicago. Their spirit manifestations bore the closest scientific scrutiny in various parts of Indiana where they have been. They came out triumphant every time. Their trumpet circles are conducted under the strictest test conditions.

Boston, Mass., March 26.—Dr. G. H. Bean, an English astronomer, makes the prediction that on April 6, half of the world will be flooded. He states that Venus, Mercury, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, Sun and Moon will all be on one side of the world, and a submergence of Western Europe, western Asia and the southeastern section of the United States, including Texas, will begin and will be completed. He says that the next part to be submerged is bounded by a line drawn from El Paso, Tex., to the southeast corner of Connecticut, then across the Atlantic Ocean and the British Islands, to the continent of Europe, including western Europe and Western Asia, the Mediterranean Sea and that part of the Atlantic Ocean east of the Gulf of Mexico.

The Spiritualist Society of Galveston, Texas, make the following declaration: "We accept Spiritualism, in its highest expression, as a universal religion based on the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of man; and, as such, its devotees are entitled, under the Constitution of the United States, to protection in such chosen form of worship and teaching as are not inconsistent with the rights of others. Its phenomenal, philosophical and scientific facts, collectively, constitute a field of moral and intellectual research, wherein the grandest triumphs of mind may be achieved and the deepest reverence of the heart be inspired. We believe the immortality of the soul is a fact of nature and a part of the infinite purpose, and in the possible communion of the incarnate and excarnate intelligences; and we maintain that the proof of conscious spirit life and individuality, after physical death, simply substitutes a certainty in place of hope respecting our destiny, without affecting any essential of religious life or duty.

E. M. Vail, president, writes: "The executive board of the Central Iowa Spiritualists Association has decided to hold the next camp at the usual place, Marshalltown, Iowa, from August 24 to September 14 inclusive. We are in correspondence with several of the best speakers and test mediums in the country, and will make arrangements with enough of them so that we will have a continuously interesting program."

In Memory of Alva Cly.

The following paper was read before the Mt. Pleasant Spiritual Research Society, Lancaster, Ohio, March 16, 1902:

As this is the anniversary of Alva's departure from us, we think it appropriate to say a few words. Alva was born and raised in Lancaster. One year ago to-day she left us, to join her sister Pearl in the spirit world. Her cheerful and sunny disposition made her many friends. It was for her the dawning of a brighter day, the beginning of a happier life. Her faith was supplanted by facts, belief by knowledge. The chasm between the two spheres of life had been bridged, and those loved immortal ones who had preceded her to that land of sunshine, crossed and recrossed, assuring her of their continued life and happiness. She has entered a life of greater activity and the consciousness of the only real life. Death to us as Spiritualists is not the withering of the flower, but the blossoming of the bud, the emancipation of the soul. She lives and loves as before her transition. She has been united with the loved ones gone before, and is living in a grander life, retaining individuality and personality. We should not mourn because she went. We would not wish her back to struggle on in this world of strife and pain, but feel comforted and consoled in her spiritual presence.

The poet has truly said, "There is no death; what seems so is transition." We know as Spiritualists that so-called death is but the new birth, the closing of the primary school, not a horrible thing, but natural and good. 'Tis the reward of life. Our religion is founded on facts, and is so broad that it embraces all truth no matter where found. We do not believe, we know man is immortal. How do we know? Because we have heard sweet voices from beyond the grave assuring us of man's continuity, and knowing that they still live, we shall live also, for God's law is immutable. They come to us, not because we have called them, but because of the strength of their love. We know the next life is one of greater activity, of everlasting progression. How do we know? Because the denizens of yonder shore, those whose cold, inanimate forms we long ago laid to rest in the bosom of old Mother Earth, have returned and told us so. Although unseen by many, they contribute to our happiness. Spiritualism is not only good to live by, but it is good, grand and glorious to die by. We know we shall meet Alva there. She has gone to prepare a place for us. This parting is only temporary.

It seemeth such a little way to me
Across to that strange country—the Beyond—
And yet, not strange, for it has grown to be
The home of those of whom I am so fond.
They make it seem familiar and most dear,
As journeying friends bring distant regions near.

So close it lies, that when my sight is clear
I think I almost see the gleaming strand;
I know I feel those who have gone from here,
Come near enough sometimes, to touch my hand,
And now I know but for our veiled eyes,
We should find Heaven right round us lies.

So after all there is no sting in death,
And so the grave hath lost its victory.
It is but crossing, with abated breath,
And white set face—a little strip of sea,
To find the loved ones waiting on the shore,
More beautiful, more precious, than before.

LENA CLY.

MORRIS PRATT INSTITUTE.

Clear Thoughts, Well Expressed.

We have at length the prospect of an institution devoted to the educational qualification of our platform workers. None too soon has this made its appearance among us. To start it on its career, and give it a good start, is of all work that lies before us, the most important at the present time. To sustain it with self-sacrificing and never-flagging zeal on the part of the whole body of Spiritualists, and to direct it with intelligence, broadness of view and that wisdom which is the practical application of Divine illumination on the part of those immediately concerned in its management, are likely to be the most important works for many years to come.

The idea that the spirits will supply us with the knowledge of all that we need know, that they will make vicarious atonement for our sins of gross and wilful ignorance, has been scotched but is not killed. Consequently we yet find, although the number of such is steadily diminishing, those who maintain that a liberal education is of no advantage, if not a disadvantage to a medium. Yet with strange inconsistency the same people will claim that every noted scholar or scientist who admits that communion between the visible and the invisible is a fact has brought support to the cause of Spiritualism which all its uneducated adherents could not furnish.

Our society work has been for the most part ineffective because the question considered in the selection of speakers has been not so much the character of the teaching given, as its source. Utter foolishness, or a flood of "words, words, words" without meaning, has been accepted if supposed to come from one who had discarded the physical body; but truth and wisdom if attained by the patient and laborious effort of one in the physical body has been little esteemed. If Spiritualism is to continue in existence as an independent movement, this must be so no more.

There are some who appear to be incapable of distinguishing between the education of mediums and the development of mediumship. The latter work has been undertaken so far by a rather numerous body of "developing mediums," with results generally lamentable. If the Morris Pratt Institute were destined to become a mill merely to grind men and women into mediums and turn them loose upon the world, unfitted to perform any useful duty to humanity in the same degree as they were fitted to become the mouthpieces of ignorant and undeveloped earth-bound souls, it had better remain forever with closed doors. Its purpose is not this, but to impart to those who may there seek it, such instruction as may fit them, whether mediums or not, to give public instruction to others.

Spiritualism has many aspects under which it may be presented for examination. It is mildness itself to say we have not always chosen the best for public exhibition. Its objects should be to culture human minds and spiritualize human souls. If these objects were held in view by our societies, possibly they might not lack support as they now do.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

In St. Paul, Minn., March 11, 1902, Mrs. Mary G. Teitswoth passed to spirit life after an illness of three months' duration. She was conscious to the last and longed to go. She was an ordained minister of Spiritualism. The funeral service was held under the auspices of the St. Paul Spiritual Alliance, of which she was a charter member. Her body was cremated, at her special request.

WILLS, AND THE HOME.

Wise Words from N. S. A. Headquarters.

To the Editor:—We send you our earnest thanks for all your kindness and courtesies towards the N. S. A., and again come with our earnest words to all who read your valued paper, concerning the things that affect humanity and our cause at large. Of course we shall have most to say concerning the Mediums' Home to be opened some day at Reed City, Mich., but first kindly allow a word from us concerning the making of wills of Spiritualists.

During this year the N. S. A. has spent from its treasury about a thousand dollars defending wills made by Spiritualists, most of which is lost—as there seems to be no way to regain any of this money, two of the wills thus defended, being pronounced unsound and invalid, because made by Spiritualists, the one in Philadelphia, giving to Spiritualists an insult of the direst kind, as the jury—upon the opinion of the judge—brought in its verdict, the statement that all Spiritualists are of unsound mind.

One will case we are defending is now in the courts, and we cannot as yet tell whether it will be sustained or not. Now and then the bequests of a Spiritualist to our cause are allowed to be paid, as others interested make no complaint; we know of one or two of this order, but the usual fate of a will that dares to favorably mention Spiritualism and bequeath anything to the cause, is contested, or denied probation.

It seems to me the only thing for an intelligent Spiritualist, when he intends to leave anything to a society or an individual in the ranks of Spiritualism, is to do as a friend of mine did several years ago. While possessing some property and all the while doing good deeds to individuals and to societies, he felt that he wished to do something more, after he should have no more used for physical support. As he knew that his will would be likely to be contested on plea of undue influence, or unsound mind, he went to a first-class lawyer and had his will drawn and duly witnessed, then on the same day he had himself faithfully examined, physically and mentally, by three expert physicians, each of whom, before a notary, made sworn statement to his health and soundness of mind—the statements of these physicians were filed with his will, each document of the same date, and there is no apprehension, that his will may be contested, or if it is, that it will be disproved.

Well, the writer of this has made the will question longer than was intended, but we must not cut down the Mediums' Home, and must make up in strenuousness what it may lack in extension. First, we call attention to the fact that two generous men promise to give jointly to the Home fifteen hundred dollars for rebuilding and equipping the institution, provided the Spiritualists at large would raise fifteen hundred dollars more. We think a statement recently made in one of our papers, that the State Association of Michigan has fifteen hundred dollars for some such purpose, and it might be induced to give it to the N. S. A. Home in that state, which would meet the offer of the two generous men, has made people think they have no need to give anything, and they have settled back quietly content to let some one else do the giving and the work, though Spiritualists at large have been crying out for mediums' homes, and demanding what Spiritualism has ever done to show such homes and other needed institutions to the world. Now the opportunity is given for Spiritualists all to help, if only a little, towards just the home they have been demanding to see established, where our worn-out mediums can find home comforts free, and be kept from the poor-house, and unless these people come forward and respond with their financial help in a cheerful spirit, may they forever hold their peace, concerning the needs of Spiritualism and mediums, and the duty of Spiritualists. As to the fund held by the Michigan State Association, we have as yet no assurance that it will be turned in for the Reed City Home; some of the committee entitled to select the place and purpose of that fund are friendly to our Home, and willing to have the fund placed in the N. S. A. Mediums' Home treasury, but we do not know what the decision will be, while we hope and trust it will be turned into this worthy channel, and will gratefully accept it, for the support of the Home, yet the two men who stipulated that the Spiritualists at large must contribute fifteen hundred dollars to the Home, in order for their money to be used in this grand work, do not think it right to let the Spiritualists of the country off from such an obligation if we should be so fortunate as to receive the gift from Michigan. It is not right for a few individuals to pay all the bills and carry the burdens of any benevolent or instructive association or institution. To allow them to do so, would be a mark of moral cowardice and of utter meanness, that would brand the Spiritualists as a class, as unworthy that glorious title of Spiritualism. But we have more faith in our dear co-workers and in Spiritualists at large than to believe this, and we yet believe that not only the needed amount will come but many dimes and dollars more, by which the inmates of the home may be fed, and properly clothed and suitably cared for. It will take three thousand dollars to get this work fully established; this amount we must have, although the Home is paid for now, then hundreds of dollars will be needed to keep the Home going. This is a good work that none can deny, all will surely see its importance, wish it well and send a mite, even at self-sacrifice.

If persistent call, suggestion, silent and insistent thought, earnest wishing and appeal will accomplish anything, then contributions to the Home will come rolling into this office, for all this is brought to bear on the public by the writer and other friends of the movement. Since our last appeal we have received some money and pledges; those who have done, have done nobly, and we honor them. Some of the letters received are sweet and pathetic, all are good, some are from the souls of warriors who love the Truth, and would die for it.

The last sums printed amounted to $71.50. We have now to report the following, $132.75 in cash—viz.: A. W. Courchane, $1; Henry M. Edmiston, $10; Christian Holler, $5; C. W. Ham, $10; John Hibbert, $30; Sarah Marlowe, $2; Dr. Fell, $1; "A Friend," $5; Isaac F. Tilden, $2; Mrs. Ellen F. Brown, $2; John Lynch, $1—a gift from an inmate of an Old Man's Home; Mrs. J. F. Hyde, $20; Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates, $5; Clark Fairfield, $3; F. C. Guth, $1; Jos. M. Kurlin, $1; J. W. Kurlin, 50 cts.; Eddy and Harry Kurlin, 50 cts.; J. S. Boyne, 50 cts; Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Wink, $2; Mrs. Shelby Weiler, $5; "A Lover of Truth," $1; Mr. and Mrs. Sprague, $10; Mrs. Morris, two fine towels and 25 cts.; Mrs. Virginie Barrett, one new sheet, two pillow slips, a book of poems, and charges of express on same to Reed City.

I have two Columbian half dollars of 1892 issue, which I do not list here as we hope to sell them for premiums; with them came these sweet words: "Dear Mrs. Longley:—I have two Columbian half dollars that I have treasured for nine years. Take them and use them for the Mediums' Home. I paid one dollar for each of them; perhaps you can sell them for a good price for the cause. With best thoughts from One who has been Comforted."

With loving thoughts to all our friends,

ASPHODEL BLOOMS AND Other Offerings.
BY EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storiettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 285 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The Author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.

The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."

That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."

Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest."

Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet. * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered, hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

NEW EDITION
THE LYCEUM GUIDE
BY EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

Do you want to organize a society for the social, intellectual and spiritual advancement of the children and adults?

THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM
furnishes all you desire.

Do you want a self-sustaining society, founded on the basic principles of the spiritual philosophy? You have it in THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.
It furnishes a system of evolution by internal growth; not the old cup and pitcher Sunday-school.
It has something to interest and advance every member, and those who are most active in teaching are the ones who learn most.

NO SPECIAL INSTRUCTOR REQUIRED.
THE LYCEUM GUIDE gives every detail needed for effective organization, and for conducting the society when established.
It has Golden Chain Recitations; the prettiest songs and music; choral responses; a service for a Band of Mercy; calisthenics; how to make the badges, flags and banners; marching exercises; full instructions in conducting the exercises, with parliamentary rules, etc.
Many Spiritualists living in isolation, have formed lyceums in their own families; others have banded, two or three families together, while large societies have organized on the lyceum platform, and found great interest in this self-instructive method.
Do not wait for a "missionary" to come to your assistance, but take hold of the matter yourself, procure copies of the GUIDE, and commence with the few or many you find interested.
Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle (address, Berlin Heights, Ohio) will answer all questions pertaining to

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. Jacob Hey. Q. What is the origin and present standing of the Theosophical Society?

A. The society known as Theosophs, or "the Universal Brotherhood," has no connection with any ancient association, and the word theosophy is given an entirely different meaning. It was founded in New York City by the notorious Madame Blavatsky, W. Q. Judge and a few others in 1875, and reorganized at Boston in 1895 by W. Q. Judge. Katherine A. Tingley, in 1898, seized the control of affairs and made hedquarters at Point Loma, Cal., where a temple is being built. It has now about 150 lodges in the United States. While Mrs. Tingley has made herself the leader and official head, by her assumption of divine powers, there has been a great deal of dissatisfaction in the ranks, and falling away of members.

The Theosophical Society of America is the literary department of the parent society.

In the beginning Madame Blavatsky made a strong impression by the audacity of her claims to super human power and the "mahatmas" who came and went at her bidding. She yet more enhanced her notoriety by transferring the base of her operations to India, where reports of marvelous manifestations, as the receptions of such messengers, and receiving letters by invisible means from distant places, could be sent to the devotees in this and other countries, without chance of contradiction. But Dr. Hodgson, in the interests of the London Psychical Society, went there and investigated, to find the high priestess of Theosophy was in all her claims to superhuman aid, a cheap and vulgar fraud. The erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman, has exhaustively shown that her books, on theosophy, the writing of which she claimed to have been from a superior source, are conglomerations of plagiarisms.

A. B. R.: Q. When did the Christians begin to count their era? Who counted the year one?

A. No one ever counted the year one, or the years before the sixth century, when a monk, Dionysius the little, changed from counting from the foundation of the city of Rome, beginning 527 A. D. Not until the middle of the 15th century was this method adopted by all Christendom. What did this monk take for data by which he made that year 527 from the birth of Christ? He had absolutely no data. There was not a fragment of history in the world by which he could have determined.

P. O. Hopkins: Q. It has been claimed that 52 of the signers of the Declaration of Independence were infidels, or what we would call to-day agnostics. Can this be verified, and if so where can the authorities be found?

A. It is difficult to positively ascertain the religious beliefs of the signers of the declaration. The brief notices accorded to many of them by encyclopedists do not mention their religious affiliations, a majority of them however were graduates of Yale, Harvard, or Princeton, and other sectarian colleges, and hence must have had sectarian instruction. It would have been impossible in those bigoted times for a man to have held high elective offices of trust and honor had he been a pronounced infidel. It must be remembered that Paine's political works preceded his theological, and he did not receive office by vote of the people.

There were 56 signers, and that 52 of them were infidels or agnostics, is a wild and unsupported assertion. Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jefferson were liberal in thought, but the Unitarians of to-day would call them conservatively orthodox. Samuel Adams was a Calvinist and he is endorsed by John Adams. Charles Carroll was a Catholic.

It was because many antagonistic religious views were represented by that remarkable assemblage of courageous and daring men, rather than the dominance of disbelief and infidelity, that they declared alike for political and religious freedom. The tyranny of religious rulers had been felt as keenly as that of political, and the new empire of freedom must be founded on the equal rights of all, regardless of religious beliefs or qualifications.

A. S., England: Q. (1) It is published from the pulpits and by tract societies throughout christendom, that Thomas Paine lived a drunken, wicked life. Can you furnish any reliable information as to the truth or otherwise of this?

(2) Is the current story about his so-termed "awful death" true?

A. One of the tracts alluded to is titled "Christ and the Bible for the World," and "A True Life of Thomas Paine, the Drunkard," published by the Protestant Laymen's Association. Perhaps there was never published four pages into which were condensed more despicable falsehoods, and infamous libels. Paine was slandered while living, for the powers of the church hated him with all the intensity of religious malignity, and the same charges were made as in this tract, and were met by his intimate friends and shown to be wilful falsehoods. Cheetham, who, influenced by the most detestable motives, wrote a "tissue of falsehoods which he published as a life of Paine, is responsible for the origination and promulgation of these infamous lies. They have been time after time shown to be absolute fabrications, and every preacher knows that they are, yet ever since his death they have continued to repeat the lies. He was an infidel and must be crushed. The Carver whose letter is quoted in this libelous tract, was a blacksmith who had become a believer in "The Age of Reason." He, however, became a tool in the hands of Cheetham, and in a fit of anger because Paine thought a bill he presented was too large, wrote the letter, which was, after Paine's death—not before—published by Cheetham, and the latter was prosecuted and convicted of libel by the lady involved.

Vale in his life of Paine says that the Christian judge who sentenced Cheetham for his wretched falsehoods, did not blush "to compliment him for the very act for which he was legally compelled to condemn him, for producing a work useful to religion."

O. M. Bennett, in the Life of Paine, introducing his complete works, says he met this Carver at a Paine Anniversary. He was an aged man but told Mr. Bennett that he had regretted writing that letter all his life. He was an ardent admirer of the man who said, "To do good was his religion," and he could never forgive himself.

Unable by argument to break the force of the "Age of Reason," the churches sought to destroy its influence by arousing prejudice against the man. This Cheetham saw his opportunity to publish a book which would sell, and without a scruple for the truth, as soon as the man whose pen had done almost as much as the sword, to free the colonies, was dead, he gave it to the greedy hands of bigotry. Catholicism attempted to destroy the influence of Luther by slanderous charges of sensuality, and drunkenness. Jesus had his Judas.

Of the last hours of Thomas Paine—first it may be said he did not recant. The English Encyclopedia conveys the idea that Dr. Manly testified that he did, but he says he did not; that he asked him if he "wished to believe in Jesus Christ?" He replied, "I have no wish to believe on the subject." A Methodist minister forced himself into the presence of the dying man and arrogantly told him that "unless he repented of his unbelief he would be damned." Rising in his bed with his remaining strength he replied indignantly that if he were able he would put him out of the room. This rests on the evidence of Mr. Willit Hicks, and endorsed by Vale in his Life.

He suffered exceedingly during his last illness, but his mental faculties were preserved in full vigor up to the last moment, when he expired without a struggle. This is the unimpeachable evidence of those present. They were his friends, for the priests so eager to force themselves upon him were excluded. Hence the stories circulated about his repentance and the awful agony attending his death were entirely false, published knowingly as libelous to the dead, and repeated constantly after having been exposed.

A Spirit's Message.

I am honest in my conviction that the following message was indelibly impressed upon my mind, by the departed spirit of my grandfather, who, while on earth was strongly inclined to the belief in spiritual return. We talked much together in regard to it, and there was a mutual agreement that if it was possible for the one who passed through the change of death first, to communicate (by any means) with the one still on earth, it should be done.

In accordance with this fact, I give below some thoughts which I am sure came from the spirit world to me:

I lived in the same house with my only son and his family, and as they were kind and devoted to me, there was much for me to enjoy, and although I had lived four score years, my mind had not been much impaired, so that my life was indeed a blessing to me and I felt it was also to my dear ones.

My son's business was such that he frequently had express and freight to be shipped to Boston.

As far as my friends knew (the morning of which I speak) I was in my usual health, and expressed the wish to carry this express to the station from which it was to be started. My son consented and I started. Before reaching the station I became dizzy and dazed, but this sensation passed off and I went on.

All at once there came a ringing sound in my ears and I knew no more (or was in a semi-conscious condition) until I had been tenderly cared for and laid upon the bed in my own pleasant home, where the devoted members of my own family anxiously watched over and administered to my last earthly needs.

Ten days I lingered, but then came the change of which I was scarcely aware until I found to my great surprise that I had left the tenement of clay over which my friends still tenderly watched.

I could see the body which had served me so faithfully for many years, lying there on the bed in the simple home, as in peaceful slumber.

I seemed to be standing beside the bed and I earnestly desired to speak to those who still lingered in tearful silence beside the body I had just left.

One thing I was sure of, that I was no longer confined, but had been freed from the tenement of clay which I had occupied in by-gone years.

As I looked upon the likeness of myself (molded in clay) I seemed to have some misgivings in forsaking it, and I thought: Can it be true that I am never to inhabit it again?

While these thoughts were passing through my mind, I heard a clear voice saying, "Why are you sad at heart? Why do you long for that which is perishable and will so soon return to dust?"

I looked around to see who it was that had spoken to me, and to my delight and astonishment, I beheld the sainted forms of my dear parents, and my beloved companion, who had passed to the spirit land many years before.

They had come to welcome me to that land which knows not the pangs of a separation by what is called death.

What a reunion that was, my dear grandson; you cannot realize it until you have had a similar experience.

I began to feel weary and confused, and they said that they would accompany me to a temporary home in which I could stay and rest until my wife and I could build one for ourselves in the future.

It was while on the way to this home that I became convinced that there is no such thing as Death to the soul of man, and I could say with the Apostle Paul, "Oh Death, where is thy sting? Oh, Grave, where is thy victory?"

The above was received by the sender in a home communion with the departed ones, a little over two years ago.

SPIRITUAL INTERESTS.

Is Spirit a Refinement of Matter?

All interests have a spiritual—that is, a purely intellectual aspect, and this aspect is the noblest. The great interest manifested in New Thought, the New Psychology, and a hundred kindred themes, with which so many are concerned at present, has for its object the revival of interest in spiritual things, in things unseen and eternal, in states of mind and feeling.

Rightly apprehended all good people have an interest in high things and hold them to be ever the supreme objects of interest. All who think with seriousness about human life; all who value character; all who prize solid happiness, people of mature experience, not merely "religious" people in the technical sense, not dogmatists or moralists only, but teachers, educators, friends of culture, of every opinion and calling, unite in maintaining the supremacy of these interests, however in detail they may differ in regard to the forms they assume.

The contrast between things material and spiritual is felt to be real, though it be left indefinite. The materialist himself after his manner, admits it if he be a thinker; for the thinker believes in thought and thought is immaterial; it cannot be weighed or measured. It has been defined as a movement of spiritual substance.

Now to lift people above the brute level is the aim of all educators. I believe it to be one of the great aims of this journal. Another of its aims is to insist on clear, frank statement, avoiding all that class of speculative composition which Mark Twain has described, in connection with spiritual messages, as "sloppy twaddle."

Some minds accustomed to think along the lines of materialistic analogies are apt to think spirit a refinement of matter. A more sublimated kind, but still a kind of finer matter.

For instance fire and water produce steam, and a certain state of the gases which constitute water by evaporation becomes air. Carbon is sometimes a gas, or in solid form it is coal, in still harder form it is diamond. Hence they presume that the various stages of existence called matter might in more refined degree be called spirit, and they accept an idea of immortality on that basis.

They find that limestone from the kiln varies from the lime in human bones, and that the added functions are the phosphates, and that the phosphates are the bases of organic life. They conclude that all this refinement and trituration must eventually be spirit. But this is a misconception. The premises are wrong, and the conclusions cannot be right.

Spirit or Light is itself the organizing power and the great resolvent of all material existences. Instead of spirit being created by organization, spirit organizes and creates, or brings into knowability.

Spirit like space, interpenetrates all things, is center and circumference. It is as opposite to matter as space is to grains of sand. And investigation leads on to a dualism of mind and matter, or else to a Trinism, of Light or Life, mind and matter.

This step is taken when in development we arrive at that stage which we call self-consciousness in the spirit. This is the step above mere animal life, the awakening in the spirit. As the mind awakens to its spiritual interests, it begins to realize the necessary processes of knowledge.

The perception of the rational ground and possibility of knowledge is certainly a spiritual interest.

Along with whatever any intelligence knows, it must, as the ground and condition of its knowledge, have some cognizance of itself. That is to say, self or the spirit "me," is the common center, the continually known rallying point, in which all our acts of knowledge meet and agree. Our personality in the Inner Life. This is the starting point, and is axiomatic. But explanation may be used to show its axiomatic character.

Common opinion and ordinary psychology assume that consciousness is possible, without self-consciousness. But in fact knowledge comes by object, plus subject taken together. Mark this.

Matter per se, the whole material universe by itself, is of necessity absolutely unknowable; for by itself it is a mere collection of objects without a subject or self. But the only things which can possibly be known are objects plus a subject or self. Therefore the whole material universe by itself, or per se, is of necessity absolutely unknowable.

"All knowledge and all thought are concrete and dead only with concretions—that is the concretion of the particular and the universal."

The ego, self or mind, per se, is of necessity absolutely unknowable; it is known only in some particular state or in union with some non-ego.

Mere objects of sense can never be objects of knowledge. The senses by themselves are not competent to place any knowledge or intelligible thing before the mind. That alone can be represented in thought which can be presented in knowledge. For it is impossible to think that of which knowledge has supplied and can supply no sort of type. It is a part of wisdom, to know the ground and condition and possibility both of knowledge and of ignorance. For we can only be ignorant of that of which we can have knowledge.

No existence at all can be conceived by any intelligence anterior to, or aloof from, knowledge. Knowledge of existence, the apprehension of one's-self-and-other-things, is alone true existence.

The most gorgeous sunset ever viewed from Mt. Washington, was but a synthesis. (1) a whisp of vapor; (2) the vibrations from the setting sun, and (3) the percipient mind of the operator, who translated those vibrations through the optical lenses, into all of that wealth of beauty.

This spiritual method obtains a great advantage in starting from no hypothesis, affirmation or negative, in regard to the absolute existence of the material universe. The affirmative assumption has disconcerted every attempt which has hitherto been made to propound a reasoned theory of knowing. We indulge at the outset in no opinion in regard to independent material existence, pro or con. (Both matter (abstract) and spirit, are perceived, when perceived at all by the inner life, the soul, absolutely. They are not sensuous perceptions.) That point is to be determined by the result of the inquiry into the actual character and constitution of knowledge. To this inquiry we adhere and tracking the knowable through all the disguises and transformations which it may assume, we find, under all its metamorphoses it is at bottom, essentially the same—the same knowable in all essential respects susceptible though it be of infinite varieties in all its accidental features. Knowledge is of God!

The Central Infinite; the Inner life of all, still leads us onward and upward to that home,

"Where Love is an unerring light
And Joy its own security."

Boston, Mass. J. P. COOKE.

EDUCATION, PRO AND CON

Mrs. Clara Watson Answered.

Mrs. Watson is in trouble. In No. 643 of The Progressive Thinker she narrates its nature. It is painful, and she is entitled to the help of all her many friends. She is not the first to be thus afflicted, and will not be the last. "The woods are full of 'em."

Moses Hull is the log in her road, and the Morris Pratt Institute the pitfall.

Before proceeding to lift the burden from the fair lady's mind, I will use an illustration. In New York state they have recently enacted that when a couple desires to enter the blissful realm of matrimony they have but to sign a mutal agreement and lodge it with the clerk of the court within a month, and it is as strong as though done with all the pomp that surrounded the nuptials of Chauncey Depew's recent change of state. The new law, however, does not interfere with couples going to heaven by the old way if they wish to. It is precisely this way with Moses Hull and the Morris Pratt Institute. Every medium on earth and in heaven will be left just as free to unfold in the old way as they ever were.

The Methodists commenced their new work of reform in a blind, uncouth, tumble-down style, but they learned at last to improve it. The Spiritualists are passing through the same natural experience, with this difference that while the Methodists compel all their leaders and speakers to become smooth, gentle and delicate, the Spiritualists will force none; their old-time freedom will remain undisturbed, and only voluntary aspirants will be received.

She and Moses are in agreement and she doesn't seem to know it. She and he would both have schools, and both would not blockade other passage-ways to bliss. He knows and she knows that no medium has ever developed under past conditions that has not suffered mountains of agony and valleys of humiliation. The suffering has been so great that many a mother and medium now declares that no child of hers shall be likewise tortured if she can prevent it.

Mrs. Watson says she would have schools, but would have them rest on the solid foundation of science and philosophy, and not upon the shaky foundation of religion—a something that has no counterpart in nature." How little she dreams that she herself is doing more to drive cultivated and enlightened Spiritualists back into the churches than a dozen conservative Spiritualists. She takes away their God, their theology, their religion, their prayers, their forms and ceremonies, many of which are very beautiful; and then asks as a substitute that a little talk with some common-place spirits shall be an all-sufficient soul food.

Thirty years ago such cultivated and enlightened Spiritualists had but very little commenced to swell our ranks. Also then it was more the simple desire to know if the intercommunion was really proved. It is not so now. Then they cared not how they got it, and the class of investigators belonged to the crude and the rough, as a rule. Now the class has very much changed and the object of the attendance is quite different. The daily press and the popular magazines now concede the truth of the intercommunication. Now a new thirst is created; a desire for new knowledge on a thousand new subjects is strongly manifest, and it is desired in intelligent form by an intelligent mind.

Out of hundreds and hundreds of mediums, Mrs. Watson mentions as many as can be counted on the fingers of both hands that have risen to be equal to the demand. None would praise these more than Moses, and he would be the last man to put a straw in the way of others getting there by the same route as these, where it was their preference. But he would provide a pleasanter process for all such as would so elect.

Jennie Hagan Brown told me her guides told her they wished she was better educated and knew the meaning of a larger range of words, for then they could tell much more that is now denied them. In the cases of Colville and Mrs. Richmond it is different; they continue to be unconscious while lecturing, but twenty-nine out of every thirty mediums do not so continue. The tendency of unconscious mediums is to finally grow into the conscious.

Where Mrs. Watson says "religion has no counterpart in nature," how does she know? It is generally agreed by Jew and Gentile that religion means man's relation to a power and intelligence above himself. Where is there any proof that man does not find in nature a power and intelligence above himself? What is mind in man? What is natural law? The scientist finds mind to be simply one of the manifestations of so-called natural law; finds it all to be motion. Thus we have in nature a religion a thousand times superior to any other ever known.

She says that in her opinion all the Morris Pratt Institutes and all the Moses Hull Training Schools will not prevent ignorance from coming to the front." No one would wish to keep ignorance from coming to the front, if it can.

Our democracy especially provides a "free race for all." It also encourages advantages wherever possible. Theodore Roosevelt is to the front, with the advantage of a liberal education. Grover Cleveland got to the front with the disadvantage of limited early advantages. Every one honors Mr. Cleveland for it. The same equal chances will still be respected by the Morris Pratt Institute and the Moses Hull Training School. They will invite but not coerce.

Where she talks of guides with big names, and how the "controls" tell what to do, etc., this is so clearly ironical that it calls for no reply. She says "great masses will still come to the meetings whose leaders never darkened the door of an institute or a training school." I think she here speaks truthfully, and may such meetings as she alludes to continue to multiply and wax strong, as long as they can be a success and as long as there are classes that need them; and that will doubtless be a very long time.

She says college-bred people make mistakes. Of course they do. Common sense is born, not made. She says "no law of the land can bid us be silent." I think she here expresses a thought held by many others, and this is the unfortunate thing. I don't see how such an idea could have gotten abroad. It certainly should be corrected. She says, "why cannot Spiritualism produce to-day as grand and exalted talent unaided by Spiritualistic theological institutions as it has done in the past?" Evidently she here uses the word "theological" as a "fling" at the new progressive movement, but let that pass. The answer is because conditions have and are making such great changes. Time was when our greatest newspapers would not employ a college-bred writer. Now the greatest newspapers will employ none but college-bred writers. Conditions with newspapers are no longer what they were. Even the railroads are growing more and more to seek college-bred men.

She says, "our boast has been that Spiritualism had the power within itself to educate its mediums and speakers." The "boast" still holds good, and it certainly always will. Heaven forbid that the time may ever come when the spirit world shall in the least degree be denied the exercise of all of its best wisdom and power. Moses Hull would improve this opportunity. He would nowhere place bans on it. She extols the "wondrous writings of A. J. Davis." So does the whole world. There has been but one A. J. Davis.

She says Mr. Hull says that the old days and old ways of educating the workers are gone forever. And adds, "It may be so, but would they could return." I have heard many a medium say that had they been favored with the right instruction they could have developed more in a year than they did in five years as it was. But the spirit world was then as ignorant, to wisely instruct, as the mortal world. Their experience and knowledge were sadly limited. Many and many a medium has been ruined in health for life, and other mediums have been brought to the deathbed by being overworked by unwise and ignorant spirits. Many a medium mother would rather put her child into an institute than into a circle. All mediums have suffered untold agony from lack of confidence, from the feeling that so much was expected of them when they felt no assurance of giving anything. A wise education will enable the medium to duly explain and obviate all such embarrassment. Mediums are often more disgusted with themselves, from their ignorance of their profession, than are their patrons. Most mediums have to pass through several phases of mediumship before settling down to the best one, for them. Education has a work to do to explain this. Mrs. Watson asks, "have the spiritual helpers left us to work out our own salvation?" To a very large degree, yes. Unless we also become helpers the ship must finally become stranded. But the mortal side is not going to be found wanting. She goes on with the interrogatory and adds, "or is the material out of which fine speakers and mediums are developed, exhausted? It is not only not exhausted, but it is going to be better than ever. The movement is only passing through a natural transitional period. Let the earnest and noble lady, Mrs. Watson, have a little patience and she will behold a panorama of great beauty, and scenes worthy of this the greatest reform movement of the past century. E. W. BALDWIN.

Illiterate Spiritualism.

To the Editor:—For some years past we, the Spiritualists, have been urged and urged to rally to the standard of the "training school" for mediums and preachers; so that we may cease being disgraced by illiterate speakers and mediums on our rostrums. Or in other words, to make our religion more respectable. We are told how humiliating it is for a speaker or medium to appear before an intelligent audience and make use of bad grammar, etc. Well, it is; but is it necessary to have a special training school for the training of mediums and lecturers, when there is a school in nearly every district in the United States, and high schools and colleges in every state and city, to teach people to use good English and good manners. It seems to an illiterate person like myself that those schools are ample for the purpose intended. But if we are to so educate our mediums that they can explain away the absurdities of the Old and New Testament, and make them appear sensible, and to make long, flowery, high-sounding invocations, it may be necessary to have a Spiritualistic Morris Pratt theological school for that. But, as Spiritualism grew to its present proportions by the efforts of the decarnate workers of the spirit world, and their co-operators the mediums in this, both more or less illiterate, and has according to reports of some high in authority been on the wane ever since it has been theologized and made partially respectable, we hardly know whether the "training school" is needed or not; or whether it is necessary to educate mediums to be mediums. We have heard of some very young, and quite illiterate people delivering very learned discourses. We will give as an instance, a little girl in Athol, Mass., who when so small that she had to stand on a box to see over the pulpit or desk, delivering a discourse an hour in length, both eloquent and learned, while in a deep trance. We wish to inquire, of what use would a knowledge of evolution, and grammar have been to that child? And if the spirit using her organism could have done any better if the child had held a certificate from a Spiritualistic Theological Training School.

What is Spiritualism? We do not mean, is it a religion or a science, but is it a belief or knowledge of a continuation of life after the change called death; and the communication of spirits with mortals? If it is, then fine rhetoric will be useless to advance the cause. We understand that ere long illiterate mediums and speakers are to be kept off the rostrum, or not recognized by educated, bon-ton Spiritualists; nor yet at circles where the respectable sit. Then if my dear old illiterate mother should wish to communicate through a medium to me, and should use her well-remembered backwoods dialect (knowing no other), the medium would be expelled for illiteracy, and if she used any other I would never recognize her as my mother. Or, if my children should communicate and use fine grammar, never having been educated, I could not believe it was either of them, and if they used their baby voice and prattle, oh, how undignified and detrimental to the cause of Spiritualism!

If a medium or lecturer is entranced, or is in that abnormal condition so as to be used to voice the sentiments or opinions of a decarnate spirit, then a "training school" education is useless to them. And if they are not, but are in a normal state, watching closely so as to make no grammatical blunders, their communications or lectures are not Spiritualistic in any sense whatever; but are a part of the fraudulent manifestations that make so large a part of our respectable Spiritualism (?) I am told that there are institutions where physical mediums are furnished paraphernalia for producing fraudulent materialization and other phenomena, and taught how to use them—a "fraud training school." Are we also to have a fraud mental training school?

BEYOND THE VAIL

A Sequel to "Rending the Vail."

The two volumes together as a record of practically obtained facts demonstrating the claims of Modern Spiritualism as to post mortal survival, are unique and overwhelming.

Every communication is from a full materialized spirit form, in good light, and either spoken audibly or written in full view by the form. There is not an automatic or trance message in the book.

It is illustrated by several engravings, the originals of which were drawn in the presence of the circle by a full form materialized spirit artist.

BEYOND THE VAIL is, as a rule, the experiences of spirits in both worlds—their own account of their lives on earth and their progress after death to their present condition of freedom from earth conditions. The narratives are intensely interesting, instructive and often highly dramatic.

Coincident with these are the profoundly philosophical comments of the controlling spirits of the seances. Prof. William Denton, Thomas Paine, Dr. W. H. Reed and others—covering, law, medicine, jurisprudence, theology and metaphysics. There are no books in existence of like character or of higher authority. Price, by mail, $1.75.

THE BEAUTIFUL SOUVENIR VOLUME,

By A. LEAH UNDERHILL,
(Of the Fox Family.)

The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism.

Thirty-three chapters, 477 pages, superbly printed, and bound in colors and gold, 15 illustrations, 5 steel engraved portraits of the celebrated Fox Family, a full page engraving of the old house at Hydesville, which to this day, by the act of its wealthy and respected owner, Artemas Hyde, Esq., bears the inscription, "Here Spiritualism Originated in 1848."

A complete history of the initiation of the movement known as Modern Spiritualism, from the epochal period which dates from March 31, 1848. Since that day, starting from a small country village in western New York, Spiritualism has made its way against tremendous obstacles around the civilized globe.

Only a limited number of copies of this rare book, now out of print, are to be had, and these can be obtained only at this office. Those who remit at once will receive a copy, post paid, at the GREATLY REDUCED PRICE OF $1.

Note.—By failure in 1885 to complete contract with the author, a large portion of the edition was left unbound, and so remained for a number of years, when they were rescued and bound at additional cost, hence this valuable contribution to the cause of Spiritualism was not properly presented to the Spiritualistic public, and a host of investigators have not had the opportunity of securing a copy until the present time. Do not fail to send for a copy at once. J. R. FRANCIS.

"THE UNKNOWN"

—BY—

CAMILLE FLAMMARION.

"The Unknown" created a marked sensation in France when first published and can scarcely fail to arouse the greatest interest in this country. It is an eminent scientist's study of the phenomena of the spirit world. In touching upon the various physical manifestations the author cites many absolutely authenticated instances, and chapters of his book are as weirdly fascinating as the most fantastic of Poe's tales. It treats on incredulity, credulity, hallucinations, psychic action of one mind upon another, transmission of thought, suggestion, the world of dreams, cerebral physiology, psychic dreams, distinct sight in dreams, actual facts, premonitory dreams and divination of the future, etc. 487 pages, cloth bound. Price $2.00.

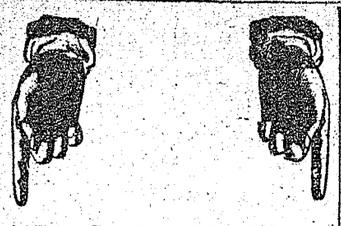
History of the CHRISTIAN RELIGION to the Year 200,

BY CHARLES V. WAITE, A. M.

Fifth Edition—Revised, with Much Additional Matter in Appendix

A standard and reliable history of the earlier period of the church, giving facts that are not found in the so-called histories written by churchmen. This latest edition has been carefully and thoroughly revised, and it is a reliable magazine of facts, such as the honest inquirer wants. It opens up to the investigator and student a wide field of historical research in matters of fact wholly ignored by the regular church historians, and throws a bright glare of light on points heretofore carefully shrouded in darkness.



A large octavo volume of 556 pages, strongly bound in cloth. Price $2.25. For sale at The Progressive Thinker office.

Is Now Located at

No. 1087 Boylston street, Boston, Mass., where he will be pleased to meet all who may call between the hours of 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. The wonderful work in healing the sick that Dr. Watkins is accomplishing is indeed most astounding; his patients live to testify to his wonderful powers as a healer. For the last year his work has been most wonderful. He says himself that his cures this year have been more than ever before in numbers, as he confined himself to only 30 new patients a month. Dr. Watkins attends personally to each case, and therefore he can do better work than if he had a great many assistants; no staff of visible helpers are in his office to annoy and suggest this and that. He knows what is the trouble with each patient, and knows the right specific to give. He prepares and puts up all of his medicine, and has no help in his medical treatments that is visible help. Write him to-day, and by return mail you will receive the diagnose. No charge made for diagnosing your case. Send age, sex and leading symptom.

? ARE YOU SICK ?

RIGHT AND WRONG USE,

Service and Province of Prayer.

In the discussion on the subject of prayer we observed a few writers were in favor of prayers in general; others were opposed to any and all prayers; while the larger number expressed themselves as opposed to prayer to a deity, as related to all the old religious systems and customs, yet approving prayer or invocations to spirits, guides and angels. The latter class seem to be on the right track, with the best logic and reasons to sustain them. There is a false, erroneous use of prayer, while it may also have its true and rightful province, nature and service to humanity.

It seems difficult and almost impossible for some Spiritualists to release themselves from the effects of their early training. The tendency has been toward old church forms and ceremonies, the catering to popular sentiment, the imitation of worn-out and senseless worship. Why hug the delusions of long ago and wallow in the darkness of medieval ignorance, when the light of knowledge shines around us? We ought to exercise the courage to discard the customs of decaying systems.

The word prayer and the act of praying have been so perverted that the word and the act have been ridiculed. Man is a devotional being, and this devotion is the result of primary ignorance and false education. Is there a deity able to bow at the fiat of petty man? Does this unknown being possess ears to hear and heart to respond to the complex language of each individual imploring aid in accordance with their own ideas? The sentiments and prayers of the people are in conflict with each other and the course of nature. If all supplications were answered in detail as desired, our world would be thrown out of order and the scales of justice unbalanced.

Prayer, as an act of worship to a deity, is a degradation of true womanhood and manhood. Prayer and fear have done much to enslave and demoralize humanity. The mythical king upon an imaginary throne commands and his poor subjects do him homage by bowing before him—a degrading superstition—the pitiful moans of slaves begging for mercy—an institution of priestcraft for the support of religion. They act as though their God is pleased with the pleadings, plaudits, attention and flattery of his subjects. And these devotees pray for things they have no more idea will occur than that they will fly.

"Ask and ye shall receive. Ask what ye will and it shall be given." How can any intelligent person believe that? The most persistent of all things are religious beliefs. Why continue the forms we know to be unavailing or useless? Christians never had a prayer answered by a deity, yet they go right on praying as though everything they had asked had been granted. Prayers have been offered to the gods in all ages, yet no evidence appears that they have been answered, and people are no nearer what they are seeking than at the beginning. The idea is that we are ruled by a vacillating personality that can be swayed this way and that by the prayers of his votaries. The constant din of the mixed multitude of voluble palaver and pitiful pleadings for Christ's sake, grating upon his hearing, would be a terrible infliction on the deity. This deity must be pretty busy damning, saving and inspiring all at once. Prayers are made to the same god by two nations at war, which if answered, would go a long way towards depopulating both. No ingenuity of interpretation can reconcile these contradictions.

There is nothing that Jesus ever said or did that has any weight of authority in Spiritualism; but to those who regard him as the highest authority in religion we want to say, public prayer was distinctly condemned by him, who commanded all to pray in secret. He regarded the public prayer as a mockery and senseless form. He never made a public prayer, and he denounced praying in the synagogues and at the corners of the streets. It is the hypocrites that love to pray in public places to be seen and heard of men and women.

Prayers to a deity can never change the order of things, or set aside a law, nor affect the inevitable. Prayer is no protection from the madman's bullet and faith no antidote for ills. If McKinley had recovered his health, Christians would have claimed it is an answer to their prayers; but since he died, the unavailing prayers are forgotten. Where was Jehovah when our President died? when millions of prayers were sent up for his recovery? Echo answers, Where? He was as silent as the tomb—heartless as a statue. This lesson ought to teach people the folly of their devotions to unknown gods. Surely when a "Christian nation" bows the head and burdens the soul with appeals to a God, with all the eloquence born of a great national sorrow, it should be a sufficient test for the merits or value of prayer to a deity.

Christians have charged the assassination to Divine Providence. Their wise theologians have explained and affirmed that all things come to pass according to God's will—that it was God's will that the President should die, that we must bow in humble submission to his will; and they love and praise him, all the same, while they hate and condemn the assassin who executed God's will, according to their own theory.

We will now view the subject of prayer from another standpoint, in the new light, and consequently change our attitude. For many years we have observed that our spirit guides and teachers have given to the world new interpretations, explanations and definitions of some words and phrases; and they have reversed or changed many of the old lines of thought, usage and definitions. Whatever wise spirits teach or have taught on some subjects we regard and accept as higher authority than any dictionary, creed or bible. The word prayer, like the word religion admits of very wide interpretation and definition.

In The Progressive Thinker of Jan. 4, Brother C. Severance confines the subject of prayer to the narrow limits of a particular definition and makes a fair argument within the limits. He says: "Prayer has always been associated with some form of worship given to God." We admit that old theology has shaped the world of thought into that condition; yet we shall discuss the subject without reference to any deity or worship whatever; and we will define prayer as will; desire; effort, purpose; aspiration; request; petition or the asking of favors; spirit union and communion. All people pray, in this sense.

Brother Severance says: "There is no power outside of man himself that can protect or save him from evil, and to pray to any exterior power is evidence of a misguided intellect and a wrong conception of natural forces." We shall endeavor to show that this is an error and that he has a wrong conception. Let us get away from the old religious forms and everything that bears the stamp of error, examine the subject in the new light and let truth and reason be our arbiters.

The history of Modern Spiritualism demonstrates the fact that, in thousands of instances, spirits have granted favors, protected from evil, warned of danger, answered prayers to some extent in accordance with the wishes and needs of their mortal friends. We can lean on powers and forces that can be found and defined and that are available. Reader, did you ever ask your spirit friend to do anything and receive an answer?—even a thing so simple as a rap or tip of a table? I once asked my spirit friend to show her hand and immediately over the medium's head appeared two of the most beautiful hands I ever saw, in slow and rapid motions. They vanished and reappeared several times, and all the company were delighted with the demonstration. No better proof than that can exist that spirits hear and understand what we have to say to them.

Cardinal Gibbons on Woman's Rights.

In the January number of the Ladies' Home Journal I find an article from the pen of Cardinal Gibbons entitled, "The Restless Woman," in which he attributes this restlessness in woman to her getting out of her proper sphere; that is to be wife and mother only. When she is reaching out after knowledge, she becomes restless; her place is to be the homemaker for husband and children. He seems to refer to the women of our country. He says: "Modesty and gentleness—these two handmaidens of womankind—seem to have been laid aside by many, and masculinity and aggressiveness have been given their places. The spirit of unrest has found easy victims in thousands of American homes. As I have said before, I regard woman's rights—women and the leaders in the new school of female progress as the worst enemies of the female sex. They teach that which robs woman of all that which is amiable and gentle, tender and attractive, and which gives her nothing in return but masculine boldness and brazen effrontery. They are habitually preaching about woman's rights and prerogatives, but have nothing to say about her duties and responsibilities, they with draw her from those sacred obligations which properly belong to her sex, and fill her with ambition to usurp a position for which neither God nor nature ever intended her."

Either Cardinal Gibbons wilfully prevaricates or he is ignorant of the truth of the teachings of the suffragists, and in either case he makes an egregious mistake to lay himself open to the criticisms of thousands of educated American people. It is too late in the day of intellectual progress for any one to try to block the wheels of this forward movement in this enlightened country and age.

If Cardinal Gibbons had attacked our butterflies of fashionable life in this way, calling them "restless women," no one would have objected, but to lay such untruthful charges to Lucy Stone, Susan B. Anthony, and numerous other women of the suffrage movement, is to draw down upon his clerical head the just anathemas of all liberty-loving women of our free America.

What are the Cardinal, his priestly coworkers and monks, I would ask, doing to carry out the plan for women to be wives and mothers? If there are to be wives and mothers there must be husbands and fathers, and why are hundreds of our innocent young women kept prisoners in the various cloisters, "to keep them pure and free from the contaminating influences of the world?" If that be true, why not put young men into seclusion? Their souls are just as precious in the sight of God as are the souls of our innocent young women.

Why did the Creator give woman the desire for knowledge and freedom, and also the power to be useful in the world in all legitimate ways where man has trod, along the lines of progress and improvement.

His whole article teems with ignorance of the situation as it is to-day. I only touch lightly on this uneven strung article of his; it will take an abler pen than mine to do it justice, and I hope that pen will come to the front soon. MRS. C. C. BACON.

HEALTH RESTORED

The entire country is astonished at the wonderful cures perfected through the method originated by Dr. J. M. Peebles, the Grand Old Man of Battle Creek, Mich. This science is a subtle force in nature combined with magnetic medicines, and called by the eminent doctor,

Psychic Science

It has been termed the greatest pain reliever ever known. In a perfectly natural manner it builds up the system and restores health. It makes no difference how serious or hopeless the case may seem, there is positive hope in this grand science. It has restored the deaf, blind and lame, cured the paralytic, and those suffering from Bright's Disease, Consumption, Stomach Trouble, Catarrh, Nervous Debility, Neuralgia, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Female Troubles, as well as men and women addicted to the liquor, morphine and other vile habits.

Geo. H. Weeks, of Cleveland, Ohio, sends heartfelt thanks for restoration to health after suffering from nervous prostration and insomnia for years; he says he now enjoys health and restful sleep every night. Mrs. J. A. Rust, of Itasca, Minn., cured of uric acid poisoning in two month's treatment writes: "I am better than in years, and each day brings new health and strength. I will refer all ailing ones to you." Mary A. Earl, Crawford, Mich., suffering from pronounced female difficulties and kidney disease, says: "I took your treatment three months and it has been a success in my case. I am indeed grateful to you for my recovery." C. E. Davis, Woodman, N. H., who suffered all the miseries of a dyspeptic, writes that as the result of Dr. Peebles' treatment, he had not missed a meal since last March. D. W. Bridgman, of Del Norte, Col., writing Sept. 30, after three months' course: "When I began treatment with Dr. Peebles' Institute of Health I was a cripple, unable to walk but little with a cane. Now I am able to walk with ease. Some days ten or fifteen miles. My general health is excellent. I can hardly find words to express my gratitude, as previously I had tried everything I could hear of and got no relief. Mrs. Isaac Varney, Dover, N. H., a sufferer of spinal trouble and nerve exhaustion, writes that she would not go back to the state of health she was in before taking this treatment for all the world. Solomon Fried, of Vanderbilt, California, cured of neuralgia and catarrh, says: "I am well and a thousand times obliged to you."

NOTES AND SUGGESTIONS

Along the Line of Practical Work.

To the Editor:—I find my yearly subscription has expired and I am missing the dear old Progressive Thinker that brings each week the glad tidings from the various workers all over the country, as well as its rich philosophy and curt controversary of thought carried on by brothers and sisters upon different planes of spiritual advancement.

I am still shedding forth the light as it is reflected upon me by my spiritual teachers. I am holding spiritual services each Sunday at 216 Grand avenue, in this city, and have attracted good audiences so far. The people return again and again as a proof of the satisfaction they feel in the spiritual gospel as interpreted by my guides.

But we who occupy the platform must not flatter ourselves that we are the only promoters of this glorious cause; as those who sit in the privacy of their own rooms, bearing the message for loving spirit friends to the broken-hearted of earth, are unlocking the doors of superstition and bigotry that in time will free such souls and set them progressing upon the spiritual pathway; then, many generous souls who have not been chosen as teachers, yet recognize they can be ministers and open up their homes without money or price and invite the public to partake of the spiritual love feasts provided by their hospitality. The various spiritual workers are invited in, and many in that way are blessed by this most comforting gospel.

I am in mind of such now as Mr. and Mrs. Pierce, of Waukesha, open their house every Tuesday evening to all those who wish spiritual teaching to come and receive such as I have to offer, and we find a goodly number each week; also Mrs. Pennycook, of Brookfield, has made several attempts in that direction. I held a parlor meeting in her home several weeks ago, and now I am in receipt of a letter calling me back, as she says all who were present were well impressed and they were nearly all skeptics.

This is one of the ways, friends, to help along the cause; I deem there is no excuse for anyone standing back and saying, "Oh, I can't do anything in my town; the people are all so churchy!"

Have you tried very hard?

Have you let your light shine?

What does your gospel teach you? Does it not teach you the most exalted of all gospels? Does it not teach you self-unfoldment and dependence, and sweep away the cobwebs of superstition and doubt and that no savior was born to bear your sins for you, but you must answer for the deeds of your life, and save yourself by right living.

And now, my Spiritualistic friends, that you know this, did it ever occur to you that you were sinning against high heaven when you hide your light under a bushel? Letting the light of this most glorious truth grow dim for want of proper support while you help keep the lamps of other churches trimmed and burning, though you know in your heart they are filled with oil of a spurious quality.

When you some time in the future awaken to the very truth of your duty, how do you suppose you will meet your soul in the judgment of your misdirected energy?

Did you ever stop to think whether you would rather support the truth or a falsehood?

If the truth, then pay your money to the support of truth; help sustain our spiritual press by buying their literature and distributing among the heathen.

Also the National Spiritualist Association is the hub of this divine wheel. Each state Association represents a spoke in the wheel of progress in religious thought. Please help strengthen even your own spoke by sending a dollar a year to the state association, so they may keep missionaries in the field and have money in their treasuries to advertise and make known the conventions and mass-meetings held in the various cities for the demonstration of this truth, so the world will behold us as a living example of the truth we proclaim. And the National Society stands in the city of Washington as our head and we need a head as well as a body and all these organs reaching out and touching humanity all over the world. Our head may seem a little thick yet, but we are unfolding spiritually and the light of true righteousness will shine in and usurp the throne and make glad the hearts of all in time.

Now, dear readers, as I have put this, it makes just two dollars a year to do so much with; and I'll warrant many a lukewarm Spiritualist spends more than that amount for ice cream, bought at church socialbes, to put in an already dyspeptic stomach, to help pay a preacher who says: "Jesus paid it all—all the debt we owe." Morality and character count as nothing in the light of God; just believe in the creed, and come at the eleventh hour, if your hands are stained in the blood of your fellow-man and your soul distorted by crime—confessing Jesus as your savior is all that is necessary.

Spiritualism tells you: Save yourself by right living; be true to the law of morality, purity, temperance in all things. Exalt your soul by practicing justice, reason, charity, patience; these are some of the constituencies of love, and God is love and spirit.

LAKE HELEN, FLORIDA.

Southern Cassadaga Camp-Meeting.

The eighth session of this prosperous association closed Sunday, March 16. The day was warm and sunny. The largest audience of the season was in attendance, and listened with close attention to the eloquent addresses by J. Clegg Wright, Carrie E. S. Twing, and W. F. Peck, followed by the accurate spirit delineations by Mr. Altemus.

The session has been more largely attended than has any previous one.

The financial condition of the association is very satisfactory. All expenses of the meeting have been paid, and a considerable portion of the debt has been liquidated.

The auditorium has been furnished with memorial windows in place of cloth curtains, the windows being the gifts of Dr. and Mrs. Hilligoss, and Mr. and Mrs. Scott Hodgkins.

Money has been nearly raised to pay for a floor in the auditorium.

Frank E. Bond expects to construct a water plant before next winter, so that running water can be supplied to the hotel, cottages, Brigham Hall, Apartment House and other buildings. An artesian well will be bored and a reservoir placed on the hill near the Woodworth cottage, thus furnishing pressure water which can be used in extinguishing fires.

Nine new lots have been leased and a number of new cottages will be built the coming fall; among which are those of Dr. Hilligoss, Geo. Nickerson, Mrs. Bartholomew, the trumpet medium, Mrs. E. G. Keck, Chas. Coolidge and David Sherman.

J. Clegg Wright has ceiled his cottage, and with his wife, who is delighted with the location, is very happy in their winter home—finding the climate specially conducive to the restoration of his health.

The spiritual work done here this season has been of a very high order, and lasting good has been accomplished.

People from Lake Helen village, De Land, Orange City, New Smyrna and Daytona have attended, and gone away with the impression that the moral and spiritual influence of the doctrines taught and of the messages from spirits are uplifting and extremely comforting. People all around this region are coming to the conclusion that the Spiritualists are really good persons, and that they are living a good, moral and intellectual life, notwithstanding the slanders of prejudiced and ignorant minds.

The annual business meeting was held on Saturday, March 15, and resulted in the election of E. W. Bond, president; Mrs. J. D. Palmer, corresponding secretary; Dr. Hilligoss, vice-president; H. S. Twing, clerk and treasurer. W. F. Peck, A. A. Butler and Frank E. Bond, trustees.

W. F. Peck and Carrie Twing have been engaged as speakers for next season—others will be added later.

The Ladies' Auxiliary—Carrie Twing, president; Eliza Philbrook, secretary; Mrs. J. D. White, treasurer—have raised and paid to the association two hundred dollars, and still have some thirty-five dollars in goods and money in their treasury. This amount has been raised by card parties, socables, dances, benefit seances, kindly given by Mrs. Twing, Mrs. Stiles, Mrs. Bartholomew, Mrs. Greenmyer, and Mr. Altemus; and by sales of articles from the bazaar, together with gifts of goods or money.

Annie Lord Chamberlain's Card.

Dear friends, you can greatly help me care for my blind sister, Jennie L. Webb, one of the earliest mediums now in the form, by writing a letter to a spirit friend. Send it to me with $1, and I will try and get reply by independent writing or whispers. Address Mrs. Annie Lord Chamberlain, Milford, Mass.

New stock has been taken as follows: Judge Uunderhill, $100; Mrs. Fixen, $50; Mr. and Mrs. Sherman, $10; Mr. Whittaker, $10; Mrs. Butler, $10; Mrs. Jennings, $10; Mr. Fogle, $10; Mrs. Hilligoss, $10; Mr. Alger, $10; Mrs. Bishop, $10.

The Fudger Bakery has been bought by the association and converted into a bazaar, and the grocery store which stood at the gate entrance has been moved around and joined on to the back of the new bazaar, and been kept this season by Ryland & Blane, of De Land. It is proposed that the store next year be run by the association or by some one living in camp.

J. D. Palmer is building a kitchen on the south side of his cottage.

E. W. Bond has finished a pretty three-room cottage, fronting the auditorium, and ornamented by an ample veranda on three sides.

Mrs. J. Rhodes Buchanan has bought the Smith cottage and intends to make this place her home.

G. W. Webster and his son, the Doctor, are completing the addition to Hotel Webster. This fine hotel will have double capacity and can entertain nearly fifty guests another year.

There will doubtless be a greatly increased attendance next season. The west and northwest will send delegations, especially from the vicinity of Clinton and Chesterfield camps, and New York and New England will contribute many tourists who will come on my ocean excursions from New York City, in the months of November, December and January.

Truth First, then Numbers and Popularity.

To the Editor:—A writer in No. 631 of your paper makes the bold statement that "Spiritualism will organize and appropriate Christianity, or organized Christianity will appropriate Spiritualism." As the corner-stone and foundation walls of Spiritualism is Truth, the first proposition is an impossibility, for Christianity is a conglomeration of falsehood and fiction with just enough truth in its mixture to keep it from falling to pieces, so long as humanity remained in dense ignorance, such as prevailed for nearly eighteen centuries of Christian domination. If Truth or its disciples should adopt a tissue of falsehoods, it could not change a lie into a truth, hence would no longer be Spiritualism; this leaves only the latter proposition to consider. If Christianity should adopt Spiritualism, which is truth, it must cast away its Christian falsehoods, and that indeed would be a glorious triumph for Spiritualism, for it would no longer be Christianity but Spiritualism which is the very antithesis of Christianity which is founded on miraculism, while Spiritualism is founded on naturalism. These two opposite ideas can never mix or harmonize, no more than can oil and water.

There seems to be a small element clinging to the garments of Spiritualism, which is hungering after popularity; they are over-anxious for Spiritualism to acquire a numerous following, regardless of character, ability or intellect. Let us cling fast to our creed which is Truth. In time, rest assured we will have numbers and all the popularity we need consistent with spiritual health. We are reminded of the growth of the Christian Scientists. Why not point also to the growth of Catholicism, and of Mormonism. All this need cause no worry to an intelligent Spiritualist. Who, and what are the converts to these sectarian combinations? With a few exceptions they are not fit to join the ranks of Spiritualism. They are not led by a love for truth, but for partisanship. Come with us, say they, we will have a mighty sect of our own, with our bishops, and cardinals, and with pomp and show we can influence legislation in our favor.

Commercial religion (Babylon), with its millions of priests is making frantic and herculean efforts to keep the truth spreaders from undermining its dark, blackened and blood-stained walls. The masses are still awed and bewildered by its glittering wealth and seeming material power, but knowledge is slowly and surely destroying its foundations, and great will be the "fall of Babylon." The millions follow after these gilded and semi-material institutions in obedience to the law of attraction, even as we behold an army of flies close around a pile of filth, while we see but a few around a spring of pure water.

Spiritualists are not altogether free from commercialism, but they have made broad strides away from its contaminating influence. Spiritualism will grow just as fast as the people progress toward a true understanding of its sublime truths and a genuine comprehension of its fundamental principles. All hot-house methods of making Spiritualists will prove abortive, and disastrous to the cause. For one to say he believes a certain dogma may make a man a Christian, but such a procedure can never make a man a Spiritualist. Demonstrative truth is the only password to the inner temple of Spiritualism.

Missionary Work in Texas.

We have had an active season of labor in Texas, extending from February 20 to March 24. We held thirty-one meetings in thirty-two days. Our total audience of 4,326 persons—an average attendance of about 140. We traveled 1641 miles in the state. Our receipts exceeded the expense of ourselves and Mr. John W. Ring, president of the State Association, who preceded us to make all arrangements. He also held some meetings as a prelude to ours, and surely caused a greater interest than we should have found had he not "gone before." He is both a good evangelist and manager. Lack of common business sense to arrange for details of meetings is so often one of our afflictions, that to have a competent person in advance makes our labors largely a luxury. We trust that some other State Association will manage our efforts and achieve success upon the same plan.

We held meetings in Marshall, Houston, Galveston, Flatonia, San Antonio, Austin, Lampasus, Comanche, Fort Worth, Hillsboro and Bowie.

We organized and chartered societies in Marshall, Austin, Hillsboro and Bowie.

Local speakers are sustained by the Houston and Galveston societies. Temples are owned by Galveston and Fort Worth societies. A settled speaker and medium is desired by Fort Worth, Austin and San Antonio. Excellent circuits can be developed in most any section of the state.

A missionary should be employed by the year to canvass the state and keep up an interest. It does no permanent good to stir or organize a locality unless the work can be followed by frequent effort.

By proper co-operation with the State Association every locality can be helped to carry on the work.

We have had generous hospitality in Texas; and earnest help. We cannot take space to mention names, because we cannot justly speak except of all.

Our sincere desire is that the State Association of Texas shall go forward earnestly to achieve good—and we are sure it will. Fraternally,

G. W. KATES AND WIFE.

THE HERO ON THE LIMB.

Though slanting raindrops pelt the lawn,
The robin doesn't care;
The warmth of yesterday is gone,
A chill is in the air,
But on yon slender branch I see
The songster that came yesterday;
The rain blows through the leafless tree,
Yet, full of hope, he sings away
With all his might, out there.

Though it is dark to-day, he knows
To-morrow may be fair,
And sweet winds ere this evening's close
May blow here from somewhere.
Oh, robin, let me learn from you
To hope when clouds have spread
Across the sky that was so blue—
Teach me to bravely look ahead,
And feel that joy is there.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 25. CHICAGO, ILL., APRIL 12, 1902. NO. 646.

MOSES HULL REPLIES.

"What Is the Matter with Clara Watson?"

Some time since, Mrs. Watson made a most bitter and unwarranted attack on me. I had, in her estimation, greatly injured Spiritualism—indeed I was about the heaviest load Spiritualism had ever been called upon to carry. I replied in a few words, letting her down as easy for her as possible. Now, in The Progressive Thinker of Mar 22, she has another attack and the result is another screed from her pen—one which I trust, both the Morris Pratt Institute and myself will survive.

Her plea to allow ignorance and illiteracy to run Spiritualism, and shape its ends, very illy fits in with her condition less than a year since. At that time one of her neighbors—as worthy a lady as lives—one who had for years conducted meetings in her own home, in a chapel which she had at her own expense erected and furnished, sought ordination. She was duly elected by a society to which Mrs. Watson belonged, to be ordained. I believe the vote was unanimous. I was invited to go to Jamestown to perform the ordination services for the society. Then Mrs. Watson was entirely overcome with the fear that an illiterate woman would find a place on the Spiritualist platform. She begged and she pleaded with me, and she wrote letters; her husband, in a fit of petulance, resigned his position as president of the society that would ordain such a person, and thus place them on an equality with his wife; he left the society, because he could not be the member of a society that would place such a person before the people as a teacher.

Mrs. Watson wrote letters, some of which I have now, and which would make interesting reading. These letters detailed the fearful calamities which would follow the ordination of so ignorant a woman as the otherwise worthy Mrs. ——.

The result was that for the sake of harmony, I advised the lady to postpone her ordination for awhile. The good lady accepted that advice. Now I am glad I did it. Mrs. W.'s plea for ignorance and illiteracy on the platform would lead one to think that she would rush to her neighbor and urge her to hurry up that ordination; why, bless you, the one whom she rejected, if as ignorant as was represented, is about the only one fit to represent Mrs. Watson's Spiritualism before the world. She herself, will perhaps perform the ordination services. Mrs. Watson went away from home to be ordained; this other good woman preferred ordination at home among the friends with whom she had spent the most of her life. Every one who asked this favor was a neighbor, and knew the incomings and outgoings of the person whom they wanted to represent, on the rostrum, their Spiritualism.

I never thought of including Mrs. W. among the illiterate speakers; but somehow she has placed herself there. Her lack of coherence and logic prove that, at least a term in the Training School would not injure her.

Mrs. W. is right when she says, "The fact is that we who are on the ignorant plane don't know it; no one can make us know that we are there."

Since she places herself on that plane, and informs us that no one can make her know it, I will not attempt it. I will only say that those who use bad grammar, bad rhetoric and bad logic do not usually know it, but scholars in the audience do know it. If the speakers knew it, and realized how such things grate on educated ears, it is believed that they would undertake, by Training Schools or otherwise, to overcome their lack of knowledge. As it is, their work is calculated to get up a prejudice against, instead of an interest in Spiritualism.

While as Mrs. W. says, "Many societies like our style," those same societies are "chocks" on the wrong side of the wheels of progressive Spiritualism. Look at the small societies all over the country—societies where, in former times immense audiences assembled to receive instruction. Many of the leaders of those societies have concluded that a lecture is a lecture, no matter whether it contains thought, and evidence of culture or not. Such have usually employed the cheapest speakers they could get, and placed such before the people to explain and represent Spiritualism to their neighbors. Cultured and educated people have listened to them, and have measured Spiritualism by their crudities. Thus has Spiritualism been losing ground during the last quarter of a century.

If the Morris Pratt Institute can take such speakers and enlighten them, that will prevent such work in the future. If the managers of our societies can be instructed by the societies themselves, that they must put talent and erudition on their platforms that will force these people to prepare for this work, or leave the field to those who will prepare themselves. When we cease to ordain and recognize such as workers, the world will soon learn the fact. Then, if these ignoramuses get audiences to hear them, the world will judge the speaker, and not Spiritualism, by the ignorant platitudes handed out in the name of Spiritualism.

Next, Mrs. W. says: "Why cannot Spiritualism produce to-day as grand and exalted talent unaided by Spiritualistic theological institutions as it has done in the past? There is no denying that Spiritualism was built up to its height of glory by speakers and workers reared within its ranks without colleges or schools of mortal kind. One boast of Spiritualism has been, not that its 'rising speakers were uneducated,' but that it had power within it to educate them, that it had a system of education peculiar to itself—schools higher than those of earth. Have we not had culture and refinement and 'finished scholars' backed by the highest intelligence in the 'unschooled' representatives of our great and grand cause?"

Let me reply to that seriatim:

1. There was a time when the phenomena of Spiritualism itself excited the attention of the world; people overlooked errors and ignorance. They assembled with the hope of getting a few grains of spiritual truth from the spirit world. They, for the sake of a few grains of gold would wash a great deal of sand. That phase of Spiritualism has passed away; Spiritualism is no longer a mere curiosity; it has become a great movement—I may say, a great religious movement. In such cases the world has no more use for illiteracy in its teachers than it has for illiterate school teachers or illiterate lawyers.

2. Those people who taught Spiritualism in its early days, while they may not have been educated in "Spiritualistic Theological Institutes," were, for the most part, cultured ladies and gentlemen.

3. Spiritualism has a "system of education peculiar to itself, and those who would become workmen in its ranks—workmen who, as Paul said, 'need not be ashamed,'" are urged to take hold of it. Shall we neglect what is now offered us because our grandfathers, and fathers and mothers were deprived of it. That logic would lead us to burn our steamboats, tear up our railroad tracks and destroy our telegraphs and telephones, because our grandfathers did not have them. Those who make such arguments are in the line of lineal descent from those who have always stood in the way of progress. I hardly expected so progressive a person as Mrs. Watson generally appears to be to follow in the wake of the old fogies who have ever thrown their weight on the wrong side of the scale of human progress.

I think I must quote and review one more rather lengthy extract from Mrs. Watson. She says: "What school of mundane teaching would have improved upon the wondrous writings of A. J. Davis? What training school of earth would have brought forth finer thought than that of W. J. Colville?

Wherein would higher culture, deeper refinement, truer dignity, better understanding, sounder philosophy, choicer diction and loftier eloquence be attained by academic teaching than that evinced by many of the workers that have graced (not disgraced) our platform, and, who have been educated through spiritual powers and processes? Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten, Mrs. Nellie Brigham, Mrs. Elizabeth Lowe Watson, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Mrs. Colby Luther, Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, Lyman C. Howe, A. B. French, Walter Howell, J. J. Morse, Hudson Tuttle and many others, all trained and taught in the schools peculiar to Spiritualism."

Why these people are all classed as uneducated, I cannot understand. It is either offered as an exhibition of wit, or of ad captandum vulgus, I will not attempt to say which.

When Mrs. Watson attempts to class herself with those "on the ignorant plane," I cannot object. That she has a right to do. I am sure no one who is working for a higher education ever thought of doing so, by her, but when she classes that long list of names there, I must enter a protest. If our speakers were all as well educated as a majority of those whom she names we would have but little need for colleges.

When Andrew Jackson Davis began to write, he was only nineteen years old and almost entirely uneducated. Then only the ideas he gave the world were received. That noble and scholarly man, William Fishbough, and that other scholar, S. B. Brittan and other scholarly editors, worked his writings over, and carefully edited all he said. Mr. Davis also went to studying; he fitted himself for college, and went to a medical college and graduated.

W. J. Colville was finely educated, and, I understand, a translator from other languages before he became a Spiritualist. Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten was finely educated, and well up in her profession as an orator and an actress when Spiritualism came to her.

There is little doubt that Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. Libbie Lowe Watson, were at least partly educated by the spirits. I wish the spirits could do that same thing by all our mediums and speakers. I know that when Mrs. Watson lived in Titusville, Pa., she was surrounded by everything in the line of education that refinement could do, or money could buy. She married a wealthy, noble and honest man—a man who spared no pains in his efforts to make of her the refined and educated woman she is.

Carrie E. S. Twing and Lyman C. Howe were both finely educated—both of them school teachers before they were Spiritualists.

A. B. French and Walter J. Howell were each very studious, and each had an excellent education compared with that of those for whom our schools are mainly intended. Mrs. Watson is hereby assured that while the parties here named could teach our teachers many things, the most of them could receive valuable lessons in our school. I think that even Mrs. Watson, instead of taking up the cudgel against a more integral and higher education, were to come to our school with her seventy-five per cent of knowledge and wisdom, and throw that into a common retort with the twenty-five per cent of knowledge carried in the head of the president of the Morris Pratt Institute, she would find that seventy-five and twenty-five equals one hundred, and we would thus both of us go away from the school wiser than when we were when we came.

Now, I feel to plead with Mrs. Watson, for the sake of the cause, and for own sake, to cease to plead for ignorance on the part of our workers; but instead, to urge upon such to fit themselves educationally to appear upon our platforms as representatives of a cultured and intelligent Spiritualism. My dear sister, when you appear as the representative of ignorance and illiteracy, you misrepresent yourself, and injure the cause which some of your friends supposed you loved.

I can give the names of many would-be teachers of the Spiritual philosophy, who say "phenonomy" for phenomena; "psychrometic" for psychometric. I heard one president of a camp-meeting, a man who called himself a speaker, and who was the author of a large book with nothing in it, advertising "a lost umbrello." One of our chief New England speakers always says "wimming" for women; "mounting" for mountain. I heard another who boasted that the spirits had educated her—that she had been in the spirits' school for "forty year," say she did not want an eddycation that made her "e-echo" what others was sayin'. I heard one of our ablest speakers deliver a lecture on the "Glasical Period." Worse than all, I know a man who calls himself the Rev. Dr. ——, in introducing himself to an audience, asked the audience four times in five minutes to some and "cohabit" with him. It was supposed he meant to say "co-operate" with him.

Now let me ask Mrs. Watson if "schools, and education from a mundane source" would not correct at least some of these evils? I declare it is an insult to an audience to place such ignorance before it to teach it anything whatever.

Still believing that culture will not hurt our teachers nor prevent the angels from getting in their work, I am as ever,

MOSES HULL.

IMPORTANT.

To the Spiritualists of Wisconsin.

Your attention is called to the Second Annual Convention of the State Association, to be held in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, April 15, 16 and 17.

Lincoln Hall, on Sixth street, near Grand avenue, has been furnished for the occasion; good music and talent, both local and from outside.

Moses Hull, of Buffalo, N. Y., will be the main speaker for evening meetings, assisted by such workers as Dr. Geo. B. Warne, president of the Illinois State Association; Mrs. Catherine McFarlin, vice-president of the Wisconsin State Association; Will J. Erwood, of La Crosse, Wis., and other prominent workers. Mrs. Nellie C. Mosier, of Kent, Ohio, who was the message medium at the Wonewoc camp last August, and whose wonderful descriptions and messages convinced all who heard her, will be the test medium at the three evening meetings.

W. J. Erwood will also give psychometric readings.

Hotel headquarters have been established at the Plankinton, and reasonable rates procured.

The order of convention business will be about as follows:

Tuesday, April 15—Morning—Meeting of delegates and members at the hall for the purpose of introduction and outlining work for the convention. Afternoon—Business meeting. Evening—Public meeting.

Wednesday, April 16—Morning and afternoon—Business meeting. Evening—Public meeting.

Thursday, April 17—Morning—Business meeting (election of officers). Afternoon—Public meeting. Evening—Public meeting.

Legislation for this convention will comprise important points of interest to all Spiritualists, and the fixing of place to hold next convention. Election of delegate to the N. S. A. convention, election of officers of the State Association, deciding on permanent camp-grounds, and other questions of vital importance will be disposed of.

For further information concerning the convention, apply to the secretary, Mrs. Nellie K. Baker, Portage, Wis. It is to be hoped that every member of the Association and all friends of the cause will be present and add their influence to this convention to make it serve the best interest of the cause of Spiritualism and humanity.

CLARA L. STEWART,
President W. S. S. A.
NELLIE K. BAKER,
Secretary W. S. S. A.

THE "SMART SET" AND THE MASSES.

Oh, I cannot be a member of the big "400 set,"
But I love the toiling masses who are not afraid to sweat,
And the "set" is so exclusive it refuses all my ilk,
But I'll bet beneath the surface I possess the finest silk;
I will bet within my bosom beats a heart as free from woe
As the heart of any member of the "set;" as clean also.
Money brings them many pleasures that the masses are denied,
But the masses know that riches at the grave are laid aside.
Let them swell up in vain glory till their outer shell shall burst,
But the gates of Heaven open for the better spirits first.
Let me touch the soul that slumbers while the world is moving on;
Let me speak a word to cheer it ere the last life spark is gone;
Let me taste the bitter potion that my brother has to drink;
Let me feel the woes of others when their drooping spirits sink;
Let me hear the wails of hunger from the starving ones of earth,
If I gather many riches ere my spirit's higher birth
And I think before I venture to pass through the golden gate,
I will lay it on the altar of the needy here and wait;
I will wait till old St. Peter waves his scepter thrice at me
Ere I try to pass beyond him till my conscience is quite free.
Hoarded money piled and idle may be pleasant here to view,
But when for it folks are dying 'tis a curse upon the few.
There is land upon this planet quite sufficient still for all,
But the trusts will soon possess it and around it build a wall.
Yes, for selfishness St. Peter has a place without the gate
Where the "smart set" and "400" will be herded by old Fate;
Where the "sets" can be exclusive to their dear hearts' full extent,
And the trusts can build high fences and live calmly in content,
While the honest toiling masses holding each a just demand,
Will be given perfect freedom throughout all that blessed land.

HOME CIRCLE EXPERIENCE

In January, 1901, we commenced to hold a circle at our home. At the first we used a small table, and there was no one but Mrs. Fravor and myself. We had sat at this table but a few times when one night I saw that Mrs. Fravor was passing under the control of some spirit. After a short time she arose and passed very slowly around the table to me, placed her hand on my head, and said, "Brother, I am your sister Carrie; I am very weak; cannot stay. Good-bye." The control then left and when Mrs. Fravor returned to herself she was very weak. I will here say that our circle is not very regular, on account of my occupation which is that of a fireman for the C. B. and Q. railroad, and my time at home is very irregular, so we hold our circle when I am in, and we have no regular nights.

We continued in this way until about the first of April, when we transfered our circle to Mr. Z. A. Gapen, of South Henderson street. At their circle were Mr. and Mrs. Meadheral, Mr. and Mrs. Freeze, Mr. and Mrs. Gapen. Their circle did not get along very smoothly, on account of some of the members having trouble over property, and they brought this condition into the circle with them, and when the control told them that they must change their condition at home and not bring such conditions into the circle, they said we had evil and lying spirits around us, and that soon broke up the circle.

When Mrs. Fravor was first being controlled, some said that she was going crazy; others, that it was all a sham.

We commenced to sit at home again last fall, just myself and Mrs. Fravor. Mr. Gapen came when he knew that we were going to hold a circle. Nothing new occurred until the Sunday after christmas. We held a circle on Saturday night and the control said for me to look in the cabinet at 9 o'clock Sunday morning. Well, I waited until 5 minutes to 9, and looked in. There was nothing there. Then I stepped out into the garden, and in a few minutes Mrs. Fravor called and said there was a terrible noise going on in the cabinet. I stepped into the house and to the cabinet, raised the curtain, and there scattered on the floor was part of a flower that looked as if it had been pulled to pieces and scattered on the floor. I gathered them up and felt very thankful to get that much, for I thought that was all there was of it. I returned to the garden, had not been out of the house 10 minutes the second time, when Mrs. Fravor came to the door and said there was more noise going on in there. I went to the cabinet a second time, and there in a rocking chair that was in there lay a white carnation flower as large as a common-sized orange. This, I think, was the first flower that was ever produced by spirit power in Galesburg.

The next flower that we got was on January 5. There was no one but Mrs. Fravor and myself at this circle, and I received two flowers, one white and one red. The white one came over the top of the cabinet, the red one came through the cabinet. A spirit came and said that the white one was for Mr. Z. A. Gapen, and the flower was delivered to the gentleman.

The next circle was on January 8. At this circle were Mr. Gapen and myself and the medium. We received three flowers. Mr. Gapen received one, and he received one for Mrs. Gapen, and I received one.

Next circle was on January 19. At this meeting were Mr. Gapen, Mr. and Mrs. Freeze, and Mr. Herrin. My sister Florence insisted that those present should examine the cabinet and Mrs. Fravor, the medium, too, so as to see that there was nothing crooked about it. We received seven flowers that night. We close our circle at 9 p. m., commence at 8 p. m., but that night, through a mistake we closed before the time was up, and there was a spirit who wished to give a flower, but was unable to, on account of the circle being closed before this spirit could deliver it. Well, this seemed to place the spirit in a condition where it could not return to its plane in spirit life until it had delivered that flower. The next day this spirit got control of the medium and placed her in the cabinet. I saw that they were going to do something, so I drew the curtain down to make it as dark as possible, and took a seat in front of the cabinet. In a few minutes the medium parted the curtain and threw a red flower at me. The spirit who had control came and said that it was unable to get away until it had materialized that flower back to earth, for it had dematerialized it from earth, and it had to come back to earth before the spirit could get away free from our plane of life.

Next circle was on January 22. At this circle were Mr. and Mrs. Freeze, Mr. Gapen, and Mr. and Mrs. Woolam. We received six flowers, one white one for Mrs. Woolam, one light red one and four dark red ones.

Next circle was on February 1. In attendance were Mr. Gapen, Mr. and Mrs. Woolam and myself. In a few minutes after the circle had began, the medium came out, snapped her fingers, and we all could smell perfumery very strong. We received six flowers that night, one white, one pink, and four dark red ones.

On February 6 I came in from my run at 10:30 p. m., and when I got home my spirit sister wanted me to sit a few minutes for them. I did so. Mrs. Fravor took her seat in the cabinet. I played a few pieces on the music-box, and then the flowers commenced to come. I received six in less than 10 minutes, a rather good-sized batch for one man to get at once.

Next circle was on February 7. At this circle were Mr. Gapen, Mr. and Mrs. Freeze, Mrs. Woolam and her daughter, and Mrs. Thompson. We received seven flowers, three different colors in them.

On February 9, there was a young gentleman at our home in the evening, and when he went away my spirit brother George came and said, "Go and see what I have left in the cabinet for you." I went and looked, and there on the floor was one white and one red flower. At the meeting we had on February 7, there was a spirit that came and said there was a flower there for Mr. Woolam, and that he could get it at any time when it was so that he could come after it. He came after it in the morning and at 9:30 a. m. we took a seat in front of the cabinet. I played a piece on the music-box, and then he got three flowers. I saw one come over the top of the cabinet, the other two came from—I do not know where. But perhaps the gentleman by the name of Jamieson can tell where they come from, for he seems to be willing to acknowledge anything else but spirit power, and that does not exist, in his opinion.

THEOSOPHY.

It Is Having Very Serious Trouble.

DR. JEROME ANDERSON TELLS STRANGE STORY OF A "FREAKISH ORIENTAL COURT" AND DECLARES OUT OF 140 LODGES ONLY A DOZEN NOW EXIST.

San Diego, Cal., March 28.—The announcement that Mrs. Katherine Tingley, the leader of the American Theosophical Society, has been obliged to "accept" the resignation of Dr. Jerome Anderson as President of the Point Loma Universal Brotherhood, has revealed an astonishing situation in theosophical circles.

Dr. Anderson is in open rebellion against Mrs. Tingley. He declares she usurped the position of leader of the Theosophists, that she spent $300,000 on a "freakish Oriental court" at Point Loma, and went to live there with a court "such as has never been seen off a comic opera stage"; that she invented new court regulations and new branches of theosophy, such as the "School for the Revival of the Lost Mysteries of Antiquity;" that she compels men and women of wealth and high social position to wear "long gowns and ridiculous hats" in her presence.

Professor Anderson finally declares that of the 140 prosperous lodges organized by W. Q. Judge not more than a dozen exist to-day, and that soon all adherents of the cult would have to crawl into Mrs. Tingley's presence "on all fours."

EXPLAINING HIS RESIGNATION.

In explaining his resignation, Dr. Anderson said: "I stood by Mrs. Tingley as long as I could and still retain my manhood and my belief in the real tenets of theosophy. I am still a theosophist and do not propose to help found another organization. But under Mrs. Tingley's management the theosophy of the country is being left to take care of itself and its name is being used to collect hundreds of thousands of dollars to spend in equipping and maintaining this freakish Oriental court of hers at Point Loma. But before I speak further of that I want to give some historical data that will make the story clear.

FOUNDATION OF THEOSOPHY.

"The Theosophical Society was founded by Mme Blavatsky, who, when she died, appointed as her successors, so it is claimed, William Q. Judge and Annie Besant. That matter has always been in dispute, and in 1895 Judge broke from the order and organized the Theosophical Society of America.

"Judge died within a year after he started the insurrection, but even in that time 140 lodges had been organized in the United States and the movement seemed to be sweeping all before it. Then came Mrs. Tingley's claim to the leadership, based on some scraps of writing in Judge's personal diary, in which he spoke of her fitness to succeed him because of her remarkable qualities as a medium. He never formally selected her. She assumed her office and immediately caused another reorganization, under the name of the Universal Brotherhood, and the adoption of a constitution and by-laws giving her absolute power in all things. All the real and personal property of the brotherhood was put into her name and she became, to all intents and purposes, not only the head of the order, but the order itself.

THE COMIC-OPERA COURT.

"Now witness what she has done. She stopped the magnificent work of promotion inaugurated by Judge, discouraging workers because of the personal homage which she insisted should be done her. No enthusiasm was possible then. She bought this land at Point Loma and went to live there with a court such as never been seen off a comic opera stage.

"She has spent $300,000 at Point Loma, and with every dollar that has gone into the establishment she has invented new court regulations. I have seen men and women of wealth, education, and high social position humble themselves before her in a way that sensible people can hardly conceive of.

"I stood it myself for a while. I wore long gowns and ridiculous hats in her presence and tried to take part in the foolish ceremonies with some belief that they might have a meaning. But I knew it meant that pretty soon we would have to crawl into Mrs. Tingley's presence on all fours. It grew worse with every visit I made, and I finally threw the whole thing up.

"As an organization theosophy has gone all to pieces under Mrs. Tingley. Of the 140 prosperous lodges organized by Judge not more than a dozen exist to-day, and the only work in the spreading of the truth has been done by Col. Olcott and his loyal followers."—Chicago Tribune.

JOTTINGS.

"The Little Girl Who Stood on a Box."

Home again! As a general thing these words are supposed to convey an idea of comparative rest and quiet in contrast to conditions incident to travel and continuous change. In the case of the writer neither rest nor quiet will mark many of the days spent in our much loved home at 72 York street, Buffalo, N. Y.

In less than one month our pleasant apartments will have been cleared, and the home that has become so endeared to us by so many sweet associations, will know us no more.

I returned home two days since, from a nearly two months' absence. When I left home, I had thought my going away would be a sort of vacation, that the days would be spent in visiting, and a relaxation, for the greater part, from public labor; but within a few days after I reached Ohio, I was called to the field, my visits were cut short, and I was really an active worker for several weeks.

My first objective point after reaching Ohio was Mantua, where I visited in the home of our son and wife. While in that section, I met with D. M. King and Mr. and Mrs. Andrews, who have been identified with the Spiritualistic work at Maple Dell since the organization of the association which has conducted meetings every year since the inception of the camp work. They are planning the meeting for the coming season; they should have the co-operation of all Spiritualists in that section of the country.

From Mantua I went to Cleveland to spend a season with my sister and family, who are strong and earnest in the advocacy of the truths of Spiritualism. The first Sunday after my arrival in Cleveland, I labored in Elyria, a beautiful town within an hour and a half ride on the electrics, from Cleveland. I was entertained during my sojourn, in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fremont Davis, uncle and aunt of Miss Jessie Howk, whose name has appeared from time to time in The Progressive Thinker in connection with lyceum work.

Early in the week, following my first trip to Elyria, I was called by telegram to Pittsburg, Pa., to take up Mr. Hull's mid-week work for the Sixth Street Society of Spiritualists, as he had been summoned to Buffalo to officiate at the funeral of one of our valued friends, Mr. Moore. I remained in Pittsburg several days, and went from there to fill an engagement made some time previous, in Wheeling, W. Va. Wheeling was a new field for me, but I was warmly welcomed and greeted by a very large audience Sunday afternoon and evening. Mr. Hull joined me the following Monday, and we together conducted meetings four nights. During the week we were in Wheeling, Mr. Hull by request reviewed the arguments against Spiritualism presented by a Toronto preacher, who was conducting a revival, two doors from the hall where the Spiritualists hold their meetings.

Our visit to Wheeling will long be remembered as a pleasant one from a laboring point of view, and socially. The society is comparatively young, but vigorous, and promises good work. Frank T. Ripley followed us and I understand has been engaged for an extended term of work.

Mr. Hull and self left Wheeling at the same time, and parted in Pittsburg; he went to Washington, D. C., and the writer took a hurried trip to Buffalo, to look after business matters. One day only was spent in Buffalo and I returned to Ohio. I was recalled to Elyria for two Sundays. Dr. Nellie Mosier gave me a happy surprise by putting in an appearance one Sunday. Of course every one was glad to see her and to hear the messages of the angels through her lips.

On the night of the 23rd ult., I lectured in Cleveland, in the hall formerly occupied by the East Side Society. Dr. C. H. Figuers has occupied the hall for many months. At two p. m., on Sundays a lyceum session is called, a few of the faithful meet a small gathering of the little ones, but it seems a feeble remnant of the grand old lyceum that used to meet in Cleveland. It is a sad fact, that in Cleveland, which once boasted of one of the finest lyceums in the country, there seems to be but the relics of such an organization. (I feel like putting a great big, long question-mark in every sentence I write, pertaining to the Children's Progressive Lyceum). Where, where, where are the children of Spiritualists? As a general thing, not with their fathers and mothers.

Previous to the delivery of my address in Dr. Figuers' meeting, I conducted what to me seemed an impressive and pretty ceremony.

Charles Franklin Leeds, and his little sister, Amy Leone Leeds, aged respectively, twelve and five years, children of my sister, were christened in the name of Spiritualism, and welcomed as Spiritualist children, to the great fraternity of Spiritualists. Frankie and Amy are lyceum pupils; their mother has never sent them nor other of her children to an orthodox Sunday-school. An earnest Spiritualist herself, she has always felt the religion that was best for her was the best for her children. The father of these little ones was not a Spiritualist when he came into our family, in fact he came from a church family, but never on any occasion before he was convinced of the truth of Spiritualism, did he raise an objection, or put an obstacle in the way of his companion, to hold her from the enjoyment of her convictions. When little Amy was three weeks old, a little one was called suddenly from the home to join the angels; since the transition of the dear little boy, his father has received message after message from him, has seen him, and now is with us in the full knowledge that death does not end all.

It was a happy moment for me when I welcomed the two children, blood of my blood, to the platform, and gave them the little message the angels had for them. It was a pretty sight, the two, hand in hand, under the dropping of beautiful white blossoms, as fragrant as the pure soul of childhood is with love. I saw just above them the arisen brother, it was a pretty trio; I labored to impress upon the minds of the children the fact that their beloved Harry was with them; they have never been told he was dead.

I am well aware that there are among us many who deride these simple little ceremonies; why should they? I never forget to say that such service has no theological significance whatever. I feel such occasions can be made interesting object lessons. I have received proof in some instances, that they have been helpful and the memory of them uplifting.

On the same night the above-mentioned service took place, a charge from the spirit world was given to Mrs. Figuers, who has recently received official papers giving her all rights and privileges that ministers receive.

A grand meting was held in Cleveland, on the 30th ult., in commemoration of the advent of Modern Spiritualism. Undoubtedly the meeting will be written up in full by a Clevelander, and I will not go into detail. It was a success in point of numbers, and the work accomplished, but oh, the sorrow I felt, when I realized it was the only anniversary meeting I had ever attended in that city, when the Children's Lyceum was not in evidence. The change was a sad one to me, and I thought among the many good things that were said relative to our duties to each other, to the cause, and our obligations and responsibilities as Spiritualists, how strange it was, that no one felt inspired to speak of our obligations to the children—to the young.

I was told at one time by a Spiritualist, a lecturer, that I was unnecessarily anxious on the subject of the children; they would naturally turn to Spiritualism if left to themselves. Possibly, but where are the young who are left to themselves? Had I not realized, so many times in the past, the opposition parents have been compelled to endure from those whom they have loved and nurtured, when such have been sent to the enemy's fold for instruction, I should not have labored as I have early and late, to change the order of things. I have not yet lain my armor down. Wherever I am, and whenever circumstances will permit, I shall work for the emancipation of the young from the thraldom of superstition and ignorance.

Of course the readers of the Spiritualist papers are aware that we shall soon take up our quarters at Lily Dale. The Training School will open as per announcements heretofore published; judging from the letters received, the no-education theory has not quite converted all of our would-be workers.

I was somewhat amused over a communication published in the last issue of The Progressive Thinker—the article from a Kansas correspondent, who is fearful we are instituting "Mental Fraud Training Schools." I note in his article, reference is made to "the little girl who stood on a box" when she gave her first discourse in a pulpit. He thinks he has "hit the nail on the head" when he asks of what use would a knowledge of evolution and grammar have been to such an one. As "Yours Truly" was the little girl who stood on the box in the town of Athol, Mass., in a Unitarian church, in the early days of Spiritualism, I may have something to say in the near future on the subject. I will say this: When that same little girl was being considered by her good father as to whether he should follow the advice of Spiritualists and take her out of school, having been assured that the spirit world would educate her, she was entranced and said: "The little girl has brains, they were made for use; help her to cultivate them." Afterwards there was a message written through her hand, containing these words: "You can help the spirit teachers, by helping yourselves to all the wisdom it is possible to gain in this world."

MATTIE E. HULL.

From a Bible Spiritualist.

I would like to ask why a true Spiritualist is afraid to be called a Christian? Why is it that so many Spiritualists are devoting so much of their time to denying the Power that gives them life? I am glad there are still a good many "Bible Spiritualists," and people that believe and do not think it beneath their dignity to honor the "Ruler of All."

Do ye not know, ye people that declare there is no God (only the God within), the fate of the nations in olden times, that "forgot God" and "went astray after idols?" Those nations were destroyed. I marvel at anyone wondering why Spiritualism does not prosper, when her people deny everything pertaining to a power higher than their own! This should not be. The cause can never go forward as it should, until it is recognized as a religious belief and treated accordingly.

I liked M. W. Packard's remarks in a late issue of The Progressive Thinker regarding what I know must come eventually, that of a division. It really must come to that in time. And when that time comes I hope there will be no more wrangle about opening a service with or without prayer. Each may do as they see fit, and as all "Bible Spiritualists" will be compactly joined together, I am glad we will begin and close all sessions with some sort of prayer. And "if God be for us who can be against us." On that promise we may rest content. And I do not doubt, when we reach the land immortal we will see many of our non-praying friends there, clad too in raiment white, the garb of truth.

Yet I firmly believe they will find something lacking in the things they should have learned while on earth, and I am also sure they will have things to learn of God before they can make much progression.

Yours for "Bible Spiritualism."

LIFE AND EXPERIENCE IN SPIRIT LAND

A Series of Letters From Prof. William Denton, Through the Mediumship of Carlyle Petersilea.

LETTER NUMBER SEVEN.

I desire to head this message with what, perhaps, some might call a poem. I called my effusions in this direction rhymes, as I did not consider myself a poet. Yet I loved to express myself in verse, and I am much of the same mind now, and as this particular rhyme fits in with my present mood, I hope to be excused for quoting it. I called it, in the olden days,

THE FREEMAN'S RESOLUTION.

I will not bow to a titled knave,
Nor crouch to a lordly priest;
A martyr's torments I'd rather brave,
Than be of my manhood fleeced.

I'll bend my knee to no golden god,
I'll worship no calf in Dan;
Erect and free I'll stand on the sod,
And act as becomes a man.

I'll pin my faith to no bigot's sleeve;
I'll swallow no griping creed;
I'll ask my reason what to believe,
And ever her answer heed.

I'll hide no truth in a coward heart,
The world would be blest to know,
My boldest thought, as it wells, impart,
Nor check the soul's onward flow.

Your curses hurl; but the noble mind
Can smile at your priestly ban.
Ay, forge your fetters! Ye cannot bind
The spirit of one free man.

I will be true to my heaven-born self,
Nor league with the world to lie;
The rich may boast of their hoarded pelf;
In poverty, happier I.

I'll love the true, I will do the right,
Ruled only by Reason's sway;
Let all do so; and the world's dark night
Will melt into rosy day.

There, Mr. Editor, I have had my way, and my sway; it remains for you to say whether it shall help to sway the world or not. I would not quote any of these rhymes, but at the time I wrote them, some fifty years ago, they did not reach the eyes or the hearts of but a very few people; now, through the columns of The Progressive Thinker, my poor verses may reach thousands, and a new life, like the fabled phenix's, may rise above the ashes of the old.

A father, through sympathy, lives again in his son, and as I return to you, once more, through a mortal medium, I take up my old discarded verses—take them up tenderly as the father his child, his dead or dying child, mayhap—and sorrowfully try to warm them up once more—instil new life into them, if possible.

Life is indeed, a circle; or, a round of spiral circles, and I now find myself back again in the old circle, one remove higher on the spiral. On the old, and lower round, I took the pen or pencil in my own hand and wrote, and cudgeled my own mortal brain; now, unseen except by the spiritual sense, I borrow a mortal hand, and if I do not cudgel a mortal brain I focus it and then set myself before this mortal camera and thus accomplish my purpose. But to return to the freeman's resolution.

My idea was, and still is, that a free man has a right to express his opinions either by word of mouth or by writing, no matter whether they coincide with those written or expressed by others or not. It is better to give new, fresh thoughts to the world than stale ones under any circumstances, and no man should be debarred the privilege. It would have taken quite an army of men when I was in the mortal to have kept my mouth shut or my pen idle; and now that I have found another channel, I do not propose to be quenched, or hide my name and personality under an assumed one. Freedom is my watchword—my everlasting motto. Denton I am, and Denton I expect always to be, and I wave my spiritual banner aloft, and once more cry—Freedom!

Your mediums are falling discouraged by the wayside; and, why? Their freedom is being taken from them. They must bow, humbly before assumed authority, crowding back the utterances of the spirit, and squaring them to suit the ideas of those who have assumed authority over what the spirits shall say and what they shall not. I want to say a few words right here and now. Not for myself, personally. I'll take that up later on.

The spirit of Charles Dickens wrote a book; or, more properly speaking, inspired this medium to write a book, hoping thereby to benefit the world, and that book may not be published as an inspiration from Dickens, because assumed authority presumes that it is not. But by what right they thus presume no man can say.

Mr. Dickens is sorely grieved. He does not like dodging behind bushes, no more than I do. He does not like his liberty taken from him, no more than I do; Dickens he is and Dickens he will ever remain; but, unaided and alone he could not influence the medium to stand up for his rights.

Now, I, William Denton, utter my everlasting protest against taking away the rights and freedom of any spirit or mortal. No one has a right to take away freedom of utterance, and least of all those who call themselves Spiritualists. You, as Spiritualists, say that you believe spirits communicate with mortals; then why do you, when they come to you in all honesty of purpose, shut the door in their faces and tell them their communications are not worthy of them, placing them on a pedestal where they may not assist you if they would? Are they to be dumb idols forevermore?

You say we are in your midst; then why not allow us to help you? Must we be in your midst and hide ourselves shamefacedly? Do you want our mediums to falsify and say that it is themselves who are writing or speaking, when they know it is not? A medium is one who writes or speaks for another, and that other an invisible spirit. The spirit says, "I am So-and-So," giving his or her name, which he or she has a perfect right to do, and no one should attempt to take away their liberty of speech. All should be free—free as the air you breathe.

If there are those who do not believe that it is I, William Denton, who is writing, they have a perfect right to doubt it, if they wish to, but they have no right to muzzle me—they have no right to debar me from saying who I am.

"Well," you say, "there are so many fraudulent mediums."

A fraud is not a medium. Why discourage your mediums by taking away their liberty, and the liberty of the spirits, because there are some frauds in your world? You have no right to take away the liberty of a fraud, even. Let him fraud to his heart's content; you are not obliged to accept his fraud; and, like a pewter dollar, it won't pass for currency. You say, the mediums are ignorant, and don't use good grammar, and that of itself is evidence that it is not the spirit who claims to be the controlling party. We say that it is no evidence at all.

An ignorant servant girl might bring a message direct from her highly educated mistress; the girl might couch the message in her own bad grammar, and yet the message be correct and true in all its details, and the mistress be thankful and glad that she was able to make use of the girl as a message bearer. For instance, the mistress might have a sick or dying child, and she might say to the servant, "Go, at once, and summon Dr. Trueheart. Tell him, Nora, that my baby is very ill; I fear she may die; and ask him to hasten." Nora hurries away on her errand, her heart aflame with love and sympathy for her mistress, and the child, and here is the way, very likely, that Nora, the true and dutiful, would deliver the message: "Och! good docther—good docther—my misthress' baby is sick an' she sez hurry! hurry up, will ye's, or the swate craythur 'll die—she will, sure, sor! Och! Och!" The message is correct and true. The good doctor's heart is touched and he hurries away as fast as possible. But suppose the doctor should say, severely, "Nora, you are a fraud! You are bringing me a lying message; because your mistress is an educated lady and would never talk like that. You are ignorant, Nora. You don't use good grammar, consequently your mistress did not send you, and I forbid you to say more. Go and get an education, Nora, and then, perhaps, I will listen to what you have to tell me; but, remember, it must be expressed in very choice language."

"Och! Och! An' in the whiles the babby'll die."

Yes; to take away freedom of speech is the surest way to kill the child—Spiritualism. Take away its freedom, bind it, hamper it, clog it, stop its channels, berate its mediums, call them ignoramuses, liars, frauds; and the spirist mostly blatant Ananiases, and the child will surely die.

Mediums, as a rule, are super-sensitives; and, as such treatment strikes home to them, they wither and droop, and fall by the wayside, and their places will surely be taken by brazen frauds who are not sensitives. The very methods you take will cause the frauds to multiply, for it is the shekels they are after and not the truths. Well, perhaps I have said enough, for the present, on this subject; but, no man will ever publish a word of mine unless he is willing to allow me the privilege of signing my own name to my own productions, and it is not for him to say whether they were produced by me or not. That is a matter between me and my medium alone, wherewith none may meddle. He has a right to accept it or not, as he may choose, but he has not the right of dictation. Whatever I may write, myself and my medium are wholly responsible for, our shoulders are broad and we can bear it without help.

Now I would like to gladden the hearts of some of the Spiritualists, and all of the people who once knew me, by letting them know that it is really myself and no other. I feel somewhat as Christ did when walking on the water, he called to his disciples, saying, "Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid. Now I want to tell you, It is I; be not afraid; and if it is I, and I am here in person to tell you so, then you, too, shall be where I now am.

But you would like to have me tell you something about this place where I now am; and that is what I propose to do; but, first, I would like to tell you who some of my companions are. Allow me to present them one by one: First of all, Abraham Lincoln, that great and good man; one whom I adored when we were both in the mortal; one whom I now adore. He stands here now by my side; not too great, grand and good to be interested in the land that gave him birth; but, so great and grand and good that he would influence and write through the humblest and most ignorant medium on earth, if, thereby, he could strike the shackles off the meanest bondman of earth. Therein lies his goodness and greatness; he also says, "Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid, and—Where I am shalt thou be likewise. Black man and white man, red and copper-colored. We are gathering strong for the nations need our help. For the sake of freedom my mortal life paid the penalty, but I would willingly give a thousand such lives, if they were mine to give, for freedom's sake!"

Now here is another one of my staunchest and dearest friends, Henry Ward Beecher. Great, noble soul, and he says, "Put me down, dear brother, as one of your contributors. I stand on the side of freedom forever and aye—freedom of thought, freedom of speech, freedom of action—so long as one does not injure his brother man—freedom to do right in whatever direction one may wish to work. I want to say to Brother Francis, that I am determined to write a series of letters for his grand and good paper, and, Brother Francis, I hope you will not be ashamed of me or my name; and, please, do not be ashamed of the medium through whom I write, for believe me, this is a worthy channel."

And now let me introduce to you a sweet lady, Mrs. Mary M. Hardy; as good as she is sweet; one who suffered much when she was with you in the mortal; one who really laid down her mortal life for the cause of truth, although this was not generally known, but it is true, nevertheless. Her departure was caused by consumption, but her constitution had long been undermined by her sorrows and struggles for the cause of truth. She was a medium and one of the truest and best. I know whereof I speak, for I tested her again and again. She, also, struggled for freedom, but sunk under her burden of care and opposition, for many cried fraud, fraud! when there was no fraud. Her tender nature was lacerated and torn, and she went up higher, but here she is, eager and anxious to put in a word. She also says, "It is I; be not afraid. I knew the medium well when in the mortal. Trust him. Your trust will not be misplaced, and let us have freedom."

And here is another noble soul—allow me—Luther Colby, at your service, and by his side, William White. Let me tell you, friends, they have not dissolved partnership yet, watch them as they strike hands together—strike, as they once struck on earth, for freedom! freedom for the press, freedom of thought, freedom to express it. Down with tyrants one and all. Mr. Colby says, "Be very careful, all of you, how you fetter mediums, or the great, oncoming tidal wave of spirit power will overtake and swallow you up; and there are those who will understand the meaning of my words. Be careful, I say; be very, very careful, how and where you step; heed well your ways, and look out that you are not the first ones to get the benefit of unjust and cruel laws that are revengeful instead of reformatory; laws that we fought long and valiantly to abolish; turn your attention toward reformation and freedom, and try to lose sight of revenge; try to lose sight of tyranny, give your minds up to truth for her own sweet sake; fight for the gentle maid. She is not quite as stylish and genteel as one would like her to be, we know; she is not always fashionable, either; she would as soon visit a hovel as a palace; really, she is oftener met with among the humble poor than among the bon-ton of the Back Bay. One should not ride a horse too high, if one would not like to meet with a fall, and be careful as you ride that you do not trample down the rights of others. I shall look in upon you again."

And here are some more of my friends and associates: William Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Phillips. "Freedom—freedom!" they cry. "We will fight for it as long as we live and that will be forever. Our lives are not, and were not, in vain. We fought for freedom on earth, we will fight for it in the heavens."

And who is this? Phillips Brooks; and he sends a short word; "Friends, I am now an out and out Spiritualist. Glory be to God! It is I; be not afraid. He giveth his angels charge concerning thee;" and by his side stands Oliver Wendell Holmes. Just one little word from me: "And they wrought better than they knew, for it was given them what each one should do."

Harriet Beecher Stowe. Gentle little lady. "And he said, 'Let my people go free.'"

These were my contemporaries on earth, they are now my associates in heaven, and every one of these souls has passed before the spiritual sight of my medium this night, while these words and messages are being penned. It is no fancy, but real. Not one of them feels himself or herself too grand or great or too far progressed, which means too wise and good, to come with me this evening and be presented in person to the medium and send a word of comfort and cheer, or even a timely word of caution, to those of earth; and not one of them but what would be glad to write letters and messages in proper person if there were time and opportunity. Their time is at their command, but the medium's time is limited. The medium's physical powers also have a limit, and they are now very nearly exhausted, therefore, I will say, Good night, and pleasant dreams to all. WILLIAM DENTON.

THE GODLESS AND DEVILLESS CLUB.

The President's Views on Important Reformatory Work.

Prentice Mulford, the one-time journalist, sailor, seacook, gold-digger, rancher, school-teacher, juror, office-seeker, and philosopher in a Jersey swamp, during his life, stepped to the front as an advanced thinker, and his views are worthy of the careful consideration of the Godless and Devilless Club.

Many years ago he was writing paragraphs for the New York Graphic, under the heading of "The History of the Day." The fact that he was compelled to be in New York a certain number of hours a day led him to build himself a retreat in the swamps of New Jersey, where after the day's work he could hermitage. It was here that he conceived the notion that "Thoughts Are Things,"—a principle that he set forth in "The White Cross Library." He calls his teachings by no name, does not attempt to classify them into any school or sect. His essays are a delightful mixture of Christian Science, Spiritualism, Buddhism, and Theosophy. In fact, it is aimed to take the best of all creeds and suits everybody, the principal aim being to prove the result of the force of thought applied and the silent power of mind over material things. It is all the difference between success and failure, health and disease, happiness and misery.

As a proof of the doctrine the preachers of it cite their own success in the present enterprise. There are readers in every part of the world for "The White Cross Library." The publishers simply issued their books, sat down in their offices, willed to sell the books, and sold them, simply because they had intrinsic merit.

The books, of which some thirty volumes have been issued, are of two classes—practical and theoretical. The first number bore the title, "You Travel While You Sleep," and proves the reality of dreams as the spirit, the real self, is but a bundle of thoughts. The spirit, being an organization distinct from the body, has eyes, ears, touch, taste, and smell. Your body, with its coarser senses, is for use in this the coarser level of life; but you can with your spirit go to a higher and finer order of life. Having been taught all your life to deny the existence of the senses through lack of exercise they are not in working condition.

When Paul said, "I die daily," he meant that some thought of yesterday was dead to-day and cast off like an old garment. Inits place is a new one.

All rooms are filled with the thought element most put out by those who live in them, and this element left there acts on people more or less strongly in proportion to their capacity to feel the thoughts of others. For such reason you feel the devotional thought of a church, even when empty.

If you think or keep most in mind the mere thought of determination, hope, cheerfulness, strength, you will attract more and more of such thought elements. If you think you cannot do a thing and continually say to yourself, "I can't," you are working your power for non-success. You must stop worrying. It is very difficult to overcome this habit, because our ancestors for generations have worried before us, but that makes no difference as to the destructive results of taking thought for the morrow. The law involved goes on working, and it is as certain to run over and crush you if you get in its way, as the locomotive if you step before it on the track. Think hopeful things instead of hopeless things. Think success instead of failure. People who think badly of themselves are pretty sure to do badly. The Scripture remarks: "As a man, or woman thinketh, so is he or she." When a man thinks poorly of himself he goes off and gets drunk or does some mean thing. The pride that makes a man value himself is the pride that keeps him from mean and degraded acts.

But the best of all this new philosophy is: "Think riches, and you shall have them," with which to do good.

If you think, in a measure, poverty, you put out an actual force to attract poverty. If in mind you are always seeing yourself growing poorer and poorer; if at every venture you fear and teach yourself to expect to lose money; if your heart quakes every time you pull out your purse, you are by an inevitable force in nature, or spiritual law, attracting poverty. On the other hand, to think success brings success to a certain extent. Theology calls this desire for better things prayer, and prayer to the angel world, consisting solely of a strong desire, is the great elevating force in the universe. If in mind you see ever disaster, misfortune and poorhouse, it is the same as praying for disaster, loss and the poorhouse, and by this law disaster, misfortune and the poorhouse will come to you.

It is a law of riches that use brings gain; hoarding brings loss. If the tree held stingily on to last year's fruit and leaves and refused to drop them, the vents for next year's fruit would be choked up. It is a spiritual law that the old must be cast off ere the new can come. If you hold on to half-worn trumpery of any sort, through the mere love of keeping, you are barring out the better thing coming to you. If you will keep company with people who after all, only tire you and bore you, who ridicule your ideas if you express them, and are utterly profitless to you, you keep the better people from you.

Everything about us influences us and becomes saturated with us.

Clothing absorbs thought; it can be rested as much as our bodies. When you put on the garment you have laid aside for a period of weeks or months, although it may not feel as one entirely new, still, in a sense, it does not seem quite as stale as when last worn. If hung accessible to sunshine and fresh air, it will cast off more or less of your old thought. The robes worn by priests of any religion—Buddhism, Judaism or Catholicism, are concentrated to their peculiar use and wisely so. If worn by the priest at all times, it would be permeated by all of his peculiar moods. The costume of the actor becomes saturated with the part he plays. There is profit in putting on a change of apparel for dinner or the theatre, for if you wear your business suit you are bringing, in that clothing, a part of your business self to a place where all business thought should be temporarily laid aside and forgotten, in order that business shall be the better done next morning.

Mr. Mulford himself was a hard drinker, and was cured, so he says, by the thought of his friends who believed in him, and so strengthened him against temptation.

The people who believe in this idea that "Thoughts are Things," talk of a church that should be a place of silent demand. They request free-will offerings of money to erect the edifice, but want it distinctly understood that they rely more on the spiritual power of their thoughts; the material means will surely follow. It is to be called "The Church of Silent Prayer." Within, on the walls, these sentences shall be placed:

"Demand first wisdom, so as to know what to ask for."

"Ask, and ye shall receive. Ask imperiously, but ask in a willing mood for what the advanced angels see best for you."

"Love thy neighbor as thyself, but demand good first for yourself, that you may be the better fitted to do good to all."

The Godless and Devilless Club admits that Prentice Mulford has struck the key-note of a grand truth. Pure thoughts no doubt add to the aggregate of purity, while evil thoughts as surely increase the aggregate licentiousness and dishonesty of the world.

That thoughts exert a potent influence in the world no one can for a moment doubt. Kind thoughts, charitable thoughts, thoughts all aglow with humanitarian purposes, go forth as evangels of light and love, and tend to cleanse the atmosphere rendered corrupt by the constant stream of licentious influences flowing into it from putrid minds. But from all grades of society there is constantly going forth an emanation that exerts a corrupting influence. Take as an illustration a statement made in the Chicago Journal, that the mortifying incident which occurred at a recent musical given by Mrs. Roosevelt in the White is not an uncommon one at "functions," especially in high social circles. Upon this occasion the lady, a professional musician, who managed the affair lost her handsome wrap and found in its place a common cloth cape so shabby that she declined to wear it. Both the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, of course, were exceedingly embarrassed, and made every effort to find the missing garment, but in vain, whereupon Mrs. Roosevelt replaced it with one as nearly like it as could be found.

What adds to the mystery of the theft—for theft it unquestionably was—is the fact that no one was admitted to the musical except by card, and that all the cards were left with the ushers or doorkeepers. An examination of the cards shows that no strangers sought admission. Strange as the occurrence seems, it happens frequently in society and at functions where all in attendance are known to the hostess and usually to each other. This habit of exchanging old or cheap wraps for expensive and new ones is not uncommon even in Chicago, and one city usually is much like another in such things. Probably if the public were aware how often this kind of society theft occurs it would be greatly shocked. The offenders are usually known, or at least strongly suspected. Sometimes they stand so high in society or are so well connected that nothing is done about the matter, while in other cases it may not be possible to prove the theft absolutely, though the circumstances are convincing.

This kind of social thieving is one of those crimes which will probably exist in the future as long as it has in the past. In some cases the criminals are kleptomaniacs. Such cases are hopeless. Sometimes the thefts are committed by hangers-on to the edge of society who wish to make a good appearance and have not the money to do with it. Social ambition and personal vanity are undoubtedly the controlling motives in such cases. But whatever the motive, the practice is one which prevails to an alarming extent.

Here we have in higher walks of life, in fact in the topmost strata, an infernal influence that tends to corrupt the moral and spiritual atmosphere of the world; it is acting in harmony with licentiousness; it sends forth the same putrid emanations that emanate from the brothels and houses of prostitution; it is in accord with dens of vice in sending forth a pestiferous influence; in fact it is constantly sending forth thoughts in harmony with the hells of earth. If all would think pure, honest, unselfish exalted thoughts for twenty-five years, and act out the same faithfully in every-day life, the so-called millennial dawn would be ushered in in all its glory. If the principles of the Godless and Devilless Club could be inaugurated everywhere and its teachings carried out the world would soon advance to a higher plane, and prison houses, jails and penitentiaries would be abolished.

The Godless and Devilless Club, as expressed by a Chicago Daily believes that the nation owes a debt of gratitude to the native-born, aged poor. "The thought of the almshouse is sorry consolation to the unfortunates who have toiled along life's rugged road till the infirmities of age bar further progress. The world, that surely owes a living to every one who is well meaning and industrious, too often forgets that perseverance frequently fails of reward. The doctrine of the survival of the fittest is the synonym of cruelty in many cases. Heredity and circumstances beyond control blight lives that otherwise might be successful. What is the duty of the state to its members who await the final summons without friends or family to aid, with no bread for the table and opportunity to get it gone? England is seeking to solve the problem. The progress of the aged pensioners' bill in the House of Commons indicates that this radical measure is growing in favor. It lately passed to a second reading, though that is as far as it will probably get at this time. It provides that pensions of $1.25 to $1.75 a week shall be paid to worthy persons of 65 years or over who may not have incomes exceeding $2.50 a week. In the kingdom, according to estimates, there are 450,000 who would now be eligible under this plan, which at the same time especially seeks to avoid the discouragement of thrift. The national treasury is to make contributions to district funds of not more than half the total expense to meet the pension requirements. The annual cost may exceed $50,000,000, yet its advocates think that this will not be too much to spend on this experiment in paternalism."

Mrs. McKinley, the noble wife of our martyred President, has been pensioned to the extent of $5,000 a year.

Would it not be well to give a small pension to the aged poor women, many of whom are the peer of Mrs. McKinley in all womanly attributes, and equally as dear to the angel world?

As President of the Godless and Devilless Club, actuated by humanitarian impulses, I would advise all of the members to exert their influence in educating the masses up to a point where they can see the necessity of pensioning the worthy aged poor. It must come to that eventually.

HIGH SCRIBE.

Governor Wells, of Utah, on Woman Suffrage.

"The plain facts are that in this state the influence of women in politics has been distinctly elevating. In the primary, in the convention and at the polls her very presence inspires respect for law and order. Few men are so base that they will not be gentlemen in the presence of ladies. Experience has shown that women have voted their intelligent convictions, too. They understand the questions at issue and they vote conscientiously and fearlessly. While we do not claim to have the purest politics in the world in Utah, it will be readily conceded that the woman vote is a terror to evil doers, and our course is therefore upward and onward.

"One of the bugaboos of the opposition was that women would be compelled to sit on juries. Not a single instance of the kind has happened in the state, for the reason that women are never summoned; the law simply exempts them but does not exclude them. Another favorite idiocy of the antisuffragists used to be that if the women vote they ought to be compelled to fight. In the same manner the law exempts them from military service.

"For one I am proud of Utah's record in dealing with her female citizens. I take the same pride in it that a good husband would who has treated his wife well, and I look forward with eager hope to the day when woman suffrage shall become universal."—Weber M. Wells.

Always to think the worst I have ever found to be the mark of a mean spirit and a base soul.—Bolingbroke.

Better one bite at forty at Truth's bitter rind than the hot wine that gushed from the vintage at forty.—Lowell.

Manners are shadows of virtues, the momentary display of those qualities which our fellow-creatures love and respect.—Sydney Smith.

Lie in the lap of sin and not mean harm? It is hypocrisy against the devil. They that mean virtuously, and yet do so, the devil their virtue tempts, and they tempt heaven.—Shakspeare.

OCCULT MYSTERIES.

ALL THE WORLD TO TALK WITH SPIRITS.

Advance in Mentality and Intelligence the Key to Communication, According to Speakers Before the Psychological Section of the Medico-Legal Society.

Papers dealing with spiritism, spirit communication and mental telepathy were read at a meeting of the Medico-Legal Society, Psychological Section, several nights ago. The experiences detailed and the conclusions reached have served to increase the interest taken in these subjects by members of the Society for Psychological Research and the public in general owing to the revelations made recently by psychological investigators.

Dr. William Lee Howard, of Baltimore, Md., in his paper on "Spiritism," related the following instance of spirit communication,

"My valet, Bruno, is a young German whom I brought from Berlin, and who has become, through a course of training, a remarkable psychic subject. He has been examined by a large number of eminent medical and scientific men who have been intensely interested in his remarkable susceptibility to suggestion. One evening in the presence of five gentlemen, two of whom were German, I hypnotized Bruno, and in a whisper inaudible to any one but the subject suggested he was Bismarck.

"This done, I sat down at the other end of the room, my mind passive. Then issued from the mouth of this delicate young man a wonderful speech. It was an oration teeming with Latin phrases, voluminous quotations and fiery denunciation. The tone was Bismarckian, the language scholarly, and the gestures vehement. The spectators were astounded and wonderment was depicted on their countenances. When it was over one asked Bruno if he saw the spirit of Bismarck, and he ansered, 'Yes, he comes into me; that's all I know.'

"With one exception, the spectators were all religious men, pronounced churchmen and trammelled by the training of early superstition. A lucidly written explanation sent the next day has not convinced them of the satisfactory fact—satisfactory to well-balanced minds—that all the phenomena they witnessed were just as certainly physiologic facts as are the variations of the pulse rate.

"Dr. Hudson says in his able analysis of Professor Hyslop's report:—'It is known, however, that relatives and friends are either actually or potentially enrapport at all times.' I think this statement should be qualified, for while we know that many relatives and some dear friends are frequently en rapport we do not know for a certainty to what extent the rapport exists, nor do we know much about the potential element existing in untried cases."

MRS. PIPER A MESMERIST.

In his paper, which dealt with the powers of Mrs. Piper, a psychic medium, Dr. Alexander Wilder, of Newark, N. J., advanced the theory that her communications were due to mesmeric influences.

"The case of Mrs. Piper is comparatively simple," said Dr. Wilder, "if we can fairly understand the premises. These belong unequivocally to the department of mesmerism. I prefer the use of this term instead of the one which has been dragged from the Greek language and misapplied, to evade giving due credit to the man who introduced the art and science to the notice of the world.

"It was early perceived in mesmeric experiments that the physical sensibility and even the reasoning faculty of the individual were more or less suspended, and that he became in a greater or less degree participant in the thoughts and perceptions of the mesmerizer. This occurred, according as there was produced a partial or complete rapport between the two. In many instances there were such results as trance, intuition, somnambulism, clairvoyance, etc. In these cases we have had many wonderful disclosures which purported to come from other spheres of life. The works of Emanuel Swedenborg are significant evidences. from the fact that he, while in a state of trance, received numerous communications which were imparted to him, as he declared, by spirits and angels in the invisible world. There exists no valid reason for doubting his veracity or clearness of perception in regard to his memorable relations.

"The experimentation with Mrs. Piper under the auspices of the Society for Psychical Research has evidently resulted in establishing the fact that avenues for truth have actually been found. We cannot suppose her to be shamming. Her own character precludes this, and the members of the society having the matter in charge would have speedily detected any fraud if such had been attempted. I accept what the society has published as being true and conscientiously declared.

AUDIENCES INFLUENCE MEDIUMS

"The question before us relates, as I understand it, to the nature of the communications, whether they were from some region beyond our common life or to be explained by some theory of telepathy. It appears to me that both agencies possibly existed in the case. What I have noted in former examples has convinced me that there is a silent influence exerted by spectators, which we often do not suspect. This occurs in everyday life. The orator thus affects his audience and in turn the audience often inspires him. We are affected by every one with whom we have to do.

"The mesmerized person whose individuality is thus rendered dormant becomes more exquisitely sensitive to the aura and influence of those whose attention is concentrated upon him. Of course he is most susceptible to his magnetizer, sometimes evidently entirely so, but spectators have their share of influence. He will often reiterate what is in their thought, and they will take this for a special revelation. It is not necessary that they in each case are vividly conscious of such thinking, for our real thought is far beneath and beyond the sphere of our own consciousness. Only the superficial thinking is perceived by us. Hence we often operate on one another by our presence, by the concentrating of our attention through the silent energy of our will, and suppose that we are only passive.

"It may be left to others to judge whether this in any degree explains the case of Mrs. Piper. Those who are personally cognizant may feel certain that it does not to any reasonable degree meet the conditions, and, indeed, it is proposed only as a partial explanation. The world of mind is too broad to warrant the including of such phenomena in a purview so narrow and circumscribed."

In her paper entitled "Psychic Phenomena," Miss Eleanor Gridley, of Chicago, dealt also with the case of Mrs. Piper, attempting to make a psychological explanation of her powers.

"The Society for Psychical Research," said Miss Gridley, "composed of learned men who are wont to weigh well deep questions, has just finished a series of psychical investigations with Mrs. Leonora Piper as the principal witness in the case. These men, who have investigated with rare earnestness, subject to rigid methods, which left no loophole for careless or unscientific research to creep in, have many of them been converted to the belief that much of the phenomena was genuine spirit communication.

"In the first place, let us reason together and try to discover what this subliminal self, higher self, or human ego is, for if it is omniscient, able to impart information and capable of discrimination and discovery, then it should know its constitution, purpose and ultimate end, either through self-knowledge or absorption from other entities or egos.

"The ego, or real self, the I, is the individual as an object, to his own reflective consciousness—the person as a distinct individual, the man reviewed by his own cognition, as the subject of all his mental phenomena, the agent of his own activities, the subject of his own feelings, and the possessor of his own faculties and his own characteristics.

"An individual in the mesmeric trance is dormant so far as the external senses are concerned. But the soul, the real self, is as much awake as ever. It is then more susceptible to mental impression than in the wakeful period. As spectators by contemplating him intently may infuse their thoughts and emotions, so spirit beings are capable of doing the same thing. Indeed, this is more likely to happen. They are more free to do so, and are naturally more eager and ready. The bars between the world of time and the vaster world beyond time are in a great degree removed for the while, and communication opened as when a man is in conversation with a friend."

BELIEVES SWEDENBORG'S DREAMS.

Dr. Wilder then read an extract from Swedenborg's diary: "'That spirits may be induced who represent another person; and the spirit, as also he who was known to the spirit, cannot know otherwise than that he was the same.

"'This has many times been shown to me, that the spirits speaking with me did not know otherwise than that they were the men who were the subject of thought—wherefore let those who speak with spirits beware lest they are those whom they have known, and that they are dead. For those are genera and species of spirits of a like faculty; and when similar things are called up in the memory of a man, and are thus represented to them, they think that they are the same persons.'

WILL GROW TO KNOW SPIRITS.

"The artist or the musician may be ever so great, even the greatest exponent of his special art that the world has ever known, and yet, with a low grade, imperfect instrument, or crude, ill-fashioned tools, this great master is utterly unable to produce that high standard of perfection which under good conditions he is perfectly capable of achieving.

"That false or unreliable statements are made by the medium is also another undisputed fact. Why should it be otherwise, for if the medium is untruthful, dishonest, unreliable or imaginary, how can the message be freed from this condition?

"We again are also told that the medium or instrument who claims to transit the intelligence has never given any information other than the knowledge of that which resides in the mind of one or more persons present. That statement seems to me quite misleading for I could give hundreds of instances in which absolutely unknown and unknowable information was given to me.

"I have received prophetic information many times through spirit communication direct to self or through some other instrument. This information was communicated to me, in many instances, as many as twenty years in advance of the actual occurrences. The details were minutely described, the persons named in a number of instances then unknown to me.

"The results were so clearly and positively emphasized, that had I then been well grounded in the knowledge of spirit return it seems to me I could have prevented the calamities which ensued and were enacted at the time and place so stated. In view of these experiences I cannot argue that all psychic information is obtained or selected by the sensitive form of some one at hand, or if not at hand, still present in the corporeal body of the material man who is somewhere on the earth plane.

"I believe that spirit return is a demonstrated fact, but its value will be seen to be dependent upon its relation to other facts of equal importance. When we, here upon the earth plane, have developed to a high degree of intelligence and soul unfoldment, then will we not only attract those spirits who have achieved true immortality, but we will also be able to translate in purity of language and correct expression their messages."

HEEDS SPIRIT WORDS.

Edmund Wodicka Prepares for End April 15.

A spirit has told Edmund Wodicka, the proprietor of a barber shop at 845 West Taylor street, that he will die on the 15th of next month. With the spirit's words ringing in his ears Wodika visited the undertaking rooms of John O'Brien at Morgan street and Blue Island avenue and gave instructions for funeral services that are to be unique.

"John," said he, "a spirit of the other world came to me and told me that on the 15th of next month I will cease to exist on this earthly sphere and I want you to conduct my funeral.

"In the first place I don't want any sign of mourning. Let everybody be joyous. Let the carriages in the funeral procession be open and let the women occupants dress in white and don't let anyone go unless he wears a red necktie and a bouquet in his lapel.

"Furthermore, during my life I always loved music and I leave it to you to see that I have it when I'm dead. Get a band of 100 pieces to lead the way and under no circumstances let them play any dead marches. What I pay for I must have. Let them play 'A Hot Time in the Old Town To-night,' and when the cemetery is reached and my remains are being lowered to their last resting place let the band play 'Down Went McGinty.'

WANTS MOURNERS JOYFUL.

"Another duty I impose on you as a friend. See that everyone who attends the ceremonies and funeral has a good time. Stop at every resort along the road and drink to my future happiness, for I know that in that great world beyond and whither I am going with my spirit friends I will be happy."

O'Brien told his friend that he would carry out the instructions and now the residents in the neighborhood of Taylor, Blue Island avenue and Morgan street are waiting the 15th of April.

Wodicka, his friends declare, has always been a person of mystery and, though popular with the people of the neighborhood, he has been noted for his eccentric ways.

Wodicka is 60 years of age and has a most interesting career. He has been a soldier under six flags and not long ago became a follower of Booth-Tucker. Prior to his joining the Salvation Army he was an adherent of Herr Most.

SPEAKS EIGHT LANGUAGES.

He speaks eight languages and in his long career as a soldier of fortune he has traveled over most of the globe and has had many thrilling encounters.

A good many years ago Wodicka and four companions enlisted in the service of a European exploring expedition which had for its object the study of the roaming bands of Tartars that inhabit the wild country north of the great wall of China.

"We had just rested for the night," this said the old man in telling of this adventure, "and had pitched our tents on a vast plain when a band of Tartars surrounded us.

"They crept up close to our camp and began firing. Two of our party of twenty fell at the first fire. We fought them all night and up to 4 o'clock the next day, when our ammunition gave out, and though we held them at bay for several hours more we were finally taken prisoners.

"After a protracted argument among themselves they made known to us that half should die and another half should become slaves. That night a furious windstorm arose and in the excitement several of us escaped. We wandered about the vast plain for days with only herbs to eat.

UNABLE TO BURY COMRADES.

"Two of my companions died. They were delirious from thirst and hunger and were finally unable to proceed. When death came I was too weak to bury them.

"Two weeks later I reached a small Russian trading post in a crazed condition. It was fully a year before I recovered from the effects of the weeks spent in the wilds of Tartary."

Wodicka has been in the German, French and Russian armies and acted as an instructor in the Chinese navy. It was there he learned the Chinese language, which he numbers among his accomplishments.

Before coming to America Wodicka sailed a Dutch whaler. Ten years ago he was wrecked on the coast of Greenland and it was from there that he finally came to this country, landing in New York.—Chicago Chronicle.

A GREAT MIND WRITES

On the Eternity of the Human Soul.

I stood last year in the central aisle of the health exhibition at Kensington and observed a graceful English girl lost in momentary interest over the showcase containing the precise ingredients of her fair and perfect frame.

There—neatly measured out, labeled, and deposited in frays or bottles—were exposed the water, the lime, the phosphorus, the silex, the iron, and the other various elements, perversely styled "clay," which go to the building up of our houses of flesh and bone.

As I watched her half amused, half pensive countenance the verse came to my mind, "Why should it seem to you a wonderful thing though one rose from the dead?"

Minerals and gases have, so science opines, an atomic and ethereal life in their particles, and if we could only imagine them conversing elementally, how skeptical they would be that any power could put together the coarse ingredients of that glass case to form by delicate chemistry of nature the peerless beauty, the joyous health, the exquisite capacities, and the lovely human life of the bright maiden who contemplated with unconvinced smiles those materials of her being!

But if, passing behind such an everyday analysis of the laboratory, science had dared to speak to her of the deeper secrets in nature which she herself embodied and enshrined—without the slightest consciousness or comprehension on her part—how far more wonderful the mystery of the chemistry of her life would have appeared!

Some grave and venerable F. R. S. might perchance reverently have ventured to whisper, "Beautiful human sister! built of the water, the flint, and the lime; you are more marvelous than all that!

"Your sacred simplicity does not and must not yet understand your divine complexity!

"Otherwise you should be aware that hidden within the gracious house made of those common materials, softly and silently developed there by forces which you know not, and yet govern, unwittingly exercising a perpetual magic—are tiny golden beginnings of your sons and daughters to be.

"You have heard of and marveled at Iliads written on films of fairy thinness and inclosed within nutshells! Diviner poems, in infinitely fairer characters, upon far subtler surfaces, are inscribed upon each of those occult jewels of your destined maternity!"

She would not and could not understand, of course; yet all this is a matter of common observation, the well established fact.

"Miracles" are cheap enough!

It is quite likely that in many mysteries of life and death we resemble the good knight Don Quixote, when he hung by his wrist from the stable window and imagined that a tremendous abyss yawned beneath his feet. Marittornes cuts the string with lightsome laughter, and the gallant gentleman falls—four inches!

Perhaps nature reserves as blithsome a surprise for her offspring when their time arrives to discover the simplicity, agreeableness, and absence of any serious change in the process called "dying."

The expression of composed calm which comes over the faces of the nearly dead is not merely due to muscular relaxation.

It is possibly a last message of good cheer and acquiescence, not by any means to be disregarded.

With accent as authoritative as that heard at Bethany it murmurs, "Thy brother shall live again!"

The fallacy of thinking and speaking of a future life in terms of present limited knowledge has given rise to foolish visions and made many gentle and religious minds thereby incredulous.

Man never so much as imagined the kangaroos till Captain Cook discovered their haunts. How, then, should he conceive the aspect of angels and new embodied spirits, and why should he be so skeptical about them because his present eyes are constructed for no such lovely sights?

We can perceive how easily our senses are eluded even by gross matter.

The solid block of ice whereon we stood is just as existent when it has melted into water and become dissipated as steam, but it disappears for us.

"End and beginning are dreams," mere phases of our foolish earthly speech. But taking things as they seem, nobody knows that death stays—nor why it should stay—the development of the individual. It stays our perception of it in another, but so does distance, absence, or even sleep.

Birth gave to each of us much; death may give very much more—in the way of subtler senses to behold colors we cannot here see, to catch sounds we do not now hear, and to be aware of bodies and objects impalpable to us at present, but perfectly real, intelligibly constructed.

Where does Nature show signs of breaking off her magic that she should stop at the five senses and the sixty-odd elements?

What does Nature possess more valuable in all that she has wrought here than the wisdom of the sage, the tenderness of the mother, the devotion of the lover, and the opulent imagination of the poet, that she should let those utterly priceless things be lost by a quinsy or a flux?

It is a hundred times more reasonable to believe that she commences afresh with such delicately developed treasures, making them groundwork and stuff for splendid future living by process of death, which, even when it seems accidental and premature, is probably as natural and gentle as birth.

There is positively not a single prodigy in the ancient religions but has its everyday illustration in nature.

Existence around us, illuminated by modern sciences, is full of incredible occurrences; one more or less makes no logical difference.

After all, as Shakespeare so merrily put it, "That that is is!" and when we look into the blue of the sky we actually see visible Infinity.

When we regard the stars of midnight we veritably perceive the mansions of Nature, countless and illimitable.

So that even our narrow senses reprove our timid minds.—Sir Edwin Arnold, in Chicago Sunday Tribune.

BETWEEN LIFE AND DEATH.

How It Feels to Die Six Times.

Probably no man ever lived who has not at one time or another asked himself the question, "How does it feel to die?"

In Minneapolis there lives a man who not only has asked the question, but is able to answer it as well. He has in reality died six times yet is alive and in the best of health to-day. This man, whose experiences baffle comparison, is William J. Rohr. Since he was a boy going to school he has traveled six different routes attempting to cross the River Styx, but each time, as he expresses it; "St. Peter turned away and announced a false alarm." Rohr is confident that the slender thread that holds his life possesses marvelous strength, for he has passed through the following ordeals each of which brought him near death:

Fell through a hole in the ice while skating on a mill pond; unconscious when taken from the water.

Fell into a river while protecting a bridge against an ice floe; unconscious when taken from the water.

Smothered in an airtight trunk while hiding in a game of "hide and seek"; unconscious when found.

Fell over a precipice in St. Paul to the ground below, a distance of 105 feet; unconscious when picked up.

Stricken with consumption, but refused to allow physicians to have their way.

Attempted suicide by shooting himself twice in the breast with a revolver; unconscious when picked up, but not dead.

WRITES OF HIS SENSATIONS.

What is rather unusual in Mr. Rohr is that he has experienced the novelty of writing about his own death sensations. "When I slid under the ice of the mill pond this was the beginning of a series of accidents that have followed me to this day," he says. "As my slide carried me to the edge of the thin ice and into the water thoughts began to flash through my brain.

"What would mother and father say when my lifeless body had been recovered?—if ever?

"With the shouts of my playmates ringing in my ears, I passed through and made a supreme effort to drink all the water under the ice. It came into my nose and mouth, and I began to feel that I had all that I could hold.

"The passage of such large quantities of water through my nostrils gave me a strangling, suffocating sensation, which in turn gave way to one that seemed to be a desire to fly—to wave the arms—and then a bump, and it faintly dawned on my drowning mind that it was the ice which covered the pond.

"The last sensation was as if floating away on the crest of fleecy clouds as they swept through the sky on a summer's day, and then unconsciousness.

"When I came to there was a disagreeable sensation of some one trying to use my arms for pump handles. A pressing down on the chest, and at last a voice crying, 'He lives!'"

The following spring Rohr, then a good-sized chunk of a lad, went with a party of men and boys to protect a bridge against ice that at that time clogged the creek feeding the mill pond. He was standing on the bridge pushing the ice away with a pole when the end of the stick caught on a particularly large cake of ice and the young man was thrown head foremost into the raging stream. Here again he had another narrow escape from drowning, but was rescued by his school teacher, Daniel Allen, after he had gone under two times.

Rohr next hid in an old trunk during a game of hide and seek. A playmate sat on the trunk as a joke. The result was that the boy on the inside was all but suffocated. He was dragged out unconscious.

"The fear of suffocation finally gave way to one of pleasure," he says, in describing the sensation, "and I felt as though music and singing had entered the chest and I was floating around with the melodies rising or falling as I drew near or receded in the distance. Hours afterward I heard voices strangely familiar."

ANGERED AT FUNERAL ORATION.

This was the last time Rohr "died" until 1888, when he fell down a 105-foot embankment in St. Paul and escaped with some bad bruises. Not a bone was broken, but he lost one trouser leg and his coat was split up the back. He was only laid out about half an hour. Four years after this incident the man with nine lives was notified by physicians to make his peace with God, for it was said that he was dying with consumption. Rohr, however, refused to die, and one day he became so angry because persons who called on him persisted in preaching a funeral oration, that he got out of bed and in a short time was a well man. This was the fifth time he had been face to face with death.

EXPERIENCE OF A SUICIDE.

The sixth time came near being the charm, for Rohr shot himself. He aimed for his heart, but here again fate pursued him and would not let him die, even when he was ready. Describing this attempt at suicide, Rohr says:

"Advancing before a mirror so as to better see what I was doing, I grasped the handle and pressed the muzzle to my breast and pulled the trigger.

"A flash, a report, and I felt something like a sudden prick of a pin in my side. Well, what was the trouble?

"I guessed that the muzzle had deflected in the effort required to pull the trigger.

"There was a numbness coming over me, and I realized that if I was to end it all I must forthwith insert another bullet nearer in.

"Frantic with rage and frenzied at the unsuccessful first effort, I again pressed the weapon to a place where I thought the heart must be, and as the realization came over me that this was to be the end of all my sleeplessness and the heat, I seemed to gloat over the fact that they could be cheated so easily. Nervously and hastily I again pulled the trigger.

"When consciousness returned, for, strange to relate, I had not succeeded in my design, I found the room filled with strangers and a physician kneeling by my side as I lay on the floor."—Chicago Tribune.

A JEWISH VIEW.

Dr. Hirsch Tells Why Jesus Was Crucified and by Whom.

"The crucifixion of Christ was the result of a conspiracy between the pilfering, parasitical priests and their allies, the Roman authorities. This combination of hypocritical priests and corrupt government officials was as great a drain upon the people of those days as are the modern captains of our monopolized industries. The priests saw in Jesus a dangerous opponent of their shameful methods. Hence they branded him anarchist and put him to a most ignominious death."

Thus concluded Dr. Emil G. Hirsch in his address on "Why Was Jesus Crucified?" delivered to a large audience at Temple Israel, Forty-fourth street and St. Lawrence avenue, last night.

"Christ touched the greedy, materialistic priests in a tender spot," said Dr. Hirsch, "when, on entering the temple, He overturned their tables and drove the money changers out, exclaiming that His house was to be a house of prayer and not a den for thieves. The priests thenceforth saw in the courageous Nazarene an enemy whose truthful tongue should be forever stilled by death.

"One has but to read the Bible intelligently to learn conclusively that the Jews had absolutely no part in the legalized murder of Christ. The very word 'crucify' is not known in the Jewish language. Crucifixion upon the cross was the Roman method of execution. The trial of Jesus was in violation of every established Jewish law. Christ was crucified on the eve of the Passover festival, we are told by the Bible in one place. In another the time is said to have been on the day of the festival. It is a principle of Jewish law that an execution cannot take place either on the eve or the day of the Passover festival, nor upon the Sabbath day.

PROVES THEIR INNOCENCE.

"What is more, no man could be put to death, according to the Jewish law, save on the testimony of two witnesses, and capital sentence was never passed then unless these two witnesses showed that they had previously had cognizance of the crime and warned the person against committing it.

"It was not a crime among the Pharisees for a man to claim to be the son of God. Every man was considered to be the son of God, and in that age hundreds claimed the power of healing by the laying on of hands. Many even claimed to have restored persons from the dead. Christ's ideas were akin to those of the Pharisees, who sought to establish a national independence of their race. They were nationalists, similar to the Zionists of to-day. The priests were antagonistic to the national ideas of the Pharisees. The temple at that time was a vast slaughter-house—a house of blood, made so by the levitical laws.

"The Roman Empire, the historical robber of all ages, lent its soldiers to the priests to force the collection of their unjust revenue. Hence the lust for gold was directly responsible for the crucifixion of Christ, who denounced the greed.

"Yet, in the face of this abundance of evidence showing who the real murderers of Christ were, the boys of the streets of the world to-day cry out at the passing Jew, 'Christ killer!'"—Record-Herald.

PERSONAL MAGNETISM

A College, Chartered Under State Laws, With a Capital of $100,000, for the Purpose of Teaching Personal Magnetism and Hypnotism by Correspondence.

EVERYBODY MAY NOW LEARN

Ten Thousand Copies of a Valuable Work on These Sciences to Be Given Away to Advertise th College.

The American College of Sciences, of Philadelphia, Pa., is a novel institution. It is chartered under state laws, with a capital of $100,000, for the purpose of teaching Personal Magnetism, Hypnotism, Magnetic Healing, etc., by correspondence.

At an expense of over $5,000 the college has issued a remarkable work on these sciences, ten thousand copies of which will be given away absolutely free. The book is elegantly illustrated with the most expensive engravings, and it is decidedly the finest and most comprehensive work of its kind ever published. It is the product of the combined talent of thirty distinguished hypnotic specialists and scientists. It thoroughly explains all the hidden secrets of Personal Magnetism, Hypnotism, Magnetic Healing, etc. It is full of surprising experiences, and makes many startling disclosures in regard to the use and possibilities of this secret power.

The college absolutely guarantees that anyone can learn these sciences in a few days at home, and use the power without the knowledge of his most intimate friends.

The reporter asked for the names and addresses of some of the pupils so that he might communicate with them personally. Several hundred were offered, from which the reporter selected eighty-four. The replies received were more than sufficient to convince the most skeptical in regard to the wonderful benefits to be derived from this mighty power. There were absolutely no failures. All had learned to make practical use of the sciences. The following extracts are taken at random from the letters, for the benefit of readers:

J. H. Schneller, 1412 Avon st., La Crosse, Wis., writes: "Hypnotism truly reveals the secrets of life and the mysteries of nature. My own father could not have convinced me of its wonderful power if I had not actually tested it for myself. I consider a knowledge of it invaluable to those who wish to get the most out of life; to those who wish to achieve success and live up to the full measures of their possibilities.

Mrs. Effie M. Watson, Martinsville, Ind., writes: "Hypnotism opens the road to health, happiness, and prosperity. It should be studied by every one. I would not part with my knowledge of it for any amount. The instructions have developed within me a force of character, an ability to influence and control people that I did not dream I could acquire.

J. W. Clinger, M. D., Springfield, Ohio, writes: "I have used the methods of hypnotism taught by the American College of Sciences in two cases of difficult surgical operations with perfect success. It is a complete anaesthetic, and preferable to chloroform or ether. I acquired a practical knowledge of hypnotism in less than than three days. The book is grand."

Rev. T. W. Butler, Ph. D., Idaho City, Idaho, writes: "I have cured a number of chronic cases of rheumatism, dyspepsia and paralysis of long standing; have not had a single failure; I consider a knowledge of Personal Magnetism invaluable. The book has greatly increased my own powers.

Dr. W. P. Kennicutt, 529 State st., Binghamton, N. Y., writes: "I had long suffered from nervous prostration and dyspepsia. My case baffled all medical skill. I studied hypnotism from the American College of Sciences, and tried it upon myself with surprising results. In one week my stomach was better than it had been in thirty years. I could eat anything without the slightest distress. I can hypnotize myself in five minutes and sleep all night; have hypnotized a number of others.

The first ten thousand persons who write to the American College of Sciences will receive, absolutely free, the marvelous book that brought success to the above persons. It is intensely interesting from start to finish. It should be in every home. If you want a copy write to-day to the American College of Sciences, Dept. PL 16, 416-420 Walnut street, Philadelphia, Pa., and you will receive the book by return mail.

THE DESCENT OF MAN.

By Charles Darwin. Cloth, gilt top, 75 cents. On its appearance it aroused at once a storm of mingled wrath, wonder and admiration. In elegance of style, charm of manner and deep knowledge of natural history, it stands almost without a rival among scientific works.

Force and Matter By Ludwig Buechner. A celebrated book. A profound work upon a profound subject. Price, cloth, $1.00.

AFTER HER DEATH.

The Story of a Summer. By Lillian Whiting. Pervaded with pure and beautiful spirituality of thought. Instructive and helpful to all who love and seek the higher and finer ways of spiritual experience. Price, $1.00.

Discovery of a Lost Trail

BY CHARLES B. NEWCOMB,

Author of "All's Right with the World." Cloth 270 pages. Mr. Newcomb made a distinct success with "All's Right with the World," which continues in the front rank of the Metaphysical books that are now so popular. The great number who have been cheered and strengthened by him will welcome another book by the wise teacher whose words of help are doing so much to make the world better by making men and women better able to understand and enjoy it.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail"

is a simple study of that strange and beautiful thing called life, but grand in its scholarly simplicity. It will be in demand by many who have not previously read metaphysical writings. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

What All the World's a-Seeking.

RALPH WALDO TRINE.

Each is building his world from within; thought is the builder; for thoughts are forces,—subtle, vital, irresistible, omnipotent,—and according as used do they bring power or impotence, peace or pain, success or failure.—From Title-page.

The above books are beautifully bound in gray-green raised cloth, stamped in deep old-green and gold, with gilt top. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

THE OTHER WORLD AND THIS.

A compendium of Spiritual Laws. No. 1, New White Cross Literature. By Augusta W. Fletcher. M. D. In this volume the author, in the thirty-nine chapters, discusses a wide variety of subjects pertaining to Spiritualism, from a spiritualistic standpoint. She evinces the powers of a trained thinker, both in matter of thought and fine literary style, and capability of thought expression. The subjects are well handled with conciseness and yet with clearness. It will prove a rich addition to any Spiritualist's library, and a most excellent book for any one seeking information concerning Spiritualism and its teachings. Price $1.50.

The Spiritual Wreath.

A collection of words and music for the choir, congregation and social circle. By S. W. Tucker. Comprises sixty or more gems of song. Price, 15 cents.

ASTRAL WORSHIP By J. H. Hill, M.D. A valuable contribution to the current discussion of religious problems. The author by illustrations and a planisphere (a representation of the celestial sphere upon a plane with adjustable circles), traces most of the myths which lie at the base of Christianity to their origin in sun and star worship. The astronomical facts given possess great value, the illustrations rare and curious. The book is bound in only one style—heavy boards. Price $1.

The Christ Question Settled.

Jesus, Man, Medium, Martyr. A symposium by W. E. Coleman, J. S. Loveland, Hudson Tuttle, Moses Hull, J. R. Buchanan, B. B. Hill, Rabbi I. M. Wise, Col. Ingersoll—and what the spirits say about it. By J. M. PEEBLES, M. D. Whether this book settles the question or not, it will be found eminently entertaining, and brings together a mass of evidence to establish the historical character of Jesus. A large volume. Price, cloth, $1.25.

Father Tom and the Pope,

Or a Night at the Vatican. Written probably by Sir Samuel Ferguson. From Blackwood's Edinburg Magazine. This is a humorous account of a rollicksome visit to the Pope of Rome by Father Tom, an Irish priest, armed with a superabundance of Irish wit, two imperial quart bottles of Irish "poteen," and an Irish recipe for "conwounding" the same. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE TO-MORROW OF DEATH,

Or the Future Life According to Science. By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French by S. R. Crocker. A very fascinating work. This fine volume might well have been entitled Spiritualism Demonstrated by Science. It is written in that peculiar interesting style in which French writers excel when they would popularize scientific subjects in adaptation to the needs of the general reader. The author says: "There is a true and respectable idea in Spiritualism," and regards as proved "the fact of communication between superhumans and the inhabitants of earth." Price, $1.50.

MAHOMET His Birth, Character and Doctrine. By Edward Gibbon. This is No. 6 of the Library of Liberal Classics. It is conceded to be historically correct, and so exact and perfect in every detail as to be practically beyond the reach of adverse criticism. This work will be found intensely interesting. Price, 25 cents.

OUTSIDE THE GATES

and other tales and sketches. By a band of spirit intelligences, through the mediumship of Mary Theresa Shelhamer. An excellent work. Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

THE WORLD BEAUTIFUL.

Series one, two and three. By Lilian Whiting. Three choice volumes, each complete in itself, in which spirituality is related to everyday life in such a way as to make the world beautiful. Price, $1.00 each.

SPIRITUAL SONGSTER.

By Mattie E. Hull. Thirty-eight of Mrs. Hull's sweetest songs, adapted to popular music, for the use of congregations, circles and families. Price, 10 cents, or $7 per hundred.

INTERVIEWS WITH SPIRITS.

A real visit with friends on the other side of life, and a familiar talk. By spirit Samuel Bowles: Carrie E. S. Twing, Medium. Price 80 cents. For sale at this office.

A. SCHOPENHAUER ESSAYS.

Translated by T. B. Saunders. Cloth, 75 cents. "Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is; and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. This characteristic endows his style with a freshness and vigor which would be difficult to match in the philosophic writing of any country, and impossible in that of Germany."—Translator.

HARMONIES OF EVOLUTION.

The Philosophy of Individual Life, Based Upon Natural Science

As taught by modern masters of law. By Florence Huntley. An exceedingly interesting and distinctly valuable contribution to the literature of evolution, unfolding its laws from the deeper and clearer spiritual aspect, and indicating the defects of the Darwinian theory. Spiritualists and Materialists alike can gain much from its perusal. Price, finely bound in cloth, $2.

Why I Am a Vegetarian.

An address delivered before the Chicago Vegetarian Society. By J. Howard Moore. Price, 25 cents.

The Science of Spirit Return,

By Charles Dawbarn. A scientific rehearsal that is truly interesting. Price, 10 cents.

Why She Became a Spiritualist

Twelve Lectures by Abby A. Judson. This book should be read by every Spiritualist. Price, $1.00; postage 10 cents.

Out of the Depths Into the Light.

By Samuel Bowles; Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, medium. This is a very interesting little book, and will be appreciated from start to finish by all who wish to gain spiritual information. Price, 25 cents.

Miss Judson's Books

"Why She Became a Spiritualist." 265 pages. One copy, $1.00;

"From Night to Morn; or An Appeal to the Baptist Church. 32 pages. One copy 15 cents; ten copies, 75 cents.

"The Bridge Between Two Worlds." 209 pages One copy, bound in cloth, $1.00; paper, 75.

THE DIAKKA. The Diakka and Their Earthly Victims. By the Seer A. J. Davis. A very interesting and suggestive work. It is an explanation of much that is false and repulsive in Spiritualism, embodying a most important recent interview with James Victor Wilson, a resident of Summer Land. Price, 50 cents.

Views of Our Heavenly Home.

By Andrew Jackson Davis. A highly interesting work. Price, 75 cents. Postage 6 cents.

SPIRITUAL HARP A collection of Vocal Music for the Choir, Congregation and Social Circles. By J. M. Peebles and J. O. Barrett; E. H. Bailey, Musical Editor. New edition. Culled from a wide field of literature with the most critical care, free from all theological bias, throbbing with the soul of inspiration, embodying the principles and virtues of the spiritual philosophy, set to the most cheerful and popular music (nearly all original) and adapted to all occasions, it is doubtless the most attractive work of the kind ever published. Its beautiful songs, duets and quartets, with piano, organ or melodeon accompaniment, adapted both to public meetings and the social circles. Cloth, $1.25; postage, 14 cents.

A Few Words About the Devil,

And other Essays. By Charles Bradlaugh. With the story of his life as told by himself, and the history of his parliamentary struggle. With portrait. Paper, 50c.

SATURDAY, APRIL 12, 1902.

Still They Come.

And now it is Dr. H. L. Willett, of the University of Chicago, who has joined Prof. Pearson, of the Northwestern University, in expressing doubt of Bible miracles. "Before a large audience in the First Congregational church of Evanston, Dr. Willett said the disinclination to accept the miraculous was not surprising. 'So unique a series of events as the miracles in the New Testament,' he declared, 'is almost incomprehensible and no man should be blamed for declining to accept them."

"In regard to the wonders done by Jesus, Dr. Willett is of the opinion that it is merely a question when we, too, shall be doing the same things."

These two universities, the Chicago and the Northwestern, are manufacturing preachers by the wholesale for Baptists and Methodists. If the professors of those great institutions of learning have the bravery to reject the exaggerations of the New Testament, how long will the students in those institutions of learning believe that Jesus was raised by God, or his deputy, the Holy Ghost, whoever that may be, because Joseph DREAMED such was the case? If that incident and the miracles are incredible, how about the residue of the New Testament narrative?

By the way, Prof. Pearson has just published a book entitled "The Carpenter Prophet," wherein he attacks the fundamental dogmas of the church, denying the divinity of Jesus, and declaring the trinity a fiction. We have not seen the book, but the Chicago Journal says:

"Every page bristles with radical statements and arguments calculated to upset the cherished beliefs of Christians." It adds: "The influence of the book will be tremendous. It is bound to reach a class of readers who would look askance at the works of Infidels. Coming from a man with the ripe scholarship and reputation for sincerity possessed by Prof. Pearson, it will create a profound sensation."

Wisdom of Uninspired Pagans.

Search all our sacred books, not omitting the so-called inspired Scriptures, and where can nobler, purer, better thoughts be found than in the following extracts from Pagan authors:

He who lives pure in thought, free from malice, leading a holy life, feeling tenderly for all creatures, speaking wisely and kindly, humbly and sincerely, has the Deity ever in his breast.—Buddha.

An honest man needs to fear no evil, either in this or the future life.—Socrates.

He who doeth good to another, doeth good to himself; not only in the consequence, but also in the very act of doing it; for the consciousness of well-doing is ample reward.—Seneca.

Love those who come near you. Be good to your fellow creatures. Think when dealing with each of them what his feelings may be. Be patient with age; be tender with children.—Cicero.

Humanity is the heart of man; justice is the path of man; to know heaven is to develop the principle of our higher nature.—Mencius.

Eschew wickedness. Be truthful in speech, faithful in your engagements, kind and helpful to your relations and neighbors.—Mahomet.

Be moderate and frugal that thou mayest be liberal, and in all circumstances true, gentle, and humble.—Lao-tsze, 500 years B. C.

It is a great indication of progress in virtue to transfer our judgment to action, and not let our words remain merely words, but to make deeds of them.—Plutarch.

Vicarious Sacrifice.

The holy books teach us that because of mortal sin, and to gain reconciliation with God, sacrifices were made to him to placate his anger. Cain, the first born, doubtless a vegetarian, to turn aside that anger, placed on the altar in sacrifice, his productions, "the fruit of the ground." But this was not acceptable to God, and so it was rejected. God wanted blood, and Abel gratified him by sacrificing "the firstlings of his flocks, and of the fat thereof," and found favor because of that blood.

Taking the Bible for authority, and following the story of sacrifices, it seems nothing but the blood of doves, of bullocks, goats and lambs would appease almighty anger, so they were continued from age to age down to our own era. On great occasions human sacrifices were made, for God would accept nothing less.

The years went on, sin increased, and probably the anger of God increased at the same ratio. He tired of doves, and bullocks and ordinary human sacrifices, and he wanted a more magnificent offering, so his own and only son became the victim, a voluntary one, churchmen represent, but he had a bad way of showing it, if his biographers can be trusted.

Yet God accepted that atonement, conditioned the sinner would repose full trust in it.

This is called a vicarious atonement—an innocent person suffering for the guilty. This is orthodoxy as taught from the pulpit. Does reason and common sense sustain such a faith? If so it may have a divine origin. If the contrary, then it should be discarded as pernicious teaching.

Consistency, a Jewel!

"Where the evidence that there was no such a personality as Jesus? And why until recent years did no person deny his personal existence?"—Inquirer.

So soon as Christianity became the dominant religion it began to punish as heretics all persons who denied the claim of the church. The penalties grew more severe from age to age, and culminated in the Inquisition with its star-chamber procedure, followed by confiscation of estates, dungeons, tortures, the stake and fagot. To contradict the statement of a priest was death. His person, as the vicegerent of God, was sacred, and his authority was supreme. The whole force of the civil law was exerted to dignify the church, and exalt its head. As the system was based on the sovereignty of Jesus, himself God, co-equal with the Father, yes, that Father himself, it was Atheism, justly meriting death, to deny his existence or his divine character.

Those inquisitorial tortures were found in existence in Spain as late as 1808, when Joseph Bonaparte discovered their secret chambers, and took measures as the then reigning king, to abolish them. And yet it is believed the system is still in vogue in exclusive Catholic countries, where adverse criticism is now punished by old-time penalties.

When Protestantism became established in the northern countries of Europe, and the Inquisition was no longer able to enforce priestly mandates, the several governments came to the aid of the sacerdotal class, and enacted laws for its protection, and for the protection of its Gods. They made it blasphemy to deny the Godhead, or speak or write denying the personality of Almighty God, Jesus Christ or the Holy Ghost, or that the Bible was other than the word of God. All the governments of the New World echoed these laws, and all attached severe penalties to their several enactments. Unless a person was willing to risk his personal liberty, and the loss of his estate by heavy fines, and the impoverishment of his family, he could not call in question that which was thus so strongly protected by barbaric laws.

But there was another powerful instrumentality to prevent investigation, or even the expression of honest doubt. All the great schools of learning throughout Christendom were established in aid of the church. King's College, London, as a fundamental principle declared in its charter: "Instruction in the Christian religion ought to form an indispensable part of every system of general education for the youth of a Christian community." The same feature prevails in some form in nearly all our institutions of learning. Even the common schools, supported by general taxation, are not wholly exempt from the practical application of this feature of the colleges and universities.

The last fifty years have witnessed a general revolution in religious thought. Priestcraft has gradually lost its power, while reason and intelligent criticism has come to the front. Modern research has made the learned better acquainted with the history of the past, and of the rise of dogmas and creeds than was ever known before.

Instead of proving a negative, that there was no such person as Jesus, the burden of proof is on the part of the affirmative; and this evidence is what investigators demand, and they are not content to accept the bold and unsupported evidence which even Christian scholars admit is false, forged and fraudulent.

A Grand Discovery.

A late medical journal makes the announcement that—

"Exalted or depressed psychic conditions have much to do with the production of many of the phenomena of even religion, literature and art, as they are already known to be important factors in the creation of various nervous diseases." The writer then goes on to say: "The thought of certain maladies produces, sometimes, in the easily depressed, their mental conception and subjective symptoms so distinctly that they are sufficiently the victims of the disease they imagine, to deceive not only themselves and their friends, but also the doctor."

That "exalted or depressed psychic condition," the learned writer suggests, is often the product of disease germs, the microbe, or its twin sister, the bacillus. The point established, that religion, with literature and art, have their growth from germs, then a search must be made for the origin and habitat of these disturbers of domestic tranquillity; particularly for that class of them which breed sectarianism. We apprehend the search need not be prolonged; for they abound in ancient heathen literature, which was plagiarized from the old pagan worship of Assyria, Phoenicia and Egypt; was adapted by an imaginary people in the Lebanon mountains of Palestine, and is now doing service under the name of Old Testament Scriptures. Demolish this nest in which Superstition was bred, and on which the uncultured lean, and the effect produced by the constant imitation of microbes and bacilli will cease.

Idol Worshipers.

Jehovah, correctly rendered from the Hebrew would be Yahweh, was the tribal God of the Jews, the same that the Philistines captured from them, and finally returned, drawn by bellowing cows, because of his quarrelsome habit. He is the same God before which David, in a very airy costume, danced in great glee because of that return.

Opening Kitto's Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature the other day, under the head of "Human Sacrifices," we read:

"In the year 1842 Chillany, Professor at Nurnberg, published a book, the object of which was to prove that, as the religion of the Hebrews did not differ essentially from that of the Canaanites, so that Moloch [to whom children were sacrificed], who had been originally a god common to both, merely in the process of time was softened down and passed into Jehovah, thus becoming the national deity of the people of Israel; so did their altars smoke with human blood, from the time of Abraham down to the fall of both kingdoms of Judah and Israel."

Every well educated theologian knows that Prof. Chillany was correct in his statement; and yet modern evangelists want us to worship that tribal god of the Jews, with such a bloody and barbarous record, as the Eternal God, and class all who will not with Atheists. The facts are: The worshipers of Jehovah, alias Yahweh, are Pagans, worshipers of an idol, whether they know it or not, and the best Christian authority concedes the truth of this proposition.

VALUABLE LECTURES.

The lecture which we published last week, delivered by Mrs. Longley on "Our Spirit Homes," was especially interesting and instructive. The one delivered this week by Countess Wachtmeister, on "Psychic and Astral Development," is no less valuable. Either of these lectures is worth a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker. The lectures to follow, by Mrs. Richmond and Mr. Leadbeater, will prove equally interesting. The Progressive Thinker is furnishing a rich intellectual feast each week for its readers.

Verification of Romance.

We have right here in Chicago a repetition, in one instance at least, of the story of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," so familiar to the readers of modern romance. The daily press, always on the lookout for the sensational, says: "One Joseph Hopkins, recently shot by Dan Kipley, formerly a policeman, and at last advices probably mortally wounded in St. Luke's Hospital, filled the duplicate role of saint and sinner to the letter."

Hopkins bore the additional names of Loomis, and of Clark. His home was half a mile from Palos Park railway station, where he lived with a woman who passed as his wife. He was a regular attendant on the Sunday School, had the Bible at his tongue's end, which he was ever repeating, was a special friend of the preacher, and a generous contributor to the Union Evangelical Church. Applicants at his home for aid were never sent away empty handed. His neighbors said he was one of their best citizens, and could discuss religious matters like a preacher, always orthodox. They thought him well qualified for a successful preacher.

While thus posing as a model Christian, it seems he was plying the occupation of a Robin Hood. The police say he was "an all-around crook, an expert burglar, a fearless thief, a bold highwayman and an ex-convict."

It is not our province to peddle secular news, but in reading the long account of Mr. Hopkins' virtues and crimes, we wondered what the effect would be were modern search-lights turned on those who set themselves up as imitators of the Master, and wish the world to esteem them as faultless in character. How very few of the clergy prove on long acquaintance to be faithful to their professions! Many fall out by the way, and none are what we had hoped for, if their pecuniary resources are pinched. They imitate the common sinner when their purses are low; not that they are freebooters, but they show a love for filthy lucre, which distinguishes the miser from the man of a generous nature. The poet tells us "the hypocrite steals the livery of heaven in which to serve the Devil." It were well could we distinguish the difference between the genuine and the simulated article.

Unworthy Exemplars.

It is the delight of churchmen to exhibit to the people a reformed gambler, libertine or criminal, just as quacks parade those they claim to have rescued from the grave by the use of their nostrums. The preachers have now on exhibition Dick Lane, who they represent was for forty-one years a notorious safe-blower and an all-round criminal. And another, C. H. Palmer, whom they set forth as a reformed gambler. These men are telling of the merits of Jesus' blood in rescuing them from sin, and are begging those whose lives have been models of morality all their days to imitate their example and be saved.

The Chicago Journal says, Dick Lane told the story of his life the other Monday before a meeting of Presbyterian ministers:

"I was such an expert pickpocket," said Dick, with something in his voice that seemed like a touch of pride, in spite of his reformation—"that I could pick a woman's pocket without detection, while walking past her. I could open any safe on the market, and I served time in a score of prisons. One night I came into Chicago with $32,000 in my pockets, but inside of a year it was all gone and I was in the Michigan penitentiary."

Do we really need that class of teachers to tell us how to be good? Do not their lives still smell of the bottle, the brothel, and of misdirected abilities?

What Next?

In last week's issue we made brief mention of the judge of a court sentencing a boy to be flogged for getting drunk. Now comes another judge who made a mother pay a fine of $5 and costs for whipping her 20-year-old son. This is the kind of a judge who would place a fine upon a man for whipping his horse or his cow or dog. Certainly the children of our land deserve as much leniency as the horse and other animals. In fact this mode of correcting children does not correct, it only develops a combative spirit within them and makes them grow up brutal and to look upon life as something loathsome instead of the beautiful home of the spirit. It is the real love children who make the best use of all their faculties for the good of their surroundings, and not the sluggers. It is the spirit of love that makes this old world harmonious, peaceful and homelike for the human race, and not the brute who quarrels and makes war upon his fellows.

It is an easy matter for a parent to take a child with only the amount of combativeness necessary to make him surmount the obstacles that come in the road to success in life, and by beating and scolding him, mold him into a very fiend, to seek only such companions among his fellows as are ready to be led into the criminal paths of life. The same child can by kindness and education be made to see the higher side of existence and become an honor to himself, his parents and his country.

Churches of this World.

There are now three "Churches of This World," one in Kansas City, over which Dr. J. E. Roberts presides; two in New York, one of which is under the care of Hugh O. Pentecost, and the other is in charge of Henry Frank. We believe each of those teachers accepts belief in a future life, but rejects the cardinal features of the creeds, and labors to educate and elevate mortality on the earth plane, so as to qualify it for enjoying to the fullest its present heritage, confident it is the best preparation man is capable of making for the eternity that awaits him.

Education, Earthly and Heavenly.

We hope no reader of The Progressive Thinker will imbibe the wholly erroneous idea, that we are opposed to education from spirit sources. On the contrary we are heartily in favor of education from all sources, from the educators of earth and of the higher spheres. Let each supplement and add to the other. In addition to the education given in earthly schools, let us have all the wisdom we can receive from the heavenly realms. Let us not slight or neglect either. There is not much danger that we shall merit the application of the words addressed by Festus to Paul: "Thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad" (insane). This, notwithstanding the verdict in such courts as the one that decided the McIlroy will case in Philadelphia.

While we would not and do not oppose education by spirit influences, it is reasonable to inquire: What would be the result if earthly schools were neglected, and our whole education were left to the spirit world?

How long would it be ere the world would be sunk in such depths of ignorance and superstition as would rival the darkest of the Dark Ages.

There is a type of "worldly wisdom," so-called, that sneers at spiritual things—and thereby demonstrates its own unwisdom.

On the other hand there is a type of "spiritual wisdom," so-called, that equally demonstrates its own unwisdom, by flouting earthly education as of small importance, if not an actual detriment, in comparison with what "the spirits" teach.

The fact is, the objective education of earthly schools, and the subjective education from spirit educators, should go hand-in-hand, working synchronously together, to effect highest results to the mental, moral, spiritual well-being of humanity.

The highest line or quality of human development is not exclusively that of the objective physical senses and the objective realm that pertains thereto; nor does it consist in the exclusive or paramount cultivation of the subjective, intuitional side of man's nature to the neglect of the objective and physical senses. It consists in the harmonious co-ordinate or synchronous co-working of both characteristics of man's mental being.

Neither can be ignored without loss, without imperfection, without one-sidedness of development, without, in fact, abnormal result, with a deficiency in one essential element, and an unbalanced individuality, in fact something short of the highest and best type of human development.

And it may further be confidently affirmed, as well, that the highest and grandest manifestations of mental achievement ever attained by individual man have resulted in those cases where the objective senses of objectively educated mind have worked in harmonious and synchronous action with the inner, intuitional mind faculties, toward one end and result.

So, to achieve highest and best results, let spirit education and the education of schools and colleges be neither of them ignored nor neglected as of little worth, but let both be wisely cultivated, to the end of the best good of humanity.

Major Bitters' Death.

We were pained to learn that Major Bitters, of Rochester, Ind., passed to spirit life April 5, after an illness of only five days with stomach and liver trouble. He was president of the Spiritualist society at Rochester, was editor of the paper published there, was active in all reformatory work, was devoted to the cause of Spiritualism, and universally loved and respected. No better man ever lived. Harry J. Moore conducted the funeral services.

Good Moral Character Demanded.

About two years ago I attended my first spiritual meeting. It was in the Odd Fellows' Hall, St. Paul, Minn. Geo. W. Kates delivered the lecture, and at the conclusion, his wife, Zaida Brown Kates, delivered spirit messages to quite a number. I was at that time so impressed with the seeming sincerity and honesty of purpose of both Mr. and Mrs. Kates, that it aroused in me a certain train of thought which caused me to investigate everything within my reach pertaining to Spiritualism. I have since witnessed almost every known phase of spirit phenomena, much of it under such conditions as to preclude all possibility of fraud, and am now perfectly satisfied of the continuity of life.

If all the public teachers and mediums of Spiritualism lived the exemplary lives of Mr. and Mrs. Kates, the time would be short when the world would recognize the fact of Spiritualism, and that those loved ones whom we had feared were lost to us forever are still living. But my experience is that a great many teachers, and especially spirit mediums who are armed with a license to represent Spiritualism, are morally and spiritually not worthy representatives of such a pure and noble cause.

In my opinion it is not to the best interest of the cause to grant a license to any person to represent Spiritualism because of the fact that he or she may be a good psychic. Representatives of so pure a cause should be persons of at least good moral character.

Another thing, to my mind, is against the best interest of Spiritualism and that is this: If you desire to obtain any instruction or information regarding the religion of Spiritualism, either by attending a lecture or investigating the phenomena, you must pay the price of admission, and in case you haven't it you can then return home or attend the services of some Christian church where you may be instructed regarding dogmatic religion free of charge. That the teachers and instructors in the cause of Spiritualism should be remunerated, no one would question, but could they not be paid a salary? We would then have more reliable persons representing the cause, and in such case the public in general would naturally be more apt to attend spiritual meetings, for it is the public we should strive to make acquainted with the fact of Spiritualism. As it is, the majority of the audience in attendance at a spiritual lecture are those who already know something of Spiritualism, so it would seem a waste of time and energy for a lecturer to talk for an hour giving proofs of the continuity of life and immortality of the soul when the greater part of his hearers are already aware of the facts, while free lectures and meetings would tend to bring into the audience many who are strangers to its teachings.

I hope the day is not far distant when the people in every city and hamlet the world over will have the privilege of attending spiritual meetings as free as we can now attend the services of the various dogmatic churches.

A STRONG APPEAL

To the Spiritualists of the United States and Canada.

In The Progressive Thinker of March 1, I have just read the splendid article of Mrs. Mary T. Longley, secretary of the N. S. A., in relation to the Mediums' Home at Reed City. I hope no Spiritualist has failed to see this. If you have, send for the paper at once.

Right here let me say, I wish every Spiritualist, idealist, and lover of humanity in the world could see the face, look into the eyes, and shake by the hand that grand man Theodore J. Mayer, of Washington, D. C. He has a head, large, well-proportioned; you see at a glance a man of large perceptive powers, great intuitions, with great business sagacity, backed by great firmness, and true courage and bravery. But the best of all is that, added to this majestic business brain is honor, truthfulness and integrity, with firmness and sagacity. Yet the great jewel in his character is his love for humanity and love for the good he can do. He has a large religious nature, with true benevolence. Those attributes have been developed and brought out by the great truths of Spiritualism, in that while he is a firm believer in phenomena, his Spiritualism has unfolded him to give his life, thought, mind and energies to the good he can do his fellow-men. His heart, mind and being is touched and fired by the needs of others, and it does not end there. It makes him consecrate his business sagacity to using what has come to him through hard work and daily toil, in blessing the world, the cause of Spiritualism and the poor and needy.

The Home and Headquarters of Spiritualism, that the N. S. A. in Washington, D. C., worth $15,000, as you all know, was his gift. It is through him and others that this Mediums' Home was located at Reed City, Mich. Now he comes forward again and pledges $750, and the grand soul whose name is concealed, yet who, I feel, is another grand man like this man Mayer, pledges $750 more. Now Spiritualists, are you going to let this matter drop, drag and delay, or are you going to rally with one accord and push this along, and make a home for the needy and worthy in our ranks?

I would to God and His angels, I could do more than I am doing, yet I have put all I have into this enterprise for humanity in the way of my sanitarium, and all that I have and can earn, and shall do on while I live. I have offered to board the inmates of the Home at actual cost, and care for those sick at less than cost. I have pledged $100 toward the endowment fund. I have given land worth $800, so that plenty of room might exist for caring for all.

Now I am going on still farther—that is this: I will give $100 towards the endowment fund each year while I live, and my health remains good, commencing when the Home is ready for occupancy. If every man and woman in the country that is worth what I am, would give $100, and those worth ten times as much, $1,000, there would not be a medium, speaker, or aged Spiritualist in the world need suffer for the want of a home and care.

I will go still farther: In every place that I lecture, at camp-meetings or mass-meetings, I will do all I can to raise funds for this cause. I wish to say that several months ago, before this home was located, J. R. Francis, of Chicago, editor of The Progressive Thinker, made me a present of $50 to aid in caring for Dr. Slade, and any one else that was needy. There is left of that fifty dollars, $20.29, which I can turn over to the endowment fund, and will so use when I have any persons to board.

I hope and trust every Spiritualist paper in this country will send a pledge for $50 or more, and thus keep pace with the grand, true humanitarian work that J. R. Francis has so gloriously begun. Send in your pledges, or remittances, or money to Mrs. M. T. Longley. Let us share her faith or religious devotion to our cause, and our love for our loved ones by helping these and the Home.

A FEW POINTERS

To Investigators of Materialization.

That many seances for materialization are fraudulent, is a fact which cannot be too frequently presented to the minds of the investigators of this very important phase of mediumship. As a rule, those who have become absolutely convinced of the truth of spirit return by and through other phases, make very "easy marks" for unscrupulous and dishonest materializing(?) mediums who have very little difficulty in practicing their damnable impositions upon them. Those who have had no experience whatever with any other phase, and who for the first time witness a materializing seance of plainly questionable character, are so supremely disgusted with its apparent and real fraud that they at once take it for granted that the whole subject is a farce and never again can be induced to give it any attention.

Investigators of this phase have some rights that even its mediums are in duty bound to respect. In the first place, they have the right to honest, upright, conscientious mediums who would naturally spurn the practice of deception, and who come well recommended. They should be invariably requested to give references of prominent Spiritualists, so that a telegram can be answered before the investigator takes his seat in the circle, the appointment for which is usually made a few days in advance.

In the second place, investigators have a right to know before engaging to sit in a circle, if any of the forms, if they appear, will materialize or dematerialize outside of the cabinet in a sufficiently satisfactory light to witness such materialization or dematerialization, whether able to recognize the form or not. Such phenomena alone constitute overwhelming proof of the genuineness of the seance, at least in part.

In the third place, investigators have a right to know in advance whether both sexes and various sizes and ages are represented by the forms.

In the fourth place, investigators have a right to know in advance whether the forms will appear while the medium sits for a time with the circle, and while there is no possibility of any accomplice taking his or her place in the cabinet.

In the fifth place, when forms appear for the investigator, it is for those forms to reveal their names and identity and not wait to say "yes" or "no" to the question of the investigator as to whether it is Mary, Sam, Bill or Jim. If those forms can talk at all, they can say plainly who they are without waiting for the key from leading questions from the anxious investigator, and can converse upon matters wholly unknown to any other person in the circle. How often is it the case that the enthusiastic investigator himself unintentionally reveals that which he seeks to be revealed by the forms who present themselves for his identification.

I know that there is such a thing as genuine materialization, however rarely it is witnessed. I have witnessed the beginning and end of materialization in a very good light, several feet in front of the cabinet. Aye, one form built up eight, ten or twelve feet away from the cabinet, back of the circle, and when fully developed, a sitter arose, pulled his chair to one side, when the form passed into and across the circle to her husband, and after a short conversation with him dematerialized in the full view of all present, at his side. This is what I call materialization. Would to God we could see more of it.

Golden Wedding Testimonial.

Dr. T. A. Bland and Dr. M. Cora Bland were married on the 18th of April, 1852, and on the 18th of April, 1902, they will celebrate their golden wedding. Their friends in Chicago, where they now live, have resolved to present them a testimonial in the form of a purse of gold, on that occasion. The committee having the matter in charge is composed of three eminent physicians of that city, representing three schools, but all members of the American Medical Union, of which Dr. T. A. Bland is secretary. These are Dr. S. J. Avery, one of the most popular Allopathic physicians of Chicago; Dr. A. C. Cowperthwaite, president of the Chicago Homeopathic College, and Dr. Mary R. Carey, a prominent Osteopathic physician.

This committee has issued the following letter:

"Chicago, March 29, 1902.

"Drs. T. A. and M. Cora Bland will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage on the 18th of April, 1902. As is well known, they have spent that fifty years in the service of humanity, and have always been in the van of every great movement for the betterment of the world, regardless of cost to themselves. Some of their friends in Chicago, who know something of their heroic devotion to humanitarian work, deem it proper and fitting that a testimonial benefit fund be raised and presented to them on the occasion of this golden anniversary, as an expression of appreciation of their eminent services.

"You are cordially invited to join in this testimonial by such contribution as you may be pleased to make.

"Address Dr. Mary R. Carey, secretary, 837 Adams street, Chicago, Ill."

The Drs. Bland have many friends among our readers who will, doubtless, be glad to join in this testimonial, which they can do by inclosing their contributions to Dr. Mary R. Carey.

Religion of Man and Ethics of Science.

RELIGION OF MAN AND ETHICS OF SCIENCE BY HUDSON TUTTLE

We take extreme pleasure in announcing that our next Premium Book will be by Hudson Tuttle, and will bear the above title. It is one of the best books that ever emanated from the pen of this gifted man and will fill a most important niche in the list of premiums sent out by this office. It will be neatly and substantially bound in cloth, and will be sent out for 25 cents, postage and express prepaid, to those who send in their subscription for one year for The Progressive Thinker, making it almost a gift to our subscribers. Orders will now be filed for it, and it will be forwarded as soon as printed and bound, which will be in about three weeks. Until June 1, that remarkable book, A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands, will also be sent out for 25 cents. For prices of the other Premium Books, see special announcement. No other bookseller, no other firm on this globe of ours ever furnished books at so low a price (almost a gift) as The Progressive Thinker. We have been instrumental in founding the nucleus of a grand Spiritualistic and Occult library in thousands of homes. Now is the time to send in your subscription.

A Friendly Letter From England.

To the Editor:—Allow me to express my thanks for the (eight Divine Plan) books; also the paper, which I received safely on the 9th inst.; also for your promptitude in sending them. The perusal of Vol. I. has already enlightened me greatly and it does indeed contain most beautiful and interesting information, which I hope will prove vastly to my future benefit. Again thanking you and wishing you every success, I remain yours sincerely,

P. H. RONEY.

THE DIVINEST PLAN

By the aid of the divinest divine plan that ever entered the mind, we are in possession of the other six premium volumes. This is a remarkable offer, and I believe, could only have originated in the heart of a Spiritualist.

John L. Kingsbury,
Willow, O.

MUST HAVE IT.

To the Editor:—I forget just when my time for The Progressive Thinker runs out, don't matter much, but I am getting old. Should you learn of my passing over on the other side kindly address the balance of the Thinkers in care of St. Peter at the Gate, for I can't do without it even over there.

Psychic and Astral Development.

A Lecture by the Countess Wachtmeister.

The Theosophical Society was formed in 1875 by Helene Petrovna Blavatsky and Henry Steele Olcott. This society places before the world three objects, the first being to form the nucleus of a universal brotherhood without distinction of race, caste, sex, creed or color. The second, to study comparative religion, philosophy and science. The third is to investigate the unexplained laws of nature and the powers that lie latent in man. We will take these three objects and look at them.

The first is the only one which is binding. The other two objects are taken up by individual members according to their own pleasure. Since all time the great wisdom, divine wisdom, has been in the hands of highly evolved men, and they have held these teachings in their custody, and as the law of evolution has unfolded and the centuries have succeeded one another, when they have seen that fresh fragments of this divine wisdom could be imparted to the world, they have sent some great teacher to give out these truths. The teacher has brought them forth, has died and passed on, and then the followers have crystallized the teachings into a religion. And so you will find all over the world a great number of religions. But in the 19th century it was decided to form a theosophical society, a society which persons might join from all these different creeds, where men and women might gather together in one vast brotherhood. So far we have accomplished our work, because in every religion and every nationality you will find our members. But this brotherhood is a very imperfect one, and necessarily so, because as long as the lower nature in man is still rampant, as long as there are these different discordant notes of vibration between men and women you will find disharmony, and it will only be as man overcomes the material, as man dominates his lower nature, that gradually he will turn toward the spiritual, and then a real communion of souls will be formed, a real communion of thought, knowledge and love.

The second object is the study of comparative religion, philosophy and science. This is chiefly undertaken by the highly intellectual in our society, and I have known men who have gained the highest degrees in universities during the last ten to twenty years, have found this study exceedingly interesting. In fact they have pursued it with ardor, because they find in theosophy a cause of the different mysteries which enfold both religion and philosophy.

The third object of our society is chiefly interesting to those who have had a little glimpse of the unseen world. Those who have had such a glimpse know and understand that it is possible to develop these latent powers in man. Here in America you will find a vast number of persons who are interested, persons who have had a slight vision, perhaps in some particular moment of excitement, or a dream, or in different and various ways. Therefore one finds a keen interest in America in these occult subjects.

There is a great dissimilarity between Americans and persons belonging to European nations. In America you will find that the women particularly have a very nervous organization. There is an enormous difference between the women here and in Europe. Let us take, say, the factory girl in London; such a girl does her work just as she is ordered, a stolid sort of girl who does what she is told to do, but there is no intellectuality in her work. The moment it is finished she goes out to some resort pleasure and is perfectly happy. Now in America you will find quite a distinct class of girl, one who will do her work, perhaps the same work, intelligently, will put a kind of enthusiasm into it, and when it is finished she will go home, anxious to read and to know everything that goes on around her.

Suppose you take an English girl who is at the washtub during a whole hour. At the end of that time you find her arms red, her skin coarse almost as the skin of a goose. Then look at the difference here in America. You will find a woman or girl at the washtub the same time, and when her arms come out of the soapsuds they will be white, and of quite a different texture; the hands will be soft, and as you look you will be able even to trace the blue veins with the blood flowing under the epidermis.

So you see the American woman is far more highly and nervously organized than the woman in Europe. In America only do we find this, and it is attributable to the amalgamation of the races that is taking place. Many different races have come over to America; and are intermingling and the children are growing up with these highly nervous organizations.

I wonder if it has occurred to you why this is. It is because America will be the birthplace of the next race, and you are now gradually forming into a new race. You have all these occult faculties within you just on the verge of being awakened, and when you reach to that sixth race you will find that you are able to awaken and use them. Even now there is a large number seeking and desiring this development. Many come to me as I travel over this country. This is the third time and I have had a very extended opportunity of meeting a vast number of persons, and it has been perfectly extraordinary to me, to find so many here who have these psychic gifts just on the verge of being developed.

We all know that man has five physical senses. Man has also five psychic senses; but as the energy is always rushing outwards to objects through the physical senses, these five psychic senses remain latent within man and do not become developed. Sometimes when a person is very ill, when the vitality is exceedingly low, when the physical is almost in a dormant state, then suddenly these psychic senses come to the fore, and to the great astonishment of the person he begins both to see and hear. Gradually as health returns all these psychic faculties become latent and dormant once more. Whenever there is a great rush outwards into the world of physical objects, these psychic senses become repressed, but we all have them and can, if we so choose, train them in the right way and bring them into full activity.

Let me explain what these psychic senses are: Say that in your imagination you are able to create a peach before you. You ought to be able to see that peach perfectly; to taste that peach with your inner sense of taste; to feel its particular touch; and also to smell it. You should have the power to thus manipulate your psychic senses, the peach being simply your own imagination and thought. You know that every thought you think takes shape, and as long as you put energy into the thought it remains in that shape; therefore a person can so develop himself as to enable him with his thought to create that peach, to see it, smell it, taste it and touch it.

So also you may create within your mind a basket of flowers. That basket is there on the astral plane and you can get your inner vision trained so you can see each flower and can fill the basket as you please. You should be able to smell these flowers; so vivid should they be to the astral senses that they would be quite as material to them as a basket of flowers would be to the physical senses. You should be able to touch the astral flowers and feel the full extent of their beauty, because they are far more exquisite and beautiful, as everything on the astral plane is far more exquisite and varied than here on the physical plane.

Looking around, you find that persons have their physical senses differently developed, and they can be trained. You will find one has short sight, another long sight. You will find one is very hard of hearing, another has very good hearing. A musician will be able to train his hearing to a most extraordinary point, because he will be able in an orchestra to trace at once a false note.

In the same way an artist will be able to train his eye for colors.

Now, if it is possible on the physical plane to train the eyesight and hearing to that extent, why not further? Why should it stop? Necessarily the power extends to the etheric plane. We know we are all surrounded with ether; we know that there is an electrical discharge of ether to the brain every time we think a thought. If we are surrounded by ether and permeated by ether, then necessarily we know there must be an extension of the senses. All these senses are inherent in the etheric; that when once they have been unfolded in the etheric naturally they can be extended into the astral. I have been told that the very farthest limit of physical hearing is to hear the squeak of the bat; only one who has an exceedingly fine sense of hearing can recognize it. Perhaps that sound may illustrate the last limit that you arrive at on the physical plane before you enter the etheric.

Then again with color; you will find that in Cashmere the women have the power of discerning shades of color with more keenness than you do here. That is why Cashmere shawls are so exceedingly beautiful, because they are able to blend all colors, thus giving a kind of softness which it is impossible to find in anything which is fabricated in the West.

The development of these senses is of the nature of extension. It is also a matter of responding to vibrations, because as you can respond to vibrations, so do your powers awaken. Imagine yourself in a whole sea of air, all this sea of air intermingled with ether, ether interpenetrating the physical, ether interpenetrating the air, ether interpenetrating everywhere, and that you can respond to all that; then you get an unfoldment of these faculties within you; but you cannot respond to all these vibrations now, you are deaf, and blind to them. For instance, the electrician if he has a very high voltage of electricity can throw that through your body without your feeling it: I had a very interesting experience in Calcutta. It was an Indian who showed the experiment. He had electricity at a very high voltage and he passed this current through animals and the animals felt absolutely nothing. So in the same way these very high vibrations of ether pass right through your body without your knowledge, because you are perfectly insensible to them; it is only as the potentialities within yourself gradually unfold that you are able to respond to high vibrations; then you can open out to them.

Now imagine the whole world covered with a great cobweb of vibrations, an enormous cobweb, all these intersecting and interpenetrating one with the other, from the enormously coarse to the very finest that you can conceive of; and then think of how few vibrations you are able to reach, and you will get some slight idea of what the development means; you have the potentialities within yourself of responding to everyone of these vibrations, but at present you are insensible to them. However, you are gradually developing these powers, and as you develop you will be able to respond.

The discovery of the Roentgen rays has helped us very much in this. It has shown us that the opening out of two or three of these vibrations makes quite a new world to us, and you can understand something of the expansion of consciousness when further discoveries of vibrations are made. You will then understand how you will be able to penetrate inwards, more and more, and so comprehend these finer forces of nature.

There are persons in the world who have the power of looking into the human body in the same way that the body can be looked at through the Roentgen rays. There is a boy in Massachusetts that has this power. He is able to examine the body and locate bullets or diseases of different kinds, and he is used by medical authorities there. In Europe I have met several. One in Geneva is authorized by the government to do this work. I visited her twenty years ago, and she cured me of an ailment, simply looking through my body, discovering the difficulty and giving me the remedy. It was said she never failed, and the doctors would come long distances to consult with her. I have met another in England. She is also employed by physicians to look through the body and thus locate where diseases are. Then again, this power enables you to read within a closed book; you can see into an adjoining room and know what is transpiring there, and so you see how the vision is extended when one or two more of these vibrations are opened out to you.

There are a great number of persons to-day who are trying to develop their psychic senses, and their psychic faculties. I will mention a few of these methods.

First we will take Spiritualism, because in Spiritualism you will find persons able to open out clairvoyance, clairaudiance and various other faculties. To enable them to do this they have to be passive. It is a very easy, lazy sort of development, because they must remain perfectly inactive and negative. Unknown entities on the astral plane open out their faculties of seeing and hearing, and gradually develop them. But after all what does it amount to? Not very much; because it is not reliable. You sometimes get through such a medium that which is perfectly true, but sometimes you get what is quite untrue, therefore you never know whether what a medium tells you is true or not until the statement is realized. So much has proved untrue that it makes it exceedingly puzzling to discriminate between the real and the unreal.

Why is this? First of all you must understand the conditions of the astral plane, because when you open these faculties you enter into that plane. This physical world has its laws, and forces which govern it. If a chemist were to experiment in his laboratory without understanding the laws of chemistry he would be in great danger; and if you attempt to enter on the astral plane without understanding the laws that govern there your ignorance will lead you into much trouble. There is this difficulty: on this physical plane we have three dimensions of space; on the astral we have four dimensions. The laws of astral matter are different from the laws of physical matter. How can you enter on the astral plane and get information about it unless you understand the laws which govern it? Therefore this Spiritualistic method is very faulty and unsatisfactory, because it does not include the knowledge of the laws which govern the astral plane.

We will take psychometry. It is a very interesting method. There is no harm or danger as there is when journeying on the astral, where you may meet unpleasant and dangerous entities. You would not care to associate with persons here on earth who were full of evil thought and desire, yet the moment you open the door of mediumship these undesirable acquaintances from the astral world come in. In psychometry you simply develop your inner faculties so as to enable you to psychometrize an object. You take an article in the hand or place it on the forehead, and you will see its whole history, and will be able to reach into the soul of it. The wife of Mr. Denton, an American, had a wonderful faculty of psychometry. He has written some very interesting books, one called "The Soul of Things," showing how his wife was able to penetrate into the history of an object, and many of her researches were intensely interesting. A fishbone was given to her folded in a paper. She related the whole history of the fish, where it was found, described the conditions under the sea and gave many details. If you gave her the description of some lost article she would immediately tell where it was to be found. Her faculty was a very valuable one, but it was power on the physical etheric and not on the astral plane.

The next point I will come to is the method of developing through the magnet. That was Reichenbach's method. Reichenbach was the man who discovered what is called odylic force in our theosophical literature; it is what we term aura. He maintained, as we do, that not only each human being is surrounded by this od, but every animal, every vegetable, every mineral. In fact, everything in nature has this odyllic force around it. According to Reichenbach, the way to see this aura is to take a magnet suspended by a silken thread, then to look at the magnet and after a time you will begin to see a kind of dim, very dim, sort of light that will appear at the two points or the two poles, and also around the magent. He taught many people this method, but he was very careful to say you should never look with both eyes at once, because the focus of the eyes is very rarely exactly the same. One person sees with one eye a short distance, with the other a long distance; strangely enough that would prevent seeing the aura; but if you closed one eye and looked with the other, after awhile you would begin to see a light, looking exactly like the quivering light over a furnace when there is a great fire in it. When you have the right focus you will gradually begin to perceive something of the etheric and astral aura. But there are other and finer auras which cannot be seen by Reichenbach's method.

The next point that I will take up is crystal-gazing. It is a curious way of developing clairvoyance. You look into the crystal, and by gazing into it for a certain time you paralyze the capillary nerves of the brain; when they get into that paralyzed condition the inner sense of sight begins to open, and you see all kinds of pictures in the crystal. But what is the good of it? They are very pretty to look at, but you do not know what they mean, therefore there is not much of value in this method of development. Some try to develop through looking at very bright objects, as a diamond; but that is exceedingly harmful to the eyesight, and I have known several who have nearly become blind from using that method; so whenever I find those who wish to develop through crystal-gazing, I have advised them to take ink, place it in a saucer, then look at the smooth surface. Exactly the same results follow, only without harm to the eyesight.

The next method that I will take up is a very curious faculty that Mr. Stead has spoken of in his Borderland. He tells us that he had the power of forcing people to write through his hand whatever he wished them to acquaint him with, and afterwards he would take the writing to the person, who would tell him he had not the least idea of having written it, but that the circumstance related was entirely true. Mr. Stead has done this frequently in London with a great number of people, and has had to acknowledge he could only do it with those who had very weak wills, persons whose thought was not steady, who had their thoughts always in a fluctuating state. Anyone with a steady will, a concentrated will, he could not touch or approach.

There was a man in Italy who had the same power and continually drew secrets in this fashion. I do not approve of doing this, because I think we have absolutely no right to search into the secret minds of others, any more than we have the right to go into their rooms, take a false key and unlock their drawers and examine their private possessions. The act is an unlawful one.

We will next look at the power of frenzy. It is very peculiar. The dervishes, for instance, will whirl round and round continually until they fall into a kind of trance state, and thus they get the use of some psychic power, and are able to prophesy. When the physical is in a certain way deadened the psychic comes to the fore.

Then there is ceremonial magic. That is quite a peculiar way of developing the psychic faculties. If you pronounce certain sounds or use magical rites you open a door to certain elemental forces on the astral plane, and they appear before you. If you are a person of exceedingly strong will power you can gain dominion over these elementals. But it is a very dangerous thing to do, because the day may come that you will tell them to do what is wrong and they will then turn and rend you. I have known some very disastrous cases where people have attempted to develop this faculty and who later have regretted it exceedingly. But this is not an easy method. First of all you have to train an enormous will power. Then when these elementals approach you you have to gain perfect and entire control over them.

Some people try to develop themselves through the imagination. A few are trying to get on the astral plane in that way. Now imagination is a very important factor in our lives, but its misuse is dangerous. If you go on imagining things and allowing your imagination to run riot, the chances are you will go insane, therefore it is a thing you have to be exceedingly careful about. You can make a mental image of a thing and see it in your mind's eye, as you call it, and then you run off to something else, and you see that in the mind's eye; so you will go on until you become perfectly oblivious to your physical condition; you are on a plane of imagination which you have created for yourself.

I will tell you a curious story which happened to a group who determined to develop themselves through imagination. They had gone on for several months until the whole group were able to imagine things very readily and easily. When one would make a mental image every one would see it and feel it, and so they thought they were progressing splendidly. One of the group had to take a sea voyage. The others determined they would try and greet the friend when at sea. The individual departed for the steamer. A tremendous storm arose a few hours later, and this group being assembled began to think what an awful storm it was, what a fearful storm, how terrible it was this friend should be at sea. Then their imagination ran loose. They saw the steamer, they saw how the waves were tremendously strong; they could hear the wind howling; the vessel swayed from side to side, and then they looked down into the boat and at last they found their friend in a berth most frightfully sick, as ill as he could possibly be. Then the sympathy of these persons for the friend was so great that they all began to get ill, and they had to break up the group. The next morning came a telegram from the person saying, "I know you will be delighted to hear that I never went on the boat, because the storm was raging so fearfully, and I feel sure that you will congratulate me; and now I will wait until the sea is calm." I may tell you that the group broke up and they never tried to develop their imagination in that manner any more.

Now we will take up breathing. That is a method of development which a great number of persons in this country are trying. Some books treat of methods which are not suited to the Western people. The Eastern body has been for long centuries trained for this kind of development, and so through physical heredity they have suitable bodies. You will find that East Indians can practice this breathing in a way that no Western person can do. An East Indian would never for one moment attempt this practice unless he had a master who had already gone through the path and could lead him and help him. But in the West you take to this breathing—at least many of you do—without any master whatever, and the consequence is you get in trouble. As I travel around your country I meet a great number of persons who have been very seriously injured with breathing, and the consequence is they have lung troubles and troubles of every possible kind and description; so I look at this process of breathing as being a very foolish one.

They have Hatha Yogis in India. The Hatha Yogi develops the psychic faculties through torture. A man will hold up his arm until it grows in that position. Imagine what pain and torture must be endured before that arm becomes fixed in that position. When I was in India I visited the great Mela or religious Fair in Allahabad, and saw what these Yogis can do. I passed into their quarters. About 200 of them have beds of spikes. These men lie naked on these beds of sharp spikes, laughing, talking, absolutely feeling no pain. They had overcome all sensation in the physical body. When they reach that point they have developed enormous will power; all the psychic faculties blossom out. Again, I saw a scaffold, and supposed that men were going to be hanged, and asked what their fault had been. The answer was that several Yogis were there that morning hanging with their heels upwards and their heads downwards and there they remained for four hours looking at the sun. The heat radiating from the Indian sun can hardly be realized here in the West. Imagine what control over the physical body, what enormous will power these men possessed. It is something which in America you cannot even conceive of. I saw a group of men. There was in the midst of them one who had a rope and he was pulling this rope up through his nostrils and bringing it out through his mouth, a rope as big as my finger. I asked for an explanation. The answer was he was cleaning the inner canals. When they were properly cleaned he would burst out into prophecy and be able to answer any questions the people asked him, that being a method of developing these psychic faculties.

Now I have told you of all these different processes, and you can judge for yourselves whether the results obtained are of sufficient value to pursue them. The object of developing the psychic faculties is to have knowledge of the astral plane, and to manipulate the laws of the astral plane; and not one of these various methods leads to that result. The difference between the theosophical society which instructs you in the knowledge of the laws, and the various other kinds of development which only deal with phenomena, is very apparent.

I lived for six years with Helene Petrovna Blavatsky. That remarkable woman had powers which she had developed when in Thibet, and when she formed her society she gave instructions to pupils. They, after working five, ten, fifteen or twenty years, began to develop all these faculties. H. P. Blavatsky always said this: "Never take anything that I tell you as true, but rather accept what I give you as a hypothesis and work on the lines that I will demonstrate. If you will do that day by day, month after month, and year after year, you will then be able to verify what I tell you as true." Her pupils followed her rules implicitly and to-day they have the power of going on the astral plane at will, and also the power of manipulating the forces there, because they have been properly taught. This is a satisfactory way of having psychic powers, because not only can you see all that occurs on the astral plane, but you can also be of benefit to the humanity which is to be found there.

Mr. C. W. Leadbeater, of London, is one who has this extraordinary faculty, and he has written a book called the Invisible Helpers, where he shows how persons can help others both on the physical and psychic planes when they are able to make use of these psychic faculties. He also tells you that when persons want to develop these powers they should have first of all six qualifications, and these six qualifications are absolutely necessary for you to obtain before you can gain the knowledge which you are striving for.

First of these is single-mindedness, then self-control, then calmness, then unselfishness, then knowledge, then love. I will explain them and endeavor to show you why it is necessary to have them before you try to develop your psychic faculties.

You must have single-mindedness. To safely awaken these faculties you must have no double purpose in doing it. You must not want them in order to pander to the curiosity of others, or from a desire to have a great notoriety; you must not develop these faculties because you want to make a living out of them, but you must be single-minded and unfold them because you want to help others; because you want to be of use to humanity.

Then you must have self-control, for you could not work on the astral plane with full consciousness if you gave way to temper. A very slight temper would produce most terrible havoc on that plane, setting up very destructive vibrations there, therefore you must have perfect self-control. Remeber that on the astral plane there are all kinds of entities; as varied and voluminous as on the animal plane here on the physical earth; also you will find beings other than human there, a vast legion of them, and if you come in contact with some of these entities before you have attained self-control they may frighten you most terribly.

I have read a very interesting book called Christian's Magic. Christian wrote of the various kinds of trials a neophyte in Egypt had to pass through before he was permitted to develop the psychic faculties. Development alone, he said, is impossible; you will only get into trouble if you attempt it. Each neophyte had a master. The master will show the pupil a great furnace with red-hot iron over it, and he will order him to walk over that iron. Now if the pupil has fear and does not immediately do the master's bidding he fails under that trial. The master says he has not sufficient courage to qualify him to go on the astral plane. Then again, you have to pass through water, great rapids. If you have the slightest fear, again the master will say, you have failed. Another is that you have to pass through a den of wild beasts. If you show the slightest fear you have not passed the test. Again, beautiful women surround the neophyte, singing their siren songs and wreathing their garlands of flowers around him. He has to remain calm like a marble statue. If he succumbs his weakness is proved. Those are the kinds of trials that in olden days the neophytes had to pass through before they were considered worthy to enter with knowledge on the astral plane.

The next qualification is calmness. That is absolutely necessary, because one of the chief works on the astral plane is to help the souls of the dead. When people die they always find those on the other plane ready to receive them. This work would be impossible for you if your mind is not in a state of equilibrium. You must have perfect calmness and then when these troubled souls arrive you can render the service they need. Many a soul believes when he comes over on the astral plane that there is a hell and is in mortal dread, terrible dread, because he finds no trace of a hell. He knows he is not in heaven, but he expects the pit will open every moment and that he will fall into it; therefore you can realize that many souls are troubled when they come over because of the false teaching they have received here on earth; perfect calmness and gentle vibrations are necessary in you if you are to help them.

The next qualification you must have is knowledge. You must study to obtain a knowledge of the conditions of the astral plane. Work there is far more effective if you have studied the teachings of those who know. It is far easier to one who understands what he will find than to one who arrives there in ignorance.

The next qualification is unselfishness. You will make no progress if you enter that plane with the slightest degree of self-aggrandizement in your heart. Your desire must be to help and give yourself to others.

The last qualification is love. That intense love which will make you forget yourself, which will make you want to help others, that intense love which will make you long to make yourself an instrument so that God's divine power may come through you; that love which will make you ready to sacrifice yourself in every way that you may help those around you; that perfect devotion which will enable you to go up the steps of the path of holiness. Blessed are those who really enter into the path now, because they will develop, and as they progress will be able to help on their weaker brethren. But those who are lazy, who turn aside, who laugh and ridicule—and there are many of them—they will have to go on being born and reborn until at last the law of evolution will sweep them with resistless force into the great stream together with all other laggards. They will have to suffer much, because they have been laggards.

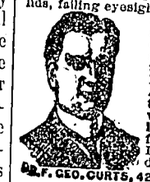
I have given you some slight idea of what qualifications are necessary when you enter the path. When you have obtained these you are ready to become a candidate for entrance into the school. Then you can be trained. You will have one more advanced than yourself who will teach you here on the physical plane. You will find a teacher when you are ready to enter on the astral plane; as your faculties unfold a teacher will instruct you on the heavenly plane, and so you will find teachers on all the steps up the ladder that you may unfold your latent powers on all planes and thus become one of the helpers of humanity.

The astral plane is a very wonderful one. There are not only all the human beings or deceased persons who have passed on, but there are also innumerable entities which belong to that plane. There are all the nature spirits. There are all the devas who are less evolved than human beings, and a whole kingdom of devas who are far more highly evolved than man. There are all the devas of the earth, the air, fire, water, and all the classes that are under them; when you reach that plane you will come into quite a different kingdom than what you have known here on earth. How foolish then to imagine that you can enter that plane without having a teacher who has passed through it and knows the perils, one who understands the dangers and who can help you, one who can guide you. And when you are fortunate enough to have obtained such a teacher all the vibrations that I have told you of open out, and as they open all these wonderful things become known to you.

Now certain other things are requisite. You have to develop aspiration, concentration, and meditation, and you have to gain control over your thoughts, because without such control you can never govern yourself.

Madame Blavatsky has told us of a method of concentration which she called mental gymnastics. There is nothing occult about it, but it is helpful. Keep a little pebble in your pocket and when you have a moment take it in your hand and fix your mind upon it. Your mind will run off; bring it back to the pebble; you will find it running away again like wild horses prancing on all sides; each time bring it back to the pebble. Persevere in this about two minutes at a time, then five minutes perhaps, and then a quarter of an hour, until at last you are able to concentrate your mind on the pebble at will. That is what is called making the mind one-pointed. Until you can fix your mind on the one point you can never gain concentration.

Another thing which she taught will be of help to you when you are frightened with things in the unseen world. You can protect yourselves against them. You can with your mind build up around you what is called a shell. You can manipulate the ether with your thought and build around you a shell which no evil thought can penetrate. You cannot see this shell with the physical eye, but it exists in reality, so that no psychic influence, no astral influence can ever penetrate into that shell if your will power is sufficiently strong to enable you to build that wall. And when you have created it, Mme. Blavatsky said, "Be sure that you fasten it up at the ends so you do not leave a hole where something can creep in."



Should one of those deceased entities come to you who is unpleasant and disagreeable, make a five-pointed star in your mind before you and throw it against the entity and then he cannot approach you. This can also be applied to the astrals of living persons who try to obsess you. A great number of the children born to-day are sensitives and I rejoice to be able to give you these little preventives so that you can teach your children how to protect themselves.

Let me finish with these words: If you really want to develop these astral faculties, do not go the wrong way about it. Gradually learn the laws of the astral plane. When you are a pupil of a true master you will be protected so there will be no danger to you. Build the six qualifications which I have placed before you into your character. As time goes on you will find that persons will become more and more psychic in your country. As the Americans gradually become this sixth sub-race you will find that the psychic faculties will blossom out more and more, and you should know how you can develop them in the right direction. You have the potentialities within you to enable you to respond to every vibration, and as they unfold your inner vision will become wider and wider, and your mental faculties also will expand, and you will find that all vibrations proceed from the One, and you will try and become in harmony with that One. And when your vibrations are in harmony with that One, you will reach the "Divine vibration." We have the potentiality of this within us. Boundless as Deity is, every man has the possibilities of the Divine within him.

Weak Eyes

All Imperfections of the Eye, Even Blindness, Cured at Home without Use of Knife or Painful Methods.

No oculist living today has had so extensive a practice in the curing of cataracts, granulated lids, failing eyesight, cross eyes and all imperfections of the eye as the eminent specialist, Dr. F. Geo. Curts, of Kansas City, Mo. His cures are perfected at your own home through his Mild Medicine Method, without knife or Pain. Any reader afflicted with eye trouble, or have a friend afflicted, write today and receive absolutely free, Dr. Curts' wonderful book "Treatise On The Eye." It tells you how his many wonderful cures are made. Address

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five percent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advise free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. Address New York & London Electric Association, Dep. Psychic and Astral Development.

A Lecture by the Countess Wachtmeister.

The Theosophical Society was formed in 1875 by Helene Petrovna Blavatsky and Henry Steele Olcott. This society places before the world three objects, the first being to form the nucleus of a universal brotherhood without distinction of race, caste, sex, creed or color. The second, to study comparative religion, philosophy and science. The third is to investigate the unexplained laws of nature and the powers that lie latent in man. We will take these three objects and look at them.

The first is the only one which is binding. The other two objects are taken up by individual members according to their own pleasure. Since all time the great wisdom, divine wisdom, has been in the hands of highly evolved men, and they have held these teachings in their custody, and as the law of evolution has unfolded and the centuries have succeeded one another, when they have seen that fresh fragments of this divine wisdom could be imparted to the world, they have sent some great teacher to give out these truths. The teacher has brought them forth, has died and passed on, and then the followers have crystallized the teachings into a religion. And so you will find all over the world a great number of religions. But in the 19th century it was decided to form a theosophical society, a society which persons might join from all these different creeds, where men and women might gather together in one vast brotherhood. So far we have accomplished our work, because in every religion and every nationality you will find our members. But this brotherhood is a very imperfect one, and necessarily so, because as long as the lower nature in man is still rampant, as long as there are these different discordant notes of vibration between men and women you will find disharmony, and it will only be as man overcomes the material, as man dominates his lower nature, that gradually he will turn toward the spiritual, and then a real communion of souls will be formed, a real communion of thought, knowledge and love.

The second object is the study of comparative religion, philosophy and science. This is chiefly undertaken by the highly intellectual in our society, and I have known men who have gained the highest degrees in universities during the last ten to twenty years, have found this study exceedingly interesting. In fact they have pursued it with ardor, because they find in theosophy a cause of the different mysteries which enfold both religion and philosophy.

The third object of our society is chiefly interesting to those who have had a little glimpse of the unseen world. Those who have had such a glimpse know and understand that it is possible to develop these latent powers in man. Here in America you will find a vast number of persons who are interested, persons who have had a slight vision, perhaps in some particular moment of excitement, or a dream, or in different and various ways. Therefore one finds a keen interest in America in these occult subjects.

There is a great dissimilarity between Americans and persons belonging to European nations. In America you will find that the women particularly have a very nervous organization. There is an enormous difference between the women here and in Europe. Let us take, say, the factory girl in London; such a girl does her work just as she is ordered, a stolid sort of girl who does what she is told to do, but there is no intellectuality in her work. The moment it is finished she goes out to some resort pleasure and is perfectly happy. Now in America you will find quite a distinct class of girl, one who will do her work, perhaps the same work, intelligently, will put a kind of enthusiasm into it, and when it is finished she will go home, anxious to read and to know everything that goes on around her.

Suppose you take an English girl who is at the washtub during a whole hour. At the end of that time you find her arms red, her skin coarse almost as the skin of a goose. Then look at the difference here in America. You will find a woman or girl at the washtub the same time, and when her arms come out of the soapsuds they will be white, and of quite a different texture; the hands will be soft, and as you look you will be able even to trace the blue veins with the blood flowing under the epidermis.

So you see the American woman is far more highly and nervously organized than the woman in Europe. In America only do we find this, and it is attributable to the amalgamation of the races that is taking place. Many different races have come over to America; and are intermingling and the children are growing up with these highly nervous organizations.

I wonder if it has occurred to you why this is. It is because America will be the birthplace of the next race, and you are now gradually forming into a new race. You have all these occult faculties within you just on the verge of being awakened, and when you reach to that sixth race you will find that you are able to awaken and use them. Even now there is a large number seeking and desiring this development. Many come to me as I travel over this country. This is the third time and I have had a very extended opportunity of meeting a vast number of persons, and it has been perfectly extraordinary to me, to find so many here who have these psychic gifts just on the verge of being developed.

We all know that man has five physical senses. Man has also five psychic senses; but as the energy is always rushing outwards to objects through the physical senses, these five psychic senses remain latent within man and do not become developed. Sometimes when a person is very ill, when the vitality is exceedingly low, when the physical is almost in a dormant state, then suddenly these psychic senses come to the fore, and to the great astonishment of the person he begins both to see and hear. Gradually as health returns all these psychic faculties become latent and dormant once more. Whenever there is a great rush outwards into the world of physical objects, these psychic senses become repressed, but we all have them and can, if we so choose, train them in the right way and bring them into full activity.

Let me explain what these psychic senses are: Say that in your imagination you are able to create a peach before you. You ought to be able to see that peach perfectly; to taste that peach with your inner sense of taste; to feel its particular touch; and also to smell it. You should have the power to thus manipulate your psychic senses, the peach being simply your own imagination and thought. You know that every thought you think takes shape, and as long as you put energy into the thought it remains in that shape; therefore a person can so develop himself as to enable him with his thought to create that peach, to see it, smell it, taste it and touch it.

So also you may create within your mind a basket of flowers. That basket is there on the astral plane and you can get your inner vision trained so you can see each flower and can fill the basket as you please. You should be able to smell these flowers; so vivid should they be to the astral senses that they would be quite as material to them as a basket of flowers would be to the physical senses. You should be able to touch the astral flowers and feel the full extent of their beauty, because they are far more exquisite and beautiful, as everything on the astral plane is far more exquisite and varied than here on the physical plane.

Looking around, you find that persons have their physical senses differently developed, and they can be trained. You will find one has short sight, another long sight. You will find one is very hard of hearing, another has very good hearing. A musician will be able to train his hearing to a most extraordinary point, because he will be able in an orchestra to trace at once a false note.

In the same way an artist will be able to train his eye for colors.

Now, if it is possible on the physical plane to train the eyesight and hearing to that extent, why not further? Why should it stop? Necessarily the power extends to the etheric plane. We know we are all surrounded with ether; we know that there is an electrical discharge of ether to the brain every time we think a thought. If we are surrounded by ether and permeated by ether, then necessarily we know there must be an extension of the senses. All these senses are inherent in the etheric; that when once they have been unfolded in the etheric naturally they can be extended into the astral. I have been told that the very farthest limit of physical hearing is to hear the squeak of the bat; only one who has an exceedingly fine sense of hearing can recognize it. Perhaps that sound may illustrate the last limit that you arrive at on the physical plane before you enter the etheric.

Then again with color; you will find that in Cashmere the women have the power of discerning shades of color with more keenness than you do here. That is why Cashmere shawls are so exceedingly beautiful, because they are able to blend all colors, thus giving a kind of softness which it is impossible to find in anything which is fabricated in the West.

The development of these senses is of the nature of extension. It is also a matter of responding to vibrations, because as you can respond to vibrations, so do your powers awaken. Imagine yourself in a whole sea of air, all this sea of air intermingled with ether, ether interpenetrating the physical, ether interpenetrating the air, ether interpenetrating everywhere, and that you can respond to all that; then you get an unfoldment of these faculties within you; but you cannot respond to all these vibrations now, you are deaf, and blind to them. For instance, the electrician if he has a very high voltage of electricity can throw that through your body without your feeling it. I had a very interesting experience in Calcutta. It was an Indian who showed the experiment. He had electricity at a very high voltage and he passed this current through animals and the animals felt absolutely nothing. So in the same way these very high vibrations of ether pass right through your body without your knowledge, because you are perfectly insensible to them; it is only as the potentialities within yourself gradually unfold that you are able to respond to high vibrations; then you can open out to them.

Now imagine the whole world covered with a great cobweb of vibrations, an enormous cobweb, all these intersecting and interpenetrating one with the other, from the enormously coarse to the very finest that you can conceive of; and then think of how few vibrations you are able to reach, and you will get some slight idea of what the development means; you have the potentialities within yourself of responding to everyone of these vibrations, but at present you are insensible to them. However, you are gradually developing these powers, and as you develop you will be able to respond.

The discovery of the Roentgen rays has helped us very much in this. It has shown us that the opening out of two or three of these vibrations makes quite a new world to us, and you can understand something of the expansion of consciousness when further discoveries of vibrations are made. You will then understand how you will be able to penetrate inwards, more and more, and so comprehend these finer forces of nature.

There are persons in the world who have the power of looking into the human body in the same way that the body can be looked at through the Roentgen rays. There is a boy in Massachusetts that has this power. He is able to examine the body and locate bullets or diseases of different kinds, and he is used by medical authorities there. In Europe I have met several. One in Geneva is authorized by the government to do this work. I visited her twenty years ago, and she cured me of an ailment, simply looking through my body, discovering the difficulty and giving me the remedy. It was said she never failed, and the doctors would come long distances to consult with her. I have met another in England. She is also employed by physicians to look through the body and thus locate where diseases are. Then again, this power enables you to read within a closed book; you can see into an adjoining room and know what is transpiring there, and so you see how the vision is extended when one or two more of these vibrations are opened out to you.

There are a great number of persons to-day who are trying to develop their psychic senses, and their psychic faculties. I will mention a few of these methods.

First we will take Spiritualism, because in Spiritualism you will find persons able to open out clairvoyance, clairaudiance and various other faculties. To enable them to do this they have to be passive. It is a very easy, lazy sort of development, because they must remain perfectly inactive and negative. Unknown entities on the astral plane open out their faculties of seeing and hearing, and gradually develop them. But after all what does it amount to? Not very much; because it is not reliable. You sometimes get through such a medium that which is perfectly true, but sometimes you get what is quite untrue, therefore you never know whether what a medium tells you is true or not until the statement is realized. So much has proved untrue that it makes it exceedingly puzzling to discriminate between the real and the unreal.

Why is this? First of all you must understand the conditions of the astral plane, because when you open these faculties you enter into that plane. This physical world has its laws, and forces which govern it. If a chemist were to experiment in his laboratory without understanding the laws of chemistry he would be in great danger; and if you attempt to enter on the astral plane without understanding the laws that govern there your ignorance will lead you into much trouble. There is this difficulty: on this physical plane we have three dimensions of space; on the astral we have four dimensions. The laws of astral matter are different from the laws of physical matter. How can you enter on the astral plane and get information about it unless you understand the laws which govern it? Therefore this Spiritualistic method is very faulty and unsatisfactory, because it does not include the knowledge of the laws which govern the astral plane.

We will take psychometry. It is a very interesting method. There is no harm or danger as there is when journeying on the astral, where you may meet unpleasant and dangerous entities. You would not care to associate with persons here on earth who were full of evil thought and desire, yet the moment you open the door of mediumship these undesirable acquaintances from the astral world come in. In psychometry you simply develop your inner faculties so as to enable you to psychometrize an object. You take an article in the hand or place it on the forehead, and you will see its whole history, and will be able to reach into the soul of it. The wife of Mr. Denton, an American, had a wonderful faculty of psychometry. He has written some very interesting books, one called "The Soul of Things," showing how his wife was able to penetrate into the history of an object, and many of her researches were intensely interesting. A fishbone was given to her folded in a paper. She related the whole history of the fish, where it was found, described the conditions under the sea and gave many details. If you gave her the description of some lost article she would immediately tell where it was to be found. Her faculty was a very valuable one, but it was power on the physical etheric and not on the astral plane.

The next point I will come to is the method of developing through the magnet. That was Reichenbach's method. Reichenbach was the man who discovered what is called odylic force in our theosophical literature; it is what we term aura. He maintained, as we do, that not only each human being is surrounded by this od, but every animal, every vegetable, every mineral. In fact, everything in nature has this odylic force around it. According to Reichenbach, the way to see this aura is to take a magnet suspended by a silken thread, then to look at the magnet and after a time you will begin to see a kind of dim, very dim, sort of light that will appear at the two points or the two poles, and also around the magent. He taught many people this method, but he was very careful to say you should never look with both eyes at once, because the focus of the eyes is very rarely exactly the same. One person sees with one eye a short distance, with the other a long distance; strangely enough that would prevent seeing the aura; but if you closed one eye and looked with the other, after awhile you would begin to see a light, looking exactly like the quivering light over a furnace when there is a great fire in it. When you have the right focus you will gradually begin to perceive something of the etheric and astral aura. But there are other and finer auras which cannot be seen by Reichenbach's method.

The next point that I will take up is crystal-gazing. It is a curious way of developing clairvoyance. You look into the crystal, and by gazing into it for a certain time you paralyze the capillary nerves of the brain; when they get into that paralyzed condition the inner sense of sight begins to open, and you see all kinds of pictures in the crystal. But what is the good of it? They are very pretty to look at, but you do not know what they mean, therefore there is not much of value in this method of development. Some try to develop through looking at very bright objects, as a diamond; but that is exceedingly harmful to the eyesight, and I have known several who have nearly become blind from using that method; so whenever I find those who wish to develop through crystal-gazing, I have advised them to take ink, place it in a saucer, then look at the smooth surface. Exactly the same results follow, only without harm to the eyesight.

The next method that I will take up is a very curious faculty that Mr. Stead has spoken of in his Borderland. He tells us that he had the power of forcing people to write through his hand whatever he wished them to acquaint him with, and afterwards he would take the writing to the person, who would tell him he had not the least idea of having written it, but that the circumstance related was entirely true. Mr. Stead has done this frequently in London with a great number of people, and has had to acknowledge he could only do it with those who had very weak wills, persons whose thought was not steady, who had their thoughts always in a fluctuating state. Anyone with a steady will, a concentrated will, he could not touch or approach.

There was a man in Italy who had the same power and continually drew secrets in this fashion. I do not approve of doing this, because I think we have absolutely no right to search into the secret minds of others, any more than we have the right to go into their rooms, take a false key and unlock their drawers and examine their private possessions. The act is an unlawful one.

We will next look at the power of frenzy. It is very peculiar. The dervishes, for instance, will whirl round and round continually until they fall into a kind of trance state, and thus they get the use of some psychic power, and are able to prophesy. When the physical is in a certain way deadened the psychic comes to the fore.

Then there is ceremonial magic. That is quite a peculiar way of developing the psychic faculties. If you pronounce certain sounds or use magical rites you open a door to certain elemental forces on the astral plane, and they appear before you. If you are a person of exceedingly strong will power you can gain dominion over these elementals. But it is a very dangerous thing to do, because the day may come that you will tell them to do what is wrong and they will then turn and rend you. I have known some very disastrous cases where people have attempted to develop this faculty and who later have regretted it exceedingly. But this is not an easy method. First of all you have to train an enormous will power. Then when these elementals approach you you have to gain perfect and entire control over them.

Some people try to develop themselves through the imagination. A few are trying to get on the astral plane in that way. Now imagination is a very important factor in our lives, but its misuse is dangerous. If you go on imagining things and allowing your imagination to run riot, the chances are you will go insane, therefore it is a thing you have to be exceedingly careful about. You can make a mental image of a thing and see it in your mind's eye, as you call it, and then you run off to something else, and you see that in the mind's eye; so you will go on until you become perfectly oblivious to your physical condition; you are on a plane of imagination which you have created for yourself.

I will tell you a curious story which happened to a group who determined to develop themselves through imagination. They had gone on for several months until the whole group were able to imagine things very readily and easily. When one would make a mental image every one would see it and feel it, and so they thought they were progressing splendidly. One of the group had to take a sea voyage. The others determined they would try and greet the friend when at sea. The individual departed for the steamer. A tremendous storm arose a few hours later, and this group being assembled began to think what an awful storm it was, what a fearful storm, how terrible it was this friend should be at sea. Then their imagination ran loose. They saw the steamer, they saw how the waves were tremendously strong; they could hear the wind howling; the vessel swayed from side to side, and then they looked down into the boat and at last they found their friend in a berth most frightfully sick, as ill as he could possibly be. Then the sympathy of these persons for the friend was so great that they all began to get ill, and they had to break up the group. The next morning came a telegram from the person saying, "I know you will be delighted to hear that I never went on the boat, because the storm was raging so fearfully, and I feel sure that you will congratulate me; and now I will wait until the sea is calm." I may tell you that the group broke up and they never tried to develop their imagination in that manner any more.

Now we will take up breathing. That is a method of development which a great number of persons in this country are trying. Some books treat of methods which are not suited to the Western people. The Eastern body has been for long centuries trained for this kind of development, and so through physical heredity they have suitable bodies. You will find that East Indians can practice this breathing in a way that no Western person can do. An East Indian would never for one moment attempt this practice unless he had a master who had already gone through the path and could lead him and help him. But in the West you take to this breathing—at least many of you do—without any master whatever, and the consequence is you get in trouble. As I travel around your country I meet a great number of persons who have been very seriously injured with breathing, and the consequence is they have lung troubles and troubles of every possible kind and description; so I look at this process of breathing as being a very foolish one.

They have Hatha Yogis in India. The Hatha Yogi develops the psychic faculties through torture. A man will hold up his arm until it grows in that position. Imagine what pain and torture must be endured before that arm becomes fixed in that position. When I was in India I visited the great Mela or religious Fair in Allahabad, and saw what these Yogis can do. I passed into their quarters. About 200 of them have beds of spikes. These men lie naked on these beds of sharp spikes, laughing, talking, absolutely feeling no pain. They had overcome all sensation in the physical body. When they reach that point they have developed enormous will power; all the psychic faculties blossom out. Again, I saw a scaffold, and supposed that men were going to be hanged, and asked what their fault had been. The answer was that several Yogis were there that morning hanging with their heels upwards and their heads downwards and there they remained for four hours looking at the sun. The heat radiating from the Indian sun can hardly be realized here in the West. Imagine what control over the physical body, what enormous will power these men possessed. It is something which in America you cannot even conceive of. I saw a group of men. There was in the midst of them one who had a rope and he was pulling this rope up through his nostrils and bringing it out through his mouth, a rope as big as my finger. I asked for an explanation. The answer was he was cleaning the inner canals. When they were properly cleaned he would burst out into prophecy and be able to answer any questions the people asked him, that being a method of developing these psychic faculties.

Now I have told you of all these different processes, and you can judge for yourselves whether the results obtained are of sufficient value to pursue them. The object of developing the psychic faculties is to have knowledge of the astral plane, and to manipulate the laws of the astral plane; and not one of these various methods leads to that result. The difference between the theosophical society which instructs you in the knowledge of the laws, and the various other kinds of development which only deal with phenomena, is very apparent.

I lived for six years with Helene Petrovna Blavatsky. That remarkable woman had powers which she had developed when in Thibet, and when she formed her society she gave instructions to pupils. They, after working five, ten, fifteen or twenty years, began to develop all these faculties. H. P. Blavatsky always said this: "Never take anything that I tell you as true, but rather accept what I give you as a hypothesis and work on the lines that I will demonstrate. If you will do that day by day, month after month, and year after year, you will then be able to verify what I tell you as true." Her pupils followed her rules implicitly and to-day they have the power of going on the astral plane at will, and also the power of manipulating the forces there, because they have been properly taught. This is a satisfactory way of having psychic powers, because not only can you see all that occurs on the astral plane, but you can also be of benefit to the humanity which is to be found there.

Mr. C. W. Leadbeater, of London, is one who has this extraordinary faculty, and he has written a book called the Invisible Helpers, where he shows how persons can help others both on the physical and psychic planes when they are able to make use of these psychic faculties. He also tells you that when persons want to develop these powers they should have first of all six qualifications, and these six qualifications are absolutely necessary for you to obtain before you can gain the knowledge which you are striving for.

First of these is single-mindedness, then self-control, then calmness, then unselfishness, then knowledge, then love. I will explain them and endeavor to show you why it is necessary to have them before you try to develop your psychic faculties.

You must have single-mindedness. To safely awaken these faculties you must have no double purpose in doing it. You must not want them in order to pander to the curiosity of others, or from a desire to have a great notoriety; you must not develop these faculties because you want to make a living out of them, but you must be single-minded and unfold them because you want to help others; because you want to be of use to humanity.

Then you must have self-control, for you could not work on the astral plane with full consciousness if you gave way to temper. A very slight temper would produce most terrible havoc on that plane, setting up very destructive vibrations there, therefore you must have perfect self-control. Remeber that on the astral plane there are all kinds of entities; as varied and voluminous as on the animal plane here on the physical earth; also you will find beings other than human there, a vast legion of them, and if you come in contact with some of these entities before you have attained self-control they may frighten you most terribly.

I have read a very interesting book called Christian's Magic. Christian wrote of the various kinds of trials a neophyte in Egypt had to pass through before he was permitted to develop the psychic faculties. Development alone, he said, is impossible; you will only get into trouble if you attempt it. Each neophyte had a master. The master will show the pupil a great furnace with red-hot iron over it, and he will order him to walk over that iron. Now if the pupil has fear and does not immediately do the master's bidding he fails under that trial. The master says he has not sufficient courage to qualify him to go on the astral plane. Then again, you have to pass through water, great rapids. If you have the slightest fear, again the master will say, you have failed. Another is that you have to pass through a den of wild beasts. If you show the slightest fear you have not passed the test. Again, beautiful women surround the neophyte, singing their siren songs and wreathing their garlands of flowers around him. He has to remain calm like a marble statue. If he succumbs his weakness is proved. Those are the kinds of trials that in olden days the neophytes had to pass through before they were considered worthy to enter with knowledge on the astral plane.

The next qualification is calmness. That is absolutely necessary, because one of the chief works on the astral plane is to help the souls of the dead. When people die they always find those on the other plane ready to receive them. This work would be impossible for you if your mind is not in a state of equilibrium. You must have perfect calmness and then when these troubled souls arrive you can render the service they need. Many a soul believes when he comes over on the astral plane that there is a hell and is in mortal dread, terrible dread, because he finds no trace of a hell. He knows he is not in heaven, but he expects the pit will open every moment and that he will fall into it; therefore you can realize that many souls are troubled when they come over because of the false teaching they have received here on earth; perfect calmness and gentle vibrations are necessary in you if you are to help them.

The next qualification you must have is knowledge. You must study to obtain a knowledge of the conditions of the astral plane. Work there is far more effective if you have studied the teachings of those who know. It is far easier to one who understands what he will find than to one who arrives there in ignorance.

The next qualification is unselfishness. You will make no progress if you enter that plane with the slightest degree of self-aggrandizement in your heart. Your desire must be to help and give yourself to others.

The last qualification is love. That intense love which will make you forget yourself, which will make you want to help others, that intense love which will make you long to make yourself an instrument so that God's divine power may come through you; that love which will make you ready to sacrifice yourself in every way that you may help those around you; that perfect devotion which will enable you to go up the steps of the path of holiness. Blessed are those who really enter into the path now, because they will develop, and as they progress will be able to help on their weaker brethren. But those who are lazy, who turn aside, who laugh and ridicule—and there are many of them—they will have to go on being born and reborn until at last the law of evolution will sweep them with resistless force into the great stream together with all other laggards. They will have to suffer much, because they have been laggards.

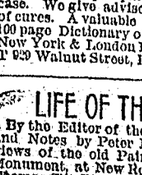
I have given you some slight idea of what qualifications are necessary when you enter the path. When you have obtained these you are ready to become a candidate for entrance into the school. Then you can be trained. You will have one more advanced than yourself who will teach you here on the physical plane. You will find a teacher when you are ready to enter on the astral plane; as your faculties unfold a teacher will instruct you on the heavenly plane, and so you will find teachers on all the steps up the ladder that you may unfold your latent powers on all planes and thus become one of the helpers of humanity.

The astral plane is a very wonderful one. There are not only all the human beings or deceased persons who have passed on, but there are also innumerable entities which belong to that plane. There are all the nature spirits. There are all the devas who are less evolved than human beings, and a whole kingdom of devas who are far more highly evolved than man. There are all the devas of the earth, the air, fire, water, and all the classes that are under them; when you reach that plane you will come into quite a different kingdom than what you have known here on earth. How foolish then to imagine that you can enter that plane without having a teacher who has passed through it and knows the perils, one who understands the dangers and who can help you, one who can guide you. And when you are fortunate enough to have obtained such a teacher all the vibrations that I have told you of open out, and as they open all these wonderful things become known to you.

Now certain other things are requisite. You have to develop aspiration, concentration, and meditation, and you have to gain control over your thoughts, because without such control you can never govern yourself.

Madame Blavatsky has told us of a method of concentration which she called mental gymnastics. There is nothing occult about it, but it is helpful. Keep a little pebble in your pocket and when you have a moment take it in your hand and fix your mind upon it. Your mind will run off; bring it back to the pebble; you will find it running away again like wild horses prancing on all sides; each time bring it back to the pebble. Persevere in this about two minutes at a time, then five minutes perhaps, and then a quarter of an hour, until at last you are able to concentrate your mind on the pebble at will. That is what is called making the mind one-pointed. Until you can fix your mind on the one point you can never gain concentration.

Another thing which she taught will be of help to you when you are frightened with things in the unseen world. You can protect yourselves against them. You can with your mind build up around you what is called a shell. You can manipulate the ether with your thought and build around you a shell which no evil thought can penetrate. You cannot see this shell with the physical eye, but it exists in reality, so that no psychic influence, no astral influence can ever penetrate into that shell if your will power is sufficiently strong to enable you to build that wall. And when you have created it, Mme. Blavatsky said, "Be sure that you fasten it up at the ends so you do not leave a hole where something can creep in."

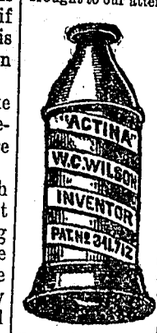


Should one of those deceased entities come to you who is unpleasant and disagreeable, make a five-pointed star in your mind before you and throw it against the entity and then he cannot approach you. This can also be applied to the astrals of living persons who try to obsess you. A great number of the children born to-day are sensitives and I rejoice to be able to give you these little preventives so that you can teach your children how to protect themselves.

Let me finish with these words: If you really want to develop these astral faculties, do not go the wrong way about it. Gradually learn the laws of the astral plane. When you are a pupil of a true master you will be protected so there will be no danger to you. Build the six qualifications which I have placed before you into your character. As time goes on you will find that persons will become more and more psychic in your country. As the Americans gradually become this sixth sub-race you will find that the psychic faculties will blossom out more and more, and you should know how you can develop them in the right direction. You have the potentialities within you to enable you to respond to every vibration, and as they unfold your inner vision will become wider and wider, and your mental faculties also will expand, and you will find that all vibrations proceed from the One, and you will try and become in harmony with that One. And when your vibrations are in harmony with that One, you will reach the "Divine vibration." We have the potentiality of this within us. Boundless as Deity is, every man has the possibilities of the Divine within him.

Weak Eyes

All Imperfections of the Eye, Even Blindness, Cured at Home without Use of Knife or Painful Methods.



No oculist living today has had so extensive a practice in the curing of cataracts, granulated lids, failing eyesight, cross eyes and all imperfections of the eye as the eminent specialist, Dr. F. Geo. Curts, of Kansas City, Mo. His cures are perfected at your own home through his Mild Medicine Method, without knife or Pain. Any reader afflicted with eye trouble, or have a friend afflicted, write today and receive absolutely free, Dr. Curts' wonderful book "Treatise On The Eye." It tells you how his many wonderful cures are made. Address DR. F. GEO. CURTS, 427 Shukert Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five percent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. Address New York & London Electric Association, Dep. ..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require. Every item sent to us for publication, should contain the full name and address of the writer. We desire to know the source of every item that appears. This rule will be strictly adhered to.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Bear in mind that all notices for this page are cut down to suit the space we have to occupy when received.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Bear in mind, please, that Isa Wilson Kayner's address is at No. 112 Winchester avenue, Chicago, where she can be addressed.

Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt has just returned from a very pleasant two months' engagement with the First Temple Society of Spiritualists of Newport, Ky., and may be addressed at his home, 498 W. Madison street, Chicago. He reports a good working society, with a neat and commodious Temple, with all the modern conveniences, and the people comprised of some of the best and most influential of that beautiful Kentucky city.

A subscriber sends us the following from an Omaha paper, considering it proof that animals sometimes control mortals: "A carload of maniacs who were brought in from the west to-day, caused some commotion at union station. The men were United States soldiers, gone insane in the service in the Philippines. As the train pulled into the station there was a confused sound, as of a menagerie approaching. The imprisoned men chattering, snarling, growling, moaning, roaring and whining like so many wild beasts. Each seemed to imagine himself some representative of the animal kingdom, and the result was terrifying and heartrending to the spectators. Depot employes and trainmen who did not know of the presence of the maniacs were given shocks when passing the car by hearing a snarl of rage, and then looked up into fiendish faces, which had their lips drawn back and teeth exposed. One unwitting man became weak and faint from pity and horror, and was compelled to lie down in the men's waiting room to recover his poise."

Lucy A. Carroll writes from Wheeling, W. Va., that the society there celebrated the 54th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism. Frank T. Ripley gave an excellent address and several tests. Mr. Ripley will remain there during April.

Mrs. Jennie Baker writes from Phoenix, N. Y.: "Mrs. Estella Clarke has returned to her home in Watertown, N. Y., after a few days of very successful work in our village. She has given some wonderful tests. The people are looking forward to her return in May."

Mrs. L. E. Zimmerman writes from Elmira, N. Y.: "On Sunday, March 16, was held the first services in our church home, of which, as a society, we are justly proud, and rejoicing in the early realization of our aspirations to own the same, which enables us to accommodate all who desire to listen to the teachings and demonstrations of the knowledge of Spiritualism and spirit return; the hall wherein we held our meetings was inadequate, many being turned away. Sunday, March 30, appropriate services were held in commemoration of the 54th anniversary of the advent of modern Spiritualism. The rostrum was prettily decorated with cut flowers and blooming plants, the picture of the home of the Fox sisters occupying a conspicuous position. Sister Tillie U. Reynolds, who has so ably given us the truths and demonstrations of spirit return the past month, closed her engagement with us to-day, with many regrets from the warm hearts who love her and wish her God speed, hoping she may return to us at some future time. The first two Sundays of April we hope to have Mrs. Mattie Hull, of Buffalo, with us, dispensing the food of spiritual knowledge. 'Oh, death, where is thy sting? Oh, grave, where is thy victory?' In the knowledge wherein the truth maketh all men free, and what seemeth death is but transition."

J. Raber writes from Elkhart, Ind.: "I have been an investigator for the last six or seven years, and I find your paper an invaluable aid to me. Spiritualism in this town is next to dead to all appearances, for during a residence here of nearly three years I have not met one avowed Spiritualist. Here is a city of 18,000 inhabitants that is strictly orthodox, with not even a Universalist or a Unitarian church in it. When I read of other societies being formed in this state, I have wished some one would get Brother Sprague to come here and do likewise."

E. W. and C. A. Sprague, missionaries for the N. S. A., wish to hear from every locality in the state of Indiana that needs missionary work in the cause of Spiritualism. They are visiting the societies of this state, and organizing new ones. Their success in this field is phenomenal. Address them at Rochester, Ind.

A. W. Keller writes: "Special anniversary services were held by the Englewood Spiritual Union at its hall on Sunday afternoon and evening, March 30. Dr. Emma Warne had charge of the meetings. She was assisted by Mrs. Kate Riley, Mrs. Geo. Lincoln, and Mrs. Lindsley, mediums. The music was furnished by Mr. V. Vogel, assisted by Mrs. J. C. Chestnut, who rendered several solos in the evening. Mr. Stillman recited a poem, and Mr. Vogel's little boy, five years of age, sang 'Happy Hooligan.' The meetings at both times were well attended, especially in the evening, when the hall was crowded. At the close of the evening Dr. Geo. B. Warne presented the charter on behalf of the Illinois State Association to the president and officers of the Englewood Spiritual Union, with an appropriate address. Mr. T. S. Russell, president of the society, responded. Spiritualism in Englewood is growing and we hope soon to have another grand meeting."

G. H. Brooks closed a very successful two months' engagement with the Unity Spiritual Society the last Sunday in March. He now goes to Newport, Ky., for the month of April. His address will be while there, No. 10 West Fourth street. He will respond to calls for funerals and would like to get out in the state and southern Ohio while in Newport, for a few week-night meetings.

The trial of Charles Pittser, at Muncie, Ind., a Philippine soldier, for the murder of his pretty young wife three months ago, has been postponed until April 8. Pittser is annoyed constantly by the image of his wife, who appears to him attired in a robe of pure white. Recently he tried to kill himself by eating broken glass. He shot his wife in a fit of jealousy just after they had "kissed and made up" after a violent quarrel.—Chicago American.

That noble worker, Dr. A. B. Spinney, will be in Chicago, May 3 and 4. He would like to speak once or twice to some society on Sunday. Address him at Reed City, Mich.

Channing Severance writes from Los Angeles, Cal.: "It seems that mistakes will occur even in a printing office, otherwise the mental production of another man would not have appeared over my signature. My views have not undergone the change necessary to endorse his article on God, and presuming he desires credit for the statements therein made, it might be well to state who was the real author of said article in No. 643." The article above referred to came to this office without any signature attached, and the foreman guessed as to the author, and guessed wrongly. He will not "guess" again.

A friend writes from Sharon, Pa.: "Enclosed find clippings from Pittsburg Times and Leader, showing destruction wrought to churches in this vicinity on Easter Sunday. A strange incident lies in the fact that but little damage is reported to other kinds of property. During the past ten years the church at Jamestown, Pa., has been in constant litigation with its former pastor, Rev. Wallace, and only recently the Supreme court decided in his favor. Now the women of the congregation who favored his side of the controversy declare the destruction of the building is a judgment sent of God, particularly so, as it caught his successor, Rev. Jamison, very severely, fracturing his jaw and skull. When Johnstown was destroyed by flood, every church in the place was ruined, while the 'ungodly' breweries went unscathed. This argues nothing further than the fact that the latter were not constructed with top-heavy steeples, etc., and also that God does not vouchsafe any special care to those who pray and shout the loudest."

S. Wheeler, vice-president of the Philadelphia Spiritualist Society, writes: "We would most cordially bear evidence to the grand work of Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood for our society during the month of March just ended. This has been the seventh consecutive year that Prof. Lockwood has had engagements with our society, and we can truthfully say that he has been a most excellent instructor in the truths of Spiritualism in his lectures (which are often illustrated). He has no use for impossible Gods or Devils; but the truths of Spiritualism are given from a natural standpoint, with logical argument and demonstrated facts. He does not fear to speak the truth as he understands it, and although he may at times appear too radical, yet his thoughts are given with a charity for the beliefs of others that should not offend the most sensitive seeker after truth. As a man we have found him honest and conscientious, and in his work for the cause constantly striving to lead mankind to think and to know that Spiritualism is a grand fact in nature, that does indeed rob Death of its sting and the grave of its victory. Spiritualist societies should keep him constantly employed. He is worthy of it."

The Chicago American has the following: "The ardent longing of a philosophical mind to solve the solemn mysteries of death is believed to have been the impulse that led Howard Miller, of Keokuk, Iowa, son of the assistant postmaster of that city, and a nephew of Rear Admiral Miller, U. S. N., to take his own life in Chicago. The body of the young man was found, half covered with snow, in Lincoln Park yesterday. In a memorandum book, found in his pocket he had copied many passages of poetry expressive of a weariness of the things of life and a longing to test the unknown realms beyond. This from the 'Rubaiyat' of Omar Khayyam, the Persian poet, was among these fragments:

"Why, if the soul can fling the dust aside,
And naked on the air of heaven ride,
Wer't not a shame for him
In this clay carcass crippled to abide?"

The hints that this little booklet gives of the hidden, secret thoughts of this boy, for he was only twenty, are believed to reveal the strange psychological processes which culminated in his suicide."

Sunday meetings and Thursday circles at 7:30 p. m. Free reading-room, open daily. Mrs. A. C. Priest, 226 North Post street, Spokane, Wash.

Mrs. Celia Hughes, trumpet medium, has moved to No. 69 Thirty-first street, 1ts flat, and holds seances on Monday evenings. Private sittings every day from 9 a. m. until 4 p. m.

Mrs. Maria Bitters writes from Rochester, Ind.: "It gives me great pleasure to tell the Spiritualists everywhere of the vast good accomplished in Rochester through the mediumship of Mr. Wilson Jessup and Mrs. Alice Gehring. Many who were in doubt as to the reality of an after life were convinced of the truth of immortality, thereby strengthening the cause of Spiritualism in our city. Our Easter service was made attractive by the profusion of flowers, songs and recitations. Altogether we have nothing to discourage us in any way. Rev. Harry Moore closes his engagement here for this season, but will again be with us in October for an indefinite time. Mr. and Mrs. Moore have endeared themselves to our people by their kindness, intelligence and proper conduct, and their coming back to us is very pleasantly anticipated."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

Jonas Goldsmith writes from Evansville, Ind.: "Mr. A. Scott Bledsoe and wife, Etta Seaman Bledsoe, missionaries for the Nebraska State Association served the Evansville Society of Spiritualists for ten days during March. Large crowds greeted them at all the meetings held. Mr. Bledsoe is a speaker of strong force and his tests prove satisfactory evidence to a large number of investigators who received them, that there is a continued life. Mrs. Bledsoe is also a splendid speaker and her test work is above the standard. Her pellet tests won her many new friends. Their work proved so satisfactory to the society that they have been tendered the positions of pastors of our church, and we all hope that they will accept the same. We have engaged for the months of April, May and June that noted worker, Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, and we expect to do some work while she remains with us. We are now making progress, and with such workers as we have had we expect to continue doing so in the future, as we feel all that is necessary is to present our cause in its proper light."

A. W. writes from Jackson, Mich.: "The 54th Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism was fitly remembered here, in addition to a beautiful address by Mrs. Amanda Coffman, of Grand Rapids, who has been with the society for the past three Sundays, as to the benefits accruing to humanity, both to Spiritualists and non-Spiritualists; to the former in the possession of knowledge, and to the latter in the modification of the teachings of the orthodox churches universally given 50 years ago as exemplified by the absurdities of the confession of faith, including original sin, total depravity, eternal punishment in a lake of fire and brimstone, etc. Mr. L. S. White, one of the four still in the body who was present ot its inception at Hydesville, gave a short address; recitation by a boy of ten, beautifully rendered, of McKinley and Czolgosz, with remarks by the president, and messages by Mrs. Coffman, which brought a most enjoyable evening to a close."

Henry Warner writes from Hotel Columbia, Denver, Colo.: "Here in this beautiful city of the mountains the writer is located at present. There are three societies here that are incorporated under the laws of the state, with the right to ordain ministers. The Progressive Society has as its pastor, Mrs. Ada Foye, that veteran worker in the cause, who is ably and creditably representing the philosophy and phenomena to large audiences. The Spiritual Society, of which Mrs. Morris Rubicam is president, has a branch known as the Spiritual Truth Society, of which Walter Mansfield is the pastor in charge. Mr. Mansfield, while young in the work and struggling against some adverse conditions is doing a good work in his chosen field, and the world will hear more of him later on. The Circle of Spiritual Light is the society to which the writer has been most closely drawn, not only on account of its rules and regulations, but the strong friendship between his teachers and those who are the teachers of the psychic at the head of this society. On last Sunday evening, the 54th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism, and the 16th of his acceptation of the work as a medium, the writer was presented with his ordination papers by this society, as a voluntary testimonial of their appreciation of his work, and he feels highly honored byt he same. The president and ored by the same. The president and first pastor of this society, is Rev. W. psychic and who stands well with the thinking people of the city. The society is doing a good work, and is using the utmost care in the selection of its members, and also of its psychics for ordination. Only three have received this at the hands of its officers and they only after a careful examination by the board. This is as it should be. The only thing to be regretted is that there does not seem to be a chance to organize these societies as auxiliaries of the N. S. A. at present, but this will come later. John Slater is here and is doing good work."

E. W. Moore writes from San Diego, Cal.: "It seems to me the decision referred to in No. 644 of your paper is the legitimate result of our lack of a more full and complete organization. Does any one believe that if we had been as thoroughly organized as the Unitarians or Universalists, that such a decision could occur? If we do not respect ourselves enough to band together for self-protection, why should we expect others to respect us? The power of the Catholic church lies in its thorough organization, and not in its unreasonable creed. For Spiritualists to oppose organization because it appears to be aping the churches is as silly as it would be to walk down a certain street because you would have to pass a church on the way. Without organization our strength is simply the strength of a mob compared to a band of drilled soldiers. Give us more organization, so that respectable people need not be ashamed to investigate our claims."

W. H. Wilbur writes: "I can hardly express to you the joy it gives me to know that we are to have another series of letters from one in spirit life, through one of best sensitives, Carlyle Petersilea. I have read Franz Petersilea's letters to his son, the third time and they are doing missionary work now among my neighbors, and are read with deep interest. I am a firm believer in spirit return, feeling satisfied that that is the only way I can know for a certainty of the immortality of the soul. Science never has and never can, without spirit aid, give us one single truth of the country beyond the grave. Our greatest educators and scientists can see no farther into the spirit realms than their uneducated brothers."

Dr. B. O'Dell writes: "The Paw Paw Valley Spiritual Association, Mich., held its annual business meeting, the 20th of March, and elected the following officers: Mrs. M. L. O'Dell, president; Mr. E. C. Towers, vice-president; Mrs. Durie Hunter, secretary; Mrs. Helen Sherman, treasurer. Mrs. Ella Towers, Mrs. E. L. Warner and Mrs. L. S. Burdick, trustees. The finances of the society are in good condition. I wish to announce through your valuable paper that there will be a camp-meeting at Bankson Lake, including the last three Sundays of June. Dr. Emma N. Warne, of Chicago, will be present and give messages the first Sunday and the following week. H. L. Chapman, of Marcellus, Mich., and Augusta Ferris, of Grand Rapids, Mich., will lecture and give messages Sunday, the 22d of June, and Mrs. Ferris will remain all of the following week and lecture and give messages. Lyman C. Howe, that veteran worker, and all who have heard him, know there is none better, will lecture Sunday, June 29, followed with messages by Augusta Ferris. Also a number of mediums are expected to be present. All are invited to come and enjoy a two weeks' outing."

Geo. Friend writes from Toledo, O.: "Mrs. Marian Carpenter closed a very successful engagement with the Independent Association of Spiritualists, March 30. The association has re-engaged her for the coming October, also for March 1903. Mrs. Carpenter is highly endorsed by this association and should be kept constantly employed. Mrs. J. A. Murtha, of Baltimore, Md., will serve this association during the month of April. She is a fine test medium and has served the association by a number of previous engagements. The rostrum will be occupied during the month of May by Mr. Fred Dunakin, of Cecil, O., who will discourse upon the spiritual philosophy and phenomena. The message work will be given by local mediums. Members of the association are circulating petitions to raise funds for building purposes, and several hundred dollars have been already subscribed. It is earnestly hoped by the writer that if the association comes in possession of sufficient funds for the erection of the proposed building, that it will steer clear of even the name of church or creed, and that its doors may be always open to the heralds of truth. No name has as yet been decided upon, but it is hoped that it will be modern. I would suggest the name of Institute of Modern Spiritualism. I would be pleased to make an appeal through the columns of your valuable paper; that being in a position to properly distribute all papers and books that may be sent to me pertaining to the spiritual philosophy and liberal thought, I would like to hear from such publishers weekly. I will see that such literature is placed where it is likely to do the greatest good."

Mrs. Kate Weaver writes: "I had the 'Wanderer in Spirit Lands' sent to a niece of mine, a minister's wife, to do good. I spent three months with my sister, L. A. Barr, at Lyons, Pa.; she has the 'Wanderer' and nearly all of the premium books. Her daughter Kate, being a fine reader, read them to us. I will never forget the good times we had over them, especially the 'Wanderer.' Sister read it once, and Kate once, so we had it twice."

Frances E. Bonney writes from Conneaut, Ohio: "The First Spiritualist Society of this place has just closed a series of meetings conducted by Rev. D. A. Herrick, of Alliance, Ohio, assisted by Dr. W. O. Knowles, of Grand Rapids, Mich., message medium. The work of these two earnest Spiritualists has been very helpful to our society and to many outside of our ranks who are investigating the phenomena of Spiritualism and studying its philosophy. The fifty-fourth anniversary was fittingly observed March 30, by an all-day meeting, full of interest and enthusiasm. In addition to the before-mentioned workers, Mrs. Nellie Mosier, of Kent, Ohio, was present and contributed to the success and helpfulness of our anniversary meetings by her impressive and comforting messages from the spirit side of life. Rev. D. A. Herrick presented to Dr. Knowles ordination papers from the Ohio Spiritualist Association, conferring upon him the right to serve in the state as minister and missionary of the gospel of Spiritualism. The singing of Mrs. Herrick was a pleasing feature, and was fully appreciated by the large audience."

The Medium, of Los Angeles, Cal., has the following, under the head of "A Grand Worker": "Will C. Hodge, inspirational speaker who came to the Pacific coast for his health and to escape the blizzards and intense cold of the east, is sojourning for a few weeks in Los Angeles and is located at 619 South Hill street. Brother Hodge is a native of New York, though living for forty years in Wisconsin and for the past twelve years having his headquarters in Chicago. He is past middle age, being born in 1836. Like many of our workers he was matured in the church and was (as he expressed it) born a Methodist. His affiliations were with that church until the age of 22 when he united with the Baptists, remaining a communicant of that church for a period of eleven years. Being of an inquiring turn of mind and somewhat disposed to do his own thinking, he became dissatisfied with the teachings of the church and began looking for a more reasonable solution of the problem concerning the origin, the duties and the destiny of mankind, which resulted in his casting to the winds his early teachings and causing him for a time to hold the opinion that there is no future life for man beyond the change called death. This was by no means a satisfactory conclusion, and, by conversation with friends who were Spiritualists and the reading of Spiritualistic literature, he became attracted to the philosophy of Spiritualism, earnestly hoping and desiring that it might be true. It was several years, however, before he received satisfactory proof, since which time, 1868, he has been an earnest Spiritualist and, for the past nineteen years has been a public advocate of the claims of Modern Spiritualism. He is on the practical side of the question, and insists that true Spiritualism takes in every reform and everything that tends to the improvement and the elevation of humanity, and, that Spiritualists should earnestly labor to make a practical application of the principles of the golden rule and establish the reign of love, justice, and human brotherhood right here on earth. He is an advocate for mediumship, but wants it straight, believing that the phenomena and philosophy must go hand in hand, and is a true friend of all honest mediums. As for the dishonest and the fakir element he says: "Could I have my way I would, if necessary, fill the penitentiaries so full of them that their feet would stick out of the windows, and would put them in the penitentiaries because I do not believe in hanging." He maintains that the time has arrived when we must demand integrity in mediumship, and decency of character in all our workers whether in the seance-room or on the platform, and, that it is up to Spiritualists to 'clean out our augean stables' and inaugurate a better state of things than he has obtained in the past, and to show by our works and our daily lives that Spiritualism is a moral and regenerating force worthy of the acceptance of every intelligent man and woman."

Geo. Adkins writes from Sisseton, S. Dakota: "Time rolls round very fast, and the number on the label of my address tells me that when you have mailed No. 638 to me, which you undoubtedly will have done ere this reaches you, that your obligations to me will have been fulfilled, so I enclose a P. O. order for $1.25 to again place you under what I feel sure will be another willing obligation, to supply me another year with your ever welcome Progressive Thinker and the premium book, which is so highly spoken of by some who have received and read it, 'A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands.' I cannot imagine how any thinker can receive and read your weekly visitor, The Progressive Thinker, and not become overwhelmingly thankful for each visitation. The punctuality of its visits bespeak much for your earnest, honest and spiritual endeavors to not only satisfy your readers, but also to supply them with an abundance of spiritual food from week to week the whole year round, and year after year. I would not be without your weekly visitor at double the price, and then when I think of your liberal offers in premiums, my earnest and best wishes always go out towards you for what you have done, and a strong hope that you may continue your grand and noble work for many years to come. These same thoughts and feelings also go out towards your noble army of contributors, for I thoroughly believe what Mrs. M. A. Congdon sets forth in her beautiful communication in No. 637, that "Thoughts are things," and thoughts mold human character," If I could feel as certain of the truth of the beautiful philosophy of existence after our departure from this life, and also of spirit return of our loved ones, as is so often portrayed in The Progressive Thinker, as I do of that axiomatic sentence, I think that I would then have attained to a spiritual altitude, for which I could not find language to express it in."

J. J. S. writes from the Pacific coast very cheeringly of the cause and its progress, the grand work of some of the mediums, giving special praise to the phenomena, mentioning Mrs. Carrie De Pue Henley as a materializing medium, also the author of many interesting and instructive books, including "A Man From Mars." He says: "When we get back to Iowa, I shall want The Progressive Thinker again. I expect to take it as one of my yearly publications, for I regard it as a very able paper."

Another rally of the German Spiritualists of Chicago will be held Sunday, April 27, at Heinen's Hall, 519 Larrabee street. Services afternoon and evening. Lectures by Editor Max Gentzke, of West Point, Neb. Tests will be given by Mrs. Miller, pastor of the society at that hall, by Mrs. M. A. Linn, and others of the best German mediums. Supper will be served between meetings and a general dance close the work of the day. Spiritualism is enrolling many adherents among this nationality in our city and they show all their racial loyalty to their convictions. Success attend their efforts. Brother Gentzke goes from here to Milwaukee to rally his countrymen there and will be assisted by Mrs. Miller and Mrs. Obrock, of the Chicago mediums.

L. de Forrest writes: "Easter Sunday was a gala day for the Church of the Soul, Handel Hall presenting a scene unusual. The floral display was both satisfying to the eye and restful to the spirit. Much of the enjoyment of the occasion was due to the devoted effort and inspiration of our brother, C. M. Wellington, to whom also we are indebted for the rare musical treat of the famous quartette known as the Apollo Club; also a solo rendered in fine style by Dr. Barnes. Madame Buorgeois, the well-known pianist, wafted our spirits to another realm with the beauty of her selections, the journey thither seeming more real by the white-robed figures of our dear pastor and her assistant, Mrs. S. J. Ashton, on the platform. Thus ended a day memorable for the Church of the Soul."

Dr. Green writes from St. Louis, Mo.: "I herewith enclose list of our State Association new officers elected in open session. It is a strong financial and earnest board, calculated to command general respect from the public, and do good work for the organization of societies and prepare for the coming World's Convention of Spiritualists. We have recently chartered the First German Society of Spiritualists of St. Louis, whose services are entirely in that language and who are very earnest; have good speakers and about thirty-five paying members. Services every Sunday."

Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley has finished a very successful engagement with the First Spiritualist Society of Pittsburg, and is now at Wheeling, W. Va., enroute to Evansville, Ind., where she is engaged by the First Spiritual Church for April. She can be engaged for week-night meetings within a reasonable distance therefrom. Address her at General Delivery Evansville, Indiana.

Mrs. Hattie Smith writes from Milwaukee, Wis.: "George H. Brooks closed his two months' engagement with the Unity Spiritual Society on March 30. His work has been very successful and his lectures highly appreciated. The society has engaged Max Hoffmann for April and May."

Geo. P. Colby writes from Seattle, Wash.: "We had a most excellent meeting here March 30; held three sessions. Over 1,200 were present at the evening meeting. The three societies united and a most glorious time was the result. I return to Victoria, B. C., for the month of April."

M. W. Packard, of this state, writes: "I want to thank you personally for your courage and persistence in fighting the battle of our cause generally, but specially for your valuable services in connection with the late Jackman cases."

Mrs. D. E. Paine writes from Potsdam, N. Y.: "The Spiritualists of this extreme northern town of New York have been very fortunate in securing the services of Rev. Nellie S. Baude, of Detroit, Mich. The lady came to us on March 22, and gave us four fine lectures. They were sufficiently interesting to call many who were not Spiritualists to come through the mud of our country roads four consecutive evenings to listen to the truth that came from the lips of this lady. She spoke from the pulpit of the Methodist church at this place and left us with many kind wishes from all who heard her."

Officers elected at meeting held in De Honey's hall, Olive street, St. Louis, Mo., for the State Association of Progressive Spiritualists: G. W. Kates, N. S. A., chairman; Hon Alonzo Thompson, Fullerton, Neb., president; Mr. I. D. Sperry, Mrs. M. A. Grether, Mr. Jesse French, Mrs. Neidringhaus, Dr. O. D. Whittier, and Mrs. A. P. Thompson, vice-presidents; Mrs. E. J. Culver, treasurer; Dr. E. H. Green, secretary; Mrs. Capt. Fox, recording secretary; S. A. Hazeltine, legal adviser, Springfield, Mo.; Mrs. James Young, Mrs. Lumsden, Col. H. D. Mackay, president Southern & Siloam R. R., Pomona, Mo., Mrs C. Goettler and Dr. Herman W. Faber, trustees.

Correspondent writes from Washington, D. C.: "The Washington Spiritualists celebrated one of the prettiest ceremonies of the Eastertide, at the First Spiritualists Society, at the Masonic Temple, after the regular morning service, when Rev. Moses Hull, pastor of the congregation, christened three-year-old Mageline Miller Collins, the adopted daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Collins, at the conclusion of the morning service. Mr. Hull made a brief statement of the fact that the little girl was to be christened, and then led her up to the stage, accompanied by her parents and her god-mother, Mrs. E. A. White. Mr. Hull took her in his arms and placed her on a table in the centre of the stage. Mrs. Jennie Leys Edson and her husband, Mr. William Edson, leaders of the Spiritualist sect in the District, were on the stage at the time to assist in the ceremony. Mr. Hull while performing the ceremony, acted as godfather to the child. When everything was in readiness for the ceremony, the minister placed his hand on the child's head and pronounced an invocation. At its conclusion he took a wreath of white roses from a table near by, to which was attached a long white veil. The child was dressed in white, the veil enveloping her entire figure. As he placed the flowers on the child's head, Mr. Hull formally gave her the name she is to bear, Mageline Miller Collins, and at the same time pronouncing her a child of the Spiritualist faith, giving her a name from the spirit world, which means 'Dewdrop.'"

One hour after jokingly telling an undertaker that he would be dead before night, John Dimler, one of the prominent furniture dealers of La Crosse, Wis., dropped dead of heart disease today at his home. He had been in the best of health and was 65 years of age. Dimler had been in business in this city for thirty years.

Grand Rapids, Mich.

The fifty-fourth anniversary of Modern Spiritualism has come and gone, and we hope that the lessons taught and learned in the past will be guideposts to lead us up higher and teach us better ideas of right and justice and that our influence may be felt in the cause of love and humanity.

Our society had very unfavorable weather on Sunday, preventing many from joining in the meetings. There were three services held during the day, and the meetings were conducted by Mrs. Emma Blake and Dr. Batdorf, and the services were very interesting to all who braved the storm. We are glad that our anniversaries are never forgotten, for we receive lessons that are valuable,, which we fondly cherish.

Dr. Le Mar is still conducting independent meetings successfully, the hall being crowded to overflowing, and many turned away. He has secured Good Templars' Hall, which is much larger, and present indications are that a still larger one will be necessary soon.

But while we are rejoicing in a general way, there was sadness in the home of our esteemed brother, George Ferry, whose loving daughter, Nellie, passed away suddenly on Friday morning, March 28, and her body was laid away on Sunday. Ten months ago she was married to Mr. Edward Finney, son of Mr. A. A. Finney, a trumpet medium of this city. Our brothers have the sympathy of a host of friends in Grand Rapids and elsewhere, but they have the consolation of knowing that she is not dead, as she demonstrated the continuity of life by her presence at her father's home, to her father and husband, and at the home of Mrs. Blake to her dear friend, Mrs. Kinney, before her body was laid away, asking all not to mourn for her, as she was happy, and earnestly invoked all to feel as she did. She was a noble little woman, loved and admired for her virtues and a kind and generous disposition. Yet we feel that it is too bad that she was taken away from her young husband, one who worshiped her, as she had made his home a paradise for the ten months she was permitted to live as his wife. May her noble life and generous deeds ever remain fresh in our minds and cause us to closely follow with a similar life.

Anniversary Exercises.

The Progressive Spiritual Society's Easter services proved to be an immense success, as the hall was packed Sunday afternoon and evening. After the blessing by the pastor, Mrs. Hilbert, an elaborate address was delivered by Dr. Geo. B. Warne, commencing with "Our Duties in Aid of a Mediums' Home," afterwards following with an exceptionally deep and well delivered address on Easter, which must take root and bear forth fruit.

Following Dr. Warne came Mrs. K. Abram with an Easter address of intense interest to our hearers.

Miss Ida Rice then favored with a beautiful organ solo. Next came Mr. Wm. Lynn with some excellent tests, followed by Anna Bennett, with a well rendered song, "Angels Rolled the Rock Away." Last but not least was Mrs. Schwahn with able tests. The president read an Easter poem. The benediction was then pronounced by the pastor.

At the evening service Mrs. Ella Johnson Bloom delivered a beautiful address, touching on Easter and the life beyond. Mrs. Hitt, a lady of our own society, next made an able address on an Easter subject, her text being taken from the 24th chapter of St. Luke.

Mr. Hill followed with an address, and asked our hearers to review that grand and able discourse delivered to them by Dr. Warne. Songs were sung by Anna Bennett's Blossom Club, in the afternoon and evening. The photographs of the members of the society were taken at the afternoon session by one of our members. At the close the president gave thanks to all who had taken part, and thus closed a most highly memorable day to the members of the Progressive Society.

San Diego Anniversary.

The Spiritualist societies of San Diego, Cal., united in celebrating the fifty-fourth anniversary of modern Spiritualism on Sunday, March 30, by an all-day meeting at Lafayette Hall. The morning program consisted of address of welcome by Mrs. Clara Beck, president of the First Spiritualist Society. Address in response, Mrs. Jane Mullen, of National City. Mrs. Lily Thiebaud, who has been lecturing for the society, then addressing the audience, spoke of the Easter celebration of the orthodox churches and the greater cause for rejoicing of Spiritualists at this time. She closed by a beautiful and impressive ceremony which consisted of presentation of the wreaths, one of yellow violets, to the band of spirits who act as guardians of the society; one of red geraniums to the guides of the mediums present; one of calla lilies to the arisen friends; explaining the symbolical meaning of each wreath. The wreaths had been previously prepared by Mrs. Beck at request of the guide of Mrs. Thiebaud. Then followed Mrs. Mary Morrill, of Chula Vista, giving an interesting address on "Our Fifty-fourth Anniversary." Mrs. W. H. King, a veteran worker, being present, spoke of the early days of Spiritualism.

At 2:30 p. m., the afternoon session was opened by an invocation by Mrs. Newcomb, followed by the Lyceum program, with conductor Chas. Buss in charge. There were recitations, songs and drill. A talk to the children by Sunflower, a little guide of Mrs. Thiebaud. Messages by Mrs. S. T. Elliott, closing with a conference meeting.

In the evening Mrs. Thiebaud lectured from the subject of "A Child Shall Lead Them." Mrs. Morrill gave a memorial address, and Mrs. S. T. Elliott gave messages. Excellent music, beautiful decorations of Calla lilies, roses and other flowers helped to make the day a complete success.

ASPHODEL BLOOMS AND Other Offerings.

BY EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storiettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 235 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The Author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.

The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."

That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."

Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest."

Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered, hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. Carlyle Petersilea: Q. What is the explanation of the story of Calve, the great opera singer, and the Hindoo?

A. The story referred to is sensational and luridly colored, describing the meeting of Calve and a Hindoo fakir, and the occasion is taken to exploit the great interest the prima donna has taken in the occult mysteries of India. It is an adroit piece of literary work, to advertise the great singer, who, if she knows its intent, ought to blush for shame for its mendacity.

The claim, constantly made for the wisdom of the Hindu fakirs, who have acquired this superior understanding, not by study or research, but by introversion of their minds, and contemplation of their umbilicus, is absurd to those who have received the culture of science. The only evidence of this wonderful wisdom is their ability to turn a neat trick of legerdemain. Well, the story goes that Calve met one of them when strolling in the mountains near Passadena, Cal. He came from India as a missionary to convert the heathen of these United States. He began on the opera singer by frightening her and her maid on the mountain path, by his rude unkemptness. He continued it by coming to her hotel with a bunch of keys she had lost, which he was supposed to have found by his occult powers.

It is a story that has had a good run, and an improvement on the "stolen diamonds" racket which has become stale. It has been published by most of the leading papers, and it would be interesting to know how many were paid for publishing it at advertising rates and how many caught it as a piece of news, and by their credulity lost the pay they might have exacted.

Wm. Foley: Q. We have a Psychic Society in our city, which explains the phenomena of Spiritualism by the subconscious mind. The wife of the president of this society attended our circle, and received a message purporting to be from her spirit sister, saying that her husband who is a resident of Canada, had married again, and had two children, one of which was dead, and gave its name. This lady wrote to Canada, and received a letter confirming every detail. The society explains this by saying it was her own subconscious mind acting on the medium. Does this explanation give the cause?

A. What is the sub-conscious mind? The subconscious self? It is a name for something that has never been proven to exist. It is a hypothesis; nay, less than that, a supposition which may or may not be true. The mature person has a vast store of impressions on the tablet of the mind, of past thoughts, ideas, impressions and occurrences, partially or seemingly wholly forgotten, which may be revived by the right stimulants, and surprise by their unexpected character. If there is any meaning to subconscious, the term covers this underlying and obscure part, which may also include hereditary inheritance. But this in its widest definition, is not a secondary self. It is a part and parcel of the mind, which is always a unity and consistent with itself. The awakened activities of past impressions or ideas, cannot exceed their original source. That is, the mind, conscious or subconscious, cannot manifest what has not come into its experience at some time, present or past. Thus an occurrence in the past affecting it at the time, may be forgotten, and at some unexpected occasion be brought back to memory; but it could not thus recur, had it not at first existed. Applying this statement, which has the clearness of an axiom, the lady in the question presented, who receives a message, giving facts entirely unknown to her or any one present, could not have been imposed upon by the echo of her "subconscious mind." If she was, then the subconscious self is immeasurably superior to the conscious.

Had a living person come from Canada to the medium and gave the message, no one would have said it was an illusion of the subconscious mind. The messenger that came in this instance was unseen, yet the message itself clearly indicates its independent source.

This "Psychical Society," has not followed the London or American societies. These parent associations, with members distinguished in the walks of science, after years of research and experimentation, grant the spiritual source of manifestations, like the one under discussion.

George B. Holmes: Q. The public exhibition of Anna Eva Fay compromises Spiritualism, as she is the medium, according to A. R. Wallace, through whom Prof. Crookes made his conclusive experiments. What is her record as a medium?

George B. Ferris: Q. Is Anna Eva Fay a genuine medium?

A. The "crucial experiments" of Prof. Crookes, which called the attention of the scientific world more than anything which had previously occurred to Spiritualism, were performed by him in 1874-5, Florence Cook, Katie Fox and D. D. Home acting as mediums. The most exacting tests were made with Miss Cook. The most astonishing results were obtained through the celebrated D. D. Home, on whose wonderful mediumship there is no stain.

Some time after he subjected Anna Eva Fay, in his own house, to experiments in which he put her in connection with an electrical apparatus that would indicate any movement on her part, and while thus situated a certain book was taken from the shelf and thrown at him without the apparatus showing any movement on her part. The electrical appliances were no more satisfactory than the tying with a cord, although it has a more scientific aspect.

Anna Eva Fay may have been a medium, she may be now, perhaps, but her public exhibitions have nothing in common with mediumship. They are like those of Kellar or Herrmann, tricks of deception. Her claim of bygone mediumship is a clever bait to inveigle Spiritualists to pay money into the box office, and she must laugh at their credulity. Were she a medium using her power in any way in her exhibition, she ought to receive the scorn of every Spiritualist. It is not wise, nor for the good of the cause to claim that she has any such power. Equipped with mechanical appliances, and making the test conditions absolutely herself for the success of her deceptions, the ordinary explanations of feats and tricks of legerdemain are amply sufficient. She is a clever performer; but in all claims she may make of mediumship, or that may be made for her, she is a fraud.

Apropos to this ready conclusion that every inexplicable thing must be spiritual in its course, a gentleman otherwise a close observer and skeptical reasoner, said to me that he had had an indisputable test of dematerialization. We were at a camp-meeting and he had received this "demonstration" at a seance with a somewhat noted medium the evening before. What was this indisputable test?" The medium had held five cards in his hand while under a control that made him unconscious. All were allowed to examine the cards and see that they were real. Then he took them in his hand, extended it upward with many waves and flourishes, and the cards disappeared, "right before their eyes." At the request of the circle, he by many wavings of his hand gathered them back out of the atmosphere! "The room was well lighted, too!" conclusively added the narrator.

I must acknowledge that I admire the "nerve" of that "noted medium," who could stand up in a "wholly unconscious state," and befool his credulous audience with the most common trick of "palming cards!" Or, shall we say, and believe, that a spirit of a Herrmann influenced the medium, to do this cheap, yet bewildering trick?

Inquirer, Ashland, Oregon: Q. What per cent of sale is usually considered a fair compensation to the author of a book, the publisher furnishing the cost of publication?

A. Ten per cent would be probably an average, but everything depends on the name of the author and the selling qualities of the book. It is very difficult for an unknown writer, or even one with a fairly established reputation to obtain a publisher who will defray all the cost. The usual method is for the author to advance the cost of the plates, at least, and the publisher to have the first two thousand free. After the sale of these the percentage commences. As comparatively few books reach a sale beyond the first thousand, the author contributes the cost of the plates for the knowledge he gains of the ways of publishers. An exceptionally well written, or timely book, may find ready publishers, who agree on a copyright increasing with the number of copies sold.

A Line from the Pacific Coast.

As I know you do not hear regularly from this great Pacific Slope, I am minded to "drop you a line."

It is wonderful how marked are the changes going on in this city of the Farther West, even within the last two years. We are just beginning to feel the impulse of the stream of supplies pouring through this port toward the Philippines, with its return traffic from the "Islands of the Sea." Those who are acquainted with the history of the Modern Past, know full well that all the European nations who have taken the trouble to become traders with the far East have waxed wealthy on the profits.

The American nation is now to take its turn, and as it is nearer the objective with the unsurpassed facilities of San Francisco's terminal and natural harbor, it follows that the foundation of opulence which has been so broadly and solidly laid in this State and city of the Pacific Coast will enable it to become "The Metropolis" of the New World, if not of the whole known world. In all my twenty-five years' residence in Chicago, I never saw so much building going on at one time as is now in progress in San Francisco. The primitive buildings of the "old settlers" are being torn down, and new and elegant structures erected on their sites. Untaught as yet by any large fire, the residence portions are built mainly of wood. But in the business district they have forgotten their old fear that Mother Earth might at any time get "wobbly" and go tottering about in an earthquake spasm. There are many business buildings seven, twelve and fifteen stories high, going up, modeled on the Chicago construction. It is as yet an unsettled question whether in a bout with a "trembler" that style of architecture would get the best of it. But at all events, every day now is our "busy day."

We have had a cool, backward season. The blooms are behind time. Only the hardier, acclimated plants have commenced the season's work.

Above all other places, is this center dominated by psychic forces and powers. We do not doubt that the per cent of believers and those interested is greater here in proportion, than in any other place in the world. There is no lack of fluent speakers and writers. The various meetings are largely attended with more potent results than anywhere else.

The Hermetic Brotherhood, which formerly had its headquarters in Chicago for many years, has no cause to regret its removal to this coast. It held its ninth annual convention on March 23, the first Sunday after the Vernal Equinox, and the first day of their New Year. The audience rooms at 509 Van Ness avenue were filled with its harmonious and interested membership, from everywhere. The proceedings were most delightful in the brotherly unity of all participating. Not even a show of contention marked any part of the session. Perhaps the most interesting were the ceremonies in remembrance of those who had passed beyond, which is made the closing number of all conventions. The Brotherhood are training to learn how to live, sure that any change after that is attained, will be of little consequence.

SPRINGFIELD, MO.

A Fine Anniversary Celebration.

On March 29 I left Topeka for Springfield, Mo., where I had been called to assist in the celebration of the 54th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism.

Arriving Sunday morning at the home of J. Madison Allen, I found them all bustle and expectation over the anticipated good time in which a large number of Spiritualists of Springfield and vicinity would participate.

After a warm welcome by this good couple, and few hours of rest, I accompanied them to the hall where the exercises were to be held. When we entered the hall a beautiful scene met our view. The crowd had begun to gather, and stood or sat about in groups, engaged in pleasant conversation, while beyond was the stage decorated in artistic design. Plants and flowers played an important part in the decorations, while in front and at the center of the stage, neatly wrought upon a dark background and bordered with smilax, in which was set the photographs of several of the arisen ones, were these words: "To our arisen loved ones."

At about 3 p. m., M. Theresa Allen, president of the South Side Spiritualist Society, opened the meeting with a short and to the point speech. Then followed the afternoon exercises which consisted of invocation, instrumental and vocal music and addresses by J. Madison Allen and myself.

At the close of this session a long table was spread, upon which was laid a sumptuous repast, prepared and served by the ladies of the society. Everybody feasted in high good humor on the good things given that afternoon for both the physical and spiritual man.

The evening's program was made up chiefly of recitations by the children, piano and violin solos, vocal solos and duets, pantomimes, tableaux, etc. The feature of the day's exercises which struck me most forcibly and pleased me greatly, was the important part taken in the same by the children and young people. Sister Allen seems to have struck the keynote of success in the upbuildment of our cause by gathering in the children and enlisting them as an actual, active element in the society.

At almost all the places I have been I have noticed a sad lack of children's faces, children's voices and sweet influences at Spiritualist gatherings. Not so here.

All the time between the two sessions beautiful children flitted to and fro, not boisterous and troublesome but smiling and happy in the knowledge that they were useful. They sat on the rostrum among the ferns and flowers, they sang and chatted until one could almost imagine that the heavenly host had descended to mingle with mortals on that glad day and that to the cherubs had been granted the power of becoming to us visible.

To our beloved co-workers, Brother and Sister Allen, is due great credit for their noble efforts for the world's betterment, and especially for their work at this place. Here they have labored against obstacles, yet with a worthy purpose and with honesty and conscientiousness they have persevered until they have succeeded in building up quite a strong society which represents and shows forth true Spiritualism. The good attendance and the deep interest manifested on this occasion by old and young attest the fact that their labors here have not been in vain.

SOUTHERN CASSADAGA.

Anniversary at Lake Helen, Fla.

Although the regular season of the Southern Cassadaga camp closed on the 16th of March, many have lingered in this charming spot, waiting for warmer weather at the North, before turning their steps thitherward.

The 54th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism was appropriately observed in the pavilion, which was profusely decorated with quantities of roses of various kinds mammoth water lilies and many other varieties of flowers, culled from nature's conservatories, and contributed and arranged by kind friends from DeLand and Lake Helen.

The day was perfect and everyone seemed to be in tune to the harmonies of nature, and in close touch with the spirit and purpose of the day.

Mr. Bond, the able presiding officer of the camp, opened the exercises by brief, but timely remarks. Mrs. Twing spoke eloquently of the meaning and purposes of the cause of Spiritualism. Mrs. Stiles prefaced her address by reading an original poem, which is given below.

The evening exercises consisted of a song service, remarks of a forcible and sympathetic nature, by our venerable and esteemed friend, Judge Underhill, of Ohio, and readings and messages by Mesdames Stiles and Twing.

Thus happily closed a profitable day.

EASTER—ANNIVERSARY POEM.

"He is risen!"—the people sing—
And Earth's choicest flowers they bring
As their Easter offering.

"He is risen!" the crucified—
He who for the people died,
Has the power of death denied.

"He is risen!" peal, bells, peal!
Let the steeples rock and reel
With the glad news ye reveal.

"He has risen!" loud swell the strain!
Let it sound o'er hill and plain!
Christ, the Lord, has risen again!

"He has risen!" join in the song
All ye choirs—a mighty throng!
Let your tones the strains prolong!

"He has risen!" Ah! then may we
In his resurrection see,
That which for all men may be.

They have risen! then let us sing!
Let the welkin loudly ring,
With our Easter offering.

They have risen! our household dead!
They whose outward forms have fled,
By their love are backward led.

They have risen! friends spirit born,
Greet us on this Easter morn;
Death is of its sadness shorn.

They have risen! Ah, nevermore
Shall death bolt and bar the door!
Open stands it evermore.

From the sepulchre of old,
Has the stone again been rolled,
And our loved ones we behold.

Yea, we see them face to face,
And receive their warm embrace.
Change can ne'er their love efface.

Ring! O Easter bells, ring clear!
Sound upon life's atmosphere,
Joyous tones—the dead are here.

Bloom! O Easter flowers, bloom sweet!
Shed your fragrance! it is meet
As we our beloved greet.

Sing, O Earth, the glad refrain!
Death, the conqueror is slain!
Life, immortal life, doth reign!

Swell the song, angelic bands!
Let it echo o'er all lands!
Death is vanquished—Life commands.
They have risen! a deathless throng
Come to join Earth's Easter song;
Praises to the day belong.

Ring! ring joyously, ye bells!
Send your loudest, clearest swells,
To the earth's remotest dells.

Bloom! O Easter flowers, bloom fair!
Angels to the earth repair;
Greet them with your fragrance rare.

KATE R. STILES.

ANNIVERSARY ADDRESS

By Mrs. D. E. Paine, at Potsdam, New York.

In 1848 occurred the first rap at Hydesville, a little town in the vicinity of Rochester, that preceded the first phenomena of what we call Modern Spiritualism. Not by any means the first phenomena of Spiritualism, as that dates back hundreds of years, even to Bible times. The birth and life of Christ is a much clearer demonstration of spirit power than we have ever received since. The warnings and phenomena at that day that were very wonderful, and for what purpose were these things shown to the people of that day? It seems Christ's healing of the sick and lame, the halt and the blind, was to show those people his power and when it came. When he was crucified and buried, and rose again and appeared to his disciples and to others, it was to show to all who were to come after that he went to prepare a place for them; as he plainly says: "I go to prepare a place for you, and where I am there ye may be also."

Now history tells us the first ten years of Spiritualism in all the nations of Europe, Asia and Africa. The phenomena of Spiritualism had become widely prevalent, and they place the adherents at that time at a little over one million, with 1,000 public speakers, 40,000 public and private mediums, and a literature of 500 different works. Forty-five years more have passed, and what do we find as the result of those tiny raps at Hydesville? My friends, over 20,000,000 of avowed Spiritualists inhabit our little sphere, and the mediums and lecturers are almost countless. It has entered every home. It has crept into all of our churches. It has found a firm foothold among scientific men, that is no mean one. It reckons among its members some of the broadest minds, the most profound thinkers, and also some of the thoroughly good people of this earth. And for that reason we are here to-night, to celebrate this anniversary of the introduction of Spiritualism, as a religion, a faith that is good to live by and certainly good to die by; a faith that teaches us to lift up the fallen, help the down-trodden, and be merciful to the sinner. A faith that enables us to look at death, not as the worst enemy of mankind, but a friend that comes to us in our most severe distress and removes us to another sphere of usefulness and love, where all that has appeared dark and unreadable in our former lives are made clear and plain and our trials are smoothed out until we look back in wonder that they ever appeared so gigantic as to obscure the many bright spots in our lives we could otherwise have enjoyed.

We are asked many times why do we wish to be enabled to see and hear from our loved ones gone before? Is it nothing to be assured our friends do live in another state of existence? It is everything to those who have lost friends, and nearly everyone has, and those who have not are not immune. So-called death is no respecter of persons; it swoops down upon us when we may be the least ready to meet it; but there is no delay when the messenger comes, and well is it with us if we can look across the silent waters and see the angel faces of our dear ones coming to bear us on and care for us over there, even as we are cared for in this life. Think you it is nothing to have a firm faith in the life to come, a life not divided from us by a yawning chasm, but bound to us by a silver stream, lighted by the lamps of knowledge of a higher life, a happier home, where our friends are ever near and our lives flow onward into the bright beyond where no darkness or misery can come, but light and life, a true life where the scales, although thick, are washed from our eyes and we see as we are seen, and know as we are known.

We have one among us this evening, (Mrs. Nellie S. Baade) who is ready to give us something much better than I am able to do, and while we welcome her to our midst with pleasure, and extend the hand of friendship as a worker in our little band, and one who will help to celebrate this anniversary with becoming cheerfulness and joy, we would wish her to bear to her home in the West the remembrance of this anniversary of 1902 as one of the bright spots in her very busy life. May she return to her home after her labors among us, feeling that although we are a tiny band, our influence perhaps will be enabled to spread even as the tiny raps at Hydesville; each one feeling we have all done the best we are capable of doing to make her stay among us a happy one for herself, as well as one of profit and pleasure to ourselves. And as the years glide by, and our band gathers together for good from time to time, may we each strive for the best we are able to do, making our own lives of use to ourselves and to others, and each one be enabled to learn this lesson:

Give a helping hand to a brother
As he plods his weary way,
Telling him to help another—
Till we reach the perfect day.

Scatter flowers by the wayside
To blossom for all the world;
Knowing that no ocean tide
Is like the power unfurled,

Of the mighty power of love,
Which we all can scatter wide,
And reap in full above
When we meet beyond the tide.

And we'll celebrate in Heaven,
One great, grand jubilee
Where our spirits all have risen,
And forevermore are free.

MODERN SPIRITUALISM.

In Commemoration of the Advent, March 31, 1848.

Let us not forget our blessings,
Poured through all the earthly sphere;
Science, love and highest wisdom
Now have dawned upon us here.

Let us speak with one another,
As this blessed time rolls 'round;
Let us tell in highest measure
Of the joy our earth has found.

How the clouds of fear and anguish,
Lest our souls be lost for aye,
Have been scattered, and forever,
By this new and brighter day.

When the spirits found and reached us
With the truth of nature's laws,
That no God with vengeful fury
Waited for our earth-lives pause,

To condemn to grief eternal,
Far from love's most pitying call,
Those who could not see the reason
For salvation or the fall.

When our world in its formation,
Swung in space mid densest night,
Eons passed ere yet one glimmer
From the sun could give it light.

So it was for countless ages,
Ere the sun of truth could shine
With its full and perfect radiance
Through the darkened human mind.

And our race in mental darkness,
Blindly groped in mortal fear
Of the God they felt would curse them,
If they made mistakes while here.

Till at last man through his reasoning
Said there was no life but here,
And no God with curse or blessing
Could avail beyond this sphere.

Then in vain we asked of reason,
Where our loved and lost have gone,
But no answer could be given,
And no light was thrown thereon.

Now our questions all are answered,
And our spirit friends are here,
With their love and gathered wisdom
To illume our earthly sphere.

Earth has not a date more noble,
Earth has not an age so blessed,
As this day when earth and heaven
In their meeting stand confessed.

Now the riddle of the ages,
That so vexed the childish mind,
Of the God's and Devil's battle
For the souls of human kind,

That has caused through all the ages,
Human torture, death and pain;
For the church has led the battle,
With its hundreds, thousands, slain.

But their knowledge was so meager,
Of the laws our earth obeys,
That they sought to stifle reason
Which would show them better ways.

Even now they hold most firmly
To their old and cruel creeds,
That were made by minds so darkened
They put faith before good deeds.

But we know the truth will reach them
Though they try to blind their eyes;
Even now their creeds are crumbling
From the light this truth supplies.

Let us help to spread this knowledge;
Let us live the higher life;
Let us make our truth so potent
It shall free the race from strife.

We will aid the dear evangels,
Blessed spirits, come to save
From the fear of God or Devil,
And the darkness of the grave.

Death is but the shining portal,
When we leave this earthly sphere,
If our lives are kind and useful,
And love fills our hearts while here.

Sisters, brothers, let us bless them
For their advent years ago,
For their love so true and constant,
And their aid which we all know.

Let us do our part as faithful,
Help the Home, the College, too,
Teach our children in the Lyceum,
Shirk not what we find to do.

Anniversary at Evansville, Ind.

The Spiritualists and many of their friends assembled in A. O. U. W. Hall, with the members of the First Church of Spiritual Communion, in sacred observance of the day that the Fox sisters gave to man their first demonstration of immortality.

At the morning services, Bro. James A. McElroy delivered one of his usual talks, as an Easter memorial, on the life of Christ, followed by messages by Mrs. James Van Dyke, all of which were recognized.

Anniversary services to the memory of the Fox sisters were gone through with in the evening, and the following programme was given to the public: Instrumental music, Masters Edward, Harry and Arthur Kaelin; invocation, Brother McElroy; music, followed by the anniversary address by James A. McElroy, who with his usual force of eloquence, asked his audience to go with him to the humble home of John Fox, at Hydesville, N. Y., and then discussed the raps as produced by the Fox sisters, holding his audience of over four hundred in the closest attention, every one seeming eager to grasp every word that fell from his lips. He closed his address with a forcible appeal to those present to embrace Spiritualism and live a true spiritual life.

Following him came Brother James Van Dyke, who opened his address by reading one of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's poems, and appeal to material science.

He then referred to the day of the resurrection of Jesus, and spoke of his second coming in the home of the Fox sisters. At the close of his address he called for a committee of three ladies and three gentlemen, the ladies to take Mrs. Van Dyke to the ante-room and make an examination of her person and clothing; the gentlemen to examine the cabinet. This being concluded, she was escorted back to the cabinet and the lights lowered, the entire committee informing the audience that nothing could be found to produce any forms. The audience then sang "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and the forms in beautiful white robes made their appearance to the audience, eighteen appearing from the cabinet; one in particular came out and called for her son, and said she was Mother Thorn, to which her son responded, and during the conversation between the angel mother and her son scarcely a dry eye was in the house.

Our audience was composed of people of all religious denominations, and many expressed a desire to return and learn more of our teaching. Our church feels greatly indebted to Bro. Kaelin's little sons for the beautiful music they rendered, and the public in general for their liberal attendance at our services. W. P. GRAY.

BEYOND THE VAIL

A Sequel to "Rending the Vail."

The two volumes together as a record of practically obtained facts demonstrating the claims of Modern Spiritualism as to post mortal survival, are unique and overwhelming.

Every communication is from a full materialized spirit form, in good light, and either spoken audibly or written in full view by the form. There is not an automatic or trance message in the book.

It is illustrated by several engravings, the originals of which were drawn in the presence of the circle by a full form materialized spirit artist.

BEYOND THE VAIL is, as a rule, the experiences of spirits in both worlds—their own account of their lives on earth and their progress after death to their present condition of freedom from earth conditions. The narratives are intensely interesting, instructive and often highly dramatic.

Coincident with these are the profoundly philosophical comments of the controlling spirits of the seances. Prof. William Denton, Thomas Paine, Dr. W. H. Reed and others—covering, law, medicine, jurisprudence, theology and metaphysics. There are no books in existence of like character or of higher authority. Price, by mail, $1.75.

THE BEAUTIFUL SOUVENIR VOLUME,

By A. LEAH UNDERHILL,
(Of the Fox Family.)

The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism.

Thirty-three chapters, 477 pages, superbly printed, and bound in colors and gold, 15 illustrations, 5 steel engraved portraits of the celebrated Fox Family, a full page engraving of the old house at Hydesville, which to this day, by the act of its wealthy and respected owner, Artemas Hyde, Esq., bears the inscription, "Here Spiritualism Originated in 1848."

A complete history of the initiation of the movement known as Modern Spiritualism, from the epochal period which dates from March 31, 1848. Since that day, starting from a small country village in western New York, Spiritualism has made its way against tremendous obstacles around the civilized globe.

Only a limited number of copies of this rare book, now out of print, are to be had, and these can be obtained only at this office. Those who remit at once will receive a copy, post paid, at the GREATLY REDUCED PRICE OF $1

Note.—By failure in 1885 to complete contract with the author, a large portion of the edition was left unbound, and so remained for a number of years, when they were rescued and bound at additional cost, hence this valuable contribution to the cause of Spiritualism was not properly presented to the Spiritualistic public, and a host of investigators have not had the opportunity of securing a copy until the present time. Do not fail to send for a copy at once. J. R. FRANCIS,

"THE UNKNOWN"

—BY—

CAMILLE FLAMMARION.

"The Unknown" created a marked sensation in France when first published and can scarcely fail to arouse the greatest interest in this country. It is an eminent scientist's study of the phenomena of the spirit world. In touching upon the various physical manifestations the author cites many absolutely authenticated instances, and chapters of his book are as weirdly fascinating as the most fantastic of Poe's tales. It treats on incredulity, credulity, hallucinations, psychic action of one mind upon another, transmission of thought, suggestion, the world of dreams, cerebral physiology, psychic dreams, distinct sight in dreams, actual facts, premonitory dreams and divination of the future, etc. 487 pages, cloth bound. Price $2.00.

DR. G. E. WATKINS,

The Noted Chronist,
Is Now Located at

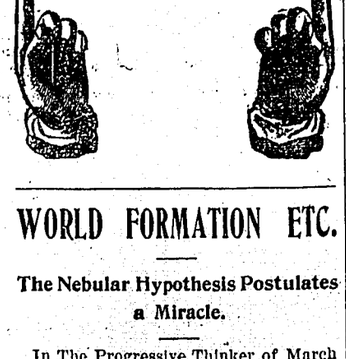
No. 1087 Boylston street, Boston, Mass., where he will be pleased to meet all who may call between the hours of 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. The wonderful work in healing the sick that Dr. Watkins is accomplishing is indeed most astounding; his patients live to testify to his wonderful powers as a healer. For the last year his work has been most wonderful. He says himself that his cures this year have been more than ever before in numbers, as he confined himself to only 30 new patients a month. Dr. Watkins attends personally to each case, and therefore he can do better work than if he had a great many assistants; no staff of visible helpers are in his office to annoy and suggest this and that. He knows what is the trouble with each patient, and knows the right specific to give. He prepares and puts up all of his medicine, and has no help in his medical treatments that is visible help. Write him to-day, and by return mail you will receive the diagnose. No charge made for diagnosing your case. Send age, sex and leading symptom.

? ARE YOU SICK ?

—IF SO—
Does Your Doctor Understand Your Case?

Are You Getting Better?

If you are not getting better write today to Dr. G. E. WATKINS, Boston, Mass., and write him just your condition financially, and he will make his price for treatment within your reach. He is treating a great many cases free; others he charges a light fee.



He makes no charge whatever for Diagnosis.

If You Are Sick

Why not write him today, and no matter who has failed to help you, to consult him COSTS NOTHING.

Try DR. WATKINS.

Let him diagnose your case, and then it will help you to decide who knows best what is the matter with you. Send all letters to 1087 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.

WORLD FORMATION ETC.

The Nebular Hypothesis Postulates a Miracle.

In The Progressive Thinker of March 15, Gen. Parsons expounds the nebular theory of world formation, and closes with a contention of his own that worlds are built up from "an invisible element in the universe"—that is to say, "from apparent nothing but spiritual essences; from immateriality to existing forms of all life and all worlds." And he adds: "That is the true and higher Spiritualism."

I fail to comprehend that kind of Spiritualism, and as regards the nebular hypothesis I discarded it twenty-four years ago. It postulates a miracle at the imaginary beginning of creation by the firing up of all matter in a gaseous globe of infinite dimensions.

And will any scientist answer this question? How is the condensation of worlds by the cooling-off process reconcilable with the fact that heat rays do not radiate through interstellar space?

Worlds are manifestly formed by accretion. Millions of meteors strike the earth's atmosphere every twenty-four hours. And the prodigious pressure of gravitation is the all-sufficient cause of the internal heat of planets. What evidence is there that our earth was ever warmer, not to say hotter, at its surface than it is now? The fossil flora and fauna of the most remote geological age are now buried ten miles deep or more beneath the more recent rock formations, where they are heated up to a thousand degrees Fahrenheit. These animals and plants when alive could not have endured more than about one hundred degrees of heat. And this is your cooling world!

I am fully aware of the existence of a carboniferous period and of a so-called more recent glacial epoch. In the former it is supposed by some that the climate of the whole earth was exceedingly warm, and in the latter period very cold, almost at the equator. But Mr. George M. Ramsey, of Washington, Pa., accounts for the existence of coal measures in high latitudes by the sudden shifting of the poles. He says that "this earth is dotted over with old polar centers". (Progressive Thinker of March 16, 1901). The fact that the great glaciers in Alaska, about latitude 60, are rapidly melting away, seems to indicate that that locality is the most recent polar center. An earlier one, says Mr. Ramsey, was about Salt Lake, and a still earlier one about Lake Superior. "Doctor Hayes, of Arctic fame," says Mr. R., "proved by measurement, that in latitude 72 ice increased in thickness eleven inches each year. And it is stated that the present thickness of polar ice is six thousand feet." When another sudden shifting of the pole occurs that polar ice will begin to melt away as the glaciers of Alaska are now doing.

If the shifting of the earth's poles is a fact, it is easy to explain both the carboniferous and the glacial period without postulating a very warm or a very cold climate extending over the greater part of the globe.

And further, the frequent changes of the pole account for the fact that all well defined geological periods begin and end abruptly.

Wisconsin Spiritualist Convention.

The second annual convention will be held in Milwaukee, Wis., April 15, 16 and 17, in Lincoln Hall, on Sixth street, near Grand avenue. Headquarters will be at the Plankinton House, and moderate rates granted.

It is hoped that all the mediums and public workers in the state will be in attendance and help make this convention the foundation of an active organization. Every member should come prepared to consider important questions that will mean much for the future of the association. The Morris Pratt Institute is in Wisconsin and naturally should appeal to the residents of the state as something to be worthy of more than passing notice. It is the first school of its kind in the world and is one of the most important subjects to Spiritualists open to their consideration.

The mediums' Home in Reed City, is not only a subject for Spiritualists to consider in conventions, but a humane, just, practical, common sense matter, that should not be allowed to pass without proper deliberation.

The National Spiritualists Association is the parent of state associations and we must take action as to our duties in that direction. The state campmeeting means a great responsibility to the officers, and the members should be prepared to consider well the responsibility when selecting the site and management, as it will be either a source of revenue or indebtedness. Remember the officers cannot make your association, and if you would be a recognized factor in social and religious circles you must lend your personal efforts to the advancement of the cause. We have the most beautiful religion on the earth, why cannot we become a working body that the world will recognize and respect. I believe we can, and I know that never in the history of Wisconsin was Spiritualism so well established and recognized as at the present time.

Brothers and sisters, let us come together as one, in this convention, laying aside personal differences if we have any, and work for the best good of the cause in Wisconsin and the world.

CLARA L. STEWART,
Pres. W. S. S. A.

Some Wayside Jottings.

March 22, found me at West Potsdam, N. Y., where I met the friends for the first time at a banquet at the home of Mr. Blood. Great preparations had been made to celebrate the anniversary of Modern Spiritualism, in the Methodist church, which was made beautiful by the fragrant flowers furnished by Mrs. Libbie P. Lewis, at whose pleasant home I was entertained. Mrs. Paine, the organist and soloist, assisted by others, made the church resound with sweetest music. Mrs. Holt, the president, did all in her power, as did all of the society to make it the jubilee of jubilees.

I gave a series of lectures there, also a test social and many private readings. It was a pleasure for me to work with them for they gave me the best conditions for good work. Mr. and Mrs. Bailey gave a maple sugar party in my honor. They had carpeted the sugar house, nailed up blankets to exclude the cold; it was a great sight to see them make sugar on such a large scale. For about two hours the fun of making maple wax and sugar was indulged in by about thirty people.

From there we went to Potsdam City, found a large company awaiting the test social I had promised them. It was a success in every way, and "with a God bless you," I returned in time to reach Columbus Saturday afternoon. I lectured Sunday, and in the evening Mr. Willard Hull gave one of his eloquent addresses. The ladies of the Spiritual Church decorated it most beautifully, the choir sang their sweetest, the president was at his best, and everything was most harmonious. The Spiritualist Church is the most beautiful one I have ever seen in all my travels. It was donated to the society by Mr. Ebenezer Barcus, of this city, a spiritual Spiritualist, who practices what he preaches and who is an honor to the cause he represents.

I expect to remain here during the month of April, after which I am free to make engagements with any society who may desire my services. I have a few open dates for camp work, and would be pleased to make engagements with any one in need of my services. My permanent address is 411 13th street, Detroit, Mich. Present address, Bryden Hotel, Columbus, Ohio.

NELLIE S. BAADE.

Work of Psychical Research.

To the Editor of the New York Times:—As a reader of the Times for more than a score of years, a strong approver of its general view of things, I beg leave to say that its utterances on the subject of psychical research with reference to the society bearing that name evince less accurate information than usually underlies the editorial columns. The expression of surprise some days ago that such a scientist as Prof. Lodge should be willing to be president of such a body is an unmistakable evidence of what it is hard to find another name for than what college boys call "freshness."

A man of Prof. Lodge's significance in the scientific world may easily be credited with understanding what he is about. So may a man like Prof. James of Harvard, who served as president of the society three years ago. So may Sir William Crookes, lately president of the British Scientific Association, and men of similar standing in the scientific world, sponsors for the scientific methods of the Society for Psychical Research. I have found cause, as a student of psychology, to read the published proceedings of this society for some fifteen years, and am competent to say at least, that it is ridiculously and absurdly untrue to represent the men who conduct its investigations as carried away with a fad for spooks. It would be equally correct to describe bacteriologists, investigating the causes of obscure diseases, like cancer, as carried away with a fad for morbid things. In psychology, study of the abnormal is an approved and successful way of promoting soundness of life. So in psychology, study of the abnormal phenomena of mental life, by enlarging the bounds of mental science, conduces to a similar result.

Prof. James, in an address at Columbia, some eight years ago, compared the investigations of the Psychical Research Society into erratic mental phenomena to those astronomical studies whose observations of meteors and comets have brought the most vagrant phenomena of the heavens under the reign of established laws. That these investigations have not proved futile Prof. James is witness. In his presidential address before the society some three years since he spoke substantially as follows: "For me the blow has fallen. I am obliged to confess that the doctrine of orthodox psychology, that mind can communicate with mind only through the medium of the physical senses, is contradicted by thoroughly established facts."

And yet there are not a few persons who look upon the scientific research into the mysteries of psychical life which such men conduct as the aged dame looked upon Sir Isaac Newton blowing soap bubbles in his study of the laws of optics: "The puir creetur's gone daft." JAMES M. WHITON.

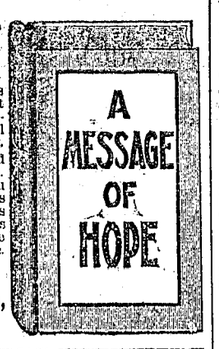
HEALTH RESTORED



The entire country is astonished at the wonderful cures perfected through the method originated by Dr. J. M. Peebles, the Grand Old Man of Battle Creek, Mich. This science is a subtle force in nature combined with magnetic medicines, and called by the eminent doctor,

Psychic Science

It has been termed the greatest pain reliever ever known. In a perfectly natural manner it builds up the system and restores health. It makes no difference how serious or hopeless the case may seem, there is positive hope in this grand science. It has restored the deaf, blind and lame, cured the paralytic, and those suffering from Bright's Disease, Consumption, Stomach Trouble, Catarrh, Nervous Debility, Neuralgia, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Female Troubles, as well as men and women addicted to the liquor, morphine and other vile habits.

Geo. H. Weeks, of Cleveland, Ohio, sends heartfelt thanks for restoration to health after suffering from nervous prostration and insomnia for years; he says he now enjoys health and restful sleep every night. Mrs. J. A. Rust, of Itasca, Minn., cured of uric acid poisoning in two month's treatment writes: "I am better than in years, and each day brings new health and strength. I will refer all ailing ones to you." Mary A. Earl, Crawford, Mich., suffering from pronounced female difficulties and kidney disease, says: "I took your treatment three months and it has been a success in my case. I am indeed grateful to you for my recovery." C. E. Davis, Woodman, N. H., who suffered all the miseries of a dyspeptic, writes that as the result of Dr. Peebles' treatment, he had not missed a meal since last March. D. W. Bridgman, of Del Norte, Col., writing Sept. 30, after three months' course, "When I began treatment with Dr. Peebles' Institute of Health I was a cripple, unable to walk but little with a cane. Now I am able to walk with ease. Some days ten or fifteen miles. My general health is excellent. I can hardly find words to express my gratitude, as previously I had tried everything I could hear of and got no relief. Mrs. Isaac Varney, Dover, N. H., a sufferer of spinal trouble and nerve exhaustion, writes that she would not go back to the state of health she was in before taking this treatment for all the world. Solomon Fried, of Vanderbilt, California, cured of neuralgia and catarrh, says: "I am well and a thousand times obliged to you."

"A Message of Hope"

written by Dr. J. M. Peebles, in a plain and concise manner, tells you exactly how and where you can gain perfect health; in fact, it gives you the key to the grandest knowledge known to man. Remember, this book costs you nothing, and it reveals wonderful secrets and makes the impossibilities of yesterday realities of to-day.

ABSOLUTELY FREE Send your name and address and leading symptoms to Dr. J. M. Peebles and his associates and you will receive full diagnosis without any cost whatever, as well as this grand book, which is beautifully illustrated, rich in all its details, containing matter which will be a revelation to you. It is a token which any one may be proud of. Write to-day and receive "A Message of Hope" and diagnosis of your case absolutely free. Address

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, at St. Mary's Hospital, Minneapolis, March 17, Mrs. Charles Armstrong, formerly of Merriam Park, Minn. A noble woman, a loving mother, a devoted wife and a firm believer in spirit communion. None knew her but to love her.

A DEVOTED FRIEND.

Passed to spirit life, April 1, Jannette, wife of James Davey, of Maywood, Ill., aged 42 years. The funeral services, conducted by the writer, were held April 3, and the remains were consigned to earth in the beautiful Forest Home Cemetery. We cannot justly close our word without mentioning the sweet rendition of appropriate solos by one of our well-known mediums, Mrs. G. Partridge, both at the house and the grave.

J. O. M. HEWITT.

Mrs. C. R. Mallen passed to spirit life, at Twin Lakes, Colo., on the morning of March 23, caused by a stroke of apoplexy. She was a sincere Spiritualist, having been convinced of the truth more than forty years ago. Her object in life was to do all she could for humanity. She was at the time of her death 73 years of age. She had been in Colorado since 1881, and was known as the "female prospector," as she was interested with me in the mining business. She was always pleased when The Progressive Thinker was brought to camp, which has been every week for several years.

WILL T. BUCHANAN.

Cancer, Tumor, Piles, Catarrh, Ulcer and Skin Diseases.

Successfully cured by a combination of Medicated Oils. Thousands of persons come or send to Dr. Bye, of Kansas City, Mo., for this wonderful Oil. Many cases are treated at home without the aid of a physician. Persons afflicted should write for illustrated book showing the various diseases before and after treatment. Physicians endorse this mild method of treatment. Call or address Dr. W. O. Bye, Cor. Ninth and Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

DO YOU NEED SPECTACLES?

Try Poole's perfected Melted Pebble lense, a perfect assistant to the eyes for near and far vision. They induce a renewed action of the nerves, muscles and blood-vessels and a return of natural vigor to the eyes. My method of fitting is by spirit power and clairvoyance. Please write for illustrated circular showing styles and prices. I guarantee to fit your eyes and please you. Address B. F. POOLE,
43 Evanston Ave., Chicago, Ill.

TESTIMONIAL.

Mr. Poole—Dear Sir:—The glasses were received yesterday. They are just grand and rest my eyes so much. How can you give such satisfaction without seeing the person? To me it is marvelous. Most gratefully,

MRS. M. E. DOBYNS.
Galveston, Texas.

A GOOD OFFER

To anyone who has poor health and will send me their name and address, with stamps for reply, I will (through spirit power) give them a correct examination (diagnose) of any disease. If you will investigate this you will find my terms and conditions very reasonable. I also give clairvoyant life readings by mail.

In the World Celestial

Is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance mediums, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer. This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement. Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold, and has a full page portrait of the angel heroine, from a spirit painting. Price, $1.00.

"THE DREAM CHILD,"

A Fascinating Romance of Two Worlds. By Florence Huntley. Price, cloth, 75 cents. Books like "The Dream Child" spur humanity on to make more and more demands of this nature, and will open up new heights and depths of spiritual knowledge.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Will, I believe, take its place beside Bulwer's "Zanoni" and the "Seraphita" of Balzac.—Daily Capital, Topeka, Kansas. Although simple and unvarnished with any inflammable descriptions, enthralls the mind to the exclusion of other thoughts, until reluctantly the reader closes the last page.—Minneapolis Sunday Times.

A Very Interesting Book for All.
Philosophy of Spiritual Intercourse. This work contains a graphic account of the very wonderful spiritual developments at the house of Rev. Dr. Phelps, Stratford, Conn., and similar cases in all parts of the country. This volume is the first from the author directly upon the subject of Spiritualism, and has stood the test of many years. Cloth, $1.20; postage 10c.

"AS IT IS TO BE."

A VERY SUGGESTIVE WORK.

It Beams With Spiritual Truths.

This is a beautiful book, by Cora Lynn Daniels, and it scintillates with grand spiritual thought. An idea of this work can be obtained by reading the titles of a few of the chapters therein:

The Process of Dying; Light and Spirit; The Law of Attraction; Senses of the Spirit; What Is Unconscious Will; Fear; Astrology; The God-Soul of Man; The Drama; A Day in Heaven. Price $1. For sale at this office.

"NO BEGINNING."

An Excellent Work for Thinkers.

This book, "No Beginning," is by William H. Maple. The Arena says of it: "The argument is unanswerable. The book will at once appeal to the reason of every reader, and leave him more amazed than ever at the prevalence of the theory of Creation." The Two has always been a fateful num- Free Thought Ideal says: "We found it full of glittering thoughts for thinkers, and the very death warrant of Christian superstition shines upon its pages." Price 75 cents.

LIGHT OF EGYPT,

The Second Volume of a Most Valuable Work.

This is the author's posthumous work left in MS. to a few of his private pupils in occultism, and like Volume I. is (a valuable addition and) a library on occult subjects. Spiritual astrology is especially elaborated. Alchemy, Talismans, the Magic Wand, Symbolism, Correspondence, Penetralia, etc., are a few of the subjects treated of in a scholarly and masterly manner, showing the author to be familiar with his subjects. You cannot afford to be without it, as well as all his other books, viz.: The Light of Egypt, Vol. I., bound in cloth, $2; paper, $1. The Light of Egypt, Vol. II., bound in cloth only, $2. Celestial Dynamics, cloth, $1. The Language of the Stars, paper, 50 cents. For sale at this office.

WISDOM OF THE AGES.

A Mine of Valuable Reflections and Suggestions.

This work was automatically transcribed by George A. Fuller, M. D., a gentleman who stands high as a lecturer and medium. It is a mine of valuable reflections and suggestions. The paragraphs are short, suggestive and inspiring. Every one of them leads to something higher, grander, nobler. Price $1.00.

Esoteric Lessons.

An Argument Against Physical Causation.

The object of this book, considered a most excellent one by some, is to establish what is commonly regarded as purely physical health upon a purely psychical basis; to show that health is knowledge, wisdom, insight; that men suffer from so-called purely corporeal disease only because they form erroneous judgment; also, to show that the fundamental erroneous judgment is, that there is any such thing in the universe as physical causation, a belief in which leads both directly and indirectly to disease. Often directly in case of the individual, but more commonly indirectly as a race-belief held throughout the known history of mankind. This work is by Sarah Stanley Grimke. Price $1.50.

Man's Aural Self.

BY CHARLES DAWBARN, OF SAN LEANDRO, CAL.

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

The Flying Soul.

I have recently received a detailed account of some interesting experiments in telepathy between a circle in London and sensitives in America. These experiments were remarkably successful, as proved by written records at either end. But on one occasion when a stranger, recently from India, was admitted, he introduced a new feature by invoking the "flying soul" of an Indian rajah, with whom he was on intimate terms. We here find ourselves face to face with a phase of aural manhood so distinct from that of telepathy that we must analyze it with some care.

It must be remembered that whatever may be the experiences of our aural self those of Homo the mortal are gauged and limited by his own sense capacity. It was with mortal sense each member of this circle saw the "flying soul" of the distant rajah, and if that flying soul was also heard to speak the sound must have fallen on mortal ear through the wonted sense of hearing. That a circle of thirteen members each and all witnessed the apparition is sufficient proof that the manifestation was not hallucination. The form of a man in the well-known Indian garb was visible to all alike; was recognized as his friend the rajah by the visitor to the circle, and then slowly faded away. There need be little discussion over the fact since it was but one of the myriad "phantasms of the living" such as have been reported and attested by the Society for Psychical Research. The only difference is that such apparitions recorded by the Society are usually in the hour of death, or of some great danger. Whereas this was the invoked appearance of a mortal, who, although asleep, was quite in his accustomed health, at least so far as known to his friend, who claimed to have made many similar and equally successful experiments.

Homo was asleep yonder in India. Here was a replica of the sleeping man. When we commence our study of this interesting incident we realize that Homo is himself only a temporary blending of units that one day will unblend and fall apart. So the flying soul, being a replica by the creative artist, is composed of similar units. Neither form is lasting. The difference of a few weeks or years has no influence on the fact that each is a personality, and neither represents the unit Ego. But our present study is of Homo and not of Ego; it is the study of a man among his fellow men; in a word, a man such as the reader and writer of this chapter. The Homo we are studying is in London and in Hindustan at the same time, according to the statement presented for our study and criticism. To the student the one, as we have said, is the replica of the other—composed of similar material—shaped into the same outward form by a like manifestation of intelligence and energy. The same artist has evidently outwrought both forms, although one is much less gross than the other.

The "flying soul" as it was called by the Rosicrucians, is, of course, counted as an apparition. Yet that is entirely a question of time. If it remained in form as long as the man we greet in daily life, one would be no more an apparition than the other. The trouble is that there are not units enough dominated by one center to build up two distinct personalities, both effective at the same time. When the "flying soul" is active Homo is asleep or entranced. When Homo is mentally and physically exercising selfhood there will be no "flying soul." But the flying soul and the aural self are by no means the same thing.

We have already noted that Homo's aural self is without any shape or form of which we can conceive. We merely know that it emanates in every direction from the mortal center, and that it gives us abundant evidence that it has a center of its own intelligence. The mortal may sense that aural intelligence and find it responding to his call, so far and no further than he can interpret its vibrations in terms of his own experience. The aural self is itself, at least during the earth life of Homo, a personality built up from blended units that have already had their individual and collective experience in the form of Homo the mortal. It is impossible they can return to manifest as the aural self, because Homo could not interpret such a vibration. Every communication between intelligences is by thought; and thought is intelligence expressing itself by vibration. That the aural self does send back its thought units freighted with intelligence is demonstrated by both telepathy and the experiences in clairvoyance.

Clairvoyance having sensed vibrations far beyond mortal capacity interprets them in terms of mortal experience. We thus receive the descriptions which have been supposed to embody supernal truths. Herein is the key to the truth we are seeking. If the vibrations, discerned by the clairvoyant and interpreted as form, can be reduced a few octaves, a similar interpretation by experience will sense the same form by those who have cultivated a harmony of perception which would not itself outreach to clairvoyant vision. So the "flying soul" is first the clairvoyant perception of a vibration interpreted by that visitor into the shape of his sleeping friend. Reduced a few octaves and it becomes visible to the entire circle in its suggested and interpreted human form.

While it is understood that we can really know nothing of the shape of any aural self, we may suppose that it actually exists as formless light. If that were so, we can see that mortal interpretation would still compel the vibratory thought into mortal shape, because such is the only mortal experience. Thus, if conditions permit, the thought emanating from the aural self of that rajah in answer to invocation, must take shape as a "flying soul." Yet further, it might be suggested into tones, embodying, when interpreted, so much of truth as the experience of the listener will permit, and no more.

Telepathy is phenomena of a similar class, but usually demanding different conditions on the part of Homo, and not soaring so far into the realm of the occult. It is an expression of the receptive capacity of Homo. In his normal life Homo is perpetually receiving and interpreting vibrations of units impinging upon his sense organs. Extend that receptivity beyond the usual and normal experience and we call it telepathy. In Homo's normal experience the vibration is caught and interpreted as it passes on and out in its circular path into space. In the abnormal experience it travels much further before it is sensed and interpreted. There is no other distinction, as Homo's experiences are all alike sensed and recorded in a state of vibratory intelligence. But when we are dealing with a flying soul we are in presence of a direct creation by thought power, as limited in its effect upon mortal sense as every other creation by mortal man.

The phantom was objective, composed of units so blended as to be perceptible to mortal eye. It was an etherealized thought—the thought of some one—condensed into etherealized form by creative thought power, and sensed by the audience as a vibratory effect upon their normal sense organs. It was, like every other thought, composed of units blending into form for a brief moment of mortal time, and then separating to return or reblend as the law of attraction might compel. It did not contain the active physical organs of Homo, with units coming and going, or it would have entered into mortal life. It was a mere instrument to be played upon, more or less effectively, by an outside influence. When we seek the source of that outside influence we perceive it must be either by permission or direction of the Ego at that time dominating the life of the distant rajah.

Let Homo intensely desire to visit some distant point or person, there is an outgoing thought composed of blended units whose intelligence is, for the time, concentrated on that purpose. That it unerringly reaches its desired destination may be assumed as a law of nature. This assumption is based on much attested experience that has won scientific recognition in the last decade of the 19th century. The thought discharged in London with sufficient momentum will travel to Melbourne or San Francisco or Peking as a vibration of the universal ether, pervaded with individual intelligence. The effect it produces after it reaches its destination is a different matter.

There is a ground wire to every thought, and, if permitted, it flashes its way back to its source. We say "if permitted," because just as electricity may be transmuted into light, heat or power, so the energy of thought may find work into which it will be transmuted at its destination. The mere thought of Melbourne, or even of friends in that distant city, is, like the flash of summer lightning, a fact of too little import for record by nature. But freight that record with soul life, life directed to a personality sensitive to such vibrations, and we face the wireless telegraphy of Cosmos. It must be first sensed, and then interpreted. The one is useless without the other. We have already noted the limits of possible interpretation, so need not dwell upon them here. In its utmost perfection the sensitive catches and interprets the thought that has thus traversed space. Its verification is usually by a record carefully kept at either end of the wire.

So far it has been simply a vibratory impression of intelligence, received as if from one in an adjoining apartment, the distance offering no recognized obstacle. Our natural query is, upon what is that vibration impressed? We must here fall back on the records of science. The senses of sight and of sound have recorded normal limits. They respond to certain vibrations, beyond which is silence for the mortal. It is quite certain that these telepathic vibrations are outside such normal limit, therefore we again enquire as to the point at which such impact can be sensed? We here recall the fact that Homo is dual. His physical form, with its limitations, is but one expression of his manhood. His aural selfhood responds to very different vibrations. Within this aural limit such an impact is both possible and natural. So we find the thought units traversing space from London to Melbourne. They are carefully labeled, and forwarded by Concentrative Express to a certain Homo, whose aural self will receive and possibly translate them. But that distant Homo must be himself a natural or developed sensitive or he will fail to catch these vibrations when reduced to a lower octave by his aural self. We have seen that thought, however forcibly expressed, cannot directly impress the mortal sense organs of Homo. Therefore that thought, perforce, yields its message to the aural self of our distant friend. The work of the sender is accomplished. His thought has reached its only possible destination. Now let us watch the next step. Since Homo is thus sensitive to thoughts from his own aural self, why is he not equally sensitive to thoughts flashed from the aural selfhood of other Homos?

As we have repeatedly pointed out, thoughts are actual units, loaded with intelligence expressing itself in vibratory energy. But the aural self of Homo is composed of blended units already accustomed to his mortal form. The aural self thinks, or it would not be intelligent.

It thinks with those whose experiences have been those of Homo, more or less specialized. Its thought units thus easily flash their way to Homo's brain, where units without such personal experience would find no foothold. Even then Homo can but partially interpret them into terms of his limited experience. Such communicated vibrations naturally fall into definite categories. Those sensed rather than interpreted may be received as impressions. A little more distinctive impact is received as intuition. And occasionally—very occasionally—there is, for a brief moment, an actual verbal reception of the aural thought. We thus place telepathy among similar natural forces, such as wireless telegraphy, which are counted as subject to scientific investigation and interpretation.

The etherealization of form is shown to be due to the creative power of thought, working amidst and among units already accustomed to the vibrations of the Homo who is carefully pictured to the mental eye of the sender of that telepathic thought. The thought creator may be either the aural self of the sleeping Homo, or possibly the form may be suggested into shape by the one who invokes it. But it will and must be in either case built up of units already accustomed to play their part in the experiences of the mortal Homo whose "flying soul" they thus become for the passing hour.

We deal with other conditions, amid very different surroundings, when we now approach the subject of materialization, which has been taken by Spiritualists as the keystone of their belief in human immortality and spirit return. This will be the subject of the next chapter.

Veteran Spiritualists Union.

The anniversary program as published was carried out with the exception of the address from Miss Harlow in the morning, who was detained by illness too severe to warrant exposure on such a stormy day; and Mrs. Loring in the afternoon was prevented from appearing through a relapse of Mr. Loring. All the workers were at their best, and so far as we could judge everyone who faced the storm appreciated the action of the committee in giving the time over to a few workers capable of using it for a definite work instead of following a custom of crowding the program with so many workers that no one could have sufficient time to make a lasting impression.

Friends of the Union, old and new (may their numbers increase) will be glad to know the Union was aided financially by contributions) either for the general treasury, or the fund for clearing the Home from its mortgage debt, or for the permanent sinking fund) and collections of upwards of two hundred and fifty dollars, most of it paid at the time or since.

You, dear reader, will, I am sure, be interested to know that a special fund, which has been started to pay the burdensome mortgage of $5,000, which has been crippling in its effect on the Union from the start, has already reached the half-way mark—a little over $2,500 having been subscribed, and Mr. Barrett, in whose hands the funds are placed, is instructed to hold them until the whole $5,000 is raised, then pay off the mortgage. What a relief it will be to have the thing taken away! How encouraging will be the outlook with the Home relieved from its troublesome debt! Then, if the Banner of Light sinking fund reaches anything like the proportions it should before it closes, at last the old V. S. U. will be established on permanent lines. Fellow-laymen, the call is for us. After you and I have given of our money and our time and our ability we cannot outstrip the average medium in his daily offering of service. Our business calls we meet or cannot continue business. As citizens we contribute to our city, county and state at the demand of our government. Shall we withhold our offerings from the one Cause that gives permanent value to our property and makes residence anywhere a thing of meaning, because the tax collector cannot levy on our holdings? Think this over a bit. See if you have given all you can for this purpose, then decide whether you think the payment of the mortgage the most important thing; or the sinking fund which you know will produce annually for the Union, as it is to be kept a steady investment, "yielding her fruit every month;" or, if you wish to simplify the work of the directors in meeting the everyday claims upon them, give to the secretary "for general use."

The first Tuesday in May will be the annual meeting for election of officers. Don't you think some of you who are outside ought to become members ($1.00 per year) and have a vote at that meeting? When you take upon you the responsibilities of membership you can justly have the right to urge your methods and ideas on the body of which you are a member. The V. S. U. to-day has no schoolboy's task before it, but it has an opportunity for service, on lines of practical humanitarianism, and I believe needs only your support and proper consecrated officers and members when the glad note of her "reasonable service" shall be heard throughout this continent.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant in this work,

IRVING F. SYMONDS.

HOME CIRCLE EXPERIENCE

We think too much cannot be said or done in favor of the quiet home circle, where members of the family, with occasionally a friend or two, to join in the investigations. Of course we must have good surroundings and order, and pay due respect and use courtesy to our spirit friends, and good results will manifest every time, and we will grow in knowledge of the beautiful beyond, and get such grand truths as we progress. What a happy world this would be if the masses only understood the beautiful truths awaiting them, and would be given them in the quiet, honest and sincere home circles, if they could only get time from the busy, exciting and money-making world, and fashionable society, where everyone tries to outdo his neighbor in all earthly things, just to remain in the form a few ill spent years, and with the satisfaction only that they are having a good time as far as wealth, power and personalities are concerned. How much better it would be to learn and have a knowledge of the future, and how to act or conduct ourselves for future enjoyment. After satisfying ourselves beyond question, by means of the home circle, that we continue to exist, and have a personal knowledge of that existence, we will want to do all the good we can, and strew flowers along the pathway of the weary and unfortunate, and will do our best to lift the burdens and make happy all humanity and every living creature we come in contact with, and also do our best to make this world better for having existed upon it for a time.

We are progressing; the seed is being sown; at some time in the future brotherly love and the welfare of all humanity will be the watchword of all.

We have our home circle, my wife and I sitting two or three times a week. Occasionally a friend drops in and joins us. We have table tippings, raps, automatic writing, etc. We gain knowledge, and by this knowledge, happiness. Within the last two years we have helped organize several now successful home circles.

W. P. CLIFFORD.

Iconium, Iowa.

It was about Feb. 25, of this year, that I discovered my oldest child, a girl of nearly twelve years of age, possessed the gift of automatic writing. She had seen me sit passively with pencil in hand, and so when unobserved she placed her hand passively, with pencil, on paper, her hand began to move with the following result: "Mama tidings. Glory to God on high; peace, good will to men." Since that time I have had her sit about three times a week. At first a few sentences would be given at each sitting, usually something with a moral to draw out the better qualities in character; of late they are short stories to suit a child of her age, winding up by applying the moral they teach. Sometimes the writing is some good advice on conduct. The influence causes her to write about two pages in the note-book at each sitting now; each story is headed with a headline, and if not finished the first time, it winds up writing, "To be finished." The angel or spirit seems to be one that has charge of children as a teacher or tutor.

Following is one of the first beautiful productions: "In the quiet chamber are the children robed in white, kneeling before their bed as in prayer, and I also do the same. I lay me down to rest." It reveals a condition in the angel world.

In a writing headed "The Stormy Night," is given the experience of one passing through the change. Following is the production:

"The wind was blowing briskly, the waves of the waters were rolling about with a great noise. The limbs of the trees were blown about, the clouds grew dark and gray, the thunder shook the earth, they gave a blast of lightning. I shook with fear, but still the storm rolled on, and then the lightning blazed again. I gave a cry and fell asleep."

When the hand is under control it feels like an electric current was passing through it. The child is awake but knows nothing of what is being written, as she will sit and talk on other subjects, and is sometimes quite embarrassed to learn that she has written some things directed as reproof against her own actions.

I regard her spiritual gift as sacred, and leave it with the other side of the vail to give just such as the spirit sees best for us.

DR. R. P. HANSON.

Oshkosh, Wis.

As all Spiritualists take interest in spirit phenamena, I will relate to the readers of the always instructive Progressive Thinker an outline of our success. Our circle was formed last October and consists, with rare exceptions, of members of our family only. It has already developed two mediums in the persons of Mrs. Blanche Edwards, a lady of culture and irreproachable character, and her brother, Mr. McIntosh, whose mediumship runs on lines of materialization.

The principal control of our circle, Dr. Gray, who according to his own statement, has experienced, while on earth, more of the bitter than the sweets of life, speaks loud and distinct, and permits discussion on spiritual subjects only. Beside him, three lofty spirits, who, like him, speak very distinct, pay our circle frequent visits, namely, Stephen A. Douglas, the control of another medium; General George Crook, my beloved guide, and Mary, my daughter, now 35 years in the spirit world; and last, but to us of greatest interest, is "Blue Bell," the child control, who keeps us in good humor by her ever ready sunny and witty remarks. She will submit to a good deal of flattery, and seems to know all we do during the day.

I was reading the other day a work on Chinese demonology. At the evening seance my wife had occasion to call Blue Belle a nice little spirit, when she retorted—always in independent voice—"Yes, but I am none of your demonology."

At one of our circles the mediums complained suddenly of distressing sickness of stomach, and Blue Belle announced to us the appearance of a sad and unhappy spirit, who could not give his name. On being asked who brought him here, he gave the name of one of my spirit friends. By this he was recognized as a former medium, who had committed suicide a year or two after he had, at the end of a seance with me, thrown his arms around my neck and begged me to remain with and be a father to him. Somewhat overawed by his wonderful psychic powers, I did not feel adequate to the charge. Now at our circle he told us that I might have saved him, that he was ever since his death in utter and terrible darkness, that he was brought here by my friend in the hope that our prayers, which he humbly requested, and our instructions might again bring him into the light. He acknowledged that he never believed in the immortality of the soul, but thought that death ended all. I am happy to say that through the great kindness of Dr. Grey and Gen. Crook, he has already seen some light.

Other of our phenomena point strongly to development of materializations. We are all caressed by spirit hands, different in size and texture, from a child's hand to that of an adult. A spirit took from my wife's head last evening a comb that was found outside of the circle. Blue Belle turned over the hand of Mr. McIntosh and deposited in it a dime, all the money she said, owned by her. Lights of various degrees of brightness appear at many circles; two trumpets are often used in speech at the same time; and as many as nine spirits have spoken through the trumpet at the same seance. Both Dr. Grey and Mr. Douglass pronounce our success so far phenomenal, in spite of frequent adverse conditions.

To my Spiritualist friends I would say, form home circles, exclude all that is not of a spiritual nature; it will make you better men and women, and give not only the exquisite pleasure and benefit to you, but we are assured by themselves, benefit our spirit friends even more than ourselves.

WHAT DO WE KNOW?

A Freethinker's Frank Criticism.

A brother Freethinker, in delivering an oration lately over the body of a babe, said:

"Our affections ever crying out, 'There is another life,' our reasons doubting and denying it. Still, the great mystery remains unsolved and forever will remain unsolved."

I italicize the last four words for the purpose of emphatic dissent. No man can logically assert that the question, or mystery, of future life will forever remain unsolved.

That kind of reasoning has been a barrier to progress. Invention has had to fight it, step by step, for centuries. It declared the Atlantic cable an impossibility; the steamboat a visionary dream of a lunatic; electric cars absurdities; wireless telegraphy fiction; the phonograph a fool's farce; X-Rays contrary to physics.

Logic is the stronghold of the typical Freethinker. When he departs from it he is at sea; a straw buffeted by wind and wave.

Said our Freethinking friend: "They know that no one else has any greater knowledge of the future than themselves." And they know nothing.

That is illogical. How do they know that? A Freethinker should always shun dogmatism as the pest-house of superstition.

Inconsistently enough he says, "I hope to live again." Even hope should be well-founded, else it is a Will-o'-the-Wisp. It is unreasonable to hope for a thing which we are certain nobody knows or can know, and forever will not know.

Says this Freethought brother: "We should be too honest to pretend to know that which nature has fixed as unknowable."

How does he know that "nature has fixed" anything of the sort? Let us have the formula. If it can be demonstrated that nature has "fixed" it, we would have one of the greatest discoveries of this twentieth century.

I like the clear-cut statement of T. H. Huxley, the eminent English scientist: "That which is unproved to-day may be proved by the help of new discoveries to-morrow."

That is better. Dr. M. M. Mangasarian voices genuine mental liberty when he says: "Has it ever occurred to you that we speak because we differ in our thoughts. There are more points of view than one. If we all thought alike we would cease thinking, reading or speaking."

Every Freethinker will become a better thinker if he will practice the principle of Gerrit Smith: "I have trained myself to look at all sides and to seek knowledge from all sides."

This is one reason why I think materialists should make a thorough, not superficial, study of Spiritualism, and rigidly practice Hedge's rule of logic: "It is possible that you may be in the wrong and your adversary in the right."

And have the Spiritualists nothing to learn? If they really know that we are all to live after the "great change," above all people, they can afford to be calm, philosophic, truly liberal. Indeed, it seems to me they are well equipped to be all these. The distinguished lecturer and poetess of the Spiritualists, C. Fannie Allyn, strikes the key-note: "We, too, are liable to be mistaken."

SOMETHING ABOUT EASTER

The Revival of the Theme of Immortality.

Easter, says the New York Sun, revives the discussion of the immortality of the soul of which the resurrection of Jesus is regarded by Christendom as the pledge, though the fact that Deity could not be holden of death would hardly in itself be a pledge that death shall not hold mere humanity.

These questions, as has been said before, speculative as they may seem to those who deem themselves practical men, are really practical and urgent in the highest degree. The conscience which we have hitherto obeyed, or endeavored approximately to obey, and which has more or less kept the world in order, is clearly in its nature religious. It has claimed, and to some extent practically asserted, an authority beyond that of any earthly tribunal. It has proclaimed that it shall be well with those who do good and ill with those who do evil, not only in this transitory life, but in the sum of things. It has encouraged the righteous, suffering from injustice here, to appeal to a higher tribunal, and threatened the unrighteous on whom fortune in the present world smiles with a reversal of their lot hereafter. The most comprehensive view of our temporal interest, even though it may embrace the whole compass of our social affections, is not what we mean by conscience.

Every day brings forth proof of the fact that by the collapse of the traditional beliefs on which morality has hitherto largely rested morality itself is being shaken, so that there is a danger of a moral interregnum like that which there was between the fall of medieval Catholicism and the rise of Protestantism, aggravated, moreover, by the intense competition for gain. We are told by high political authority that the rule of conduct of nations toward each other is henceforth to be not antiquated righteousness, but conformity to the indications of the stars in their courses; in other words, seizure of all opportunities of aggrandizement without regard to the rights of others. One cannot help respecting the memory of the Barbary corsair, who did not talk about the stars in their courses, or about the Deity taking command of destiny, or about a providential mission, but said frankly that he wanted his neighbors' goods, and if the owner tried to keep them he would knock him on the head.

At Easter a year or two ago I heard a preacher speak of the resurrection of Jesus as the best attested of all historical events. So far a fond adherence to tradition could carry him! If the event really happened and is of such unspeakable importance as has been supposed, it would be reasonable, and more than reasonable, to expect not only that the evidence of it should be better than that of any other historical event, but almost that there should be a standing miracle of some sort to place it forever beyond the possibility of doubt. The fact, however, is that the narratives are anonymous; that their authorship is unknown; that they are of uncertain date, and that they are hopelessly at variance with each other. The attempts to harmonize them, such as that of Dr. Greswell, serve only to make the inconsistencies more glaring. Is it conceivable that the records of an event on which the salvation of mankind depends should be left to be cleared from doubt and confusion by the hermeneutic ingenuity of a divine in the nineteenth century?

A personal impression, however strong, however deepened by church art as well as by theology, is, as you truly say, no evidence. It is inconceivable that the power which ordained such an event and for such a purpose should have left its authenticity to rest upon impressions. There can be no use in fondly clinging to that which cannot be upheld.

Dr. Felix Adler regards personal immortality as a thing not to be desired, but as a thing to be dreaded. It involves, he says, endless suffering and interminable struggling toward some higher plane of existence which still always rises above you. His sentiment appears to be somewhat like that of the Buddhist, who strives by intense self-effacement to escape from the burden of conscious personality and the interminable series of transformations. But if Dr. Felix Adler recoils from the prospect of personal immortality, does not he, or do not men in general, recoil from the prospect of personal annihilation? Apart from our individual destiny, is it not sad to think of all the uncompensated suffering which, on the hypothesis that existence ends here, fills the pages of human history? Does death level not only the king with the beggar, but the best of men and the greatest benefactor of his kind with the worst of tyrants or assassins? If it does, can we believe in the moral government of the world? If we cannot believe in the moral government of the world, where is the sanction of morality?

Nor, again, can we contemplate without sorrow the prospect of final separation from those we love.

Immortality, as has been said before, like infinity or eternity, transcends our power of conception. The attempt to realize it only produces a sort of dizziness in the mind. It seems better to set that term aside, and simply to consider whether it is certain or probable that all ends for us with death. There are phenomena in our nature which, apparently, are not physical, but seem to point to something beyond our physical existence. They constitute in the aggregate what we have called our spiritual life, including our sense of moral responsibility, our moral aspirations, our feeling for moral beauty, our power of idealization, our higher and more perfect human affections. Is there anything to which these point? May there not still be something behind the veil?

Clinging to tradition, however entwined the tradition may be with all our associations, is, in the face of the revelations of science and criticism, no longer possible. We are in danger of falling from that state into a blind and even fanatical materialism, which, if we could see behind the veil, might be found to be no more than a tradition itself, identical with the progressive purpose of the universe.

WILLS! WILLS!!

Some Interesting Statements by a Lawyer.

As the "wise words" contained in the communiction of our dear noble sister, Mrs. Longley, in The Progressive Thinker of April 5, may have a very misleading tendency, permit me to suggest some corrections thereto. (Some forty years handling legal subjects causes me to hope that I may be freed from the charge of egotism in such attempt.)

She tells us her friend went to a "first-class lawyer" and had the will drawn. Then on the same day he had himself examined by three expert physicians. These made statements sworn to before a notary of his health and soundness of mind. These statements it seems were filed with the will. Our noble, hard working sister concludes the statement with "* * there is no apprehension that his will may be contested, or if it is that it will be disproved."

She does not state that the "first-class lawyer" had anything to do with the proceeding except as to drawing the will. Let us in charity for the profession hope that he did not. Beyond the making of the will, there is not the slightest virtue in the proceeding. In the first place the examination and sworn statement of the physicians would not be admitted in evidence by any competent court in any civilized land on earth.

Secondly, they would not, even if admitted, possess any intrinsic force whatever.

The first objection to the competency of such evidence would no doubt be that it was a mere exparte statement. The opposing counsel should have the right of cross-examining the witnesses; hence their extra-judicial statements could not be received, and surely the rule that would admit them would be monstrous.

One outside the legal profession might still urge, "but the court might cite them to appear." Why certainly; sans the sworn statement; for that simply means any competent physician might be subpoenaed to appear and testify, which has no bearing on the physical statement in writing.

Once more. Even admitting that such absurd proceeding were admitted, what would it prove? In all such cases the pursuer attacks on the ground of undue influence—or insanity. These questions may be determined by the judge, if tried before him, or by the jury under the instructions of the court.

First, then, as to undue influence: How could those physicians tell by a physical examination or otherwise that he was not under undue influence?

Here it is proposed to settle a judicial question out of court before physicians! On deliberation, Mrs. Langley herself would have laughed at the absurdity of such a course. Aside from all this though more is unnecessary), the testator would not know he was under undue influence if such were really the case. The condition is hypnotic, and the subject would always think himself free from undue influence.

As to his sanity: This is a question of fact generally mixed with questions of law. He himself could not pass upon his own sanity, for then (if insane) it would only be the opinion of an insane man. The bigotry and ignorance of judges actually renders them incompetent to give an unbiased opinion in such cases.

I see no sure way out. Suppose instead of a will the donor should in his lifetime deed the property to some Spiritual society. Then at his death the same evidence would be competent in an action to set the deed aside, which would be admissible to break or set aside the will.

The misfortune no doubt lies in the fact that Spiritualists generally swallow and back such egregious fraud as to raise the presumption of insanity.

Everyone understands nowadays that a so-called medium may be caught in fraud, acknowledge it and still go on accepted and indorsed by thousands of Spiritualists as a genuine medium. Until we can rid the old ship of such barnacles, all presumption will be against our sanity.

WHEN EVERYTHING GOES WRONG.

It is easy enough to be pleasant
When life flows by like a song,
But the man worth while is the one who will smile
When everything goes wrong.
For the test of the heart is trouble,
And it always comes with the years,
And the smile that is worth the praises
of earth
Is the smile that shines through tears.

It is easy enough to be prudent
When nothing tempts you to stray,
When without or within no voice of sin
Is luring your soul away.
But it's only a negative virtue
Until it is tried by fire,
And the life that is worth the honor of earth
Is the one that resists desire.

By the cynic, the sad, the fallen,
Who had no strength for the strife,
The world's highway is cumbered today—
They make up the item of life.
But the virtue that conquers passion,
And the sadness that hides in a smile—
It is these that are worth the homage
of earth,
For we find them but once in a while.

LIFE AND EXPERIENCE IN SPIRIT LAND

A Series of Letters From Prof. William Denton, Through the Mediumship of Carlyle Petersilea.

LETTER NUMBER EIGHT.

I would like to commence this letter with another rhyme, written long ago, when I was with you in the mortal form. Although written many years ago, as you count earth's time I have never had reason to regret that I wrote it, for it bears immortal truths within its lines. The little poem may not live forever—may even now be dead, and forgotten by most of you—but the little truth jewels set within it will sparkle on forever.

List to thy thought, as its gentle voice greets thee
And, sternly unshrinking, obey its behest;
Heed not the clamor of custom that meets thee;
Still doing thy duty, leave Heaven the rest.

Cherish thy thought; 'tis a sapling supernal,
Transplanted from heaven, to flourish below;
Food fit for gods it will yield thee eternal;
Neglected, its fruit will be sorrow and woe.

Live to thy thought; be the model God-given,
Thy guide, as the soul's walls from day to day rise!
Patiently build, thou shalt see unto heaven
A temple of beauty in grandeur arise.

Trust in thy thought; 'tis an anchor will hold thee
From drifting, when storms of adversity blow;
Compass and chart when night's black clouds enfold thee,
While steering thy bark from the islands of woe.

Utter thy thought; see thou lock not the coffer,
Thus meanly and miserly hiding it there;
Out with it boldly, not fearing the scoffer,
As bright as the sun, and as free as the air.

Follow thy thought; it will lead to the mountain;
Thy soul shall then busk where the flowers bloom ever,
Drink blessed draughts at Felicity's fountain,
Rejoicing with friends that no future shall sever.

These were my sentiments when with you in the mortal; they are my sentiments and I hope they ever will be. Men and women should not repress their thoughts or the utterance of them, and no medium should be muzzled.

The cause of truth would be more flourishing to-day if all mediums had been allowed to give utterance to that which the spirits wished to convey. No person who is not a medium should have the power to say to one who is, thus far shalt thou go and no farther; thus shalt thou say and not otherwise.

Now at this writing I have a great many thoughts to utter or write, rather—through this medium; not only to tell my thoughts, but to tell of things as I have found them.

How are you to know anything about this life unless we who are here tell you of it? Your own ideas of it may not be true. This life may be different from what you suppose it to be. Think what erroneous ideas man has had in the past, of what his future was to be. If a few grand souls had not arisen in their might and given utterance to their thoughts, to their convictions of truth, to that which the spirits of the so-called dead whispered to their souls, often holding them in a vise-like grip or spell in order to give utterance to some great truth as yet unknown to man, where, we ask, would the world be to-day? and we answer our own question: In the dark ages, under the rule of popes, bishops and priests, together with the rack and thumb-screw, and all the tortures of the Inquisition. So, hold not back thy thought, oh, man, but give it utterance; no matter if all men scorn you, that very thought may yet prove to be their savior.

Some may inquire at this juncture, if I am not still interested in geology? Yes; deeply so; but I am far more deeply interested in man. All nature has toiled together to bring forth man, he is the king, its crown; but man, as yet, upon your earth is in a very imperfect state. I thought as much when I was there with you, and I now know it. You may ask me how I know it? You may say, because spiritual beings are higher; but this is not an adequate reply. Spiritual beings are out of the body of flesh, consequently ought to be better and higher, according to natural law. "We all expect to be better when we are in the spiritual world, but we want to be something more here on earth."

Yes; that is just what you do want, and you would like me to tell you how the earthly world can be made better. I do not suppose there is a man on the earth to-day but what has an idea how it might be made better, and we think that no two men would agree as to the precise method by which it might be made better. The pope together with his vice-gerents think that if all the world were Catholics, counting their beads, mumbling prayers, prostrating themselves or kneeling and kissing the pope's toe, the world would be better; but other men, outside of the church, think it would be worse, far worse; that it would retrograde into the dark ages.

Now I agree with these other men outside of the church, in this idea, at least; but if these other men belong to some other sect—Methodist, Baptist or Presbyterian, they think that if all the world were like as they are, believed as they do, the world would be far better and happier; but the men outside of those churches think that the world would be going backward; and so do I.

Now there are other men who call themselves agnostics; they doubt very much if there is a spiritual world at all; they will tell you that it is better not to think so much about whether there is a higher world or not, but to confine your thoughts to the material life, get all the good out of that that you can and live together in peace and brotherly love.

Now this is all right as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough, and if all men thought thus the world would be at a stand-still: "Eat, drink and be merry, for to-morrow you die and know no more forever." Love your brother man for thereby you are happier. What incentive is there for a man to do more than to eat, drink, love his brother and die? Now if all men thought thus, the world would be filled with bloated stupidity, and man, at length, retrograde until he would be little above his ox; but you want me to tell you how the world may be bettered.

Spiritualists think if all men were Spiritualists the world would be better and they would progress into happiness as rapidly as the lightning express moves toward its destination; but I doubt this, also. Spiritualists are very much like other men; they like place, power, emolument, and a good salary; they really, some of them, want to dictate to other men very much as the popes and priests do—how they shall think and what they shall do, and if other men don't seem inclined to obey, they are soundly thrashed, abused, bullied and insulted, called hard names and found fault with generally, told they are stingy and apathetic.

Ah, vinegar never catches flies. But let me tell you that this is not true. Touch these same men who are called stingy and apathetic and a great many other hard names, touch them in the right place and their apathy would become blazing light, their supposed stinginess become like the generous flow of the waters of life. These men have been tied to rulers, churches, organizations, creeds, mummeries and flummeries long enough, and they don't want to get back into them again. They think it just as bad to be tied to a so-called Spiritual church or organization as one called by some other name—just as bad to be obliged to pay tribute to a Spiritual so-called pope, as one who is called a Catholic; and, as for missionaries, they have long been thoroughly disgusted with them; they think it insulting to their good sense and the good sense of other men that they must be obliged to pay tribute toward supporting a squad of missionaries. Really, the other churches have not been quite as bad as that; they have confined their missionary business mostly to the enlightenment of the so-called heathen or pagans.

Now I, William Denton, feel called upon to tell you what men really do want. They want the truth and nothing but the truth. One cannot force truth into any man from the outside. Truth, like everything else in nature, must grow from the inward to the outward. That is where all organizations and churches have made great mistakes. They have all tried to force men to believe thus and so, they have tried to force men to do just as they said they ought to do and what is the natural result? Men desire to use their own brains and think for themselves. Men desire to do what they think is right and not what some one else may think they ought to do; therefore, when they are approached in a dictatorial, fault-finding spirit, they rebel, as they ought to do. No man has a moral right to allow another man, or a body of men, to dictate to him what he shall or shall not do, what he shall or shall not believe or think; the moment he does so he is no longer a free man but a bond slave.

Freedom—freedom! I say—freedom to think, freedom to act, freedom to do or not to do as it pleaseth him. Of course I do not mean by this that a man has a right to wrong his brother man, rob or kill him, or wrong him in any way; but he has the right, the God-given right, to believe and think for himself. All men are started for heaven and immortality, but all do not take the same road to get there; in fact each man has an individual path of his own, and you had best let him follow it. Have done with ruling and rulers, whether they be called Spiritualists or Catholics, let truth take its own way to grow. You may tenderly care for it, you may nourish and water it. You may serve it, but do not trample rudely upon it, or try to force it out of its natural bent.

WILLIAM DENTON.

A Good Editorial.

On Saturday, March 29, the New York Daily Journal, owned and edited by W. R. Hearst, printed the following leading editorial, which the Citizen commends to the careful attention of those editors who quake in their shoes for fear of giving offence to Rome. The bill in the New York Assembly was drawn up by Romanist priests:

A bill introduced in the Legislature of the state of New York provided for an appropriation of $15 per year for every child educated in a religious school.

It appears to have been drawn in the interest of no religion in particular—it applies to Methodists, Episcopalians, Roman Catholics, Jews, and others.

This bill, happily dead for the season, is unrepublican, illegal, unconstitutional, pernicious, and utterly outrageous. The man guilty of presenting it to the Legislature of this state is unfit to hold public office. It proves among other things that he has never read the Constitution of the State of New York, which says:

"Neither the state nor any subdivision thereof shall use its property or credit or any public money, or authorize or permit either to be used, directly or indirectly, in aid or maintenance, other than for examination and inspection, of any school or institution of learning wholly or in part under the control or direction of any religious denomination, or in which any denominational tenet or doctrine is taught."

That is plain enough, is it not?

It is desirable that every child's education should include religious teaching.

A child is unfortunate that grows up ignorant of the gratitude which it should feel toward the power which has created and which regulates the universe.

But the government of the United States and the government of every state absolutely prohibit the idea of public support of religion.

The man who worships a snake has exactly the same legal claim on a public appropriation for his religious teachings as the man who worships the Almighty.

The American feeling was expressed in the Constitution at the very inception of the government. It was admirably expressed again by Gen. Grant, who helped to save the government, and who said:

"Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the church, and private school, supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the church and state forever apart."

There are hundreds of religions, and every religion in its turn is questioned by citizens perfectly honest.

There are facts which are unquestioned by no citizen outside of an insane asylum.

The business of the public school and of public school funds is to inculcate these facts, which no one questions.

Each person may select for his children the religious view which he chooses, and teach that view at his own expense.

But that parent or religious teacher degrades himself and proves he is himself unworthy of American citizenship who seeks to defeat the letter of the Constitution and offend the public sentiment of America by appropriating public money for the purposes of private religion.—The Citizen, Boston, Mass.

ANGEL LOVE.

Oh! weary, half-famished, and pining for Love
In this world that might list to the angels above,—
And learn how they live, how they labor and love.

Ever calm, ever patient and tender of speech,
Their thoughts flow in union, as waves to the beach,
And pure are the lessons they joyfully teach.

They pity earths children half-starved from their birth,
For the love that would brighten their homes and their hearth,
For the love that would make them bright jewels of worth.

They tenderly pity the offspring of shame,
But their hearts never censure, their lips never blame,
But in love for the lowly, they hallow God's name.

So pity and love them, oh child of the earth!
And thy heart shall have gladness, thy soul shall have mirth,
And thoult know where the fountains of joy have their birth.

Some minds are like streams flowing on to the sea
Thro' fields where the sunshine lies placid and free,
Where the clover wind-wafted, coquets with the bee.

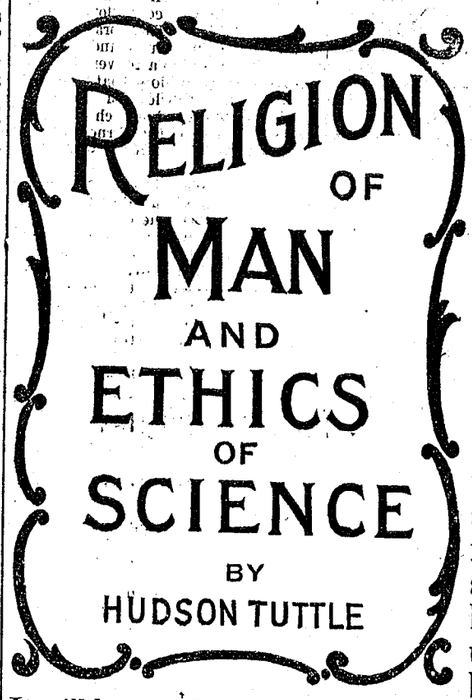
Some are like mountain rills, dashing along
Over rocks and through valleys with laughter and song,
But checked, they plunge on down abysses of wrong.

But some, like great rivers, too closely confined,
Fret the rocks that oppose them, and silently find,—
Or make in their progress grand canons of mind,—

Deep, dark and mysterious, wild gorges of gloom
They may seem, and yet in them sweet wild flowers may bloom,
And gems and fine gold in their caverns find room.

No depths of man's nature are barren of good,—
Over desolate rocks swept the winds and the flood,
And the forests arose that for centuries have stood.

Over all their fair tresses the Summer had care,
Her soft breezes fanned them, and birds of the air
Made nests in their branches and warbled love's prayer.



So over men's hearts let the sweet waters flow,
And the rocks shall be melted now hard'ning below,
And the vine and the roses will cling there and grow.

Religion of Man and Ethics of Science.

We take extreme pleasure in announcing that our next Premium Book will be by Hudson Tuttle, and will bear the above title. It is one of the best books that ever emanated from the pen of this gifted man and will fill a most important niche in the list of premiums sent out by this office. It will be neatly and substantially bound in cloth, and will be sent out for 25 cents, postage and express prepaid, to those who send in their subscription for one year for The Progressive Thinker, making it almost a gift to our subscribers. Orders will now be filed for it, and it will be forwarded as soon as printed and bound, which will be in about three weeks. Until June 1, that remarkable book, A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands, will also be sent out for 25 cents. For prices of the other Premium Books, see special announcement. No other bookseller, no other firm on this globe of ours ever furnished books at so low a price (almost a gift) as The Progressive Thinker. We have been instrumental in founding the nucleus of a grand Spiritualistic and Occult library in thousands of homes. Now is the time to send in your subscription.

HEREDITARY INFLUENCES.

Their Power Over Human Life.

The biblical assertion that "the sins of the parents shall be visited upon the children even to the third and fourth generation," is substantiated by the evidence drawn from the facts taken from actual life, and presented in such overwhelming numbers that he who runs can read the record and affirm the truth of the statement. Asserting that it is not an act of justice to compel the succeding generation to carry the burden resulting from the violation of the laws pertaining to the spiritual, moral and physical status of mankind, does not change the facts of the case regarding the right or wrong of such a law, or remove any of the burden which its enforcement imposed upon the succeeding generations. When we come to give this question the close study that is required to enable us to understand the laws pertaining to that subject, we see that it is one of the immutable laws of the universe; and the only way that human life can prevent its operation is to remove the causes that demand its enforcement; and that it should not nor could not be otherwise. Moving in harmony with that law there is one that says it is possible for life to outgrow the influences of heredity. The existence of that law is also proven by the overwhelming evidence given in the successful efforts made by each generation to leave to its successor a more advanced heritage than was received from its successor.

To nullify the operation of that law which says that the coming generations must suffer for the violations of life's obligations by its predecessors would remove one great incentive to arouse the energies of those coming generations to advance; leaving them willing to plod along, satisfied with a mere tread-mill existence. That they are able to break away from the bondage imposed upon them by environment and heredity, assert their independence of any conditions that would seek to impede their growth, is evidence that the progressive forces are the strongest; that the power of those reactionary influences is the result of causes which can be removed.

Let us take a retrospective view of human life and see what it has had to contend with during the period of its advancement to its present condition; and see the pit from which it was dug, and we will be ready to proclaim that if there is a miracle enacted in life, that if such things exist, then one certainly was wrought in the wonderful transformation that has taken place. Traveling back, down the corridors of time, down into the twilight and darkness of the historic and prehistoric past, and if we are not able to see and understand his beginning, we can view enough of his record to convince us that if the power of hereditary influences had been dominant, he not being able to triumph over his environment, his companionship would still be with the lowest forms of life. We see him while yet an inhabitant of that lower world manifesting powers that were destined to carry him out of that primitive realm from whence he has been steadily ascending. In vision we see him asserting his birthright, proclaiming himself the forerunner of an exalted and glorious race; possessing in embryo all of the progressive energies that were to be manifested in the coming age, and which have enabled him to triumph over the inertia which would have caused him to be satisfied with his present condition, and has enabled him to give evidence that he will fulfill the obligation placed upon him by the command to have dominion over the material universe, and has also been enabled to solve some of the problems that pertain to the more subtle and unseen forces of life.

Where did human life receive and by what method did it come into possession of that element of its organization which has been more powerful than environment and heredity, enabling it to give battle and to triumph over those powerful antagonists? While they can claim local and temporary triumph, they have not been able to suppress the energy which has moved forward the great body of humanity, and enabled it through unnumbered generations to leave as each passed on a little higher phase of life than the one preceding. Can materialism answer the question, where did human life receive that unconquerable energy which has enabled it to overcome the environments of its former degraded condition and mount as on the wings of light and catch a glimpse of that mighty and glorious destiny which awaits it, the result of its struggles and triumph over opposing forces? We assert that materialism cannot answer that question, because it is a power emanating from a battery whose voltage is so great that it cannot be computed by materialistic science.

To assert that the power manifested by that energy is also an hereditary influence that has come down with him from the past and has developed with him, which is true, but that assertion upsets the materialistic theory of life, proving that there is something more to life than what can be seen and felt by the material organism. When the moral and spiritual forces first demanded recognition as factors in life that could not be ignored, that power which has made and which is making such triumphal marches was in its inception, but it was there, and though feeble were its efforts it was an increasing light, becoming as the ages rolled on more brilliant from the diffusion of that internal energy with which it is possessed; while the forces coming from the animal inheritance which formerly were so dominant have been weakening their hold upon human life. One is destined to increase, the other to decrease. One is to overthrow the boundary lines of time and space, having inscribed on its banner immortal youth; the other age is enfeebling it, and less potent are its forces to control human destiny.

Dealing merely with the effects of certain causes that are having a powerful influence over individual and national life with the desire to improve conditions is not very effective; it is at best but patchwork. No doubt we need asylums and reformatories where life's unfortunates, victims of hereditary influences of a degrading nature can be placed and have the kindest consideration shown them with the object in view of reformation; but if the vision does not extend any further there will always be enough to keep them replenished. Down deep in the substratum of life's forces is the turbulent current of man's animalistic powers that are accountable for the moral and physical degradation that we see made manifest in the criminal records of the times; and until those malignant causes are moved by advancing the type of hereditary influences so that they will more perfectly reflect the higher forces of the soul, instead of as at present having such a large percentage of the lower, society will be playing a losing game.

Through the prehistoric stone age of man's existence he was advancing, by a slow and painful process he fought his way upward inch by inch in opposition to the forces of heredity which would have held him down to the lower levels. When the metallic age dawned upon him his pace was quickened, the powers of his being were more active through his ability to utilize the forces of nature to a greater extent than formerly, which in his previous condition were dormant, awaiting the development of his ability to utilize them. As he further advanced and became able to understand the more subtle forces of steam and electricity, the old boundary line of the universe was removed, obstacles which were once thought insurmountable became as chaff in the wind; proving the truth of the fact that environment and heredity are only temporary condition which the more powerful forces are able to remove.

As human life has dealt with the material forces of the universe, moving on from victory to victory over the powers in opposition, so it will respond to the greater life energies of its moral and spiritual nature and be able to leave to each succeding generation a more perfect heritage than it received from its predecessors. In reviewing the power and influence of this force the fact is very apparent that even with our present civilization that question is but little understood; the mass of mankind are too materialistic to give that attention which the subject demands; they continue to produce and transmit conditions which are strengthening the bonds which hereditary influences are having over their lives.

Acknowledging the fact that those influences are powerful factors in the shaping of human destiny either in its degradation or betterment, recognizing it as simply one of the forces of life regardless of the results accomplished, the most important problem to solve is, how can the current which is carrying the malignant forces of heredity be purified, and the whole power of that influence be used in combination with the other progressive energies of human life, greatly augmenting the uplifting forces? From our view point it is the most important problem which humanity is called upon to solve. Controlling the trusts, solving the currency and tariff problems is of secondary importance when compared with this one overshadowing subject. It is the one on which hangs the decision of whether mankind shall with a firm step march rapidly forward, leaving their old environments, and enter into a newer and higher type of civilization, or struggle along with the awful load of old conditions which they are carrying; causing its progress to be vacillating, going three steps forward and two backward.

There is inspiration in possessing the knowledge that there are powers in the human soul which are irrepressible, that know not such a word as defeat. And while recognizing the fact that hereditary influences can for a time check the current of progressive energies, it will eventually overflow all barriers, carrying the soul onward and upward. There is a greater law, one having a more powerful influence over the human soul than the one that tells the ambitious soul that what was acceptable to past generations is good enough for the present. To obey that greater law is to live, to burst the shell of customs, senseless forms and ceremonies, and rise into a glorious resurrection. Stimulated by this mighty energy the soul will create new precedents, establish higher laws than the ones by which it was formerly governed. Slavery to the wrong is abolished, and the law of liberty is proclaimed; enabling all who acknowledge its power to more perfectly understand the truth pertaining to life's obligations, and will see the beauty and glory of its perfectedness in the lives of those whose characters have been moulded by its influence.

Heredity is provincial in its nature, it seeks to circumscribe to narrow limits the boundary lines over which it would prohibit the soul from going; telling it that recognition must not be accorded to the brother who resides across the boundary which it has arbitrarily placed. Such conditions belong to the period of the cave man, but not to the phase of life represented by human beings who have grown to that point where they can recognize the universal brotherhood regardless of race, color or creed.

Every generation as it has appeared upon the stage of action has had to announce a new declaration of independence, that it must more perfectly recognize and acknowledge the power and immortality of the truth than its predecessors had done; that the fossils and mummies of past generations cannot represent the living, and the parchments upon which their laws were recorded will not be sufficient on which to engrave the thoughts and acts of the living present.

Great occasions develop great souls, bring them to the front ranks where they assume their rightful prerogative; become leaders of the race; and many of them started under very humble conditions; and to the casual observer it appeared that heredity had placed barriers in their pathway which it was impossible for them to remove; but they were surmounted, with the fact very apparent that they held in reserve intellectual and spiritual powers which, if it had not been for those great occasions, they would have remained in abeyance, and moved among the great body of their fellow beings unobserved and not suspected of possessing any faculties superior to the rank and file; they can rightfully be numbered with that company who were seen in vision, who had come up out of great tribulation, had broken from the bondage to the lower world and asserted their right to a citizenship in the higher; giving proof of the fact that all of their fellow-beings were also entitled to the same rights and privileges which they possess, and there are no obstacles so great that they could successfully dispute the assumption of that right. This may be an idealistic view of life's possibilities, and that the great body of humanity do not realize the existence of the higher powers of their soul; but they are there and will yet make their presence known, and will obey the injunction to "Build thou more stately mansions, O my soul, as the swift seasons roll."

The Southern Cassadaga.

The eighth annual convention of Southern Cassadaga closed on March 16 with a large attendance. The camp this year has been a financial and spiritual success. Perfect harmony has prevailed from the start to the close. The speakers and mediums have all worked for the upbuilding of the camp. There has been a class of people here this winter that have contributed money and good wishes, which has been a great help to the cause, and moral help that will be felt outside of these lovely grounds. There have been many improvements this year, there will be more next. Ten leases were made to people who will build cottages in the near future. Mr. E. W. Bond has just completed a new cottage. Dr. G. W. Hilligoss, of Anderson, Ind., will build a cottage next winter.

The fifty-fourth anniversary of Modern Spiritualism was celebrated Sunday, March 30. There was a good attendance. The pavilion was decorated with roses and lilies. Mr. Bond gave a short talk which was very interesting. Mrs. C. E. Twing and Mrs. Kate Stiles were the speakers of the day. That closed our meetings for this year.

On March 15 our election was held, with the following officers for another year: E. W. Bond, president, Willoughby, Ohio; Dr. G. N. Hilligoss, vice-president, Anderson, Ind.; Herbert Twing, secretary and treasurer, Westfield, N. Y.; Mrs. J. D. Palmer, corresponding secretary, Willoughby, Ohio. Trustees: F. E. Bond, DeLand, Fla.; A. A. Butler, Brecksville, Ohio; W. F. Peck, St. Louis, Mo.

The officers of the Southern Cassadaga extend their thanks to The Progressive Thinker for the many kindnesses shown to the association in the past. We hope next year to show our gratitude in a more substantial way.

Total price to our subscribers, $2.50.

The Progressive Thinker one year and the eight Divine Plan books, $3.50.

In order to assist in forming a Spiritual and Occult Library in every Spiritualist's home, these eight valuable books, substantially and elegantly bound in cloth, are furnished to our subscribers for $2.50. We are able to do this, from the fact that the authors make no charge for the vast amount of labor bestowed on these works, and which extended over many years. That is why you are getting these intensely interesting books for the price you do. We are only carrying out the Divine Plan, inaugurated only by The Progressive Thinker. There are thousands of our subscribers who have no Spiritualist or Occult library, and this inducement is offered in order that they may commence forming one at once, and thus keep in line with the advancing procession. The postage on the above books and expense of mailing is about 95 cents, hence you are receiving them at an exceedingly low price—simply the result of modern enterprise combined with a desire to do good.

"After Her Death. The Story of a Summer." By Lilian Whiting. No mind that loves spiritual thought can fail to be fed and delighted with this book. Beautiful spiritual thought, combining advanced ideas on the finer and ethereal phases of Spiritualism, leading the mind onward into the purer atmosphere of exalted spiritual truth. A book for the higher life. For sale at this office. Price, cloth $1.

"Right Living." By Susan H. Wixon. The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principle of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in Children's Lyceum. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. Cloth $1 For sale at this office.

"Poems of Progress." By Lizzie Doten. In this volume, this peerless poet of Spiritualism may be read in her varied moods, "from grave to gay, from lively to severe." It is a book to be treasured and richly enjoyed by all who love genuine poetry, and especially by Spiritualists. The volume is tastily printed and bound. Price $1.

"The Pantheism of Modern Science." By F. E. Titus, Barrister, Toronto, Canada. A summary of recent investigations into Life, Force and Substance, and conclusions therefrom. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"The Kingship of Self-Control." By Wm. George Jordan. It treats of the crimes of the tongue, the Red Tape duty, the supreme charity of the world, the revelation of reserve power, etc. Price 30 cents. For sale at this office.

"The Gospel of Buddha, According to Old Records." Told by Paul Carus. This book is heartily commended to students of the science of religions, and to all who would gain a fair conception of Buddhism in its spirit and living principles. Spiritualist or Christian can scarcely read it without spiritual profit. Price $1. For sale at this office.

IMPORTANT MATTER FROM OUR FOREIGN EXCHANGES

THE TWO WORLDS, MANCHESTER, ENGLAND.

THE ROCHESTER RAPS.

How much those apparently insignificant raps heard in the little log cabin fifty-four years ago have to answer for cannot be estimated; but at the recurrence of their birthday the Spiritualistic world invariably turns its gaze toward the humble starting point of the greatest modern movement, their own.

It is strange to note at this time how wonderfully vital has been the system which found its needed impetus in the mediumistic powers of the little Fox girls.

The brief history of the rise and progress of Spiritualism teems with revolutionary changes, startling effects, and bizarre happenings. We discover numbers of cranks who, first attracted to Spiritualism by its liberal teachings, find it too cramped for their exalted minds, and (to its advantage) soar off to empyrean heavens of their own. Such a body, for instance, were the "Angelites," who had been Spiritualists, 'but had progressed to far brighter planes of communion than those open to the general body of believers."

The lady who was one of the organizers of this wondrous movement declared that "the angels" brought them gold, silver, bank notes, and other trash—good enough for this wretched world, but useless in the realms above! Several wealthy families were induced to throw in their lot with the "Angelites," and to go and live on the estate; there were wonderful communications, as the result of which all the dross of earth was pooled for the good of all. Then, one fine morning it was found that the high-souled, purified, and exalted promoters of this heaven-upon-earth had disappeared with the dollars, and left their miserable dupes stranded, ruined.

There was also the discovery of a "new motive power" made by a man who had reached the "exalted state." He made an electric motor fashioned after the form of the human organism. Each wire was precious, each plate of zinc and copper was clothed with symbolized meanings; but it never moved until a mob of excited people burst into its shelter, and, in the words of the inventor, "tore out the heart of the mechanism, trampled it beneath their feet, and scattered it to the four winds of heaven." Thus ended another "sublime" movement which was destined to bless humanity. This "electric child" was to be the Messiah re-born. But the world is yet awaiting the realization of this "revelation from the Electrizers of the higher spheres."

Spiritualism has little room for cranks, and so we find them relieving her of a burden it would be impossible for her to bear.

We, of course, do not in the foregoing sentence allude to our friends the Theosophists; but it is interesting to note that this modern movement is also a branch of the Spiritualistic tree; also the outcome of an endeavor after "Higher Spiritualism."

Then comes the increasing body of Mental Scientists, the Christian Scientists, numberless orders, leagues, fraternities, all after something "higher" than Spiritualism; but all taking their rise from or receiving their impetus from the derided central energy.

The plain fact of spirit return, its teaching of divine harmony, and its practical appeal to the hearts and lives of men on this plane, is not sufficient for many years; and such, struck with the occult possibilities of this system, dive more and more deeply into the depths of self-manufactured mystery until they are at last "compelled to withdraw for the purpose of higher attainment." The result of thus theorizing on the occult plane has been often disastrous, and has frequently opened the door to impudent fraud and criminal deceit.

It would be well if these would-be eagles could have their wings clipped, often in the flight of their phantasies neglect the duty which lies nearest at hand. "Soaring to heights of rapture" may be a charming effect; but such operation, unfortunately, often leads to mental anesthesia, and the heaven-intoxicated wretch becomes useless for the true labor of the Father's vineyard. Too much occultism is like too much opium.

To us the message of this fifty-fourth anniversary is one of practical significance. Spiritualism in its plain simplicity is all-sufficient as an incentive to work for the well-being of humanity. Yet large numbers allow themselves to be sidetracked by the occult switch, and then lose the golden opportunity for sowing and reaping an abundant harvest in the world-field which they would have enjoyed had they kept to the main line.

Be noble, think loftily, vibrate spiritually; by all means these are points of honorable attainment. But to us the message comes to-day, "Tell them that while passive spirituality may bring comfort and solace to the man in the silence of his soul, active—active spirituality is needed, in which spirit and body shall harmoniously labor, in which physical outworking of spiritual visions and realizations shall be accomplished, in which men shall strive to form in the physical the ideal of the spiritual. Thus shall the movement of Spiritualism be blessed; thus from its chaos shall be evolved order; thus shall its weakness become strength and its poverty become riches; thus shall it attain power to turn the wilderness of the city into a garden of flowers and the misery of humanity into a paean of triumph.

ONLY A VEIL.

The nearness of heaven is suggested by the epithet "veil." There is only a veil between us and heaven! A veil is the thinnest and frailest of all conceivable partitions. It is but a fine tissue, a delicate fabric of embroidery. It waves in the wind; the touch of a child may stir it, an accident may rend it; the silent action of time will moulder it away. The veil that conceals heaven is only our embodied existence; and though fearfully and wonderfully made, it is only wrought out of our frail mortality. So slight is it that the puncture of a thorn, the touch of an insect's sting, the breath of an infected atmosphere may make it shake and fall. In a bound, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, in the throb of a pulse, in the flash of a thought we may start into disembodied spirits. There is but a step between you and death; between you and heaven there is but a veil!

THE PSYCHIC SIGNIFICANCE OF COLOR.

There is a great deal of interest now manifest in the significance of colors all over the world, and we are happy to be able to throw some light upon such interesting experiences as those of our present correspondent, which, by the way, are by no means uncommon among sensitives, and sensitive people are at present extremely numerous.

The three primary colors, red, yellow and blue, signify according to the most ancient and reliable occult or theosophic testimony, love (red), wisdom (yellow), and manifested truth (blue). Red is the fatherly and yellow the motherly color, blue being the color of the offspring from a truly harmonious union.

Leaving the mysterious realm of occultism and enter the region of practical modern therapeutics, we find that Dr. E. D. Babbitt (now of California), in his splendid work entitled "Principles of Light and Color," has given us a very complete and highly useful description of the medical value of all the colors of the spectrum, and we know from experience that chromopathic treatment often completely succeeds where other measures have failed.

In discussing the always interesting though somewhat veiled subject of the colors of human auras it is very largely admitted as an outcome of widely concurrent clairvoyant testimony that the clearness or dullness of a special tint or hue, together with the special direction of its tendency as it emanates from the psychic body, accurately reveals the moral and mental status of whoever it proceeds from.

When any color is seen bright, clear, and ascending it betokens mortal and mental pureness and exalted sentiment; but when any color emanates murkily and trends downward it evinces a disposition the reverse of candid and aspiring. The effects usually produced by color are easily determined by experiment, and in broad outline we may safely vouch for the following declaration, which is a highly concentrated epitome of Dr. Babbitt's famous system, as elaborated in his learned works on chromopathy.

Red is the right color to employ in all cases where it is desirable to stimulate the patient to greater excitability, and its use always suggests vigor and courage; it is therefore par excellence a mental and physical tonic or invigorator.

Blue is the cooling sedative color, which antidotes fevers and allays every febrile tendency; its use is counselled in all cases requiring to be soothed or calmed.

Yellow or amber is valuable for intellectual stimulation; it is nerve-animating, and assists brain workers to accomplish a large amount of head work as distinguished from manual effort, without experiencing unpleasant reaction or subsequent fatigue.

Purple, which is a combination of red with blue, suggests a healthy stimulus coupled with a sense of repose. It is therefore to be highly recommended in a great variety of situations, and can be employed more frequently with greater advantage than any other single color.

Pink always suggests hope, and is a counter suggestion of great service and most beneficent utility wherever a tendency to pessimism or despair has been prominent.

Green, the color of all nature's promises of coming variegated glory, is the special antidote to nostalgia, or homesickness. It can be effectively introduced to counteract general restlessness or sense of dissatisfaction with surroundings.

Violet is the most spiritually suggestive of all colors, and can be used with great success in rooms where people congregate or where one is accustomed to sit alone in quest of interior enlightenment.

Through colored glass the shining of the solar ray or electric light will produce the most perfect results, but all articles of furniture and of wearing apparel exert a decided influence on sensitive persons by virtue of the special predominating color.

All neutral tints are quieting as they approach to white, and depressing as they slide toward black. Precious stones have in a particular degree embodied something of the solar radiance during their geologic formation. They are often, therefore, when judiciously selected, of decided benefit to the wearer.

LIGHT, LONDON, ENGLAND.

SPIRITUALISM IN NORWAY AND SWEDEN.

As many of my friends have asked me to write about my experiences in Scandinavia, permit me to say that Spiritualism in Sweden and Norway is of long standing, and some of the best English and American mediums have visited both countries. I met many people who knew Mr. Eglinton, Dr. Slade, Mrs. Fay, and last, but not least, Madame d'Esperance, who is loved and honored for her self-sacrificing work on the Continent. But, although the climate and conditions generally are good, yet in the whole of Norway and Sweden, so far as I am aware, there is not a clairvoyant who can give a test. I think I am correct in saying that I was the first clairvoyant who visited Sweden to work for Spiritualism.

Some of the readers of Light, I find, are under the impression that my reception in Stockholm was not a good one, because, in her kindly letters in Light, of March 15, the Princess Karadja pointed out some of the difficulties I had to contend with; but I am pleased to say that every one I met in Sweden and Norway was most kind and sympathetic, and both Spiritualists and non-Spiritualists put themselves out of the way to make me happy and comfortable, and the only rudeness I received was from an Englishman. The representatives of the press of Stockholm interviewed me and were very much kinder to me than those of London papers; but I regret that I cannot say the same regarding their treatment of the Princess Karadja, whose recent nervous breakdown was due to her great effort to correct and counteract the mis-statements and misrepresentations of the newspapers all over Sweden. There is, however, another side to the picture. The people are tired of the State church; at the same time materialism does not satisfy them; and Princess Karadja's book, "Towards the Light," which has been translated into well-nigh every other language but English, has made many a heart hungry for the truths of Spiritualism. The Spiritualists meet at each other's houses and hold seances at which they get a little automatic writing, and read and translate Light (which, by the way, is light to the struggling ones there), and in Norway there are many Spiritualists who are the converts of a gentleman who was brought to Spiritualism in South America. There is a Spiritualist paper edited by Mr. Torstenton, of Skien, and the faithful few struggle on, endeavoring to help their countrymen to realize that there is no death. The good work of Mr. Matthews Fidler is not forgotten; and how truly his memory is loved both in Sweden and Norway eternity alone can reveal! I feel sure that the readers of Light will extend their deep sympathy to the Princess Karadja in the sufferings which have resulted from her noble endeavors to spread the knowledge of truth in her country, against the opposition of clergy, doctors, college professors, and an unchivalrous public press, and wish her a speedy restoration to health and strength.

As an illustration of the eagerness of the people to know the truth, I may mention that I met a lady in Christiania who had traveled two hundred miles to attend the seance, during the rigor of a Norwegian winter—and those only who have experienced it can understand what that means. At Stockholm, too, there was an old peasant woman who came twenty-five miles over an ice-bound sea to Princess Karadja, to get proof of her son's death (and entrance into life), for he had left home in a boat and was never heard of again. Spiritualism has brought light to many, and "the tears have thereby been wiped from many eyes." May God bless the workers and brave upholders of truth in the lovely lands of Sweden and Norway.

A SPIRITIST ARTIST.

Among the Berlin Spiritists another luminary has been discovered in the person of a certain Herr Machner, a painter, who claims to work by "inspiration." Machner, who is a tanner by trade, is thirty-five years old, and has suddenly taken to painting. He has never received any lessons in drawing or in the use of colors. His work principally consists of fantastic flower and tree designs, and extraordinary landscapes "out of his head," in which peculiarities of tropical and temperate zones are mixed together. Machner is utterly unable to draw from nature, and only devotes himself to his singular art when the "inspiration" seizes him. Art critics who have seen his pictures are surprised at their striking brilliancy of color and bold outline of drawing. He works with extraordinary rapidity, and it is said "almost unconsciously."

REINCARNATION.

What Dr. Savage Says on the Subject.

The following extract on reincarnation is taken from Dr. M. J. Savage's latest book, "The Passing and Permanent in Religion," pages 304-305. It is worthy the serious attention of every lover of truth:

"And here comes a question which I can only touch upon. If we are to progress in the other world, is it necessary that we should be reincarnated over and over again, and come back here and go through many earthly experiences? There are a great many wise people telling us at the present time that it is necessary for us to live every conceivable kind of life here, and go through every conceivable experience, from the prince to the pauper, from the saint to the wildest and worst sinner. I will stop long enough simply to say that I do not see why. When somebody gives me a reason for that opinion, I will try to understand it.

"There is another thing that the believers in reincarnation are accustomed to say to us, that we must have it to explain the injustice of the world. To me it does not explain the injustice of the world; it only pushes it back out of sight. If it was sin in the life before this one which led to the suffering I am going through in this, what led to the suffering I went through in the last? They tell us it was the sin in the one that preceded, and so on back; you simply keep on pushing it back through countless millions of years, and never get anywhere. They say all the evils are to be explained by what happened in the life preceding; but if you keep pushing back life after life, you have got to get to the end of it sometime, and then you have the same problem facing you as you have now.

"Either we were always just alike, if we have been living forever, or else we were always different, or else we were made alike in the first place, and given different environments which caused the differences in us. In either case, God is ultimately responsible for all the diversities and differences of character; so that this does not explain things any more than if you take a puzzle which I do not understand and hide it behind a curtain. When I go behind the curtain it is still there, and I do not understand it any better, and a million curtains would make no difference. It would be the same thing when you came to the last one: it would be the same old puzzle. If it were proved to me to be true, of course no objection would make it untrue; but still it would not be desirable to me.

"Suppose the person that I love best in all the world should die, and I live on for twenty-five years. By the time I got there that person might be reincarnated. Instead of looking forward to meet her, I should have to be waiting for her. By the time she got back I might be reincarnated. For anything I can see, we might be missing each other in this way for several millions of years.

"It seems to me a hopeless kind of doctrine any way you take it; and the curious fact is—and this I confess does puzzle me beyond expression—that all the Hindus, all the Buddhists, twice over as many people as there are Christians on the face of the earth, are engaged with their utmost power—all their philosophies, all their religions, exist to the one end—in trying to get rid of being incarnated; while here we are picking it up as though it were a new find, and something very delightful. The one object of all their religions is to escape it. Before we take it up too readily, I think it would be worth while to find out why they are working so hard to get rid of it.

"So reincarnation does not give me any hope as I look forward to another life."

A. J. WEAVER.

Old Orchard, Maine.

Anniversary at Indianapolis.

The anniversary of Modern Spiritualism was celebrated this year with greater enthusiasm than at any previous time in our history. Indeed at no time has there been so general an interest among the more intelligent classes as now. This condition is augmented by the fact that the First Spiritualist church is recognized as one of the leading liberalizing institutions of our city's life. And this condition is due largely, also, to the fact that as a class our mediums are such as have the confidence of those who come in contact with the phenomena.

As in the past, the custom of bringing floral offerings to the church in remembrance of the arisen friends, was continued, and the entire front of the church was a mass of brilliant flowers of every hue and kind, arranged with artistic skill.

On Saturday evening the ladies gave a musical and literary entertainment. On Sunday morning, Mrs. Beuhland gave a beautiful discourse, an impassioned plea for a more spiritual life, and impressed all who heard her as one who comes in touch with the spiritual in life. She was followed by Mr. Jackson, a sensitive of remarkable power, whose spirit communications were perfect, and revealed her to be a medium ranking among the best in the country.

On Sunday evening there assembled at the church the largest and one of the most intelligent audiences ever assembled in our city in the name of Spiritualism. Long before the services began the crowd had to be turned away from the church, it being crowded to suffocation. After appropriate music, the Reverend Cantrell, of the People's church, delivered a lecture on the "Power of Love." His lecture was marked by that earnestness born of a soul not only conscious of immortality, but one in direct touch with human life, as found here and now. His earnest appeals to his hearers, in behalf of the unfortunate, those whose lines were cast in almost hopeless conditions, was frequently applauded. This brave and fearless champion of Truth and social reform is destined to be a power in the great liberalizing evolution, that is now revolutionizing the world. In his efforts in establishing a liberal church in this city he is receiving the earnest support of all classes outside of the domain of orthodoxy.

After the lecture, Mrs. Josephine Ropp gave spirit communications. This lady is unquestionably one of the greatest of test mediums, and rarely, if ever, makes a mistake, and on this occasion gave one of her best seances.

Everything connected with the anniversary exercises here gives renewed encouragement to the earnest workers who bear the burdens of the cause in our city.

RICHARD B. GRUELLE.

VARIOUS EXPERIENCES

Of a Worker in the Wide Field.

I find the interest in Spiritualism is growing daily, and everywhere you hear the world calling for its grand truths.

After concluding a four month's work in Milwaukee, I went to Pittsburg to fill an engagement with the First Spiritual Society of that place.

I found there one of the most flourishing societies in the United States, presided over by Mr. Stephens, who is a most proficient officer. Mr. Knight, the secretary, is an able and conscientious gentleman, and very much up-to-date in all his work, while Bro. Stubbs and the entire executive board are such as know how to manage the business end of the work.

The large hall was crowded with anxious seekers after truth.

The Ladies' Aid, of which Sister Ahall is president, is a strong, energetic body of faithful women who merit the appreciation of everyone who visits their meetings.

The last Thursday of March was a gala day for the ladies. We celebrated the anniversary of Spiritualism in combination with the annual bazaar, which netted something over one hundred and thirty dollars, all through the untiring efforts of this earnest band of women workers.

My engagement ended the last Sunday in March, with a promise of my returning to serve the society again next season.

From Pittsburg I went to Wheeling, W. Va., for a three nights' session on my way West. At this place I found the same energetic spirit. The president is one of those whole-souled gentlemen whose heart is in the cause, and Mrs. Carroll, the secretary, is a ceaseless worker.

The society has Frank Ripley as speaker and medium, and all seemed very much pleased with his work. They have re-engaged him for April.

The hall was beautifully decorated with potted plants, about fifty in number, and the atmosphere was laden with rich perfume, as they seemed to welcome the visits from another world.

From Wheeling I came to Evansville, Ind., where I find the society owning their own temple, and while this society is not as strong as the former one, it bids fair to become so in time through the earnest, hard-working president, Bro. Goldsmith, and his little band of workers. This society has mostly employed home talent, but under Bro. Goldsmith's ministrations he has secured some of the best talent available, and seeks to draw the best to the temple, by combining the home and new talent. The home mediums doing the Sunday morning work, the visiting workers the evening.

There seems to be a great demand for lecturers and test mediums, which indicates the interest in Spiritualism is alive. Every moment of my time is occupied and calls are coming in from all directions.

I forgot to mention my stay of a month in Peoria, Ill., which was indeed crowned with success. Great interest was manifested in both public and private work in this place, as well as in Leroy and Winslow, places I visited during the month of February.

The world is ripe for the demonstration of the phenomena and the instructions given through the philosophy of Spiritualism, and my prayer is that all earnest workers will continue to give their purest and best to the seekers after truth.

Evansville, Ind.

Lily Dale Camp.

The annual March meeting of the C. L. F. A. trustees was held on the Association grounds, March 27, for the transaction of important business matters relative to the mid-summer session of 1902, it having been decreed that said session shall open July 11, closing August 24.

The inaugural week will present as platform attractions, Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, Rev. Moses Hull and Miss Lizzie Harlow. During the closing week Rev. B. F. Austin, Mr. Thomas Grimshaw and Mr. W. J. Colville, will be the speakers. Other talent engaged for the intermediate period are Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, Mr. F. A. Wiggin, Mr. Lyman C. Howe, Mr. H. D. Barrett, Hon. John J. Lentz, Rev. Anna H. Shaw and probably a few more with whom negotiations are now pending.

It will be gratifying to the lover of music, possessing an artistic ear, to know that the celebrated Northwestern Band and Orchestra, whose daily open air concerts are the soul of the camp, have been engaged for the entire session.

Miss Margaret Gaule, the popular test medium, will occupy, with a party of friends, a cottage on Melrose avenue, coming early and remaining, until the first of September, thus assuring her frequent appearance throughout the entire season, in public test seances.

Mr. Parker and sister, Mrs. Bowen, whose inspiring and beautiful singing won such universal applause last season, will return to Lily Dale during the month of August. Another vocal attraction will be Mrs. Ralph Ely, a soloist, whose renditions met with manifest appreciation a year ago. Mrs. Ely has been secured for a portion of the coming season.

The Children's Lyceum will as formerly be presided over by Mrs. Peterson, of Grand Rapids, Mich.

Mrs. Mary Webb Baker, well-known to every reading Spiritualist, has been appointed librarian and mistress of the public reading-room.

Authority has been given the president, Mr. A. Gaston, to have the association hotel, the Grand, thoroughly renovated and put in first-class condition for the summer guests. From the fabled land of flowers and springs of perpetual youth, comes a gentleman of long and practical experience in the the business, who will have charge, as manager, of the association hostelry.

Prospects of a successful season were never more flattering than at present. Many cottages have already been leased for the season, some have been purchased and there is quite a stir and talk of building, while inquiries for accommodations are as frequent as the mails.

Our annual June picnic will be held on the association grounds, June 13, 14 and 15. Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, Rev. Moses Hull and Mr. Lyman C. Howe being the talent engaged for this three days' session.

Recent exercises in commemoration of the advent of Modern Spiritualism were held at the Dale, Mrs. Clara Watson, of Jamestown, N. Y., delivering an unusually fine address.

The sixth annual session of the Spiritualists' Training School, Rev. Moses Hull, president, will open on the grounds, May 13, continuing until July 10. During July and August Prof. Lockwood and Mr. J. Clegg Wright will conduct their schools, the same as last season. Mr. W. J. Colville will during his engagement here conduct classes in Psycho-Therapeutics. Numerous other attractions of the season will be announced later. KATE O. PEATE.

Los Angeles Overrun with Fakirs and Pseudo Mediums.

A CALIFORNIA EDITOR RECEIVING CASH FOR WHAT HE KNOWS TO BE A FRAUDULENT ADVERTISEMENT.

The winter rains are over and we are luxuriating in weather as beautiful as a perfect day in June. My arrival in Los Angeles was happily timed as it enabled me to participate in a reception to the veteran worker, J. S. Loveland, on the occasion of his 84th birthday. A goodly company assembled at the parlors of Mrs. D. L. Karcher, 619 South Hill street, among whom were no less than seven of the old Clinton campers, the occasion proving one of mutual enjoyment and satisfaction. Bro. Loveland claims the honor and distinction of organizing the first public meeting in behalf of Spiritualism, which was in Boston in 1853, and continuing the same for a period of nearly three years. Notwithstanding his advanced age, he is still hale and hearty with intellect unimpaired and ready as of old to wage battle for truth and for Spiritualism, and judging from his present condition he bids fair to round out a century in useful labor in the cause which enlisted his early sympathies and superior intellectual ability. Congratulations were extended in brief speeches by Dr. Abbott, W. C. Hodge and Mrs. M. E. Kratz, who also was acted upon to produce several crayon drawings of unique character illustrative of his character and life work. Music, mirth, song and refreshments concluded the program, all taking their departure with sincere wishes for many happy returns of the day. The 54th anniversary was fittingly celebrated by the Harmonial Society with an attendance that filled the commodious hall to overflowing.

The program was a fine one, the musical features being especially commendable. Addresses were given in the afternoon by J. S. Loveland, W. C. Hodge, and Mrs. Nickless-Cobb, and in the evening by W. C. Bowman and Mrs. Frietag. Bro. Bowman is an ex-Methodist minister of superior ability and is imbued with a spirit of love, justice and fraternity toward all humanity, and it is in every way discreditable to Spiritualists that he is not constantly employed on our rostrums.

Mrs. Frietag still continues to demonstrate the phenomena to the entire satisfaction of large audiences and is considered by people who know what they affirm, as a very superior medium, and spite of all that has been said against her, she is more than holding her own.

This city is cursed with numberless fortune-tellers, pseudo mediums and fakirs of every description. It is estimated by the authorities that there are fully five hundred who are engaged in relieving the unwary of their surplus coin by every artifice known to these sharpers, from hypnotism to materialization, including the development of mediumship(?). This has caused the authorities, who know nothing of the subject and who care less, to take hold of the matter and has resulted in the arrest of genuine healers and the persecution of honest mediums.

And what can be expected when the editor of a so-called Spiritual publication will publish what he knows to be false because of a cash consideration? The masses demand sensationalism and phenomena at the expense of the philosophy. Honest mediumship cannot supply the demand and the fakir comes to the front and reaps a harvest.

To such an extent is this true of this and other localities, that to be known as a Spiritualist, and especially as a medium, is to be classed by the authorities and the general public as disreputables and swindlers. There are no better nor truer mediums than can be found here, but the trouble is the authorities class the true and the false as all alike, and in their onslaught the innocent are likely to suffer with the guilty. There is only one remedy for this state of things, and it is to make organization so thorough and so solid as to shut the disreputable element entirely out. This can be done and ought to be done, and there never was greater need of the doing than here, for if there was ever a time and place when a general house-cleaning was needed along these lines, that time is now and the place is Los Angeles. WILL C. HODGE.

Meeting a Success.

The entertainment on Saturday night, April 5, at 77 Thirty-first street, was a success in every way except the size of the audience, but that deficiency was occasioned by the inclement weather, however, what was lost in size was made up in interest, fellowship and enthusiasm.

Geo. B. Warne, the chairman, conducted the meeting in his usual good-humored manner and gives us the following report of the same:

The net proceeds of the entertainment and dance at 77 Thirty-first street, Chicago, for the Mediums' Home at Reed City, Mich., were $86.75. Total amount received from all sources was $148.75, of which $12 came from outside of Chicago. The expenses for hall rent, dance music and advertising were $62. The attendance would probably have been one-third larger but for the day of cold, cheerless rain and an evening of more threatening skies and some rainfall. Not a medium upon the program failed to be present and carry out his or her part in a highly acceptable manner. The evening was a decided success for sociability and genuine fraternity of feeling. Mrs. J. E. Staner, of 1301 West Madison street, won the prize for selling the highest number of tickets, a china plaque, whose tasty decoration was a fine tribute to the artistic skill of Mrs. Isa A. Cross, the donor of it.

HAD CATARACTS; NOW SEES.

Mrs. Louisa Balchtal of Sac City, Iowa, Gets Back Her Sight at the Age of 70. Praises Dr. Coffee.

The experience of Mrs. Lousia Balchtal is told in her own words and should encourage hundreds of old people who have given up to blindness. Write today for Dr. W. O. Coffee's wonderful book of "The New System of Treating Diseases of the Eye," which shows colored photographs and gives a history of every kind of eye trouble.

MRS. LOUISA BAICHTAL

Read About This Case.

"I am 70 years old, have been in good health until six years ago, when I caught cold and it settled in my eyes. They became inflamed, itchy and stuck together some in the mornings, but thinking they would soon get well themselves, and month after month passed and they were sometimes better and sometimes worse, but each attack was worse. I went to my family physician and he helped them some, but about two years ago, a white scum or opacity—what they call a cataract—commenced to grow over my eyes, and inflammation got worse; made me almost totally blind. The doctor wanted to operate on my eyes, but I would not allow him, and I drifted along when a neighbor saw the name of Dr. W. O. Coffee of Des Moines, Iowa, and that he had a new way of curing blind people. I wrote him and got his book and placed myself under his treatment immediately. My eyes commenced to improve the very first day and improved steadily until my sight was restored so perfectly that I could read a newspaper without glasses. His treatment is mild, healing and soothing, and I want to say to everyone who has eye trouble, write Dr. Coffee; his fees for curing you will be less than any other doctor and his new Absorption treatment is all that is claimed for it."

Dr. Coffee's 80-page book tells how you can be cured at home by the mild Absorption Treatment—no operation—and at small cost, of cataracts, films, growths on eyes, wild hairs, granulated lids, failing sight, in fact, anything but complete paralysis of optic nerve.

Write today and save yourself for some friend from blindness.

THE OTHER WORLD AND THIS.

A compendium of Spiritual Laws. No. 1, New White Cross Literature. By Augusta W. Fletcher, M. D. In this volume the author, in the thirty-nine chapters, discusses a wide variety of subjects pertaining to Spiritualism, from a spiritualistic standpoint. She evinces the powers of a trained thinker, both in matter of thought and fine literary style, and capability of thought expression. The subjects are well handled with conciseness and yet with clearness. It will prove a rich addition to any Spiritualist's library, and a most excellent book for any one seeking information concerning Spiritualism and its teachings. Price $1.50.

The Spiritual Wreath.

A collection of words and music for the choir, congregation and social circle. By S. W. Tucker. Comprises sixty or more gems of song. Price, 15 cents.

ASTRAL WORSHIP By J. H. Hill, M.D. A valuable contribution to the current discussion of religious problems. The author by illustrations and a planisphere (a representation of the celestial sphere upon a plane with adjustable circles), traces most of the myths which lie at the base of Christianity to their origin in sun and star worship. The astronomical facts given possess great value, the illustrations rare and curious. The book is bound in only one style—heavy boards. Price $1.

The Christ Question Settled.

Jesus, Man, Medium, Martyr. A symposium by W. E. Coleman, J. S. Loveland, Hudson Tuttle, Moses Hull, J. R. Buchanan, B. B. Hill, Rabbi I. M. Wise, Col. Ingersoll—and what the spirits say about it. By J. M. PEEBLES, M. D. Whether this book settles the question or not, it will be found eminently entertaining, and brings together a mass of evidence to establish the historical character of Jesus. A large volume. Price, cloth, $1.25.

Father Tom and the Pope,

Or a Night at the Vatican. Written probably by Sir Samuel Ferguson. From Blackwood's Edinburg Magazine. This is a humorous account of a rollicksome visit to the Pope of Rome by Father Tom, an Irish priest, armed with a superabundance of Irish wit, two imperial quart bottles of Irish "poteen," and an Irish recipe for "conwounding" the same. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE TO-MORROW OF DEATH,

Or the Future Life According to Science. By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French by S. R. Crockee. A very fascinating work. This fine volume might well have been entitled Spiritualism Demonstrated by Science. It is written in that peculiar interesting style in which French writers excel when they would popularize scientific subjects in adaptation to the needs of the general reader. The author says: "There is a true and respectable idea in Spiritualism," and regards as proved "the fact of communication between superhumans and the inhabitants of earth." Price, $1.50.

MAHOMET His Birth, Character and Doctrine. By Edward Gibbon. This is No. 6 of the Library of Liberal Classics. It is conceded to be historically correct, and so exact and perfect in every detail as to be practically beyond the reach of adverse criticism. This work will be found intensely interesting. Price, 25 cents.

OUTSIDE THE GATES

and other tales and sketches. By a band of spirit intelligences, through the mediumship of Mary Theresa Shelhamer. An excellent work. Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

THE WORLD BEAUTIFUL.

Series one, two and three. By Lilian Whiting. Three choice volumes, each complete in itself, in which spirituality is related to everyday life in such a way as to make the world beautiful. Price, $1.00 each.

SPIRITUAL SONGSTER.

By Mattie E. Hull. Thirty-eight of Mrs. Hull's sweetest songs, adapted to popular music, for the use of congregations, circles and families. Price, 10 cents, or $7 per hundred.

INTERVIEWS WITH SPIRITS.

A real visit with friends on the other side of life, and a familiar talk. By spirit Samuel Bowles! Carrie E. S. Twing, Medium. Price 30 cents. For sale at this office.

A. SCHOPENHAUER ESSAYS.

Translated by T. B. Saunders. Cloth, 75 cents. "Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is; and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. This characteristic endows his style with a freshness and vigor which would be difficult to match in the philosophic writing of any country, and impossible in that of Germany."—Translator.

HARMONICS OF EVOLUTION.

The Philosophy of Individual Life, Based Upon Natural Science

As taught by modern masters of law. By Florence Huntley. An exceedingly interesting and distinctly valuable contribution to the literature of evolution, unfolding its laws from the deeper and clearer spiritual aspect, and indicating the defects of the Darwinian theory. Spiritual

SATURDAY, APRIL 19, 1902.

Specimens of Prophecy.

Isaiah is reputed by Christians to have been one of the greatest and most trusty of the prophets. He knew all about God, and his ways and purposes. Of course it is a pleasure to consult such reliable authority. After telling, Isaiah 7:17, that the Lord—that is to say Jehovah—for the translaters substituted in their rendering, Lord, where Jehovah, or correctly, Yahweh occurs,—"shall bring upon thee, and upon thy people, and upon thy father's house days that have not come," etc., he continues, verse 18:

"And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall hiss for the fly that is in the uppermost part of the rivers of Egypt, and for the bee that is in Assyria."

Scott, in his Commentaries, says, hiss is equivalent to whistle. Then, correctly rendered, the Lord is a whistler, and it is probable the flies and bees of the countries the prophet mentions, understood his call, and came at his bidding.

Passing to verse 20 and we are told: "In the same day shall the Lord shave with a razor that is hired, namely, by them beyond the river, by the king of Assyria, the head, and the hair of the feet; and it shall consume the beard."

It is lamentable that the Lord was not able to buy a good razor, instead of hiring one. But Isaiah was a major prophet, and knew what he was saying.

But the culmination of prophetic knowledge is embraced in verse 21:

"And it shall come to pass in that day [that is to say when God whistles for flies and bees, and hires a razor to shave the hairs on feet], a man shall nourish [equivalent to suckle] a young cow and two sheep."

It would be well to watch a little out for the last event, that we may know when the Lord whistles, the flies and bees heed his call, and he hires a razor. But, really, what use have we for such prophetic knowledge? Are we made wiser or better by such inspired drivel?

Equitable Taxation.

The German Turners of Chicago are very decided in their opinion that the churches should pay taxes on their property like other corporations. They have lately determined to make a vigorous campaign, favorable to equitable taxation on all property, regardless of who owns it. If God is the owner of the churches let him take a lesson from his reputed son, who, when a tax was imposed on him, sent one of his disciples to extract the needed coin from a fish's mouth, and thus paid his indebtedness to the State. There are millions of coin in the sea which, if the fishes were properly inspired, could produce it to pay the taxes on God's many dwellings. By the way, why not pray God to utilize the idlers of the ocean, and allow them to gather up the lost coin and discharge an honest debt?

Unintelligible to the Author.

When anything is so worded it is impossible to understand it, don't think you are the only one. The man who wrote it also couldn't understand it, and expressed himself in a clouded way to cover it.—Atchison Globe.

Is that one of the ailments of the Bible? So simple that one who runs may read, and a fool can understand, yet near twelve hundred conflicting sects have been organized, taking its teachings for a base, and the end is not reached. Singular that the wisdom of the Lord, who is said to have inspired it, was not equal to the task of telling his wishes so all can understand it alike. May be possible it was inspired by a priest, not by God, hence the secret of its being incomprehensible.

Believing Is Guessing.

The difference between believing and guessing is scarcely distinguishable. I believe there is a God; that he was the parent of a son; that that son was born of a virgin; or that the world will go up in flame, all are propositions without proof. The God idea is plausible, for it is an easy way to account for what exists; but the residue are only guesses, on which the dominant religion has built its faith. Dreams do not constitute proof on which a fact can be established. The whole system of the dominant religion is but a series of very stupid guesses, without any foundation in reason.

The cartoons which the New York Truth Seeker is printing each week add a great deal to the attractiveness and effectiveness of that able Freethought journal. They are sharp and forcible strokes at the superstitions and humbuggery of the times, and even the unthinking will pause to study them. They reinforce the arguments of the Truth Seeker's brilliant corps of contributors, and form one of the features which place that paper in the front rank of weeklies. Freethinkers can hardly get along without it, as it is not only highly instructive but vastly entertaining as well. A sample copy of it can be had by addressing the Truth Seeker Co., at 28 Lafayette Place, New York, N. Y. Subscription price only $3 per year.

The law imprinted on the hearts of all men is to love the members of society as themselves.—Roman.

A Calamitous Trouble in the Church.

A new trouble has burst on the orthodox faith, and gives promise of seriously disturbing the old established order of things. It is a vital blow at the credibility of the Old Testament, and comes from an unexpected quarter. A preacher over there in Anderson, Indiana, has sounded the alarm, and it is right to suppose the whole religious world will feel the shock, and place itself in an attitude of defence.

Myers' Ancient History has been adopted as a text book in the high school of Anderson, and it seems the author forgot creeds, and taught in his book what modern discoveries among the resurrected cities of the Orient has revealed, and he has gone a little one side, and shown that many of the extravagant stories of Divine Revelation were plagiarized from records in Chaldea, Assyria and Babylonia, which were in existence more than a thousand years before Moses—who, it is claimed, was a prophet of the Lord, and made the record—had an existence. Indeed, he shows that Moses is but another name for Sargon I, who flourished within 200 years of the period ascribed to creation, and was born on the banks of the Euphrates, instead of the Nile.

All these facts have been told in the editorial columns of The Progressive Thinker, but will bear repeating again and again. Emerson once wrote:

"No anchor, no cable, no fence avails to keep a fact a fact."

The truth must be told again and again, and repeated in different forms, if we would carry conviction to the reader, just as the successful advocate, in addressing a jury, presents his case in varied forms, to ensure a favorable verdict. He who is content to rest his case on the simple presentation of the facts may expect a verdict against his client.

We are not acquainted with Myers' Ancient History, but we find what is presumed to be a good account of what the author has probably elaborated, in the "Bulletin," published at Anderson, where the agitation is now centered. It says:

"It is claimed this history makes an attack on the infallibility of the Bible, that the work assigns natural causes to miracles, that, in fact, there was nothing supernatural. For instance, in speaking of the escape of the Israelites from Pharaoh and his host, the history says: 'The latter were unable to overtake the former on account of the treacherous quicksands at the head of the Red Sea.' So there was no miracle, then, according to this history. The Bible says there was, that the water parted and the Israelites walked across the bottom of the sea dry shod, and when Pharoah and his army attempted to cross by the same route, the waters came together and the entire army was drowned. There is a wide difference in the two descriptions of the event. But what has caused more discussion than anything else is the fact that this history makes the absolute statement that the Biblical accounts of the creation of the world, the Garden of Eden, the deluge and tower of Babel are legends—that is, that they are false. The author says that in recent years tablets taken from the ruined cities of Chaldea have been deciphered and that all these myths were a part of the ancient religion of the Chaldeans two thousand years before the Jewish nation was born. (Reference pages 72-73.) The historian adds that these ancient falsehoods, which had been originated by the Chaldeans, were appropriated by the Jews, and by them were 'moralized and spiritualized.' The author also quotes from Rawlinson's Ancient History, to the effect that Moses copied his decalogue from the 'Book of the Dead,' a religious book written by the ancient Egyptians.

"The following sentence on page 72 of this history reads: 'The discoveries and patient labors of various scholars have reproduced in a more or less perfect form from the legendary tablets the Chaldean account of the creation of the world, of an ancestrial paradise (Garden of Eden) and the Tree of Life with its Cherub Wardens, of the Deluge and the Tower of Babel,' and he cites as proof that these 'legendary' accounts came from the Chaldeans, the fact that clay tablets containing these stories are now in existence and that they were written long before Moses was born. In another place the history says that 'Sargon I, who reigned 3,800 B. C., was the original of the Moses story—that is, the story of his being concealed in a basket in the bullrushes. The same story was written of Sargon, and is to be found in the ancient literature of the Chaldeans,' according to this high school history.

"To sum up the whole matter in a nutshell, this history which is being taught in the high school of Anderson, simply makes the Bible, to a great extent, a work of fiction—or, rather, that Moses and other writers simply copied very much of it from the ancient religious literature of the Egyptians and Chaldeans. The infallibility of the Bible is denied. For all who believe in its infallibility believe that the deluge, and in fact all else therein recorded, are descriptions of actual facts, and that being inspired of God, the writers of the Bible could not have erred. To question or deny the authenticity of these Biblical records would be to discredit the whole book, and this is just what is done in Myers' Ancient History."

It was shown in a series of articles which appeared in these editorial columns nearly a year ago, that the Old Testament is a compilation of ancient fragmentary myths of various nations, found in the Alexandrian Library, which were adapted by the ignorant compiler to fit a people who are reputed to have resided in the Lebanon Mountains of Syria, known to moderns as Jews. The book thus made up from numberless sources bears the Latin title of "Bible," which in English is Book, and nothing else. Because of its supposed antiquity, and the Catholic authorities represented the "Book" contained the revealed will of God, it was held to be too sacred to be placed in the hands of others than the priesthood, so the Protestants idolized it, treated it as a fetish, and hold it in reverence as the Word of God. Now the perpetuity of their faith is contingent on their ability to perpetuate the fraud.

A Card.

If the Home at Reed City is not soon to be ready for occupancy, will not some good Spiritualist living on a farm near there, offer a temporary home to an elderly gentleman who, for more than forty years has freely given his time, influence and means to our sacred cause? One who has known him personally for fifteen years can truthfully say of him, he is a gentleman, who desires to be of use; he has no relatives to whom he can go for shelter; would be helpful about the house, in garden, or care of poultry. Any one willing to give him a home for the summer and autumn, will please send card with name and address to office of The Progressive Thinker.

Do Not Worry.

There seems to be considerable nervousness in the ranks of Spiritualism at present over the divergent opinions of many of our thinkers upon the school question, and we feel that we must offer a few words of consolation as an anesthetic.

In the first place Spiritualists are independent thinkers, if they are thinkers at all, and always have differed upon the minor points, and always will, but each one who has an opinion must and does remember the rights of others in their expressions through the columns of this paper.

When the human system is out of repair it is the duty and usually the wish of the spirit within to put things to rights. Just so with the system of Spiritualism, and these philosophers are those upon whose wisdom and good judgment, upon whose calmness and candor, upon whose interest in the whole cause depends that cause for her progress along the lines of the philosophy; but there are numerous sides to the philosophy, and it requires these divergent opinions to make the motive power for the one grand truth, as a clock requires its various wheels and springs to move the hands to point the hours, the minutes and the seconds of time.

There need be no fear that the cause will be injured by the appearance of an article upon and for Theosophy, upon Hypnotism, upon Agnosticism, Christian Science or Christian Spiritualism, or upon the Homo and Unit theory. Spiritualism is the parent of them all, and will look out for her children. Our march is onward, and these divergent opinions are the arteries, the life channels of a truth that cannot die. By our encouragement of and respect for the opinions of others; by the publication of articles that seem to assail our cause we create an inspiration for the leading minds in our ranks and attract some of the best minds from the outside world.

We are working for the whole cause, the broad and far-reaching and uplifting principles of Spiritualism, not for "my" Spiritualism or "your" Spiritualism, but for Spiritualism in toto.

The insignificant differences become significant factors in our progress and we expect them. They make us grow.

A Serious Question.

Notwithstanding the boasted wonderful reformatory advances in the methods and laws of modern civilization, there is still room for further progress in matters that pertain to human rights even in the most enlightened countries.

The persecuting spirit of the times of medieval tyranny still survives, under somewhat milder yet not less reprehensible and unjust forms.

In former days of churchly power, the man who dared to express disbelief in the dogmas taught by the church, had his property confiscated, and might consider himself lucky to escape the dungeon, rack or fagot.

Times have changed for the better, under the influence of irrepressible thought, in spite of the adverse power and influence of churchly dictators, who have ever endeavored to repress and thwart the growing instincts of human freedom, which demanded the full and untrammeled right to think and believe, and to express free opinion.

The old days and the old methods are gone forever in all lands entitled to be called enlightened and truly civilized. Thanks to the heroes and martyrs of Free Thought, whose labors and sufferings have wrought this human progress.

But it is a sadly evident fact that some stubborn remnants of the old-time spirit of persecution and injustice still remain to blot and mar the otherwise fair visage of modern civilization and progress. There are injustices and wrongs carried on under the garb of justice and in the name of law.

Readers of The Progressive Thinker and other Spiritual papers have recently had a striking instance of this kind brought to their notice in an account of the verdict in the McIlroy will case.

Here was a man who had been known for years and had an established reputation as a thoroughly capable and trustworthy business man, a man possessing successful business instincts to acquire and manage property.

But he was a Spiritualist—and, like thousands upon thousands of other men, of Bible account, of Roman, Grecian and other historical nations, and of instances lining the whole history of man from ancient to modern times, he believed, upon the evidence of his objective senses, that he had seen spirit entities.

The reasonableness of Spiritualism commended it to his sober judgment and his moral sense, and in his love for it he desired to devise a gift that might be a help to sustain the same after he should have taken his departure into the spirit world.

And now, after having all his life given evidence of business judgment and soundness of mind, his will is contested, and because only of his expressed belief in having seen spirits, he was adjudged insane and incompetent to devise the property he was sane enough and competent enough to acquire. There was nothing to show or indicate that at the time of making his will he was not as sane as he ever had been while he was accumulating it.

The verdict was simply the outcropping of the old and vicious spirit of bygone dark ages. It was a reversion to the old outgrown type of injustice that flourished under churchly domination in days long past—of confiscation and sequestration. It is persecution for opinion's sake—for "belief"—though the belief was of the same nature as was held by Bible worthies of the most conspicuous and most honored class, according to both Old Testament and New Testament records.

In few but plain words, this decision rendered by a Pennsylvania court is at once superbly absurd, and an outrageous insult to the millions of enlightened Spiritualists of the world.

Under the rulings of a court of the same caliber as the one that rendered this contemptible and vicious decision there is not a Spiritualist in the world, no matter how high his standing in science, knowledge, or business judgment, who may not be declared insane and committed to an asylum for such.

Really there is far more reason to impeach the sanity of a court capable of rendering so vicious and utterly reprehensible and disgraceful a decision.

Spiritualists—What are you going to do about it?

Will you lie down under it? or will you arouse and assert your equal claim with all others to all the rights and privileges belonging to man, and equal protection in person and property, which all Constitutions and laws declare are of right ours, and of which we shall not be deprived?

The Spiritualists of our country should stand as one in asserting, demanding and defending their just rights as individuals and citizens on a plane of equality with individuals and citizens of other beliefs.

If belief in the reality and appearing of spirit entities constitutes proof of one's lack of sanity, then every person who believes the Bible accounts of such appearances is equally insane, and in the matter of wills and otherwise should be treated precisely as Spiritualists are treated by the courts. Let there be no partiality. True justice is exact and impartial in its decisions.

Allowing plain, impartial common sense to be the judge: Which is the greater proof of insanity, the belief in spirits based upon the direct, personal, objective evidence of one's senses; or second hand belief in spirits, without any evidence except belief or faith?

There can be but one honest answer, and that answer convicts the authors of the verdict in the McIlroy will case of moral self-stultification. Were they impartial they would mete out the same verdict of insanity against themselves—if they "believe" the Bible records.

Spiritualists to Get $15,000 by Virtue of Legal Contest's Result.

Lafayette, Ind., April 13.—The famous contested will case of William Case of this city, a Spiritualist, who died July 23, 1900, leaving the residue of his estate, amounting to $15,000 to the National Spiritual Association and editors of Truth Seeker and Commonwealth, ended last night in a verdict for the proponents. The trial began March 12.

H. G. Green Passed to Spirit Life.

The son of H. L. Green (editor of the Freethought Magazine) lately passed to spirit life. The father has lost a valuable assistant in his efforts to elevate the world to a higher plane.

DR. HENRY SLADE.

Experience with the Noted Medium

I had been with him continuously for just one week, at a farm house in the country south of Grand Rapids, Mich. His trunk was in the city. We came to the city April 1, and took rooms at 52 Crescent avenue, then had his trunk brought to his room. The trunk was locked with a double clasp spring lock and the key was lost, but the Doctor's guide Owasso said he would unlock it for us; so the Doctor placed his left hand over the lock (his right arm and leg being paralyzed). I placed my left hand on his right arm for about ten seconds, when he had to take his hand away, but the raps that we heard sounded as if some one was striking the inside of the lock with a hammer. The Doctor said that Owasso wished me to call Mr. and Mrs. Seymour Beach, who lived in the other part of the house, in, as they had never seen any such phenomena. When they came in Mr. B. took hold of the Doctor's right hand, while Mrs. B. and myself stood close by but not touching either the Doctor or Mr. B. Then the Doctor placed his left hand over the lock as before and loud raps were heard as before, but the lock failed to come open in five seconds, and the Doctor took his hand from the lock, and Mr. and Mrs. B. left the room. Then I was impressed to remove the lamp, which was a large double No. 3 burner and burning at full height. The lamp stood on a dresser close to one end of the trunk. I placed it on a table nearly in front of the trunk, then the Doctor said, "Call them back, we are ready," and Mr. and Mrs. B. came back in the room, and we all took the same position as before and watching the lock. Then the Doctor placed his hand on the lock as before, and in less than five seconds both clasps of the lock flew open. At each trial the loud raps were heard as at the first trial. This occurred about 7 o'clock in the evening, and only the four persons in earth life present that are mentioned in this article.

Grand Rapids, Mich.

In Memory of Major Bitters, of Rochester, Ind.

A poetic writer has said: "For every kind word or act we do in this life, an angel plants a flower for us in Paradise."

A beautiful thought and if true, what a garden of magnificent splendor has Major Bitters found waiting him on the spirit side.

A man of deeds, not of creeds. A man who lived more for the universal good of mankind rather than his personal desires should be gratified.

I cannot recall a time as a child, as a girl or through my later years, when his methods of household government were not of gentleness instead of severity. Never, in all these years, did he under any circumstances raise his hand in anger against his children, but spoke with a firmness which contained all the meaning of control yet couched in the most tender language.

If every man, woman and child in Rochester, who has been helped financially by this one who has so lately crossed the Borderland, should pass his grave in procession, the line would be long indeed.

His generosity was of that kind, which put his hand into his pocket, but no boasting on his lips.

If every one who has been helped, by an encouraging word, to a better life, a higher understanding of better things and greater possibilities should hold up their hands, the number could scarcely be counted.

Personally, I have not only parted from the visible expression of a loving father, but a good friend, a faithful comrade, a familiar chum has gone away.

No trouble or cloud of sorrow has been so heavy that he could not put out his strong right arm, turn it over and show its silver lining, then with cheerful words cause it to dissolve into nothingness.

No one knew Major Bitters so well as his wife and children—knew his honesty, his truthfulness, his great heart.

If a desire was expressed for anything, he left no stone unturned to make that desire become a realization. No work was too hard, no task too great, if the welfare of his home was concerned.

A lover of home, he enjoyed every effort put forth for its adornment, and as far as possible provided the best for its comfort.

He has gone away, yet the great love he had in his heart as a mortal will live forever. His interest in the home will not cease and in every hour of trial he will not be far away, but will console as he alone can console and bless only as he can bless.

No God could be so unjust as to send this honest man into eternal darkness simply because he did not believe certain things his reason declared untrue. Therefore he will go on in his higher expression, doing good wherever and whenever an opportunity presents.

Not only have we the consolation of the knowledge of his spiritual resurrection, but also the pleasure of looking at the clean record he left behind.

THE HOME CIRCLE

THE ONLY TRUE AND PERFECT WAY TO THE HIGHER SPIRITUAL ATTAINMENTS AND UNFOLDMENTS.

A Helping Hand.

I.

Heaven, the spirit realms, can only be gained by high and noble aspirations, supplemented with good deeds. Evil can not enter the higher spheres of spirit-life any more than can an eagle enter a chamber through a hole one-millionth of an inch in diameter. Don't fear any intrusion there from those whose spiritual natures have not been refined and fully prepared for that exalted place. Each sphere has its special vibrations and various degrees of refinement, and the spirit must correspond therewith, and until it does, it is forever barred by an inexorable law.

II.

The only way to become spiritualized is to not only think good thoughts, but to act them out in the daily life. It will not do to send forth kind thoughts to the afflicted alone, providing you are blessed with a superabundance of this world's goods; you must give them substantial assistance. If kind thoughts are your only possessions, send them forth, they alone will suffice. The one who prays for the relief of suffering and still hoards his millions, only debases himself; his prayers are a mockery, so much poison to his spiritual nature.

What the world needs is less soul-communion, and more ACTION for the elevation of the unfortunate. The cripple, the semi-idiot, the indigent, the degenerate, and all other classes of unfortunates have as much right to live as those have who are blessed with a superabundance of this world's goods. The former came into existence through the instrumentality of the same natural or divine laws that the latter did, and are entitled to all the benefits and experience of an earthly life; they are entitled to a Helping Hand from those more fortunate.

In spirit life, extending to the highest sphere—if any highest—the Helping Hand is always benignly extended. It never comes forth reluctantly, but just as freely as the sun shines; just as gladly as the genial rain falls upon the crops of the just and unjust alike. A Helping Hand is needed here, there, over yonder—in Galveston, in starving India, in a burned Chicago, in the devastation and ruin spread by Vesuvius, on the field of war—wherever there is suffering or misfortune.

III.

The New York World relates a remarkable case, occurring in that wicked city, illustrating what a Helping Hand can do.

"Going, going, going. Will any gentleman give 15 cents? Remember, this is an investment in Heaven. God's blessing goes with it. Will any one give me 10 cents? Ten cents will give a man a lodging for the night. Ten, ten, going at ten, going, gone. Thank you."

The auctioneer is a clergyman and the auction block an improvised pulpit in Madison Square. A long line of homeless men stand by the curbstone while the street missionary pleads with the passersby in this novel fashion. These curious sales have taken place every Wednesday and Sunday evening, rain or shine, for more than five years. In this time lodging for the night has been collected for over 21,000 destitute men.

This unique charity is carried on by a single man, Chaplain Frederick Rotzler. He is at the head of the American Rescue Army, an institution intended to reach the lowest strata of society by street preaching and raising money to furnish lodging for the night.

Thousands of people have doubtless noticed the crowd which Chaplain Rotzler draws about him near the Worth Monument, but few have any idea of the magnitude of this work. The army has practically no working capital, but depends upon the chance generosity of the passersby.

Promptly at 8 o'clock every Wednesday and Sunday, Chaplain Rotzler places beside the curb a little soap box, which serves as pulpit, and, kneeling beside it, offers a short pathetic prayer. Later he rises and begins to sing some familiar hymn. The unfortunate men who have collected around him are meanwhile ranged in line along the curb and invited to join in the singing.

It is not uncommon for a hundred homeless men to be collected in this way and provided for in a single evening. The auction does not proceed until after the religious services. The singing is interrupted long enough for a short sermon, in the course of which the purpose of the meeting is explained.

The preacher uses the long line of homeless men as an object-lesson in depicting the evils of intemperance and sin. He urges the forlorn figures before him to lead better lives. The situation lends itself well to this double purpose, and the preacher makes the most of it.

Contributions are not asked for until the crowd has reached what promises to be its maximum size. The chaplain then states how much money he has to contribute and figures out how many men he will be able to shelter for the night with that amount. As a rule this sum does not go very far. The men are then asked if any one has 15 cents, the price of the night's lodging, lacking only a cent or two. These cases are auctioned off first. The chaplain states how much money a man lacks to shelter him for the night and calls for a bid. The crowd always enters into the spirit of the thing, and the bidding may be said to be spirited. Those who have 10 cents, lacking five, come next, and so on until those are reached who have not a single penny.

The device has never failed to work. There have been very few nights in the past five years that the entire crowd has not sooner or later been accommodated. The meeting usually lasts till midnight, when the chaplain leads the way for a curious procession to a respectable lodging-house in East Twenty-third street.

Chaplain Rotzler believes this to be the most practical home missionary work that has ever been attempted. "By my plan I reach the most unfortunate types, so that I have a great advantage over those who preach in churches or halls. I believe there are few impostors. Each man is in great need. The line is made up of every type from the university graduate to the merest tramp. I have been able to find work for hundreds of them and provide them a fresh start in life."

IV.

It makes but little difference to what church Chaplain Fredick Rotzler belongs; it makes but little difference to what God he prays, or what he believes in reference to divine providence, or what psalms he sings, or what bible he hugs to his heart so long as he freely, unselfishly, and cheerfully extends a Helping Hand to those in distress. That Helping Hand is nearer God, nearer the angels, nearer to the spheres of light, though bony and unshapely it may be, than the million-dollar diamond that nestles on the vestment of a Vanderbilt or Gould. From the windows of heaven peer angelic creatures, eyes lustrous with divine love, faces scintillating with a radiance seemingly borrowed from the throne of God itself—they have attained the state of existence where they vibrate in harmony with pure unselfish love, hence they gaze with delight on the Helping Hand, knowing that that alone can redeem the world and elevate the unfortunate to a higher plane. The Helping Hand when unselfishly extended is a segment of heaven itself. With no thought of creed, with no thought of a code of belief, with no thought even of a God or Savior, he who extends the Helping Hand under those circumstances, is truly divine.

V.

It was a dark night many years ago, in the wicked city of New York, where crime is rampant, and over which like a dark, pestilential cloud, hung the fetid emanations of rum holes, dens of thieves, houses of prostitution, and holes of iniquity, until the very light of heaven that comes from angelic hosts could but dimly penetrate it. In that emanation kindred spirits dwell; the lowest of the low, the vilest of the vile, and therein is a pandemonium on the spirits' side of which mortals have but a faint conception. A brilliant but eccentric man—not unknown to the Spiritualist rostrum in its early days—now in the higher spheres—was sitting on a curb-stone deathly sick, vomiting as if his life was about to ebb away. Sick, penniless, careworn—what could he do? No policeman happened near. Those fashionably dressed avoided him as they would a pestilential pool. Finally a sweet-voiced woman addressed him, and as if responsive to angelic call, assisted him to her humble home, and strange to say, nursed him back to health, and sent him on his way rejoicing. She was a Magdalen, who, forced into paths of vice, occasionally felt a pulsation from the higher spheres, a pulsation as sweet and pure as the aspiration of angels, and she extended a Helping Hand to a stranger in distress. He had told of that night, this eccentric man, this brilliant speaker, who afterwards committed suicide in the far west. Thus it was that wealth, "refinement," "respectability," failed to extend the Helping Hand in the hour of dire distress to this famishing soul, but a Magdalen—in the estimation of the world, an outcast—extended the needed assistance.

It is a fact that in the apparently lower strata of society, there are often gleams of the radiance of heaven that burst through the dark emanations of wickedness, and touching the soul chords of a Magdalen, induced her alone on this eventful night to extend the Helping Hand, while all others sheered by as if a phantom of wretchedness would ruin them. It is the Helping Hand that spiritualizes, to some extent even a Magdalen, and this night's episode paved the way for her final reformation and restoration to friends.

The Helping Hand should become a part of every life, of every soul, of every religious creed or cult. The poor, the unfortunate, the forsaken are always with us; they are God's children, if a God; they are heirs to eternal life, and are entitled to a Helping Hand, just as God helps each one through the operations of his natural laws. Carry with you always The Helping Hand.

The Roman Catholic Church and the Bible.

We are receiving letters from Roman Catholic laymen which proceed on the assumption that the meaning of "inspiration" as relating to the Bible is not defined by their church; and they cite the appointment of a Papal Commission to consider and resolve doubts and perplexities caused by the "higher criticism" as convincing evidence of the absence of such a dogma. "That authority," says one of them, writing from Brooklyn, "has not yet given the Bible complete and defined credentials."

This layman contends, accordingly, that nothing in Roman Catholic doctrine prevents his agreement with the late St. George Mivart that the Deluge as described in the Bible was impossible practically. The story of Jonah and the whale is also a stumbling block for him. "Close scrutiny of sacred writings," he sums up, "is here to stay, is unavoidable, and we must make the best of it;" and "the simple fact of appointing the commission is unquestionable proof that Church is not committed on those points dealt with by modern science and higher criticism."

Pope Leo XIII., however, in his late letter on Scripture, knocks the ground from under this correspondent completely by saying:

"The Church holds all the books of Scripture as sacred and canonical, not because, having been composed solely by human industry, they were afterward approved by her authority, nor only because they contain revelation without error, but because, having been written under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, they have God for their Author."

It was also decreed by the Vatican Council that the "books of the Old and New Testament are to be received as sacred and canonical in their integrity and all their parts, as they are enumerated in the degree of the Sacred Council" of Trent, "because, having been written by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, they have God for their Author."

In other words, to use the language of a Roman Catholic priest who writes in the last number of Mosher's Magazine, "Catholics are bound to believe in the verbal inspiration of the Bible. That is, its inspiration is not limited to the sentences in the context of the sacred books, but even the words are inspired."

It will be seen, therefore, that the doctrine of the Roman Catholic church as to the Bible is precisely defined and that the Church is committed unmistakably and absolutely on "those points dealt with by modern science and 'higher criticism.'" The Papal Commission recently appointed to receive and solve questions as to the Bible can make no new definition, and in no way can it modify the old either in letter or in spirit.

This is a very interesting matter at a time when, as the example of our Brooklyn correspondent indicates, the "higher criticism," which reduces the Bible to the level of merely human and fallible literature, has encouraged, even in a layman of the Roman Catholic church, the skepticism which induces him to ridicule the Biblical stories of the Deluge and of Jonah and the whale as scientifically impossible.—New York Sun.

THE OLD HOUSE DREAMS.

Down where the meadow-grass grows in the garden
And the marigolds bravely flaunt shimmering bloom;
Where wild bees hum and the swift swallows hover,
The old house waits in the gathering gloom.
Tenantless rooms lie deep in the shadow,
Gone are the feet that once trod on the stair;
Never a sound of music or laughter—
Only the stillness of sorrow is there.

Father and mother lie out in the churchyard
And the children have wandered and scattered since then;
The small, eager feet that once pattered so swiftly
Are slow with the cares of women and men.
The hollyhocks, frightened, cling closely together,
Wild roses have hidden the old, ruined wall,
And fairy hands weave, in memory's shuttle
The spell of enchantment that hangs over all.

Do you dream, old house, in the hush of twilight,
When sweet mid-summer brings potions and charms,
Of the childish joys and fears and troubles
Of those who slept in your sheltering arms?
To-day lies far from the old-time contentment;
Like a half-finished story the dear life seems,
And the tears veil all in a mist and a shadow,
But hush—for the old house dreams!

Twentieth Century Fulfillments.

A Discourse through the Lips of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond,
Chicago, Sunday, January 12, 1902.

The 20th century fulfillments forms the theme around which our remarks will cluster this morning.

"Whether there shall be prophecies," it is said, "they shall fail;" yet ultimately all prophecies come true.

Cyclic fulfillments are just as certain as the recurrence of the seasons and the revolutions of the planets, and their conjunctions, and the reappearance of comets. It only remains for one to have knowledge of the great spiritual forces of the universe to understand that spiritual life contains all these prophecies and their fulfillments. A fact which you think is to be upon the earth, really is; and therefore it only needs the spirit vision, penetration and prescience to understand that which is to come to the earth already somewhere abides.

The 20th century has not only been the subject of great hopes, but is a century around which many prophecies have clustered; and it is really to be a century of great fulfillments. These prophecies that have come in the guise of scientific predictions of various things that are to set the world in greater commotion; of that which is to supersede the noisy steam engine, and even the fairy and swift-winged electric appliances; these like many other things are in their turn to entirely pass out of use in the world and be superseded by still greater inventions. From day to day you have indications of this. Of course it will not be very distant that the navigation of the air will be a fixed possibility in the earth's atmosphere. Already its success is assured as a fact, it only remains to be appropriated as a means of transportation. There is much more prospect of it now than there was in the first years of the steam railroad, that that would become the universal means of land transportation; or that electricity, when the telegraph was introduced in a hall in a little country town and it was actually found that a person could telegraph from one end of the room to the other, would reach such proportions that ultimately the earth would be too small for it to attain to its greatest possibilities. Now you are expecting wireless telegraphy; but this is only the precursor to that added telegraphy that will unite the earth with other planets. This has already been talked of. But electricity may not be the means of communication, nor even electrical "vibrations." There is a system of more subtle vibration between worlds, and when you discover and avail yourselves of that, as you have of the vibrations of electricity within the earth's atmosphere, you will have found the means of communicating with other planets.

Besides you have knowledge of communication with the minds of others; telepathy is no longer doubted, consequently there will be intercommunication between minds and minds upon the different planets as there now is communication between minds and minds upon the earth.

The solar engine is in the imminent future and is to supersede steam and electricity as well. Those rays of light that now seem to be squandered, or are held in solution somewhere, will be made available. Science has gone far to prove what John Ericson dreamed of many years ago: This solar light and heat will be conserved and used in the winter time, so you will have solar light and heat for your dwellings; and you will be able to temper the rays of the sun in the summer time, by having large reservoirs or receptacles to take the surplus light and heat from your streets and dwellings and thus make a suitable temperature during the entire year. The solar heat will be made available for the new motor power. The electric light, which you now consider so resplendent, will be superseded by this great solar light, which in many respects resembles the electrical vibrations.

All this will come in the early part of the 20th century. As the means of transportation increases in rapidity, communication with nations will increase in facility, and this will be one of the means for the obliteration of war. For, as we have many times said, with air-ships throwing bombs into fortifications there will be little possibility of resisting the encroachments of an approaching enemy. Human intellect is using all of its force and power to concentrate and utilize the destructive substances of nature. So it will come to be a fact, that war will be such a dangerous experiment that nations will hesitate to resort to it. This, perhaps, more than any sense of brotherly love, will prevent nations from warring. Then, naturally, will follow courts of arbitration, and international congresses of arbitration, and at last the world will cease to see these formidable preparations for war.

In Psychical directions in the past century, especially the latter half of the past century, such manifestations have occurred as to induce many people to believe that, externally (in the phenomenal sense), you are to have greater manifestations of psychic power than in the past. We venture to differ with these. We think the increase in psychic power will be with individuals; that perception of psychical principles will be to the unfoldment of the race. The race is to come into the heritage of those spiritual forces that have been denied you through superstition on the one hand and materialism on the other. Material religion and material science have both combined to deprive the human race of the legitimate exercise of spiritual power. Where known they have been appropriated by those who were supposed to be spiritually endowed as spiritual teachers and guides, who have been enrolled under some denominational sect. Religion has closed the door to individual spiritual experiences and made the race dependent for spiritual teaching upon external forms and theological training. All this has been interfered with, and much of it has been set aside in the last fifty years by the advent of Modern Spiritualism.

Of course, just as soon as human lives become aware that religion is a spiritual expression, and that each one is entitled to exercise any of the spiritual gifts that are in the universe; as soon as people become aware that prophets and seers and those endowed with spiritual gifts were human beings; that these gifts, according to the growth and needs of the human race will become more and more the possession of humanity, that, in other words, all that realm that has been clouded by ignorance, superstition and bigotry is being opened as a portion of the legitimate possession of the human race; the psychic growth of the world will be wonderful; instead of little children being punished and treated by physicians because they have psychic power, it will be encouraged and strengthened, and people will gradually learn that the possession of psychic gifts is not a weakness but a strength, and that they only require recognition and the surrounding of the sensitive with as careful conditions as those with which you surround your chronometer or your compass to make you aware that they are among the rarest and best possessions of the human race.

Finally, as the world has entered upon a new psychic era, that psychic era is to culminate in a great degree in the 20th century. We mean to say, that a larger number of people upon the earth's surface will enter into the knowledge of spiritual things and possess psychic power; will understand psychic subjects; will know that these are a legitimate source of inquiry, and that the human mind may intuitively be open to receive influences, impressions and teachings from those who have passed from human life; that this will be no longer sacrilegious, nor sinful, nor forbidden, but it will be one of the great strides in human recognition. It is even so to-day. You cannot take up a magazine, scarcely a daily paper, without finding one or more articles impinging upon or actually treating of these subjects. All this open recognition of the spirit realm, instead of being a hindrance to humanity is a great help, a luminous background to human endeavor.

Edison and every great inventor admits freely that the inventions do not emanate from his own mind; that he is aware of receiving help; that behind him is some one who gives the impressions; that these impressions usually come, either in visions of the night or when the active duties of daily life are hushed and shut out; that all unexpectedly the point which he had been struggling for is at once revealed to the mind. Every great discoverer, like Herschell, in the discovery of the planet that formerly bore his name, freely admits that there is some a priori knowledge or vision from the realm invisible. This knowledge is forced upon the outward consciousness. All the realm of discovery, so-called, must be in the realm of That which you invent or discover to-day, somewhere is actual knowledge—of those who are higher and wiser, an actual and practical reality. Whatever planet is beyond yours in unfoldment must have already in operation those forces and motors which you are striving for; and, no doubt, visitants from those worlds, either from the spirit realms surrounding them, or actual inhabitants, do approach the earth and give these impressions to those ready to receive them.

You cannot limit the powers of mind, you cannot restrain the intelligence that will speak, even across the spaces. Neither can human beings, unaided, claim to gather these truths from the great reservoir of unthinking invention. There never was a thought in the universe that was not thought by some intelligence. Neither was there an invention that was not perceived by some intelligence. The primal source of every invention must be the Great Creative Intelligence; as intelligence is the only power that can discover, so intelligence is the only power that can impart discoveries. The steam engine did not go prancing around in the universe for some inventor to find it. It was the result of this great thought motor that is so much greater than the force of steam that in its presence steam becomes but a toy, a bauble merely. There are no great thoughts floating around for you to think them, but thought responds to thought by intelligence, personal and individual.

Those souls that are alive and are freighted with knowledge do not think their knowledge far away from earth and dole it out in parcels. Just as fast as human lives are ready they are ready to impart it. The teacher does not withhold knowledge from the little child through any selfishness or miserly instinct of keeping the knowledge to himself, but according to the growth and ability of the child imparts the lesson that is needed. So as human lives grow these lessons are waiting in the minds and thoughts of the higher intelligences for human beings to possess them.

The forces of nature, so-called, do not communicate themselves directly to intelligence without an intervening intelligence. These forces themselves you think unintelligent, but behind each pulsing orb, behind each manifestation of nature the great power of deific intelligence is manifest, and there man must find the secret source of his knowledge.

This 20th century is expected to wipe out war; that is, largely to bring about the reign of peace; that is to see international arbitration; that is to witness the interchange of human commodities without commercial greed, with nothing of the spirit of barter will not bring the millennium; human brotherhood on earth is to come to its fulfillment by better spiritual understanding.

Religion, when crystallized in any form, in any given theology, has not been able to bring this about in any general way, although it is quite certain that the early disciples lived together in a sort of fraternity. It is quite certain that the Quakers and the Shakers and many isolated religious bodies have at first illustrated that fraternal spirit; but it is usually at the sacrifice of some material or other law. The usual form has been too great asceticism, something that is not grounded in the usual needs and requirements of the human race. The monastic life of many religious bodies; the seclusion of the adepts in the East; the separation from their kind of many orders of Brotherhoods have made possible these ascetic and exalted lives, nevertheless they do not illustrate the general progress of the race. The Christ that ate and talked with publicans and sinners; the Christ that visited all classes of people, from the palace to the cottage; the Christ that found humanity where it was, this is the Spirit of that Truth that was to reach and renovate the world.

Of course there must be prophets and teachers, those who point the way and declare the truth, but the growth must be by the molding of the individual lives that make up the communities, the societies and nations. When these nations have outgrown war there can be no war; when they have outgrown certain kinds of selfishness in the lines of commercial dealing there can be no such methods as prevail to-day. These methods are not to blame. People talk about certain conditions in life as if the methods themselves were responsible. Creeds have been blamed by the materialists and the agnostics for the ignorance of the human race. You might as well blame the shell in which the young bird is incubating, and say, "the bird could fly if it were not for the shell." Of course when the bird is ready to fly the shell will break. So there never was a creed strong enough to hold a person who had outgrown it. When you see multitudes flocking to the Romish church and to other churches, you may know it is their place of incubation; you may know that it is just the place adapted to their needs. That all attempts that seem to outsiders to keep people from thinking are really their shelter. It is very difficult for people to think when they are not able to think, they do not know how. The methods of knowing how to think and of growing toward it are not prevented by creed and dogma or a prison cell. Perhaps you could not write as Pascal did if you were in prison. Neither can you out of prison write as he did. The restraining walls would not cause you not to write, but you have not grown to those heights, you have not conquered in those spiritual ways. Those "mute inglorious Miltons" that we have read about so many times, those "flowers that are born to blush unseen and waste their sweetness on the desert air," are largely in the poet's imagination. If there is a Milton, even though blind, he will have visions of paradise; and if there are blossoms they bloom, not for eyes to see, but because to bloom is the loveliest and sweetest thing they can do. All this talk about genius being hidden away in some dark corner of the earth is a mistake. The New England rocks could not hold the genius of Webster, could not fetter the songs of Longfellow, nor could the rules and severe asceticism of Quakerism prevent Whittier from singing the songs of the people. Nowhere upon the earth is there a rocky cave in mountain or valley that can hide the eagle when it is ready to come forth. So when the people are ready this great inheritance is to be theirs.

There are present indications, which science is well aware of, that the earth is making ready for one of those great cyclic changes, to which we have referred. You are aware that not only in the conjunction of the planets and other great astronomical facts there are mutual influences that planets exert over one another, but there is that in astronomy called the "precession of the equinoxes." You understand that the poles of the earth are gradually, gradually, gradually changing; that there must come a time when there will be a reaction, and with this change there must come that which is known as one of the great glacial periods, where continents are destroyed, where the whole earth undergoes a geographical change, where, perhaps, only the Noahs, the precursors of the future generations will be preserved. Of course, there must always be left the seed of the human race, and of the animal kingdom, the germs of the plants, that which is, to bring forth the future results. If people were not so anxious to find faults in the Old Testament instead of finding the inner, esoteric meaning, they would know that the great Noachian deluge is but one of the traditions or records of a certain period of time, of a cycle in which there was a glacial deluge. We compute the time to be about 25,000 years between each of these great cyclic changes. We consider that the time since the last glacial deluge time is nearly passed, but it will not probably come to the cataclysm in the 20th century. The precursors, however, are already here: In certain lines of prophecy, in the appearance of many religious zealots who see the "end of the world" every few minutes and try to make ready for it; and among scientific people, as well as among those who have studied these great cycles and their spiritual meaning; and we claim to be among those who have announced this great cyclic change. The precursors are already here: in the greater agitation and variation atmospherically; in the greater disturbances by land and sea; in the effect upon human lives, causing many mistakes to be made; more accidents upon railways, and street cars, and accidents upon the oceans, in the great physical epidemics, and moral epidemics. These great crimes are precursors of this change. These are days of culminations. There are just as great geniuses in crime as there are in inventions, and people also discover new ways of torturing their criminals; new ways of putting the criminals out of the way instead of teaching them how to do better. Electrocution is one of these discoveries that enable people to demonstrate (as they suppose in the interest of the law) the best method to torture each other, whether a matter of, so-called, or mis-called, justice, or whether as a matter of revenge, which finds culmination in such a period as this.

Human lives will also seek to find many palliations for existing wrongs. But palliations are not cures. Social reforms are usually moral anesthetics. The science of materia medica has discovered a great many anesthetics, and it is the present form of practice in materia medica to soothe the pain more frequently than to cure disease. It is left for the Christian Scientist, the Spiritual and Magnetic healer and that sort of people to cure the patients. Doctors are proficient in surgery and anesthetics, and that means that the causes of human ailments have not been removed, but palliatives are used.

Of course attention to the sanitary conditions of the crowded cities makes a good beginning. It is quite a discovery in the right direction when men and women of eminence are seeking to-day the knowledge of how you house your people, not your wretched poor, but your laboring people, your mechanics, your day laborers. To find in many instances in the densely populated portion of your city that there are more than one thousand people crowded into one block. Not where the buildings are the highest, but where they are so close together that at best they offer small chance for sanitary conditions. These houses are a much better solution than those discovered by the science of medicine, of that which has caused scarlet fever and typhoid fever to crop out in such places.

Scarlet fever and typhoid fever are sounds of alarm, they call upon you to cleanse the streets and clear out the places of filth. We propose to make it a part of our business to teach the necessity of letting in the light, the daily light, the sunlight, materially as well as spiritually, to clear out the "slums" and "levees," in fact the entire city of Chicago, and make it clean. It will be a glorious century if this can be done. London and New York have but partially solved the problem. It was a part of the genius of Napoleon the great to make Paris a beautiful city. He did it at the expense of the whole country, but he succeeded. If your city can be beautiful without injustice try to make it so.

With added facilities of transportation you would be surprised if cities, in the sense they now exist, shall have no existence in another century. People will not then stay in cities unless they are obliged to, and nobody will be obliged to from lack of being able to see fields and have fresh air, cottages and homes, not houses and tenements.

What will it be then? It will be a race of people growing up in the midst of the beautiful scenes of nature, appreciating the blue sky, the starry vault, the sunrises and the sunsets, the flower gardens, the fields and meadows. The whole country has room for homes for all the people. How beautiful it would be. Then the cities would only be occupied by shipping interests, railroads and commerce as distributing centers. We see that rapid means of transportation and changes in the methods of human life may bring this about.

Of course people swarm together for the experiences they get. It is only after the experience that they want to be isolated. The recluse of refined taste is the man or woman who has met the world and has been polished. They are great lapidaries, these cities of to-day, they rub off the refuse of ages. People rush together because they think they are lonesome, only to find there is no greater lonesomness or barren desert than the crowded city. But people become humanized in that way. There are few that can appreciate the lonely grandeur of the Rocky Mountains, or the Alps. The vast prairies do not appeal to people until they have been ground out in the mill of humanity.

Consequently the next aim will be to civilize the cities, to make them tolerable places of abode, instead of intolerable. To make it possible for this aggregation of human beings to dwell together in a little better sort of way. Yet these people that are hived in so closely together are marvelously kind to one another. You turn a man away from your residence whom perhaps they would feed. There is fraternity and sympathy among them. Sometimes this is a great lesson to you. And, possibly, you will ascertain when you cast your ballot for the one that is to see to it that there are better means of housing these people, that it is not simply that they wish to be there, but because the grinding poverty, and the treadmill of daily toil does not offer any better place for them to live in.

You have a limited income, you live where you must. If your income were less you would have to live where they do.

Now the great problem is to have the income and the home combined for a place of comfort, fresh air and sunshine.

Spiritually there is a great deal of light being let in upon the earth. The upper lights have been turned on for more than half a century; the hadean darkness has been dispersed, the great gaunt vaults of fear, and the horrible thoughts concerning death have been scattered. Yet there is still much to do.

Your cemeteries are places of disease; your crowded cities grow and include them. When the vaults of your spirits are opened you will understand that your friend is no more in the ground than enclosed by the garments they have worn when on earth, and you will have changed the whole aspect of that which relates to, so-called, funerals.

The 20th century will note, not only a marked change in this respect, but you will perhaps be surprised when you see that not only flowers for the wealthy, but for all classes will come, blossoms of hope and joy, with the transition of the spirit from the body, and there will be no more this terrible form of grief and mourning.

Spiritual illumination has done much; spiritual communication has done much; the opening of the avenues of thought between the two worlds has done much; but more and more will be accomplished in the gradual growth of the people away from the thought of death. Life is continuous, changing, yet everlasting, and the transition of human beings from the earth to the future state will be accounted as a great occasion of rejoicing. It was our privilege to officiate just a few days ago after the transition of a young girl from human life, when she went singing songs of praise, and calling her loved ones about her, she told them not to mourn, that she would still be with them. Her vision was opened, she beheld those who came to her, and up to the last moment was talking cheeringly to those who were in human life.

There is to be a great reformation in Death. More people will have visions; more people will understand that it is but another step in life; mourning shadows will grow less and less and the darkened pall will give place to rejoicing. The opening of the vision to the immortal world of those who are passing away is not new in the world, but it will be more and more recognized. This taking of the next step will neither be dreaded before it comes, nor mourned as annihilation after it comes. Such will be the illumination that will spread abroad almost imperceptibly over the world, as it has spread in the last fifty years. The hanging of flowers on the doors, the draping of the casket and room with blossoms, has done much to express this thought.

But really, dear friends, the best thing you could do for people is to give some blossoms while they stay with you, instead of spending a vast amount to make yourselves believe that death is beautiful. Let their lives be adorned with flowers; let the good things you say about them be said while they are here. Tell them how much you love them every day instead of keeping it stored away until their forms are silent; it will help them as well as you. It is a great deal better to do this while they are in human life than when the change comes. Then there is no lack of blossoms when they enter spirit life. The spirit of life is this blossoming.

Ah! it is the tombs and sepulchers that you find in daily life that makes you so full of grief when the loved are gone. But they do not go, they do not pass from you, they are in your midst, and whatever blossoms you bind their lives with, of hope and love and joy, these they possess when the time of transition comes.

Yes, Satan has been reformed in the last half century. Now the old-time enemy of the world, Death, is to be reformed, and Death as a reformer will take the right place in your thoughts and in your lives.

Flowers pass and fade, corn-fields stand stark and bare, you have the harvest stored away carefully in the granaries, at least the farmers should have. But you do not house your treasures of love, nor harvest your fruits of kindness, therefore, when the change comes you feel the loss. But in the great storehouse of the spirit, in that which makes the fruitage and final triumph of life, you only cast aside the stalk, the leaves, the outward covering, the husks, the grain is yours.

This great treasure-house of the spirit lies all about you, environs and girds you round about with its ministering presences and powers, and all the great and wise and true who have passed on are helpers. Those who were not enlightened, who were unfortunate, who have not conquered, are in their own shadows. But the great burdens of the world you are continually aided and strengthened to bear.

The 20th century marks the death-knell of Death in the old-time theological sense. Churchyards and all their belongings will give place to knowledge of the realm of the spirit, of the light that is beyond, of the strength and beauty and greatness that abide there.

The 20th century is the precursor for the great cataclysm, for the glacial deluge, and all the forces of mind and spirit mark the epoch faster than matter does. Therefore, there are culminations inwardly which will bring about a culmination in ways for devising peace; culminations in religion that will bring about a great deal of sectarian struggle to the new enlightenment of the race; culminations in commercial relations that will bring about a general readjustment, since nations will be so girdled around that they will be checkmated by other nations through the interchange of commerce. There will be great changes in the relation of capital and labor, since now they are divided. But a man will stand for more than a dollar, and humanity will stand for more than money. The time is coming when these forces will be allied of necessity, and necessity will bring about equalization and growth.

Fraternity cannot be compelled, but fraternity will gradually take the place of selfish aggregation. As soon as people understand that each is included as a part of the whole. You fight the world now, the "I" being against all the rest. It was a great proposition in science when the sun was made the center of the solar system, instead of the earth. It left the earth because science found it was too small to be the center of so much magnificence. When the center found its own place the universe seemed to be better adjusted. Now the "I" is supposed to be the center of the universe in every human mind. Just as soon as that is changed and the "I" is relegated to its own place, as a part of the whole—the soul preserving its identity—the universe will run smoother with you. The whole human family will not be against you, you will be one with it.

There is a vast reciprocity of souls, a mighty community of eternal intelligences, of which you, as a soul, are a part, no smaller, no greater than any other soul. Your interests are no more important and no less important than others. And you, as one of that immense number of souls, move in response to Infinite law. Nations, communities, personal interests, all are governed by this great purpose.

When you understand it; when you know this, all this rebellion and warfare and striving against the Infinite purpose and against the small petty personal experiences will vanish. If you walk the thorn-path, others have walked and are walking it. If you have a hard task to perform, others have hard tasks. If you have great grief, others have grief also. There is no isolation in sorrow or in joy. A common pulsation runs throughout the universe and through the races for the mighty purpose of human experience.

This 20th century, releasing many things that have been chained in the past, will yield greater beginnings than you suppose; will teach each human life that he or she is no better, no worse in the great economy of souls than demons or archangels; each is only a state of growth and expression.

When James Phillip Bailey made Lucifer at last to be restored as an angel of light, it was a great spiritual lesson. When Sir Edwin Arnold makes the Magdalen the principal expounder of the teachings of the Master, it is a great spiritual lesson. No one is higher or lower, ultimately, primarily; and the various conditions of human life are but that you may find expression in some century like the 20th century and see how you long have moved with one mighty purpose toward that event, that in itself is no greater than thousands of events that have preceded it, or will follow it: that all culminating periods have nations of people like yours.

At some time in the garden of earth the lily blossoms; but for that lily there is the darkness that hides the germ, the bursting forth of the shoot, the transmutation and transfiguration toward the flower, then finally the opening of the blossom, the one supreme event of that lily's life. Yet to those who gaze on fields of lilies miles and miles in extent that one lily means little or nothing, yet it is the one event.

Somewhere in the Garden of Life the great immortal Lily of Love has its hiding place in the darkness, in the midst of rocks and thorns and briars, possibly hidden away, and no one suspects that it is there. There is struggle and there is growth; the stalk comes forth, then the leaves, and finally, for that life the supreme moment arrives, the white Lily of Love has awakened, has blossomed. Yet to those who watch thousands and millions of completions of souls this is but an event, usual and common, but it is the supreme moment for that life; not an angel would turn away, nor an eye be filled with scorn in all the heavenly company to see the blossom of immortal love in any and every human life.

So, beloved friends, this century will shape itself to great fulfillments; but there were other ages and will be more of equal importance. And as you are standing upon the threshold now beholding the mighty mysteries of the past, remember it may be that this immortal Lily of Fraternal Love will blossom upon the Earth, and human life will reveal it in the gardens of earth, and that angels will bend and at last behold it.

Restores Eyesight

"Actina," a Wonderful Discovery Which Cures Diseased Eyes, No Matter Whether Chronic or Acute, Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. This wonderful treatment takes the form of a Pocket Battery and is known as "Actina." It is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient. There is no risk of experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable. This wonderful remedy also makes the use of spectacles unnecessary, as it not only removes the weakened and unnatural conditions of the eye, but gives it a clear vision.

A. O. T. Pennington, Massachusetts building, Kansas City, Mo., says: "Actina," cured my mother of cataracts and cured me of asthma.

W. J. Reed, 500 Prospect avenue, Kansas City, Mo., says: My sister was STONE BLIND and "Actina" restored her sight perfectly after oculists had failed.

L. B. Halloy, New England building, Kansas City, says: "Actina" cured me of catarrh and is the best thing to cure colds.

W. R Owens, Adrian, Mo., writes: "Actina" saved me from going BLIND.

Robert Baker, 80 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill., writes: I should have been blind had I not used "Actina."

This method of treatment has been given a thorough test and thousands have been cured after being pronounced incurable.

Advice FREE. FREE treatment at office. "Actina" is sent on trial to out-of-town people. Call or write for Prof. Wilson's 100-page Treatise on the Eye and Its Disease and disease in general free on application. Address New York and London Electric Ass'n., Dept. T, 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo.

THE SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE.

A VERY IMPORTANT WORK.

The Spiritual Significance is by Lilian Whiting, author of "The World Beautiful," "After Her Death," "Kate Field, A Record," "A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning," Cloth, $1.00.

Miss Whiting finds the title of her new book in these lines from "Aurora Leigh:"

"If a man could feel
Not one, but every day, feast, fast, and working-day,
The spiritual significance burn through
The hieroglyphic of material shows,
Henceforward he would paint the globe with wings."

The aim of this book is to reveal the curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an unseen realm into which humanity is rapidly advancing and thus gaining a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautiful" continues the same argument presented in those volumes in a plea that the future life is the continuation and development of our present life in all its faculties and powers, and that the present may be ennobled by the constant sense of the Divine Presence, and a truer knowledge of the nature of man and his relations to God tend to a higher morality and increasing happiness. The book is characterized by the same essential style and qualities that have insured for "The World Beautiful" volumes an almost world-wide popularity.

Practical Methods to Insure Success.

A valuable little work, full of practical instruction in matters pertaining to physical, mental and spiritual health. Worth many times its cost. Price 10 cents.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require. Every item sent to us for publication, should contain the full name and address of the writer. We desire to know the source of every item that appears. This rule will be strictly adhered to.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Bear in mind that all notices for this page are cut down to suit the space we have to occupy when received.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Bear in mind, please, that Isa Wilson Kayner's address is at No. 112 Winchester avenue, Chicago, where she can be addressed.

Mrs. M. E. Kratz is in Los Angeles, Cal., and intends making that city her home. She can be addressed at 619 South Hill street.

W. V. Nicum writes from Buffalo, N. Y.: "The First Spiritual Church of Buffalo, N. Y., tendered its pastor, Rev. Moses Hull, and his wife, Mattie E. Hull, together with F. Corden White, who has been serving the society for the month of March, a reception at the Temple, Thursday evening, April 3. It was one of the most successful and enjoyable gatherings ever held in honor of any workers in the city of Buffalo. The rostrum was tastily decorated with palms and cut flowers. The success of the social gathering was largely due to Mr. Albee, the president of the church, whose generous donations in a financial way are always equal to the occasion. The writer was appointed by the president to act as master of ceremonies. The programme was quite lengthy, consisting of vocal and instrumental music, under the direction of Miss Bessie Starr, and short speeches by the officers and leading members of the church and others. The pastor responded in his usual humorous way apropos to the occasion, which was generously applauded. Mrs. Hull, in her word-picturing response, spoke of the many tender associations in the church during the past four years, and lamented that they would so soon have to depart to other fields of labor. F. Corden White also lamented that he, too, had to depart to other fields of labor, but then he said it made but little difference as he was, in common with other workers, only a tramp at best. Last but not least, the audience retired to the dining hall of the Temple and indulged in refreshments and a good social time. The audience of about two hundred people adjourned at twelve o'clock with many regrets that the midnight hour had come so soon."

C. H. Figures writes from Cleveland, Ohio: "By a rare and fortunate chance the East End Spiritual Society of Cleveland, Ohio, secured Mrs. Mattie E. Hull for Sunday, March 23. The hall was packed to its utmost capacity. Two christenings and a consecration service were marked features of the evening. The fifty-fourth anniversary of Modern Spiritualism was celebrated here March 30, by a monster union meeting of all local societies. Pythian Hall was beautifully decorated with palms and cut flowers, and the national colors were in evidence. The utmost harmony prevailed. The various speakers, Mrs. Mattie E. Hull, Hudson Tuttle and Emma Rood Tuttle, were never in better tune with their work, while Thomas Lees, as chairman, was perfect. The hall was filled to its capacity, hundreds being turned away. Many visitors from near-by towns were present. Refreshments were served by the Ladies' Temple Fund Society under the personal supervision of Mrs. Dorcas Savage. The test mediums, Mrs. Effie Moss, Mrs. D. N. Shoemaker and C. H. Figuers, were thoroughly in harmony with their guides, many messages being given, all of which were recognized. The music was all that could be desired. After all expenses were paid there remained about $82.50, one-third of which was ordered sent to the Mediums' Home, in Reed City, Mich., the remaining two-thirds was turned over to the Ladies' Temple Fund Society. Never was there so good and grand a meeting in Cleveland, and much good will follow. We hope to have more union meetings. We believe that by this means all local societies will be made stronger and a more fraternal spirit manifested. An Indian pow-wow, in which all mediums in and around Cleveland are invited to join, will be held by the Ladies' Temple Fund Society, in Pythian Hall, Friday night, April 25. Come out and let's have a real good time."

Rev. C. Hall Cook, B. D., M. A., Ph. D., lecturer, psychical research, or demonstration of the life hereafter, is open for engagements. Dr. Cook is a most instructive and earnest advocate of the truth of demonstrated immortality. He sticks close to the facts and speaks with the power of strong conviction. Address him at Los Angeles, Cal., 601 Temple street.

Thos. J. Haynes writes: "Will you kindly say to your many readers that all speakers who consider themselves engaged to speak at Briggs Park Camp, Grand Rapids, Mich., this season, had better write to the secretary at once as no contracts made by any one else will be assumed nor paid by us. I make this statement in reply to many letters of inquiry. Address me at No. 166 Scribner street, Grand Rapids, Mich."

The St. Louis (Mo.) Post-Dispatch alludes to Mrs. Kates' address there as follows: "Mrs. Kates hit Christian Science a few hard raps, saying that no science was Christian, and that Christianity was not a science. She claimed that Jesus Christ was a Spiritualist and that there had been more than one savior of mankind in the world. Spiritualism, she contended, was based on natural laws and love is the controlling element of life. Love constitutes the world which would be nothing without it, Eternity means nothing without love, being nothing more than the place where the people of earth meet their loved ones who have gone before. Mrs. Kates was attentively listened to by a large and fashionably dressed audience."

The Evansville (Ind.) Journal-News says: "A large audience greeted Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, the new pastor of the Evansville Society of Spiritualists, at the Spiritual Church, corner of Third avenue and Michigan street, Sunday evening. Mrs. Cooley proved herself a fluent speaker and pleased those present with the able manner in which she presented the subject of Spiritualism."

Benson Elliott, a magnetic healer of Los Angeles, Cal., was arrested on March 24. His trial came before Justice Morgan, who ruled that scratching a back and putting feet into hot water was no part of medical treatment, and that a woman had a right to pay a dollar for that if she wished. So the case was dismissed.

G. H. Brooks writes from Milwaukee: "The Unity Society, Milwaukee, Wis., observed the Fifty-fourth Anniversary with more zeal and spirit than ever. Saturday evening a very largely attended party was held at the Ethical Hall, and everybody fully enjoyed themselves. At the afternoon meeting there was a goodly attendance. In the evening the house was well filled to listen to the anniversary address. Those who use me as an instrument gave the address, and it was well received. The Unity Society is in a prosperous condition, and has done much toward spiritualizing the sentiment of the people. There are other societies in the city, several German societies. Mrs. McFarlin has recently started what is known as the Independent Pulpit, on Grand avenue; each one of these societies celebrated, and they were all well attended. These anniversary exercises bring the people closer together, and call attention to the great truths. The Unity Society is in a most excellent shape, never better. The meetings and socials were never better attended; best of all there was never a better feeling than exists now. At the close of the Sunday service the society presented me with a beautiful bouquet of Easter lilies, and a member of the society sent us a most beautiful bouquet. I assure you these tokens were fully appreciated. I went home after my work was done to get ready to take up my work in Newport, Ky."

Virginie Barrett writes: "I am engaged in Pennsylvania for the month of May. I would like to hear from societies in that state, or en route, desiring my services, at reasonable terms, to open meetings and organize societies. I have open dates for camp engagements. Address me at 819 S. 16th street, Indianapolis, Ind."

Mrs. Marian Carpenter, of Detroit, spoke at Society Hall, morning and evening, for the Spiritualist society of Port Huron. The audience was greatly interested in the descriptions given by Mrs. Carpenter after the close of the lecture, all of which were recognized by persons in the audience. One of the most notable of these was given to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Griffith, who sat near the rear of the hall. Mrs. Carpenter reported a spirit who called himself Jack, present, and gave a description of the little son of Mr. and Mrs. Griffith who died some two years ago, which was instantly recognized. The name of Jack's little brother, with other facts known to Jack during his life were also given, and finally one incident that occurred during the boy's life was given that could not have been known to any one but his parents. This incident was the throwing of mud on a newly-painted house, which Mr. Griffith required Jack to wash off before he could go out to play again. Neither Mr. or Mrs. Griffith had ever met Mrs. Carpenter.—Port Huron (Mich.) Times.

F. P. Wilmarth writes: "I am pleased to inform the readers of The Progressive Thinker that Springfield, Mo., is to have a Spiritualist church; yes, sure, for the foundation is already made and we expect it will be finished by the middle of May. It will not be large, but the Spiritualists will have a house of their own, and it will be 24 x 48 feet. It will be built on the corner of Roberson avenue and Calhoon street, on the lot where the house now stands where Mr. C. M. and Josie K. Folsom now reside. The house has been moved back and will be used as a parsonage, and will be occupied by Mr. Folsom and family. We will soon give a detailed account of how it came about. We feel sure that every true Spiritualist will rejoice with us. Send us your best thoughts and share our joy."

Spirit Bismarck is reported in the Paris journal, Le Spiritualisme Moderne, to have given some sensible advice to the German Emperor through a private medium in that city. He said: "Your Majesty, the spirits come to salute you. The old Iron Chancellor comes to challenge you. In the past it has been a life and death struggle between us. So let it continue. Yes, I come to warn you as I have warned you always. Your years are numbered. Strive to satisfy the people. They desire liberty; grant them at least liberty of conscience. I counsel you, sire, to leave the spirits alone. He who believes in a future life and the possibility of intercourse with us, should be encouraged and not persecuted."

A Subscriber writes: "The Church of Spirit Communion most cordially welcomed Dr. Hewitt back as its speaker, Sunday evening, and long may he be with us. He gave a very fine talk on 'The Afterglow of Easter,' in his characteristically happy vein. Splendid tests were given by Mr. H. F. Coates and Mr. Cowan. Dr. Hewitt speaks in glowing praise of his Kentucky friends and their beautiful church, where he has been laboring the past two months."

A convention of Chicago German societies will be held the latter part of this month to complete plans for the taxation of church property. Lawyers are to be employed to draft a bill that will stand the test of the courts, and funds raised for agitation and lobbying.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

The third mass-meeting, held in Aurora hall, under the auspices of the Turner organizations, showed that the movement is progressing. Out of 400 Chicago German societies endorsements have been received from 370. The new crusade to tax church property results primarily from the injunction secured by Roman Catholic societies against the use of free text-books in the schools.

Benj. W. Belcher writes from Marlboro, Mass.: "C. P. Winslow, of Weston, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. B. W. Belcher, attended the meeting at the G. A. R. Hall, C. Fannie Allen, of Stoneham, the speaker. After the afternoon session Mr. and Mrs. Belcher, accompanied by other friends of Westboro, Southboro, Fayville and Hudson, with friends from the home city, went to her home, as it was the anniversary of her birthday. Later other friends, with Mrs. Julia E. Davis, of Somerville, arrived. A collation was served, and many tokens of remembrance were left, among them a beautiful bouquet from Mr. Croucher, of Hudson; after which an entertainment of song, 'Sweet Hour of Prayer,' followed by remarks by Mrs. Barrows, C. T. W. Robinson, and C. P. Winslow; readings by M. E. Howe, Margaret Sylvin and Marion Jackson, followed by remarks from Mrs. Belcher's guides, and Julia E. Davis, after which 'White Fawn' and 'Forest Flower' gave communications till a late hour."

Charles J. Anderson, the "boy orator," in an address at Woodman Hall, Oakland, Cal., on "What Spiritualism Means to Humanity," said: "If a man's ideals are noble, his life an inspiration and his mind clean, that man will unwittingly affect the moral status of the beings with whom he is brought into contact. They will feel the best that is in them rising to meet his nobleness and his inspiration. So if a man is ignoble, base and unclean morally and intellectually, he will affect those with whom he speaks and with whom he lives. This would show that humanity is affected by thought spoken or unspoken; that poetry has its power, music its witcheries, and oratory its inspiration, simply because it is thought which meets thought. If this, then, is true, if human beings are affected by other human beings, is it not possible that those who have gone can affect us? That they will come to human aid, and that they also are molding and building up our souls? The soul of John Jones departed is the same that we knew here. It has its endeavors and its trials and it pursues its course as it did in physical life. Why, then, should we think it improbable that John Jones' soul is with us tonight? Why should we not attract him to us if we are on the same line of thought that he is, and if we are striving for the noble end, will he not aid us? If we are going to utter corrupt ideas will not a dark spirit be with us? We believe that such is Spiritualism, and this is what it means to humanity."

Dolores Pendleton writes: "Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague arrived at Mechanicsburg, Ind., March 24, and conducted a series of four lectures, which were exceptionally praiseworthy, and greatly appreciated. On Friday evening they held a seance at the home of Dr. and Mrs. C. B. Pendleton, for the benefit of the N. S .A."

The trial of the Rev. Granville Louther of McPherson, before the Southwestern Kansas M. E. conference on a charge of heresy, resulted in a verdict of guilty. The conference agreed not to execute the penalty of expulsion if he would sign a statement agreeing not to teach in public or in private the views which were the basis of the charges against him. This Mr. Louther declined to accept because he "could not be honest with himself and the cause of Christ." The conference then expelled Mr. Louther from the church. He reserved the right to appeal and the case will be taken before the general conference.

H. A. Kellogg writes from Los Angeles, Cal.: "The book, A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands, is wonderful indeed; am much pleased with it, and would not take ten times what it cost me if I could not get another copy. I am also pleased with The Progressive Thinker."

G. C. Paine says in the Boston Traveler: "It is believed, and, so far as I know, is not denied by Spiritualists or Materialists, that the spirit leaves the body when the life does. Reasoning analogically, therefore, we may assume without the aid of spirits or mediums that when the life 'enters the human body at first,' the spirit also enters, and by the same means I do not believe that those in the primary class can successfully refute the truth of this philosophical proposition, however marvelous it may appear. The great opposition to Spiritualism comes wholly from those who, for the most part, are below the primary grade in this sphere of knowledge, for it is a curious fact that no one who persistently, patiently and honestly investigates this subject but what are in time overwhelmed by the logic, not only of the phenomenon, but of the philosophy as well."

S. Hartman writes from Wheeling, W. Va.: "In to-day's paper I find a partial report of our anniversary celebration, sent in by our secretary. I beg leave to say that I was one of the performers on that occasion, having read a poem by Dr. Dean Clarke. I have been a worker for the cause for 33 years, during which time I have spent many hundreds of dollars on mediums and books, and supporting the Spiritual press, sometimes having taken as many as five papers at one time."

C. F. Short writes from New York: "For one I must say that I feel a great debt of gratitude to the brilliant writers who contribute to your pages: Peter-silea, Loveland, Dawbarn, Longley, Hull, Howe, Nicholas, Richmond, Tuttle, Dean Clarke, Prof. Peck and a host of others who pour out rich stores of knowledge to our waiting souls, and never should we forget the blessed ones on the other shore who wait, watch, love and serve us. How can we sufficiently honor, serve and reward them for this beautiful, unselfish devotion to our higher welfare? Appreciation of favors and gratitude for the same is, and I hope will be my motto."

N. P. Nelson writes from Vernon, B. C.: "I am satisfied that The Progressive Thinker is one of the most enlightening papers of to-day, and I would not do without it for a great deal. I am trying hard to have it circulated in this place so that the people may know something about Spiritualism, but it seems that they are so set against it here, even the churches, that it seems they do not want to know the truth."

The Nebraska State Journal says: "The Theosophists have broken out in a row over the ridiculous oriental court maintained by Mrs. Tingley, the head of the order, at Point Loma, California. A great school of the occult sciences was projected there for the revival of the 'ancient mysteries.' It seemed to flourish for a time, as the idea was novel and the location on a high point of land jutting out from the north end of San Diego Bay was inspiring. But the dissatisfied ones say that more than $300,000 was spent in maintaining a funny court at Point Loma while the real work of the cult in the subordinate lodges was allowed to languish. Prof. Anderson, who has broken away from Mrs. Tingley, says that he has seen people of wealth and social position wearing the gowns and ridiculous hats of the order and humbling themselves before Mrs. Tingley in a manner scarcely to be thought possible by sensible persons. The professor says that he stood it for some time, thinking that there might be some meaning in the foolish ceremonials, but he finally became disgusted with the whole affair and left Point Loma for good. At last accounts the comic opera court was still doing business on the old stand, and the high priestess of the order had no notion of yielding any of her prerogatives to the rebels."

Hermann Fascher writes from Salt Lake City, Utah: "The anniversary of the advent of Modern Spiritualism was celebrated here by the only local society, the Independent Freethought Spiritualist Church, with appropriate exercises and before a crowded house. This society is the first one organized and incorporated under the laws of Utah. There are a great many Spiritualists in this city, although comparatively few take sufficient interest to become members. Last nights' occasion brought out over a hundred of them. Mr. Wm. Cannegieter delivered a very interesting and appropriate address, which was well received; after which Mrs. Chamomile, a lady medium of perhaps 70 years of age, delivered a beautiful inspired poem on 'The Tiny Rap.'"

Reporter writes from St. Louis, Mo.: "Thos. Grimshaw was called to Kansas City for Sunday, April 6. G. W. Kates and wife filled his place in St. Louis. Large audiences greeted them, especially at the night meeting, when the large hall was overcrowded. Mr. Kates spoke at the morning session upon 'Fruit of the Spirit.' He gave a forcible exposition of the relation of the spirit and earth-body, showing that the works of the flesh influence the development of the spirit. Mrs. Kates spoke at night upon 'Promise of the Future.' She outlined the progress of the past and specified possibilities of the future, saying that back of all progress was power of the spirit. Spiritualism stands for all truth, socially, politically and religiously, hence all good for humanity is conserved by its advocates. She spoke for generation as more important than to plan for regeneration. Each lecture was followed by spirit descriptions of accurate and interesting character. The St. Louis Spiritualists are making an effort to build a Temple, and hope to succeed."

Dr. R. McL. Angus writes from Fort Wayne, Ind.: "I will soon have a strong society formed here. The Spiritualists are coming back one by one into the fold. They have been scattered to the four winds of Fort Wayne, but with a little patience and perseverance I shall soon have them I hope, breathing the sweet air of harmony. I will be here until the 4th of May; after that date I will be open for engagement for any society or camp-meetings desiring the services of a lecturer and test medium. A strike while the iron is hot saves time and labor. Address me at 405 West Jefferson street, Fort Wayne, Ind."

Mrs. Irene Gay writes: "The people of Willoughby, Ohio, recently had the pleasure of listening to Mrs. Nellie Mosier, of Kent, Ohio., who gave messages from spirit friends for over an hour in College Hall. The tests were clear-cut and direct, full names being given and in every instance were recognized. Any society should be congratulated that is so fortunate as to secure her services."

The "sleeping preacher" of Saluda county, S. C., is attracting a great deal of attention. He lives a dozen miles from a railroad and never leaves the immediate vicinity of his home, so is known to few outside that county, but men of undaunted integrity vouch for the phenomenon. "Major" Perry is a mulatto, forty-five years old. Both he and his wife are illiterate. When a young man, he says, he felt a call to preach, but disregarded it. He seldom goes to church and is not religiously inclined. About ten years ago his wife says, Perry began to preach in his sleep. Sermons became more frequent until he now preaches five or six times a week. Perry goes to bed about 8 o'clock and within a half hour begins to preach. He first announces his text, chapter, verse or verses in the Bible correctly, after which he reads the text, always just as it is in the book. He then "lines" out, sings a hymn and prays, after which the sermon begins. Perry's sermon is grammatical and logical, and takes from forty-five minutes to one hour in delivery. Sometimes during the delivery of the sermon the muscles of the body, especially the arms and neck, contract, producing a cataleptic condition. This stops the sermon. The attacks last a minute or two and are driven away by his wife, who strokes with her hands the parts affected. When the tendency to catalepsy is banished he resumes his discourse, beginning exactly where he left off, even though it was in the middle of a sentence.

Moses Hull writes of the Spiritualist mass-meeting: "All of the Spiritualists of the state of New York, and of adjoining states are invited to the Spiritualist Temple, in Buffalo, on Friday afternoon and evening, April 25, and on Saturday and Sunday following, forenoon, afternoon and evening, to unite with the State Association, and the First Spiritual Church of Buffalo, in a great mass-meeting—a regular Spiritualistic jubilee—a pentecost—a three days' 'feast of reason and flow of soul.' All the Spiritualistic talent, as mediums and speakers, is hereby invited to be present, ready to assist as occasion may require in making this the largest and best mass-meeting ever held in the state. Able speakers and mediums from other states are invited to be here. Among those who have positively agreed to be present are Willard J. Hull, editor of the Light of Truth, Columbus, Ohio, and C. H. Figuers, of Cleveland, Ohio. Arrangements will be made for reduced fare at at least two hotels. Committees will meet friends at the depots. Meals will be served at very reasonable rates, in the church dining-room. Mr. Parker and Mrs. Bowen and others will treat us to as good music as you will ever hear this side of heaven. Come and bring a good time with you. We will thus all have our spiritual strength renewed."

The Lafayette (Ind.) Journal says: "The Case will case, being tried before Judge DeHart in the Circuit Court, is growing in interest each day. The points raised in the case are peculiar, and the divergence of evidence shows the wideness and liberality of thought. While we are engrossed with a will case at home, a trial precisely the same as this has been ended at Philadelphia. The following dispatch is self-explanatory: A jury in the Court of Common Pleas decided that the will of Alexander McIlroy, who bequeathed the bulk of his $30,000 estate to the First Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia, was invalid. Mr. McIlroy was formerly United States customs inspector, and died in May, 1897. John G. Johnson, counsel for the contestants, said that the basis of their claim was the fact that the belief in power to communicate with spirits is looked upon as a form of insanity. 'If this is so,' he said, 'your verdict must be for the plaintiff.' The Philadelphia jury claims that Spiritualism is one form of insanity! McIlroy left his estate to a Spiritualist association, and the contestants, holding this to be an act of insanity, had the will set aside. The same case is found in Lafayette, though no judgment has yet been reached. The Case will is contested because it bequeathes a part of the estate to a Spiritualist association. If the Lafayette jury shall render a decision according to the precedent established at Philadelphia, the plaintiffs in the Case will case will win. The peculiar similarity of the two cases is striking."

L. writes from Detroit, Mich.: "Anniversary exercises were held by all of the societies here. There were special services and decorations. The Earnest Workers closed their winter socials by a grand mask and costume social in the large hall. Mrs. St. Omer Briggs is doing good work at 50 Grand River avenue; Mrs. Legrange is instructing the multitude at Prismatic Hall, and Mrs. Perina is the speaker at the Sunday Chene Hall meetings. Circles are held all over the city. Mrs. Rose Ferris spoke and sang last Sunday at 55 Grand River. Her address is 259 Grand River avenue. Mrs. Jenkins resides in Windsor, where she gives satisfactory readings, and assists in platform work at the various meetings in Detroit."

Secretary writes from Atlanta, Ga.: "The Ladies Aid Society of Atlanta, Ga., is doing a splendid work in connection with the Society of Spiritual Science here in the South. Mrs. Wellauer, late of Chicago, Ill., is our president, and too much cannot be said in praise of the work she is doing. She seems to be indefatigable in all her efforts. Miss Lillian Marsh is our treasurer, and brings into our meetings sunshine, when we are favored by her presence. We meet every Thursday afternoon at 400 Peachtree street, and hold a social every two weeks, thus bringing into the work here a social feature that we have heretofore been greatly in need of. Two weeks ago we netted quite a sum from the sale of articles donated by merchants of this city. At our last Thursday's meeting we spent the afternoon in sewing for two hours; then one hour was devoted to tests and messages, after which tea was served. To-night we give an ice-cream social and pound party, which bids fair to be a great success. Our next move will be for the building of a Spiritualist church, and we have a movement on foot which we think will enable us to realize our hopes. Our society was favored Anniversary Sunday. We had with us Mrs. R. P. Ward, of Augusta, Ga., and Dr. Hilligoss and wife, who were en route to their Indiana home. Mrs. Ward has been doing a noble work, and alone, in her home city. She spoke earnestly and to the point. Dr. Hilligoss inspired all by his earnest words. He is a practical business man, and we feel that we can profit by suggestions given. While we had made no special effort to celebrate the 54th anniversary, we had a 'big time,' as one brother said. Our music was under the management of Miss Leamon and her sister Miss Bessie, both doing very well indeed. Our pastor, Mrs. Lole F. Prior, is doing all she can to present true Spiritualism to the Southerners, and we are doing what we can to aid her."

Peter Miller writes: "The Spiritualist Association of Dunkirk, Ind., is no more, at the present at least. It seems that lectures do but little good. We have a strong orthodox wall to battle against. The people want evidence, a good materializing medium or slate-writer; both, I have no doubt, would do well together here. Any medium that has the above phases can address the writer."

A well authenticated story comes from Cumberland, Md., that is curious, to say the least, and upon which the theorists will have a good chance to speculate. It relates that a few weeks ago George Robinson, of Lonaconing, had a leg so badly crushed that it had to be amputated at the hospital. After the operation, and even after Robinson was able to leave the hospital, he complained of a severe pain in the remaining portion of the leg. The pain was so severe that he could not sleep. Some one suggested that the amputated portion had been buried in a cramped position, and when it was exhumed that theory was found to be true. The leg was straightened out, and again interred, and Robinson's sufferings at once ceased. This is ot a novel story. Similar cases have been reported before, and have even been dignified by recognition in medical publications and scientific treatises. In the civil war, for example, a soldier who had suffered the loss of his left leg by amputation, complained for weeks of discomfort about the toes of his right foot. The sensation, as he expressed it, was as if a blade of grass were twined about his toes. The sensation continued, and finally became a positive menace to his health and sanity. Finally some one suggested that the amputated leg be disinterred. This was done and a blade of grass was found growing between the toes which, on the other foot, had caused all the trouble. What is the explanation of this sort of thing? There must be "more things in heaven and earth than are dreamt of in your philosophy."—Boston Traveller.

Mrs. E. J. Buchanan writes from Charlestown, Mass.: "I have received the premium books and paper, and I am more than pleased with them; your quick response to my order is greatly appreciated. When I have my spiritual paper and books at hand, I feel as though I were living in the truest sense of the word. The Progressive Thinker is a truly progressive paper, and when one once enjoys the weekly perusal of it, they feel lost if denied that privilege. May it continue to wave the Spiritual banner."

James Campbell writes from Nebraska: "To my thinking, The Progressive Thinker, as a Spiritualistic propagandist, is the best in the field to-day, and I sincerely wish you all possible guidance and success."

Wilson Duncan writes from Council Bluffs, Iowa: "It seems to me The Progressive Thinker is the most important spiritual journal in the world; certainly so to every earnest man and woman who has perused its columns, and who wants to keep step with the spiritual march of progress. It is astonishing to note, however, as I come in contact occasionally with prejudice and ignorance, I hear one say: 'Oh! that paper is on a material plane; no spirituality in it.' I said, 'Do you read the paper?' 'No; but I have seen God and Christ, and been shown wonderful sights.' 'Well, madam,' I replied, 'you have likely the same right that Paul, Swedenborg or A. J. Davis had to see marvelous things; but have you forgotten 'there shall be a new [idea of] heaven and new earth? Do you remember that in all past creeds of man, woman has been ignored? Should we not hope and pray for a greater teacher to come than in all the past, who shall tell us of our eternal Mother in heaven, and that the dear Father is going on a much-needed rest and outing, while she and her earth-children can run the ranch a day or so?'"

Byron D. Stillman and Victor Vogel, both well known to a great many readers of The Progressive Thinker, as musical composers and writers of verse, have just had one of their compositions, a character song, entitled "Happy Hooligan," accepted and published in all of W. R. Hearst's Sunday papers of April 6, reaching a circulation of 1,325,000. This is the first instance where an original unpublished song has been given to the public through the press. It was illustrated by the famous cartoon artist, Mr. F. Opper, of New York. Too much credit cannot be given this character in song, and those looking for a good number for entertainments will find this a catchy song. They have it arranged for orchestra, and sell both song and orchestra parts for 50 cents. Address Stillman & Vogel, care of N. Nelson, Publisher, 184 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill.

Rev. Marguerite St. Omer Briggs solicits engagements for societies and camp-meetings; for societies from the first of May as inspirational speaker and test medium. Address her at 100 Clifford street, Detroit, Mich.

Train No. 13 on the Burlington road, which left St. Joseph, Mo., for the North at 11:40 o'clock on the night of April 3, was held up three miles north of the city limits by four masked men. The attempted robbery occurred fifteen minutes after the train had pulled out of the Francis street station in the city. Sherman M. Cox, the conductor in charge of the train, had a premonition of the hold-up a few nights ago. He dreamed that his train was held up and that one of the robbers fired at him. When the train stopped, Cox looked out, and one of the robbers fired, he says, just as he had dreamed. The robber ordered him back into the car, and Cox warned the passengers to hide their valuables. Ten years ago Cox had a similar premonition, while living at Boone, Iowa. He dreamed that his train would be wrecked, and did not go out on his run that day. Another man went out. The train was wrecked and Cox's substitute was killed.

At the funeral of Major Bitters, at Rochester, Ind., Harry J. Moore officiated. In the course of his remarks he said: "Having a keen observation and profound understanding, as our brother undoubtedly possesses, he knew that nature did not smile with our pleasure nor did it weep with our pain. He often affirmed the belief that every manifestation of life was brought into existence without design and those expressions were destroyed without regret. He did not, however, forget that everything in life had a purpose and that all would at last turn out for the best. He was an optimist. All large souls are. He was taught by experience that justice did not always prevail and that innocence was not always a shield of protection. He set out to make the world better for his having lived. You all know that his thought made his surroundings eloquent. He was one (and they are very scarce) who had the courage of his convictions. It it were not for the brave and courageous souls who have refused to believe without evidence, we would all be slaves or savages to-day eating human flesh. Our brother was ambitious to accumulate this world's goods, but he was just as wide awake to his duty of giving to those who needed. He fully realized that whatever a man would sow he would reap. He believed and knew that nature's laws decreed that the consequences and results of every thought and act would tell for or against a person both here and hereafter. He said that it was by far more manly for a man to face the consequences of his thoughts and actions than to shift the responsibility and results upon an innocent person. He always considered it unmanly for a person to attempt to avoid their just deserts. He will live in spirit and memory forever!

Inspirational speaker and lecturer in German open for engagement. Write to Julius Kuhn, No. 803 North Carnac street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Dr. F. L. Mehrtens writes from Ripon, Wis.: "We have opened our doors to the public and have celebrated the 54th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism. We had an attendance of about forty. We hold meetings at our home every second Sunday in the month. We are engaged the other Sundays in Milwaukee for the Golden Rule Spiritual Society."

Mrs. Della Platt writes from Battle Creek, Mich.: "Mrs. Marguerite St. Omer Briggs gave us two fine inspirational lectures last Sunday, each followed by messages and descriptions, which were very convincing and all recognized."

Henry H. Warner writes from Hotel Columbia, Denver, Colo.: "In the last issue of The Progressive Thinker the types made me omit the name of the pastor of the Circle of Spiritual Light. I want to say that in my many years of wandering, I have not met many men like the brother and co-worker and friend, John Slater. The Rev. Mr. H. Hough, the gentleman first referred to is a comparatively young man in the work in this country, but he is doing a good work here and is building up a local society on a scientific plan and with an eye to the quality of his material more than the quantity. The members of the organization are very harmonious in their relations with each other and out of this society I predict will come workers that will be a credit to themselves and our cause. Mr. Hough is a gentleman in every sense of the word, and his lectures are couched in good language and are logical and practical. His message work is not of the highly sensational class, but they are sharp, clear-cut and direct, and many are comforted through them. He never takes back or amends a message once given, but lets each one stand on its own merits. John Slater is speaking to crowded houses and right here the writer wants to say that if there were more of our workers who would extend the hand of fellowship to brother and sister workers in the hour of need and give of time and work as Mr. Slater has done in the past two weeks for two of our workers, we would not hear quite so much about the jealousies, etc., of mediums. For the work he did he would not accept one cent of remuneration, but gave his services that the financial benefits might accrue to the ones he was helping. Thanks are too feeble an expression of the feelings of those thus helped and the writer for one can say that he believes and knows that such work is of more practical benefit to the cause of Spiritualism than a thousand long-winded sermons on the beauties of charity and harmony and none of its practice. From here the writer will go in a few days to Pocatello, Idaho, and there labor for a short time. He could say more of the work and workers here but he feels that he has already exceeded his share of space, but he does want to take this means of thanking all who have been his friends in the past and say to them that promises made will be redeemed ere long. The road has been a hard one to travel so far and has just paid its way. In fact had it not been for the aid of friends it could not have been traveled, and to all these friends, the writer wishes to say that the brighter days are now dawning and that soon we shall all reap our reward for the faithfulness to our trusts."

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold, Keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. FRANCIS CASEY, St. Louis, Mo.

ASPHODEL BLOOMS AND Other Offerings.

BY

EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

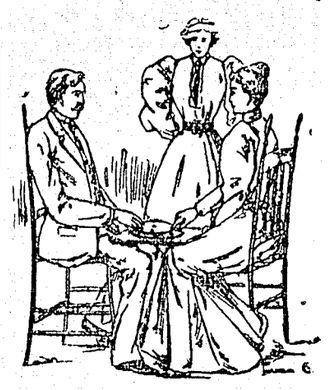
This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storiettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 285 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The Author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.

The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."

That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."

Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest."



Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered, hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

—OR—

DIAL PLANCHETTE.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than seven years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive Communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the Formation of Circles and Cultivation of Mediumship

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt. D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes us follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

A. Bugbee, Pomfret, Vt.: Q. Prof. Denton, "Soul of Things," says: "When properly cultivated, what an advantage psychometry will be to the miners and the world."

Prof. Buchanan located the faculty and it has been thus made distinct from spirit influence and as any other faculty of the brain. How is it to be distinguished from spirit impression?

A. Psychometry and spirit influence depend on the same principles and conditions. Impressibility is not the product of a special organ of the brain, but depends on the entire spiritual state of the individual. It is a freedom of the spiritual from the physical whereby the spirit receives impressions, in the same manner it would if freed from the body, and independent thereof. In the study of this subject it must be constantly borne in mind that man is a spirit before as well as after the falling off of the body. The spirit in its manifestations is limited by its physical environment. It has, however, many capabilities of its freed state. Hence the manifestations of our own spirits blend almost inextricably with those from the departed, and greatest care must be taken in experimental research. Human capabilities should be given credit as far as they furnish consistent explanation, and the higher sources of spirit interference when these fail. When the impressions transcend the knowledge of the recipient; are above, beyond, and independent of his mind, they may be referred to a higher and independent source.

John Cadwallader: Q. Will there be anything in the spheres resembling the glitter and pomp of armies here? So much attention is given to the art of war here, it would seem a great loss unless there be opportunity for the leaders to renew the pageantry in the life beyond.

A. The accounts of "War in Heaven," of the conflict in which a third of the angel hosts were overthrown and cast into the abyss, is a myth, too absurd and untruthful to merit being called poetic. The verse by which Milton gave it new life, and prolonged its harmful influence, is stilted bombast, and would have been so adjudged had it not been for its being auxiliary to the received theology.

The hosts of the spirit world do not re-enact the battle scenes of this life, where contending armies meet to destroy each other; what a farce a combat would be between soldiers shielded invulnerably with immortality!

The occupation of the soldier, and the leader is a waste, and the waste will not be transmitted to the next life. Napoleon on the lonely rocks of St. Helena, bemoaning the fate which held him with the hands of eternal justice, was not as much alone; as bereft of glory, power and prestige, as Napoleon in spirit life. All that gave him name and fame in this life, had to be eliminated before he could take a step upward, and as long as he gathered his worshipers around him in a mock court, or military staff, he remained in the sphere of darkness. For as was said by one who by personal contact knew, "war is hell," and no less is the thoughts of its engendering, in the next life.

Truth Seeker: Q. What was the purpose of the Vatican Council?

A. It was the nineteenth council of the church of Rome and promulgated the most important decree of doctrines since the council of Trent. It may be said to have been the combination of all others, completing the final work which they began, and so well that it never will again be necessary to call the potentates of the church together in council.

In the opinion of Pius the Ninth the time had come when the long disputed infallibility of the Pope should be absolutely affirmed, and by an encyclic he called a council to meet at the Vatican on the festival of the Blessed Virgin, Dec. 8, 1869. It was the greatest gathering of ecclesiastical power the church or the world ever saw, and the probability is the like will never be seen again. Seven hundred and sixty-four prelates, cardinals, patriarchs, archbishops, bishops, abbotts, etc., met in the splendor of their robes and insignia of office. Of this number the Italians furnished almost half.

Many subjects were discussed and passed upon, especially the liberal tendency which was affecting the laity and priests themselves. This was met with the affirmation of the infallibility of the Pope. While the fulmination against infidelity inside and outside the church received unanimous approval, there were many in high authority who paused at the dogma of infallibility of the Pope, which was disproved on almost every page of church history. This powerful minority left the council, and not until then was the dogma, which for 300 years had been a bone of contention, made the fundamental doctrine of the church. This dogma is as follows: That the Roman Pontiff "is the bishop of bishops, and all bishops are simply his vicars as he is the vicar of Christ," and "whenever he speaks in his official capacity to the Catholic world on any question of faith or morals, he is infallible and that his decisions are irrevocable, that is, absolutely final and irreversible in and of themselves without the consent of the ecumenical council."

Thus Ultramontanism and Jesuitism gained a complete and overwhelming victory over all liberal movements in the church, and the progress of centuries ignored. That which the Popes in the most benighted ages had not dared to more than hint at, was boldly asserted; liberalism anathematized; liberty made a crime; all governments claimed to be abjectly under the control of the church, and now that the decree of the Pope being infallible, councils became superfluous, as they would only meet to affirm the judgment of the pontiff without comment or discussion.

Harry Brown: Q. (1) When you say "The birthright of man is his spirit life, and his destiny is infinite development of his spiritual nature," what do you mean by "infinite?"

(2) In your use of the word "Law," what is the difference between "natural law" and "God's law?"

(3) Can there be a law without a lawmaker?

A. (1) Infinite as here used means endless and immeasurable, so far as finite mind can comprehend. It may be argued that what the finite mind regards as infinite, may to a more highly endowed intellect have limitation. There is an argument drawn from another source not dependent on the finite understanding. If two straight lines extend into space, constantly diverging, it is self-evident that they would never meet. The continuance of spirit individuality and its constant development, reaching into the future is like such diverging lines, and hence its endless course is a necessary conclusion.

(2) The term "law" is unfortunate in its application to natural or spiritual phenomena. It was applied when it was believed that a Creator, and lawgiver presided over the universe he had created. As legislators enacted and an executive enforced laws, so this legislator and executive in one, gave laws to the world and directly enforced them.

Now it is well understood that there is no correspondence between the laws of nature and enacted laws. A natural law is simply the groove along which cause runs to its effect; it is the method by which effects are produced. Of the moving force, the "final cause" about which so much was said by a past generation, we know nothing. These natural laws are not "made," they are expressions of the constitution of the universe. Constant confusion of thought and misunderstanding has resulted from this application of the term law to the explanation of phenomena, and it would be of incalculable benefit if a new term could be devised, which would free the minds from preconceived ideas of arbitrary, enacted laws, and a law-maker.

Jacob Fink: Q. Has Congress ever been asked to appoint a special committee to investigate and report on Spiritualism? If so did Gen. Shields, of Minnesota, present the memorial in Congress? and what was the result?

A. Congress has no right to appoint such a committee. It was rumored that General Shields was to introduce such a resolution, but of course nothing could come of it, as Congress has no legalized right to act in any matter not having a relation to the nation as a whole. It would be as absurd as to appoint a committee to investigate Methodism, or phrenology, or hypnotism. Were it practical, what a funny committee it would be? What a capable! Composed of hitherto unknown members who have got their places by "pull," and whose ideas of spirits are confined to such only as are reached through the mediumship of a cork-screw!

If Spiritualism were to have official investigation, about the last place to apply to would be Congress.

Spiritualism as It Came to Me.

My first introduction to Spiritualism was at a trumpet seance given at the residence of Mrs. Colm, Terrace View, in this city, about the 15th of August, 1901.

I came here an entire stranger, and while waiting to pursue my vocation, I received an invitation to attend the circle at Mrs. Golm's (through Mr. S. W. Gardner, a present member of this society) and I will confess I accepted the invitation more out of curiosity and a suitable place to spend the evening, than anything else.

While sitting in this circle I received a test; though purely of a business nature, it was conclusive evidence to me that I was conversing with someone who was thoroughly conversant with my past.

I became interested, and as I advanced somewhat in the investigation of Spiritualism, my curiosity became a thing of the past and a more serious side presented itself to me; and as existing conditions became stronger between those passed over and myself in the circles, I began to realize a sense of sympathy and encouragement from those near and dear to me; and I also felt a desire to try and better my condition socially and morally in life. With this end in view I have accepted a membership in this society.

Spiritualism teaches us that if we would progress in spirit life, we also must in this. While I have never been a member of any church, I was a close attendant in early life, but somehow Spiritualism has appealed to me far more than the rest, to rise to a higher social plane in life. It seems to walk and talk with you; places you upon your honor and integrity; speaks confidentially of the future, and does not refer to the "endless torment" spoken of in the Bible, and I am happy to say no spirit has ever manifested itself in a circle where I have been that has ever referred to this terrible place; but they all speak of a brighter sphere "where all is happiness, with no seeming discontent, and all are in more or less a state of progression."

And in accepting a membership in this society, I know I shall have many shortcomings. I ask your help and encouragement, and if any act or word of mine can help to elevate my fellow-being, then I shall be supremely happy.

CAN MAN DIE AND YET LIVE?

A Paper Read in the Class Circle.

Can a man die and yet live? Is there within our composition an undefinable something, formless, breathless, pulseless, viewless, soundless, impalpable, intangible, indestructible?

Essence liberated by death, wherein is garnered all we have seen, heard and learned 'twixt the cradle and the grave?

That wingless, propelled only by desire, it moves, like a thought, through boundless space, bathing unharmed in the sun's fadeless fires; examining the heart of that blazing orb; determining the source of its attraction whereby it, with invisible arms, swings eternal, countless worlds through frozen space.

This mystery solved, other worlds are sighted from further planets unknown, unseen by mortal man. And with the wish instantly we are there, facing unheard of suns and frozen moons; going to the bottom of fathomless seas; studying undreamed-of forms shaped by surrounding emergencies to what they are. Thence to the top of their stupendous mountains and down to their central core (for space filled or space empty is alike resistless 'gainst the surging charges of matter by thought, propelled alone by tireless will, guided by a deathless thirst for knowledge). And when a million years shall have elapsed and countless millions of worlds shall have been visited, the period of our existence or new worlds to observe have not lessened in the least, for space, eternity and planets are shoreless, endless and numberless.

These floating essences, do they commune with each other? Without tongues do they talk, and handless do they write?

If the thoughts of each are understood by the other by contact or impression, then what are they but one thought, when these thoughts come together?

For what the one knows and has learned, the other understands and comprehends.

Are they male and female, that is to say, can masses of knowledge or goodness be sexed? And why sexed when there is no propagation?

Where roam the spirits of dead men of other worlds? Do they visit this, and if so, where is the impression of their coming?

If occult men commune with spirits long since liberated, why is it that they tell us not of the inhabitants of fiery Mars (if such there be)? Of the mystery of Saturn's circling belts; or why did they not proclaim the earth a sphere, when all the world declared it flat; or in Cæsar's time announced a Continent where now stands a Republic more perfect than the world of Plato's?

These and many other questions have been asked me since I began working in the cause of Spiritualism, and it is my intention to answer these and other questions during this series of lectures of which this number is the first.

Now in the beginning I shall ask you some questions:

Where is that heaven whose walls are of Jasper gleaming with pearls and precious stones, wherein the high God holds his majestic court and the spirits of the pure sing his eternal praise?

Which sun of the millions dotting shoreless space illumines that beautiful land in fadeless glory; whose rivers are flowing with milk and honey, and whose eternity is devoted to song and prayer alone. (A future, by the way whose flower of promise never tempted me into joining the ranks of the faithful.)

Are these vaporous, impalpable, intangible, incomprehensible, invisible, immortal, intellectual nothings, which hear without ears, see without eyes, talk without tongue, feel without hands and walk without feet, confined within circumscribed, walled in, glorious heaven; wherein mighty Jupiter sits supreme and masters the universe?

If the ponderous jaws of throbbing Earth close upon a million men, whose spirits escape a thousand fathoms towards its central core, with all the rocks above them glued in place, are those ghostly wonders held fast because of no aperture through the rocky ribs of mother earth for their exit?

Are the spirits of drowned men anchored within the deep because death occurred at the bottom of the sea?

I can hear every one of these disciples of faith answering no. Then if not, I should like to ask, What are walls, either of heaven or hell, for such as these? And where is this abode of spirits immortal?

The good priest at midnight points toward the stars, and at mid-day toward the sky—which revolving earth makes opposite directions. Which is right—or perhaps this land of faith embellished by hope is anywhere out from the earth.

And if the fall of the sparrow and the actions of men alike are noted by the great Mystery, why inform him of our woe or make proclamation of our sorrow or declarations of our distress? To him the future is as an open book.

Since the dawn of time immemorial there has occurred among the human family, phenomena, by some considered startling, by others miraculous. Even in societies living under the full light of modern science these facts have been attested.

It is known also that a large portion of these cases receive coloring coming through ignorant superstitions and uneducated persons, but under the investigation of honest scientific minds the truth is found, which is fruitful reward for painstaking careful study. There are scientists who try to ignore the existence of these mental phenomena, because of the difficulty to explain such; but I say these are more culpable than they who believe in a personal being, above the clouds, and that through their entreaties and prayers they can persuade this being or God to change the course of events, as well as that of the universe.

The latter following, have the excuse of ignorance or of being thus educated in their early youth, and have learned to depend on such being for help and strength, while the former have no such excuse.

I do not after the unpardonable manner of these scientists, deny the existence of facts which are very difficult to explain, but can say with no degree of uncertainty that so-called miracles, and answers to prayers, and powers of faith though true as facts, are not rendered comprehensible through the superstitious explanation of attributing them to the agency of a being above the clouds; and further that each and every individual is only a "conduit" for the infinite ocean of knowledge and power that lies behind.

Human progress has always been the foe of the gods and the parent of the new religion.

The gods of the Assyrians and Egyptians are buried amid the ruins of the temples raised to their glory.

The gods of the learned Greek have perished one by one into a shadowy memory and poetry alone worships at the broken altars where the highest civilization in the world communed with the things of another world.

Everything in nature admits the law of growth and development. No miracle interposed to furnish exceptions to the rule in this day and age.

The marvelous—the miraculous—the days when gods and men walked and talked together, are all in the back numbers of humanity. Since then men have disclosed to the Gods that the earth is round, not flat; that it, and not the sun moves; pointed out to them other continents of which the gods said nothing. Revealed to them other suns larger than our own; that the stars are worlds and never swing together or fall from the heavens; that every child has a natural father; that propagation is not a gift of the gods, and a vast amount of valuable information concerning which no divinity disclosed any knowledge whatever.

Now, why is all this? Because the desires and wants are in man, and the power of supply is also in man; and wherever and whenever a desire, a want, a prayer has been fulfilled, it was out of this infinite magazine that the supply came, and not from any supernatural being.

This word supernatural is a contradiction. Using the statement of Elbert Hubbard: "The supernatural is only the natural not yet understood."

This idea of a supernatural being may rouse to a certain extent the power of action in man; but it also brings spiritual decay; for the moment you lean on any power other than your own, you weaken your capabilities.

It also breeds fear and superstition. In nature there are gross manifestations and subtle manifestations, in other words we are children of God and also children of nature; a distinction without a difference, except as to manifestation.

Physically we each represent an atom of the vast sea of matter which constitutes the material of the universe.

The manifestation being that of the gross. While spiritually we represent an atom of the Infinite or Absolute which man has termed God and whose manifestation is most subtle. The former being a growth or natural result by some termed evolution. The latter being a state attained, a consciousness (a meaning the word itself implies).

"God is the Spirit of Infinite Life;" and if we are partakers of this life, and have the power of opening ourselves fully to its divine inflow, it means more to us spiritually and physically than any one in these rooms comprehends. The problem of realizing this divine power, this consciousness is also beyond many a man's comprehension; though many thinking minds conceded that our natures are dual; but the straitlaced scientist will acknowledge nothing that to rule and reason cannot testify.

Genuine worth has seldom in this world's history been deemed worthy of recognition.

There was Joseph the dreamer, and Daniel, that noble and fearless prince among men. Archimedes who worked away at his scientific problems and regarded not the Roman guard, though his life paid the penalty. Columbus, Galileo, John Bunyan (who was denominated the "prating tinker"), Martin Luther, Robert Bruce, Wm. Tell, James Watt, Robert Fulton, Prof. Morse—the father of telegraphy, all without exception said to be cranks in their day and time, and yet to-day the inventions emanating from these same minds are serving as prime factors in our intelligence and civilization.

How many branches of knowledge have been reviewed and reconstructed upon lines which its astute professors at first condemned, then suffered, then embraced until that which remained of the old system no longer stood as rules, but as mere exceptions? All the while there are phenomena in nature awaiting the inquirer, says one writer, which a high grade of intellect may assail with good results, but nothing less than serious, intelligent and painstaking study will yield their fruitful outcome. We must live down the fear of being called superstitious—a word grossly misapplied.

No class of people is more superstitious than the learned class made up of those who have much book knowledge without the ability to apply it beyond the suppositious cases used by the schools for familiar illustration. Facts come to those who possess a true mental affinity for them and then they are exhaustively assimilated and the recipient is by them educated in their significance and application. We are only on the threshold of knowledge as to the vast significance of the doctrine of heredity; but we know enough to deepen our sense of debt to the past and of dutytothe future.

We are what our forefathers made us, plus the action of circumstances on ourselves, and in like manner our children inherit the good and evil, both of body and mind that is in us. Upon us therefore rests the duty of the cultivation of the best and of the suppression of the worst, so that the world be the better for our having lived in it. More imperious is that duty since nothing—not omnipotence itself—can step in between us and the consequences of our acts.

"We know not what lies in us, till we seek;
Men dive for pearls—they are not found on shore,
The hillsides most unpromising and bleak
Do sometimes hide the ore.

"Go dive in the vast ocean of the mind,
O man! for down below the noisy waves,
Down in the depths and silence thou may'st find
Rare pearls and coral caves.

"Sink thou a shaft into the mine of thought;
Be patient like the seekers after gold;
Under the rocks and rubbish lieth what
May bring thee wealth untold.

"Reflected from the vasty Infinite,
However dulled by earth, each human mind
Holds somewhere gems of beauty and of light,
Which, seeking, thou shalt find."

A NOBLE WOMAN.

She Passed Serenely to Spirit Life.

The funeral of Mrs. Ella Shaw, the wife of Captain J. D. Shaw, Waco, Tex., occurred March 30, at the residence, on the corner of Sixth street and Tennessee avenue, and was attended by a large number of friends of the deceased lady and her bereaved husband. The casket rested on a catafalque in the front room, which was a bower of flowers, collected during Mrs. Shaw's lifetime with rare taste and judgment, and nursed by her with the tenderest attention, lavished continuously.

The assembled friends were struck with the appropriateness of the surroundings and many remarked that if Mrs. Shaw were to have been consulted as to how things should have been arranged her direction would have resulted in just the disposition that was made.

It was also noticed by those on the lawn, who, because of the crowd, could not enter the house, that a pair of mocking birds, who have for many years nested in one of the trees of the house, perched themselves in the bows swaying in the north wind and filled the air with their bird music, the strains mingling with the hymn of the funeral choir.

The procession was nearly a mile long and in it all classes of citizens were represented.

The funeral address was delivered by Judge G. B. Gerald, as follows:

My Friends:—I have been called upon to say a few words over the body of the dead before she is borne away from the home she loved so well to that last long home that all of us some day will find. As is well known to all, she was in belief a Spiritualist, without bigotry or fanaticism, she held to the faith that abjuring vindictive Gods, torturing demons and eternal hells believes that in the great hereafter, that a God of infinite wisdom, love and justice will give to all the chance to commence anew and by slow degrees reach that perfect state that none can reach in the brief years of human life, and it was her wish that some one of her faith might say a few words over her, but expressed the wish that if this could not be done, that I should do it; therefore, I who know something of the here, but nothing of the great hereafter, but willing to admit that it may be Elysian fields soothed by angel songs and fanned by angels' wings, or that it may be oblivion's cold and silent house, where Lethian waves forever wash the pallid brow of death, come to say a few words over my dead friend.

She was born in Green county, Tennessee, in 1843; her maiden name, Racella Dobson. She was loved by all who knew her, both in her girlhood and in her womanhood, and one of her most intimate friends was that lovely woman, Mrs. Patterson, the daughter of the late President Johnson. She came to Waco in 1879 and lived here until 1882; then returned to her old home in Tennessee, and there in 1884 was married to Mr. J. D. Shaw, and has lived amongst us ever since. By the purity of her life and devotion to all that was beautiful, pure and good, has gathered around her the hundreds of friends that join us to-day in mourning her death. She came into the home of her husband, took charge of his five motherless children, and proved by her devotion to them that a stepmother can make as many sacrifices and do her duty as well to the children of the man she loves as any mother can do for her own; for nearly twenty years she has loved and labored for the family, raised the orphans committed to her care to men and women's estate and followed but a few weeks ago the youngest, with bitter tears of sorrow, to the grave that in the early morning closed the promise of what would have been a glorious life. She worked with tireless hands and loving heart for those she loved so well and but a few days before her death—when some premonition seemed to warn her that for her the restless dream of life was closing—she said to a friend, "While she had no fear of death, she had so many duties to discharge, she really had no time to die."

Next to her husband, family, friends and all suffering humanity she loved Nature and all that was pure and beautiful in it; she loved to toil among her shrubs and flowers and gathered them to deck the graves of the dead as other loving hands have to-day gathered them to deck her own. She loved the birds and their songs and all day yesterday and far into last night they gathered around her desolate home and chirped and trilled their notes as if they knew it was a farewell forever to a friend. In all that goes to make up a pure and noble woman, a devoted wife, mother and friend, the dead woman sleeping here was equaled by few and surpassed by none, and all the regret she had when she came to die was that she had not been able to do more for those she loved. Now, my friends, this dead woman whom we loved has answered the call that all must answer and I commit the memory of her pure and stainless life, her devotion to all that goes to make up the high standard of womanhood, a devotion that in its purity might well be likened to the Alpine lily that high up on Jura's rugged heights, unstained by the contaminations of earth, blooms and withers upon the bosom of eternal snow. Now, to those whose duty it is to bear her body from the home she loved so long and well, bear it lovingly, bear it tenderly, bear it to the grave whose greedy mouth is never filled, that has demanded since love and hope were born, its tribute of sundered hopes and broken hearts from all the human race, and will continue to demand them until time itself is dead.

After the services at the grave were over and it covered with a wealth of most beautiful flowers, Judge Gerald, standing at the head of it, said:

Now, my friends, the last sad rites are over; we have committed her to the bosom of mother earth—the last mother of us all—where she will sleep as peacefully as she slept in infancy as a babe on her mother's breast; around her grave and that of her boy whom she reared and loved so well, the flowers will bloom and above will hang the canopy of blue and gold, the sky of Texas, and I ask you to join me this evening in the hope that she has already realized the dreams of life, that she has already been welcomed in that other land by the loved ones that have gone before, that she will wait there in peace and joy the loved ones left behind. And now, after thanking you for the many kindnesses shown to the bereaved family, this wealth of beautiful flowers scattered o'er her grave, I dismiss you with the hope that when to each and all from out the desert's darkness comes the "tinkle of the camel's bell" that tells that death has claimed the penalty that all must pay for the privilege of being born, may you, as she, look back o'er the vanished years, and finding only a record of duty faithfully performed, go out into the great beyond without regrets for the past or fears for the future—so may it be.

BEYOND THE VAIL

A Sequel to "Rending the Vail."

The two volumes together as a record of practically obtained facts demonstrating the claims of Modern Spiritualism as to post mortal survival, are unique and overwhelming.

Every communication is from a full materialized spirit form, in good light, and either spoken audibly or written in full view by the form. There is not an automatic or trance message in the book.

It is illustrated by several engravings, the originals of which were drawn in the presence of the circle by a full form materialized spirit artist.

BEYOND THE VAIL is, as a rule, the experiences of spirits in both worlds—their own account of their lives on earth and their progress after death to their present condition of freedom from earth conditions. The narratives are intensely interesting, instructive and often highly dramatic.

Coincident with these are the profoundly philosophical comments of the controlling spirits of the seances. Prof. William Denton, Thomas Paine, Dr. W. H. Reed and others—covering, law, medicine, jurisprudence, theology and metaphysics. There are no books in existence of like character or of higher authority. Price, by mail, $1.75.

THE BEAUTIFUL SOUVENIR VOLUME,

By A. LEAH UNDERHILL,
(Of the Fox Family.)

The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism.

Thirty-three chapters, 477 pages, superbly printed, and bound in colors and gold, 15 illustrations, 5 steel engraved portraits of the celebrated Fox Family, a full page engraving of the old house at Hydesville, which to this day, by the act of its wealthy and respected owner, Artemas Hyde, Esq., bears the inscription, "Here Spiritualism Originated in 1848."

A complete history of the initiation of the movement known as Modern Spiritualism, from the epochal period which dates from March 31, 1848. Since that day, starting from a small country village in western New York, Spiritualism has made its way against tremendous obstacles around the civilized globe.

Only a limited number of copies of this rare book, now out of print, are to be had, and these can be obtained only at this office. Those who remit at once will receive a copy, post paid, at the GREATLY REDUCED PRICE OF $1.

Note.—By failure in 1885 to complete contract with the author, a large portion of the edition was left unbound, and so remained for a number of years, when they were rescued and bound at additional cost, hence this valuable contribution to the cause of Spiritualism was not properly presented to the Spiritualistic public, and a host of investigators have not had the opportunity of securing a copy until the present time. Do not fail to send for a copy at once. J. R. FRANCIS,

"THE UNKNOWN"

—BY—

CAMILLE FLAMMARION.

"The Unknown" created a marked sensation in France when first published and can scarcely fail to arouse the greatest interest in this country. It is an eminent scientist's study of the phenomena of the spirit world. In touching upon the various physical manifestations the author cites many absolutely authenticated instances, and chapters of his book are as weirdly fascinating as the most fantastic of Poe's tales. It treats on incredulity, credulity, hallucinations, psychic action of one mind upon another, transmission of thought, suggestion, the world of dreams, cerebral physiology, psychic dreams, distinct sight in dreams, actual facts, premonitory dreams and divination of the future, etc. 487 pages, cloth bound. Price $2.00.

Excellent as an exposition of the Higher Criticism and an analysis of the Bible from that standpoint. Of special value and interest to Spiritualists. For sale at this office. Price $1.00.

History of the CHRISTIAN RELIGION to the Year 200,

BY CHARLES V. WAITE, A. M.

Fifth Edition—Revised, with Much Additional Matter in Appendix

A standard and reliable history of the earlier period of the church, giving facts that are not found in the so-called histories written by churchmen. This latest edition has been carefully and thoroughly revised, and it is a reliable magazine of facts, such as the honest inquirer wants. It opens up to the investigator and student a wide field of historical research in matters of fact wholly ignored by the regular church historians, and throws a bright glare of light on points heretofore carefully shrouded in darkness.

A large octavo volume of 556 pages, strongly bound in cloth. Price $2.25. For sale at The Progressive Thinker office.

"Longley's Beautiful Songs." Fourteen beautiful, soul-inspiring songs, with Music, by C. Payson Longley. Price by mail, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

DR. G. E. WATKINS,

The Noted Chronist,
Is Now Located at

No. 1087 Boylston street, Boston, Mass., where he will be pleased to meet all who may call between the hours of 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. The wonderful work in healing the sick that Dr. Watkins is accomplishing is indeed most astounding; his patients live to testify to his wonderful powers as a healer. For the last year his work has been most wonderful. He says himself that his cures this year have been more than ever before in numbers, as he confined himself to only 30 new patients a month. Dr. Watkins attends personally to each case, and therefore he can do better work than if he had a great many assistants; no staff of visible helpers are in his office to annoy and suggest this and that. He knows what is the trouble with each patient, and knows the right specific to give. He prepares and puts up all of his medicine, and has no help in his medical treatments that is visible help. Write him to-day, and by return mail you will receive the diagnose. No charge made for diagnosing your case. Send age, sex and leading symptom.

? ARE YOU SICK ?

—IF SO—

Does Your Doctor Understand Your Case?

Are You Getting Better?

If you are not getting better write today to Dr. G. E. WATKINS, Boston, Mass., and write him just your condition financially, and he will make his price for treatment within your reach. He is treating a great many cases free; others he charges a light fee.

He makes no charge whatever for Diagnosis.

If You Are Sick

Why not write him today, and no matter who has failed to help you, to consult him COSTS NOTHING.

Try DR. WATKINS.

Let him diagnose your case, and then it will help you to decide who knows best what is the matter with you. Send all letters to 1087 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.

RIGHT AND WRONG USE,

Service and Province of Prayer.

No God ever answered a prayer, but we can get direct answers from spiritual powers and beings. Thousands of prayers are answered every day. Every Spiritualist can call to mind instances in which their spirit friends have done what they were asked to do. Spirits may and do respond to calls or confer favors, but only within the range of possibility and natural laws.

We know they have a great influence in the affairs of this world and it is proper that we should invoke their aid, yet it may not be necessary to make a formal prayer. We may pray that we may be made more receptive to spiritual influences, that our guides may be better able to impress us—ask for knowledge, strength and courage to do the right. A sincere desire to do the right, be right, avoid wrong, with earnest effort will help any one to grow in grace and knowledge of the truth.

Prayer is an effort of the will to accomplish or achieve a purpose or motive, and we can answer our own prayers in some particulars. There are many evident, tangible results from prayerful desires, meditations, contemplations, when carried into effect. Man possesses enormous latent powers, but they must be projected in such a manner and form as to arouse the latent soul energy for responsive good. True and lawful prayer will find its true response. It should be a scientific as well as religious action. It does not seek to disturb or change any natural, physical or spiritual law, but rather to bring into operation other laws which we fail to comprehend, but which we know from experience will bring aid and relief.

If anybody or anything can answer our desires and aspirations, our spirit friends can, for they are the ones most directly interested in our welfare. They are engaged in guiding and instructing mortal mediums and others. The persons with whom we delight to hold converse are they who are able to impart to us some fresh knowledge; and our great hope for the future is that our knowledge may be increased. We can reasonably desire and request the presence and loving ministrations of the angels, in guiding our researches into spiritual things, in the thoughts and teachings they express.

Lessons of life, our relations to our fellow beings, our duties and responsibilities are marked out for our study. We can constantly gain some light and power to take up something new and precious to fill the place of old false ideas. If we strive to fit ourselves to dwell with the pure and good in their homes of celestial life, bright anticipations of the joy in store may fill our waking thoughts and wander through our dreams. The words of the pure spirit within new conceptions of life its conditions and laws.

Mediums are sometimes controlled to offer verbal invocations, yet of a widely different nature from orthodox prayers. We suppose this practice may be, in some instances, a conformity to old custom, yet as believers in spirit return and the constant presence about us of their invisible entities as helpers, guides, instructors, it would seem that invocation, recognizing their beloved presence and earnestly desiring their aid, is eminently proper. There is in true prayer no such attributes as adoration, homage, worship, reverence, veneration. These elements of superstition belong exclusively to Theism. It is true persons should be respected and honored for higher knowledge and purity of character, but not in the sense of reverence or worship. Fair-minded spirits want to be simply on equality with mortals, and they don't ask anything sacred, holy, solemn. They want us to talk to them as we talk to each other in mundane life.

Though unseen by mortal sense our departed loved ones walk beside us in our pilgrimage here, and they are ministering spirits, our fellow servants to assist us to enlighten the world. There is a balm for sorrow and suffering. Many suffering invalids have been restored to health through the healing power of our healing mediums. We may, through prayer, set in action the law of correspondence, and thus obtain helpful influences from out the great laboratory of nature, and thus it is possible to receive direct results.

I believe in invoking divine aid or spiritual guidance, not with the view of changing any law, but of changing our attitude toward the law and thus coming into harmonious relation with that which already exists.

The souls' spontaneous prayer finds its own language and often its response. To the truly spiritual the concentration of lofty hopes and purposes, nobler thoughts and aspirations, implies an uplifting of the spirit into rapport with goodness, harmony, peace, purity, into closer touch with diviner consciousness and power. It lifts up to oneness with nature's purposes and fits us to become masters of self and companions of the highest we invoke, whose presence crowns our lives with a halo of light and love. We can ask for a better understanding of life, for knowledge, strength and love, recognizing the presence of beautiful influences and loving intelligences. Then we must do something to answer our own desires and aspirations. As builders or light-bearers we can find plenty to do in the fields of construction, building beautifully and well the thoughts of sensible aspirations. The ruins of false altars and edifices where superstition has been worshiped will be obliterated finally, the mists and shadows of ignorance, bigotry and creedism will pass away.

Spirits can do much in educating mortals, in teaching them immortal truths, which in turn they should give forth to the multitude, and send them ringing through the thoughts of those who read or listen. They assist the inner powers of others to grow and expand, leading them in their cravings for knowledge and aiding their faltering steps up the rugged heights of life in search of truth. They seek to bring hope and encouragement to those who are scarred and scathed by sin and passion, and who, in consequence, have been plunged in mental darkness. Thousands of spirits are engaged in such work in diverse directions and multiplied ways; for they recognize the fact that to have the spirit world peopled with a race of noble, thoughtful, moral souls they must educate and refine those who are on the earth plane, in an understanding of life and its laws, the soul and its requirements, an appreciation of truth and its unfoldments. And to do this they are teaching and directing those sensitive, intuitive souls who can catch the inspirations of the spheres, and sending them forth as teachers to the masses.

Selfishness and pride are born of ignorance, and if men were taught the true meaning and purpose of life and could be made to understand them, new motives would influence them and they would reform their habits and methods of living.

In every heart the spirits can discern some signs of goodness—in each breast germs of tenderness or thoughtfulness that can be nurtured into life and activity. They seek to attract the attention of mortals to worthier aims and ends than they had before known, and so awaken within them aspirations for lives of greater usefulness. In some instances they succeed in this work, and each success met and each effort made increases their power and ardor for beneficent labor. I have read thousands of messages and many books written by citizens of the spirit world in which they tell us how they constantly work among the people of earth. Such books are the most important that can engage the thoughts of mortals.

There is but a thin veil between the two worlds, and the glory and warmth of the higher shines downward for every mortal who sincerely asks for heavenly aid. Spirits are doing all they can for the improvement and welfare of suffering humanity, and they are worthy of our highest honor, trust and love. Then let us give them the sweetest affection and gratitude that bloom in mortal souls.

A. H. NICHOLAS.

BOOK REVIEW.

A Series of Seven Essays upon Spiritualism Vs. Materialism By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A., Ph. D.

Spiritualists and Materialists alike, as well as others, will find this book very interesting and instructive. It is written in Dr. Peebles' well known cogent and trenchant style. The book is timely, and in matter and form is worthy a place in any one's library of "good books." Price, cloth, 50c.

A New Catechism. By M. M. Mangasarian, Lecturer of the Independent Religious Society of Chicago. Cloth, 75c; paper, 50c.

While the independent thinking Spiritualist will find very much to commend in this series of questions and answers, he will utterly dissent from the author's views on immortality, which is not that one will continue to live as a conscious personal entity after death, but an expansion of his being into that of humanity, which alone is immortal, and through which we continue to live forever.

Secular View of the Bible. From Studies of the Hebrew; with the Evidences as to Jesus. By Constantine Grethenbach, M. A. and T. A. O. Peter Eckler, Publisher, New York. $2.

Every page of this book gives evidence of the great learning and immense painstaking of its author. It is a book for Bible students and investigators, and all who would delve into the mysteries of Bible knowledge.

A Man Amongst Men. By Frederick Wollpert. Peter Eckler, Publisher, New York.

A neat pamphlet of 27 pages, presenting a liberal freethought view of Jesus.

A distinctly valuable acquisition to the literature of Spiritualism is the new book by J. Clegg Wright, entitled "Body and Soul," being a course of seven lectures delivered by him, as he says, in the trance state. The voice of the philosopher and deep thinker is clearly in evidence in these masterly utterances. The matter and method are of such nature as to appeal to thoughtful minds that take pleasure as well as find culture and spiritual profit in the study of the deep things of man and nature, spirit and being.

The inspiring spirit proves himself an adept in the higher realms of science, and presents fine ideas pertaining to atoms, molecules, cells, laws of vibration, world formation, etc.

J. M. Peebles, M. D., furnishes a beautiful introduction in a brief essay on "J. Clegg Wright and His Inspirations.

As a contribution to the study of the soul and the functions of the mind, the work is timely and valuable.

Cubes and Spheres in Human Life. By Rev. F. A. Wiggins.

Characterized by strong, deep, earnest thought, stimulating the reader to higher thinking and nobler living. The style and tone are suggestive of Emerson at his best, intuitive rather than technically logical, and hence going nearer to the core of things.

The price has been reduced to 75c.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, March 16, 1902, at Orange Vale, Cal., Lena Kayner, daughter of the late Dr. D. P. Kayner, at the home of her brother, Ben R. Kayner. "One more joined our loved ones."

ISA W. KAYNER.

Passed to spirit life, at Council Bluffs, March 28, 1902, Mrs. Mary Hannah Winchester. She was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., in 1820. She has been a devoted Spiritualist thirty years. Many of our mediums will remember her kindness. Five children survive her, three sons and two daughters, who are well acquainted with our beautiful philosophy. Funeral services were conducted by the writer. C. O. KEMPSTER, Sr.

The writer just returned from a trip to Ontario, Wis.: where she officiated at the funeral of Miss Isibelle May Baring, aged 27 years, who passed out with quick consumption. She was much loved there as I heard only praises of what a pure, loving soul she was, and many were the tears shed by her devoted friends.

Mr. Baring's people are very old residents, having, as I understand, lived in that vicinity for forty years, devoted Spiritualists and highly respected citizens, as was evident by the large concourse of people gathered together regardless of their religion. I tried as best I could in a brief hour to give those present a lucid understanding of the secret of death and how the soul has opportunities for advancement in the world beyond.

MRS. CATHERINE M'FARLIN.

On the 13th day of March, 1902, Mrs. Mary Jane Potter passed to the higher life, from her earth home at Riverside, Cal., at the mature age of 65 years. The home and the life of Mrs. Potter were those of the true Spiritualist; the home group at the time of her transition consisting of herself and two daughters, Annie and Maggie Potter, the latter well known in Southern California as a faithful medium. So close to the boundary line between the two worlds did they all live, that the transition of the loved one was merely a gentle passing out of sight. The funeral services were conducted by Mrs. E. W. Marchant, of San Bernardino, and the writer. J. L. DRYDEN.

HEALTH RESTORED

The entire country is astonished at the wonderful cures performed through the method originated by Dr. J. M. Peebles, the Grand Old Man of Battle Creek, Mich. This science is a subtle force in nature combined with magnetic medicines, and called by the eminent doctor,

Psychic Science

It has been termed the greatest pain reliever ever known. In a perfectly natural manner it builds up the system and restores health. It makes no difference how serious or hopeless the case may seem, there is positive hope in this grand science. It has restored the deaf, blind and lame, cured the paralytic, and those suffering from Bright's Disease, Consumption, Stomach Trouble, Catarrh, Nervous Debility, Neuralgia, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Female Troubles, as well as men and women addicted to the liquor, morphine and other vile habits.

Geo. H. Weeks, of Cleveland, Ohio, sends heartfelt thanks for restoration to health after suffering from nervous prostration and insomnia for years; he says he now enjoys health and restful sleep every night. Mrs. J. A. Rust, of Itasca, Minn., cured of uric acid poisoning in two month's treatment writes: "I am better than in years, and each day brings new health and strength. I will refer all ailing ones to you." Mary A. Earl, Crawford, Mich., suffering from pronounced female difficulties and kidney disease, says: "I took your treatment three months and it has been a success in my case. I am indeed grateful to you for my recovery." C. E. Davis, Woodman, N. H., who suffered all the miseries of a dyspeptic, writes that as the result of Dr. Peebles' treatment, he had not missed a meal since last March. D. W. Bridgman, of Del Norte, Col., writing Sept. 30, after three months' course, "When I began treatment with Dr. Peebles' Institute of Health I was a cripple, unable to walk but little with a cane. Now I am able to walk with ease. Some days ten or fifteen miles. My general health is excellent. I can hardly find words to express my gratitude, as previously I had tried everything I could hear of and got no relief. Mrs. Isaac Varney, Dover, N. H., a sufferer of spinal trouble and nerve exhaustion, writes that she would not go back to the state of health she was in before taking this treatment for all the world. Solomon Fried, of Vanderbilt, California, cured of neuralgia and catarrh, says: "I am well and a thousand times obliged to you."

"A Message of Hope"

written by Dr. J. M. Peebles, in a plain and concise manner, tells you exactly how and where you can gain perfect health; in fact, it gives you the key to the grandest knowledge known to man. Remember, this book costs you nothing, and it reveals wonderful secrets and makes the impossibilities of yesterday realities of to-day.

ABSOLUTELY FREE Send your name and address and leading symptoms to Dr. J. M. Peebles and his associates and you will receive full diagnosis without any cost whatever, as well as this grand book, which is beautifully illustrated, rich in all its details, containing matter which will be a revelation to you. —THE—Christs of the Past and Present.
By MOSES HULL,

A comparison of the Christ-work or Mediumship of Biblical Messiahs and the conditions they required, with similar manifestations in Modern Spiritualism. This is a good work to study for arguments with which to meet the very common orthodox question, "Why do you always require conditions for your spiritual manifestations?" Cloth bound, 35 cents; paper 25 cents. For sale at this office.

Were You Born Under a Lucky Star?

A complete exposition of the science of Astrology, adapted from the Four Books of Ptolemy, the Astronomer on the art of Reading the Stars, with many illustrations. By A. ALPHEUS, Secretary of the Astrological Society of England and America. Handsomely bound in cloth, gilt top, with beautiful designs stamped on side and back. Price $1.00. For sale at this office.

In the World Celestial

is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance mediums, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer. This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement. Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold, and has a full page portrait of the angel heroine, from a spirit painting. Price, $1.00.

"THE DREAM CHILD,"

A Fascinating Romance of Two Worlds. By Florence Huntley. Price, cloth, 75 cents. Books like "The Dream Child" spur humanity on to make more and more demands of this nature, and will open up new heights and depths of spiritual knowledge.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Will, I believe, take its place beside Bulwer's "Zanoni" and the "Seraphita" of Balzac.—Daily Capital, Topeka, Kansas. Although simple and unvarnished with any inflammable descriptions, enthralls the mind to the exclusion of other thoughts, until reluctantly the reader closes the last page.—Minneapolis Sunday Times.

A Very Interesting Book for Aff. Philosophy of Spiritual Intercourse. This work contains a graphic account of the very wonderful spiritual developments at the house of Rev. Dr. Phelps, Stratford, Conn., and similar cases in all parts of the country. This volume is the first from the author directly upon the subject of Spiritualism, and has stood the test of many years. Cloth, $1.20; postage 10c.

"AS IT IS TO BE."

A VERY SUGGESTIVE WORK.

It Beams With Spiritual Truths.

This is a beautiful book, by Cora Lynn Daniels, and it scintillates with grand spiritual thought. An idea of this work can be obtained by reading the titles of a few of the chapters therein:

The Process of Dying; Light and Spirit; The Law of Attraction; Senses of the Spirit; What Is Unconscious Will; Fear; Astrology; The God-Soul of Man; The Drama; A Day in Heaven. Price $1. For sale at this office.

"NO BEGINNING."

An Excellent Work for Thinkers.

This book, "No Beginning," is by William H. Maple. The Arena says of it: "The argument is unanswerable. The book will at once appeal to the reason of every reader, and leave him more amazed than ever at the prevalence of the theory of Creation." The Two has always been a fateful number. Free Thought Ideal says: "We found it full of glittering thoughts for thinkers, and the very death warrant of Christian superstition shines upon its pages." Price 75 cents.

LIGHT OF EGYPT.

The Second Volume of a Most Valuable Work.

This is the author's posthumous work left in MS. to a few of his private pupils in occultism, and like Volume I. is (a valuable addition and) a library on occult subjects. Spiritual astrology is especially elaborated. Alchemy, Talismans, the Magic Wand, Symbolism, Correspondence, Penetralia, etc., are a few of the subjects treated of in a scholarly and masterly manner, showing the author to be familiar with his subjects. You cannot afford to be without it, as well as all his other books, viz.: The Light of Egypt, Vol. I., bound in cloth, $2; paper, $1. The Light of Egypt, Vol. II., bound in cloth only, $2. Esoteric Lessons.

An Argument Against Physical Causation.

The object of this book, considered a most excellent one by some, is to establish what is commonly regarded as purely physical health upon a purely psychical basis; to show that health is knowledge, wisdom, insight; that men suffer from so-called purely corporeal disease only because they form erroneous judgment; also, to show that the fundamental erroneous judgment is, that there is any such thing in the universe as physical causation, a belief in which leads both directly and indirectly to disease. Often directly in case of the individual, but more commonly indirectly as a race-belief held throughout the known history of mankind. This work is by Sarah Stanley Grimke. Price $1.50.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 25. CHICAGO, ILL., APRIL 26, 1902. NO. 648.

PHENOMENA THE PRIMARY SCHOOL OF SPIRITUALISM.

Granting that the philosophy of Spiritualism is true, granting that it has a message for the world, that the world needs this message, that it wants it, or would want it if it knew what the message is, the question arises, why are the masses of the people so long in coming to listen to its sublime revelations?

Evidently because it has not reached them. It has not come to them in a manner to carry conviction. They have heard the name of Spiritualism, and have a vague idea of that for which it stands, but they have no knowledge of the truth of its teachings, nor conviction of the genuineness of its claims. Nor are they likely to obtain either until they come face to face with the phenomena. This is the first step. Almost invariably the investigator and non-believer must be convinced of the truth of Spiritualism's most distinctive claim, that is, the truth of spirit return, before they will give heed to its higher aspects, its philosophical, ethical and humanitarian teachings.

Now and then there is a mind so richly endowed by nature, so broad in its view of things, so philosophic in its grasp of things; whose intuitions are so fine and keen that it will seize upon the abstract truths of Spiritualism almost upon their first presentation. They will strike such a mind with the force of an axiom, almost. They will need no demonstration. But such minds are rare. The majority require a concrete presentation. They demand demonstration, and demonstration oft repeated.

There I believe is where we fail. We who have been acquainted with the phenomena and literature of Spiritualism for twenty, thirty, or even forty years, can scarcely imagine the condition of that mind to which the spiritual universe as we conceive it is an unheard of country; to which the spiritual nature of man, with all of its psychic powers and susceptibilities, is as yet an undiscovered possibility. It is useless to condemn such a mind because of its rejection of or non-interest in Spiritualism, when presented from the lofty plane of the advanced Spiritualist philosopher. As well expect the child in the kindergarten to manifest an interest in the lecture of the university professor.

There are all grades of development among men and women, as well as among children. Some of them have grown up physically, but mentally and spiritually and children still. Even among professed Spiritualists we find all grades of development, from the "phenomena hunter" to the highly unfolded spiritual prophet, seer and philosopher. If the mind demands phenomena, it is a sure sign that it needs it, just as a child in the kindergarten needs the blocks, straws, paper cuttings and various educational devices with which it is supplied. We do not blame the child for his need of concrete illustration; then why the phenomena hunter? Both will ultimately outgrow the need of physical demonstration.

Of late there has been a tendency to discourage the presentation of phenomena, and especially the giving of platform tests. This is a serious mistake. Spiritualism itself was unknown until the phenomena were known. It came to the world not as philosophy, nor as ethics, nor as humanitarianism, but as phenomena. These were the first lessons; and so long as Spiritualism exists and gains recognition among men, they must continue to be the first lessons.

The phenomenal phase is just as necessary now as it was fifty years ago, and will continue necessary as long as a single mind remains unsatisfied of the truths of immortality and of spirit return.

In abolishing the platform test, and crying down phenomena, we are refusing to a large majority of people the first steps of that knowledge which is essential to future growth, intellectual and spiritual. Phenomena is the primary school. It lies at the basis of the whole institution. An education in Spiritualism is very much like an education in the public schools and colleges. The pupil must begin at the bottom and work his way up from primary school to university, from phenomena to ethics, philosophy, and final graduation into a life of humanitarian work. Not one of these grades or departments can be omitted. All are necessary, the lower as well as the higher. If this fact were clearly understood it would put an end to the dissension among us as to the use and value of the phenomenal phase. Those who are opposing the continued presentation of phenomena cannot see that failure to keep up the preparatory school must inevitably end in failure of the university. The latter cannot exist without the former, for the simple reason that recruits to the one are drawn from the ranks of the other.

But we have "outgrown phenomena," it is said. Demonstration is no longer a necessity among advanced Spiritualists, it is true. But how many of these may there be? Sad to relate, they are few and far between. The great majority know nothing of phenomena, save by hearsay, and cannot be said to have outgrown that which they have never experienced. My plea is for those who have not the light, who still "sit in earth darkness and hear earth confusion;" my desire for a little more of that spirit on the part of Spiritualists which "longs to reach these souls in prison."

Spiritualism is not for us alone, not for the favored few, but for humanity; and if humanity is to be benefited by it, it must be presented in such a manner that it will be accepted, not by the thinkers and philosophers alone, but by the common people as well. The scientists themselves have been won, not by lectures on the philosophy of Spiritualism, but by its phenomena. Should we expect more of the common people than of the scientists?

If we would have a revival in Spiritualism, we must begin work at the bottom, go down among the people. Look at the Christian Scientists—how rapidly they are gaining ground, notwithstanding the absurdity of their belief. They offer something concrete. They demonstrate the truth(?) of their doctrine by healing the sick. What they really demonstrate is the value of suggestive therapeutics. But the inquirer sees only the fact of cure, and being uninformed, accepts the Christian Science theory because of the absence of any other. They raise a great hue and cry over every case that is successfully treated. The multitude hear, see with their own eyes, and flock to their standard. Take the healing phase out of Christian Science, deprive it of the power of making its "demonstrations," leave it an abstract theory, and it would make but slow progress, and gain but few adherents.

The masses of the people are not ready for philosophy. They want facts. They demand something concrete, something they can grasp and comprehend. They will give heed to phenomena, but turn their backs on an abstract lecture. Now, I am not arguing that Spiritualism should be advertised as a show in order to win adherents, but I do insist that we must take the laws of human nature into consideration if we wish to do educational work. The most successful teacher is he who studies the child's nature and adapts his methods to that nature. We of the university, if we expect to teach successfully in the kindergarten must adopt the methods of the kindergarten, and not insist upon using those of the university. We must take human nature as it is, not as we think it ought to be. Psychology, and the laws governing mental and spiritual development are studies not altogether useless to the man or woman who would propagate the truths of Spiritualism.

The philosophical writer and lecturer has his place and his work, but it is among the advanced Spiritualists, those who have passed on to the higher institutions. There is still need for instructors in the preparatory and intermediate grades. We who have passed through these grades need not look back with contempt upon those who are just entering them. These younger pupils have the same right to elementary instruction, the same need for drill in the rudiments of Spiritualism which we have had, which our great leaders and teachers had in the days of the Rochester rappings. In refusing such instruction, or in failing to provide it, we are making a serious mistake, and one for which not only the cause of Spiritualism, but the cause of humanity is suffering.

It is objected that some converts to Spiritualism never progress beyond the "phenomena hunting" stage. That is very true. There are dullards in the preparatory schools everywhere who never progress beyond them; but this is not sufficient evidence to me that preparatory schools can be dispensed with.

For myself, I care little or nothing for the phenomenal phase. It is the philosophical and humanitarian aspects of Spiritualism which appeal to me, but I recognize the fact that all minds are not so constituted. The abstract philosophical lecture is to me the acme of enjoyment, but I recognize the fact that I am not the only one whose taste is to be gratified, whose needs supplied and whose growth sustained by this heavenly manna. To insist that a public speaker shall minister to my needs alone, is to insist that some other hungry soul remain unsatisfied. This is pure selfishness, whether I am willing to admit it or not.

Here is the trouble with most of us. Here is the trouble with societies. We want Spiritualism presented in a manner that is pleasing to us, that satisfies our own intellectual and spiritual wants, forgetting the great hungry world that lies just outside the door of our temple, which in its undeveloped state is unable to avail itself of the spiritual sustenance which we so gladly welcome. If we in the higher ranks insist upon having only that which is pleasing and instructive to us taught upon the spiritual rostrum, we need not be surprised to find our lecturer talking to empty seats, or those occupied with a score or two of people with high top heads.

But it may be objected that these people in the quiet walks of life will not help the cause. Perhaps not. But, friends, this is not the point. It is the cause that should help them. So long as we proceed upon the assumption that it is the cause that requires aid, rather than humanity, so long shall we fail.

Unconsciously the people are hungering for Spiritualism. All that is necessary is the proper presentation of it. How often when its philosophy is being discussed do we hear the expression, "It is all very beautiful—if one could only believe it!" It is proof that is wanted, demonstration. And this is natural. That hungry cry must be stilled, and the heart satisfied, before the mind will turn to the higher aspects of philosophy, ethics and humanitarianism.

Instead of abolishing our primary schools, we need to establish more of them. And why should we do this? To the end of winning converts to the cause? No. We want to reach these people in the common walks of life, not to bring Spiritualism to them. We want to reach them, not because Spiritualism needs them, but because they need Spiritualism. Right here is the point, to bring our philosophy down to their level, to simplify it to their comprehension, to get them started in this school which will eventually lead to the university. For when this course of study is once begun it leads on to undreamed-of ends. When the student has reached the university he finds that all this preparation was for a purpose little anticipated; that while he pursued his study and investigation for individual ends, for somewhat selfish purposes, to satisfy the yearnings of his own heart, or to gratify his craving for knowledge, the end has been to fit him for humanitarian work. Gradually self and selfish purposes have been lost sight of, and he finds himself filled with an enthusiasm for humanity, an overwhelming desire to go out into the world and bring light and comfort and joy and peace to the darkened minds and suffering souls of men. He goes out, not to work for the upbuilding of a creed, but for the upbuilding of man; not to gain adherents to a cause, but to scatter abroad the light that is in him. His love is not for a religious organization, but for the souls that sit in darkness. He works for the glad day when men "shall be brothers all," when strife and warfare shall cease, and the reign of peace, equality and fraternity be ushered in; when man shall have an understanding of his own spiritual nature, and of his true relation to other spiritual beings in this and all other worlds.

This is the inevitable end of a thorough training in the schools of Spiritualism, the preparation of the student for service to his fellows, for humanitarian ends. Doubtless this was the great hope of the angel world when it first made its existence known through the medium of the tiny rap. This is the great object in life in those higher realms, if we can believe what we are told, and I doubt not these heavenly ministrants would fain have it the object of life here, the bettering of human conditions, the uplifting of all life everywhere.

What is needed more than aught else is year by year to persuade more and more students to enter upon this course of training and instruction which leads to results so great and glorious.

We have not outgrown phenomena. We never shall outgrow phenomena, so long as this world and the other exist and there is desire for communication between the two. Phenomena are not physical alone. Every demonstration of spirit power and influence is a phenomenon, from table-tipping to inspirational speaking. And moreover, these demonstrations of psychic power are just as worthy and just as legitimate a subject of study and investigation as the facts of any other science; and more, for they passess a vital interest for humanity which the facts of other sciences do not and never can possess.

Instead of discouraging and frowning upon psychic phenomena, we should encourage its further investigation, for I doubt not there are higher and grander possibilities in mediumship than we have as yet discovered; that on both this and the other side of life are powers and possibilities as yet undeveloped, and perhaps undreamed-of. Psychic science is yet in its infancy. It is the last born, and the fairest and the loveliest of the sciences. And to me it is passing strange that any Spiritualist should wish to check or discourage its further growth and development. Nourish it rather, guard and protect it, for you do not know what possibilities are there.

Mediumship is a sacred gift. It was not sent into this dark old world for nothing. The medium is the primary teacher in things spiritual, and her work is just as great and useful and necessary as that of the university professor, and the philosophical writer and lecturer. Both are needed.

The phenomena of Spiritualism constitute its preparatory school. This department is for beginners, and should so be understood. The old Spiritualist should be ashamed of lingering year after year in this department, without adding to his knowledge of phenomena, knowledge of philosophy also, and exemplifying in his moral and spiritual life the truth and beauty of his doctrine.

Spiritualism has as yet no well arranged system of propaganda. What we need, and some day shall have, is an arrangement similar to the course of study in our public schools. Spiritualists as well as non-believers need grading. We need literature adapted to the various capacities of the beginner, the intermediate, and the advanced student. We need instructors trained as specialists for these various grades. Some day we shall have them. We have not "differentiated" as yet. We are still in a state of "homogeneity." But evolution is going on here as well as elsewhere, and the day will come when one lecturer or one journal will not be expected to supply the needs of all classes of Spiritualists, from the kindergarten to the university.

NORA BATCHELOR.

Ashland, Ore.

AN OBSTACLE.

I was climbing up a mountain path
With many things to do,
Important business of my own
And other people's, too,
When I ran against a Prejudice
That quite cut off the view.

My work was such as could not wait
My path quite clearly showed;
My strength and time were limited,
I carried quite a load;
And there that hulking Prejudice
Sat all across the road.

So I spoke to him politely,
For he was huge and high,
And begged that he would move a bit,
And let me travel by—
He smiled, but as for moving—
He didn't even try.

And then I reasoned quietly
With that colossal mule;
The time was short, no other path,
The mountain winds were cool—
I argued like a Solomon,
He sat there like a fool.

And then I begged him on my knees—
I might be kneeling still
If so I hoped to move that mass
Of obdurate ill will—
As well invite the monument
To vacate Bunker Hill!

So I sat before him helpless
In an ecstasy of woe—
The mountain mists were rising fast,
The sun was sinking low—
When a sudden inspiration came,
As sudden winds do blow.

I took my hat, I took my stick,
My load I settled fair,
I approached that awful incubus
With an absent-minded air—
And I walked directly through him,
As if he wasn't there!

THE M'ILROY WILL CASE

The Titusville, Pa., Spiritualist Society Takes Action.

The history of modern time is replete with progressive human thought. The deductions drawn from investigating study have brought knowledge and with knowledge has come understanding. These precepts have swept away the mythology of the ages. Uncertainty has passed into forgetfulness with the waning of a crude barbarism of society. New light derived from the crucial test of experience, has lifted the dark cloud of doubt and there appears a new birth of faith in a love of spiritual hope. Men will no longer be bound by the dogma of creed of church which had its origin in the dark ages when learning was lost and happiness was ground beneath the heel of ignorance and the force of might over the weak.

Spiritualism had its birth at a time when learning taught that the paganism of the feudal church must make way for the coming of a new light.

Although Spiritualism is yet in its swaddling clothes it has commanded the attention of some of the greatest thinkers of the world, brilliant in various fields of investigation. These guides of the races of men illumine the pathway of progression along which Spiritualism moves in harmony with the sentiment that lifts from the wayfarer's mind the gloom of self-inflicted persecution upon earth, and it extends into the domain of nature's supreme power after the passage from this sphere of life, and there is rest upon the silver strand in the world to come beyond.

"The dark and silent river Earth's dreary bound,"

It would seem that a truth so full of consolation, of hope and comfort would have been received by the world with almost unspeakable gladness, driving from the mind all fear of death and opening such a grand and glorious future to all the children of men. Thousands, yea, millions have been made happy in this glorious light, among whom may be found the greatest thinkers that ever shaped the world's destiny in this or any other age. And yet in the dawn of this 20th century it became the supposed sworn duty of twelve fossils in this grand old commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the great city of Philadelphia, the city of brotherly love, the birthplace of our much boasted liberty, to under oath declare that all these millions of people are lunatics. Shame! shame! a thousand times shame on the poor bigoted things that could thus stultify themselves and play such a travesty upon justice, and trample under foot the rights of their fellow-men.

But it may be well to cover these hidebound "chumps" with the mantle of charity, and hope that through the gentle and continuous processes of evolution they will some day crawl out of their barbarian shells.

The following resolutions were passed by unanimous vote of our society at a regular meeting held April 6, 1902:

Whereas, It has come to the knowledge of the Spiritualist society of Titusville, Pa., that the will of Mr. McIlroy, late of Philadelphia, Pa., bequeathing $30,000 to the Spiritualist society of his city, wherewith to erect a hall to be known as McIlroy hall, has been refused probate and declared null and void on the ground that said McIroy was of unsound mind, solely on the ground that he believed in the possibility of communion between incarnate and excarnate spirits, and

Whereas, such verdict is a direct insult to every Spiritualist, not only in the United States, but the whole world, be it

Resolved, That we the Spiritualists of Titusville, Pa., in session assembled, do, most heartily condemn the action of the judge and jury that tried the case, and suggest that they be placed in a home for the feeble-minded, and remain there until such time as they may acquire a modicum of common sense if not a sense of justice.

Resolved, That the sum of five dollars be sent by our society to the N. S. A., to assist in defraying expense of carrying the case to a higher court, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to The Progressive Thinker for publication.

Spiritualists Are Alarmed.

The committee on probate and chancery last evening gave another hearing on the petition of Eben Bumstead and others for legislation to prevent the exhibition of persons under hypnotic influence.

Evan Davies, representing the Watch and Ward Society, was instructed by his society to appear in favor of the petition. He believed the people who were exhibited in cheap museums were not under hypnotic influence and he regarded these exhibitions as "fakes."

Bumstead produced a letter from Mr. Angel of the American Humane Educational Society, who expressed the hope that the bill would meet with success. Bumstead reiterated his remarks of the last hearing that the petition was not aimed at any religion or sect, nor did it seek to interfere with any religion or sect. He stated that the thought of Spiritualism did not occur to the petitioners in the framing of the bill. He had never attended a Spiritualist service. Bumstead did not wish the bill amended.

J. E. Darling, of Orange, appeared for the remonstrants. He said he had been in the mercantile business for 25 years. He represented the National Spiritualist Association of America, the Massachusetts State Spiritualist Association, and the Massachusetts Veterans' Spiritualist Association.

"The religion of Spiritualism," he said, "is just as sacred to its followers as any other religion is to its adherents. We believe it to be as good, as pure and as exalted as the angels. Our mediums are ministers of our religion and are respected as such and are recipients of the same business courtesies always shown to the clergy of any denomination."

Darling mentioned the names of several prominent men whom he said were Spiritualists or friends of Spiritualism. He said there were over 400 trusts in the country, and this petition looked like the entering wedge of a religious trust.

"The passage of this bill," he continued, "will cause the rumble of discontent to grow louder and louder, and it will make its voice heard until justice shall sit in these halls!" He feared the words "public diversion," which are inculcated in the bill, might be attributed to some private manifestation or some Spiritualistic service.

He wished added to the bill an amendment: "This act shall not apply to or interfere with any rights or ceremonies appertaining to any religion or sect." He thought his meetings might be called public diversions as a slight admission fee was charged.

Dr. W. A. Hale of Boston, objected to the bill because he thought it would prevent Spiritualism and mesmeric treatment. He thought Spiritualistic meetings might be termed exhibitions by some people. He did not think there was any cause for legislation of this character.

C. H. Webber stated that he had saved his life during the civil war by his knowledge of hypnotism. If it had not been for this knowledge his life would have been in danger many times.

H. C. Berry practiced hypnotism privately and was opposed to the bill, as was also J. T. Coombs.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

A CORRECTION

And an Explanation of Views,

To the Editor:—Your paper of April 12 contains an article from the New York Herald, in relation to the papers read before the Medico-Legal Society, in relation to Mrs. Piper. Unluckily I am somewhat of a sufferer in the report, partly in the putting together of the paragraphs, and partly in the omission of an important statement. I affirmed my belief in the presence of spiritual beings who prompted many of the utterances; and added that an individual might so mesmerize one of these as to make the latter suppose itself to be for the time the person whom the individual took it to be. In this way there may be many communications received which were only a result of such a process. To substantiate this I made the quotation from the Spiritual Diary of Emanuel Swedenborg.

What follows this quotation in the article in question under the heading, "Will Grow to Know Spirits," was by some one else and not by me. I only attempted to perform the task assigned to me, to give my opinion in regard to Mrs. Piper, and had no purpose or disposition to handle other matters. Many things which I believe and think I know, I hold too dear to expose them to unfriendly remarks in a mixed assemblage.

The gentleman who gave this matter to the Herald meant to do me an honor, and I appreciate this, but I regret appearing in such a "mix-up" as that paper made of it. I now write you this explanation to set myself right before your readers.

I may add, in this communication, that I never use the phrase, "spirit return." The spirit goes from the body at the time of dissolution and does not return. In other respects, however, it is still present. We may perceive this, when ourselves in a proper apperceptive state of mind. The going and coming are merely apparent; spirit has somewhat of the quality of ubiquity. Our thoughts are inspired and our actions influenced, when we do not apprehend it. We even play the role of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, or our bodies are a kind of vehicle for an indefinite number of spiritual beings; we, meanwhile, imagining that we are the sole agents in the matter. Their presentation to distinct consciousness, as in clairvoyant or clairaudient manifestation, is only one phase of the matter.

Anniversary at Seattle.

The Spiritualists of Seattle celebrated the 54th Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism in grand style, the three societies in the city uniting, in most harmonious fashion, doing the necessary work of preparation and bearing the unavoidable expense together.

We rented one of the largest halls in this great, beautiful thriving mart of commerce, and filled it, packed it, and held our audiences through the lengthy programs. Our state president, P. C. Mills, ably presided and gave a cordial address of welcome. Many Tacoma friends were with us, also numbers from the smaller surrounding towns. Brother Geo. P. Colby, who has been with us during the month of March, gave the morning invocation. His guides, through him, gave the address of the occasion in the evening. No description of mine can do justice to it. It brought to memory the days of E. V. Wilson and his co-workers. The relics of superstition surviving from the darkness of past ages fell fast beneath his blows. He laid bare the flimsy, priest-erected foundations of orthodox faith, and contrasted them boldly with the many times demonstrated truth of Spiritualism, and as the laughter and plaudits of his audience greeted some happy hit, it was comical to observe the long faces of some, showing how little they enjoyed the breaking of their idols.

The general conference of the morning was, as it always is, an enjoyable feature. The subject, "The Teachings of Spiritualism," was well and ably elucidated by various speakers. We had good music throughout, both vocal and instrumental—an orchestra, a choir, and solos and duets, some of them highly meritorious. Able addresses were also given by the leaders of the different societies, Mrs. Esther Thomas, Mrs. Lillian Nagell, and our own Mrs. Irene Smith.

ORGANIZATION,

We Must Unite for Purposes of Defense.

Organization is beneficial, and sometimes indispensable. Were there no opposition to the proposition of tangible spirit presence, organization by Spiritualists would not be really necessary. Organizations generate inevitable evils. The dust of ages brings corruption to every human institution.

But where there is powerful opposition to any new movement, organization becomes necessary. The salaried clergy is the most powerful league in the United States, with the exception of that of the doctors. To resist the mercenary sway of great salaries, the Spiritualists should organize, though in time they would, in the natural course of human events, breed other salaried despots; for it will ever remain a truism that "dangerous things are done by men who are hired."

The disposition of the clergy to influence legislation against clairvoyants calls for counter organization and purpose. Decided leadership is necessary in any movement that is opposed by wealth; and leadership cannot stand long without organized assistance. A union of Protestant and Catholic influence against our mediums might even yet sweep over the land in the form of great mobs and overflowing prisons, accompanied by laws that might long remain on the statute books. The movement in Denver against clairvoyants is a significant revelation. Leadership, like genius, needs encouragement. This timely and efficient encouragement produces the ablest men. According to Macaulay, the train-bands of London marched out time and again to preserve liberty in England, and were always successful. In every reform there is a higher and lower motive, and unless both motives are adopted, the noblest cause may collapse.

A DAUGHTER OF THE GODS.

A woman lived in her halls of pride;
Servants bent the servile knee on every side;
Lords and ladies met at her festal board;
Jewels rich and rare blazed from the royal horde.

Kings and queens gave her the favoring smile;
Her suite almost equaled theirs in pomp and style.
All that art and beauty could bestow
Had been poured at her feet in an overflow.

And amidst all this splendor and renown
She reigned a queen, only lacking a crown.
The Gods to her stately palace came one day,
To the uncrowned queen their court to pay.

The world had seen but outward show;
The Gods look deeper, as you know;
They saw the pearls on her bosom fair
Rise and fall with an aching care.

And the melting look knights loved in her eye
Was unshed tears that unbidden lie.
The Gods sought her in her chamber lone,
And listened unseen to the stifled moan.

"Ah, daughter," they spoke to her inmost soul,
"Let us to-night our secrets unroll.
Is it for some unconquered kingdom thou dost sign—
Dost thou scorn thy station and long for one more high?

"If so be it, a king shall thy royal consort be;
No more shall thy present lord reign with thee."
Low she bent her head in swift denial.
"Then, O daughter, what is thy hidden trial?

"What makes thy life but a gilded show?
What makes thee sorrow as the days come and go?
The world has given thee all of seeming worth—
The Gods now wait upon the favored one of earth."

Soft she drew her robes about her stately form;
With her head bent low, a pearly storm
Of tears sprang from her heaving breast,
And fell like precious jewels upon her snowy dress.

"But one gift the Gods to me can give."
Soft her voice fell: "Then 'twill be glory to live.
All else, O Gods, is but paltry show,
A bubble which I can toss and blow.

"Live to-day, to-morrow be as naught.
That one gift I long have sought.
O give to me while here, I pray,
Let it be my staff, my crown, my stay.

"Out from your priceless treasures rare,
I ask this, of all gifts most fair.
No other I crave, and with that one mine
I count my life a priceless boon divine."

Hark! The Gods reply, "What wouldst thou seek?
The gift is thine—thou hast but to speak.
What higher honor, O uncrowned queen,
Can we place on thy head of golden sheen?

"What priceless treasure dost thou ask?
To the Gods there is no impossible task.
What gift is this thou dost prize above all other?"
Low the quivering voice replied: "A child to call me Mother."

THE WORD RELIGION.

It Is an Unmitigated Misnomer.

To the Editor:—Perhaps it may be rather late for me to enter the swim of excitements, with a few thoughts for The Progressive Thinker on the question of Spiritualism, Religion and Science, but the question very naturally leads to another very important and significant inquiry, viz.:

What is religion? What are its principles? and what is it based upon?

Is religion a commodity that can be weighed in a balance?

Is it a substance that can be seen or felt?

Is it a compound of ingredients that can be analyzed?

Is it a formulation of the mind?

Is it a combination of unsupported theories?

Is it a moral principle that is within the reach of all?

Is it a gigantic, ponderable myth of the mind?

The word religion appears to be a very generous, accommodating, applicable sort of a word, automatic, ubiquitous, and a general receptable or storehouse for all the different religious discrepancies on the face of the globe.

The object or use of the word should be a sign that the holder has a passport through which they expect to gain heaven and immortal glory.

Brother Schellhous says "It is a feeling of the individual for the welfare of the soul after death" purely "inherited from early teaching and parentage." Also says, "It demands the worship of some Supreme Being." Entirely mechanical from early cultivation. I have been thinking much of late on the word Religion, as to its preconceived value or its significance in the relative position it occupies among the religions of the world, and the more I study the question the farther off am I in arriving at a satisfactory solution of its intrinsic valuation, or its emolumental position.

Now there are six prime or grand divisions and six hundred subdivisions of religious theories on the earth, and each one has its rethue of followers and adherents, and each class is equally tenacious and sanguine in their belief and opinion that theirs is the only correct theory of worship that is in existence to the exclusion of all others.

Even among the civilized and enlightened nations they hold to the theory of a four God worship, a Father God, a Son God, a Holy Ghost, and a Nature God. Yet, hath no man at any time seen a God, or knows anything about one, outside of nature; showing the direct result of early mechanical cultivation, and a formulated God worship.

Now, I am well aware that there are as many opinions as to what they think constitutes religion as there are writers on the subject, but it merely expresses personal opinion, without arriving at a universal uniform theory of ethics that would be acceptable to all.

I notice that many writers in The Progressive Thinkers are continually looking backward to old and fossilized religions, and to old Jewish, bloodthirsty gods, that were held in reverence in the dark ages of the past, and continually holding them up to view before the public, endeavoring to convince the people that we of to-day, must still continue to reverence a three-headed God, that is out-dated long ago.

Now, I wish in all candor to say to all such, and all others, that we as Spiritualists are not back-lashing and looking backward to old creeds, and to old Gods, to sustain our position, and our theories, but are looking forward, progressionists of to-day, our philosophy of life is a natural sequence of Nature, and no obsolete personal God worship about it, and our God is a God of facts and morality. We recognize all morally good, we ignore all immorality. Believing or disbelieving in an arbitrary religion or arbitrary God never clothed a human soul for a shining heaven, or consigned it to a burning hell.

Endeavoring to sail under a flag with the words religion and church enstamped thereon, is but a shadow, and a hollow subterfuge. Far better to sail under a flag with the words Humanitarian Morality enstamped thereon, which is within the reach of all, than to endeavor to reach heaven, sailing under a classified, formulated religion.

Now, it may be barely possible, but not very probable, that out of so large a variety of religious theories there may be one that is right. No, there is a tincture of moral goodness in many, it would be a wonderful freak if there was not, but of so small a quantity as to lose its identification or influence on the great mass of the people.

Religion is supposed to mean self-sacrificing goodness and worship of God, to pave the way into heaven. Well, what is goodness outside of a strict morality, and a kindness to our fellow-man? Getting down on our knees and praying to an unseen, imaginary God, or going to a church on a Sabbath day, and bowing our heads in holy reverence to a supposed Deity, does not constitute goodness in any sense of the word. If our moral goodness is not sustained by moral actions, it is entirely worthless.

Now, I ask, laying aside all prejudice, all cultivated opinions, all preconceived theories, What is religion?

I have about come to the conclusion, that the word as now used, and in general use to convey personal goodness, is a complete failure and an unmitigated misnomer.

A Lecture Delivered in the City of Chicago.

= Dreams =

By C. W. Leadbeater, of London, England.

The subject of dreams is one which I think ought to be of very general interest, because all of us sometimes dream, and it must have occurred to us that we should be glad to have some explanation of these dreams; how sometimes they are quite confused, improbable and absurd, and at other times they seem to have a certain feeling about them, a kind of stamp of truth, and we feel that they are very different from the ordinary type of dream. And then I suppose that quite a number of us must have had the experience of dreams coming true; that is to say, dreams which prove to be previsions of something that is about to occur, or else which indicate to us something which had already occurred or was then occurring at a distance.

Now, all these different varieties of dreams demand some sort of explanation. There is a good deal of difficulty in arriving at a satisfactory explanation along the ordinary lines that are laid down by students of psychology; but we have in our Theosophical system an explanation of all these, which seems to us to be more perfect and more satisfactory than any which we get outside of our system, and I propose to-night to try to indicate to you as far as can be done in so very short a period what that explanation is.

Those of you who have done me the honor to listen to other lectures which I have delivered will already be aware that our Theosophical teaching takes for granted the existence of various planes in nature—that is to say, of other types or orders of matter very much finer than what we ordinarily call matter of this physical plane; that we hold all this to be in essence the same matter, but in a state of very much greater subdivision, vibrating at a very much more rapid rate, and consequently in various ways not exactly obeying what down here are the laws of nature with regard to matter, but still perfectly real, existing just as truly as does matter down here, and equally perceptible, although not to the ordinary senses.

We hold also that man has within himself matter of all these different planes or types, and that by means of the matter corresponding to any particular level in nature (the matter within himself, I mean, which corresponds to that level), he is able to sense this level and receive impressions from it if he has developed the necessary faculties; because we hold that just as on this plane which you all know man may receive, and does constantly receive impressions from outside through the channels of his senses, so he can and does receive impressions from these various other planes of more refined and subdivided matter by means of the matter within him which corresponds to these respectively.

We, therefore, credit man with something very much more than merely the soul and body of popular theology. We say that he has belonging to him not one body or vehicle, but several, and that all of these are channels through which communications may reach his soul, and all of them also are instruments which that soul can use when it learns how to use them, and through which it can express itself just as it does through the physical body.

Before you can understand how these impressions are given, it will be well for us just to glance at the vehicles through which these things come to us—to see what is the mechanism by which we receive impressions from outside.

Now beginning at the bottom, there is, first of all, this physical body with which we all consider ourselves to be familiar. How are impressions received through the physical body? Any physiologist will tell you that the whole scheme of receiving impressions, of whatever kind, from outside, is managed by the nervous system of man; that we have all over our body a network of exceedingly fine nerves, and that these convey messages to the brain; that if you put out your hand and touch something and feel that something to be hot, a message is telegraphed from the nerves at the end of your fingers up to the brain, and in consequence of the heat you withdraw the hand hastily. That is done because the brain has in turn telegraphed back another message: "If it is hot, then withdraw from it." All that process takes place in the instant of time which elapses between your touching something too hot to hold comfortably and dropping it instantaneously; science will tell you that that is so; indeed two separate processes have taken place, and the time occupied by them is quite measurable by the fine instruments used in scientific investigation, although it would seem hardly measurable to us without those instruments.

This nervous system is liable to be affected very much by external conditions. The whole of it centers itself in the great nerve axis which runs up the spine and which leads into the medulla oblongata at the back of the neck and up into the brain, and all these nerve impressions are received and registered by the brain.

That brain is very liable to be considerably affected by all sorts of comparatively small disturbances in the body. People often think of the brain as being always absolutely reliable, as far as it goes and up to its own level of comprehension. It is no such thing; it may be very largely affected in its power to respond to impressions by quite a number of what we should probably think very small influences. For example, it is absolutely dependent upon the condition of the body for its true working, for its exact registration of any impressions which are received. The blood which circulates through the brain affects it very seriously and that in three separate ways—by its quantity, its quality and its speed.

In regard to the quantity: If there is too much blood in the brain, then at once we have congestion, and from that comes irregularity of action, which quite often may extend to hallucinations of various sorts. If, instead of having too much blood we have too little, we obtain a totally different effect. First of all, we should have irritability produced, and then very shortly lethargy would supervene; so that the mere question of the quantity of blood which is supplied to the brain makes a very serious difference in its power of responding to impressions and registering them.

Now in regard to the quality of the blood. Suppose that it is not sufficiently oxygenated—that there is not sufficient oxygen in the air we breathe, then it becomes super-charged with carbon dioxide; at once our power of responding to impressions is seriously affected. We can see that for ourselves when we have been for a little while in a crowded room like this; then we often find ourselves becoming sleepy. Why? Simply because there is not enough oxygen in the air we breathe, and consequently the lungs are unable to give the proper amount to the blood; the blood cannot supply the brain with the oxygen that is wanted; in consequence the brain fails to respond readily to impressions and falls into this semi-conscious condition.

As to the speed with which the blood flows—if it be a little too great we have fever; if it be a little too slow, then again we have lethargy; so that very slight deviations from normal health or the normal condition of affairs may entirely alter the power of our brain to respond. I want to make that matter clear, because then you will see how exceedingly easy it is for the various curious thoughts that come in our dreams to occur. I shall show you how later on.

That is just one side of the thing, the physical vehicle through which we receive our impressions; and you see that there we need practically perfect health—we need a perfectly normal and regular flow of the blood in order that we may be sure our impressions are correctly received and registered, and that what we think we perceive through our senses we are really perceiving.

There is another part of man's physical brain which is not usually taken into account at all, and that what we in Theosophy call the etheric part of the brain. It is still physical matter, but it is physical matter in a much higher state of subdivision than even gaseous matter. It bears the same relation to gas which gas does to liquid, or liquid to solid; it is a higher state of matter, vibrating differently, a much finer subdivision, freer in motion, and in many ways differing greatly, but still it is purely physical matter, and does not belong to the astral plane. Man has within his brain a large amount of matter of this nature, and although it belongs to this plane it differs in different ways from the ordinary physical matter of the brain, so that we very frequently speak of it as the etheric brain of the man.

Now this etheric brain of man corresponds very closely with the denser physical, and it also must be in perfect condition in order that communications from the Ego to the lower brain may come through properly and without distortion, or in order that any message from outside in the nature of a sensation or impression may in turn be clearly carried upwards to the Ego.

Now this etheric part of the brain, and in fact the whole of man's etheric body, as we call it (that is of the etheric matter in his body) is also the field of a circulation—no longer a circulation of the blood, but a circulation of a vital magnetic fluid which we call prana in our Theosophical books. That is simply an Indian name for life, for this is the life fluid that is circulating—running not along the arteries and veins but following the course of the nerves, running through the nervous system of man; and we find by experiment that unless that flow of the life principle (which of course is entirely invisible physically and not received or accepted as yet by ordinary science) is duly taking place sensations are not properly registered.

I can give you examples to show you that this is so. For example, if your hand is numbed with cold, you have no sensation in it; it may be pricked and you do not feel it. Something may touch you; you do not feel the touch; your nerves are not registering as usual. Now it may be said that is due to the fact that circulation of the blood in that hand has been checked by the intense cold. Perhaps that is not the whole reason, but never mind, we may let that pass. The hand appears to be for the time a dead hand, dead from cold.

Take another case which will show you a little more. Suppose you have that same hand or arm operated upon by a mesmerizer. If you have ever seen a mesmeric exhibition of any sort you are aware that it is an easy process for a mesmerist to make a few passes over the hand or arm of a man and utterly take away all sense of feeling from it, so that you may run a pin or needle into it and the man does not feel; he will be quite unconscious until he happens to see what you are doing. That is not a case where the circulation of the blood has been checked; that hand is warm and living as before. What has happened to the nerves? Why do they not register as before? I do not know how ordinary science explains that; probably it does not explain it; but from the occult standpoint we should tell you that a clairvoyant looking at that hand or arm would be able to tell you precisely what had happened. He would say that the mesmerizer had simply drawn away the man's life fluid and poured his own magnetism in instead. Though the arm is still warm and living, because the life fluid is still flowing along the nerves, it is no longer in connection with the brain of the man; it is not his life fluid, and consequently although the physical nerves are there, yet they fail to report to the brain; they are kept alive by the flow of a foreign life current, but it does not convey sensations to the brain of the man. Here are these nerves obviously failing in their office; because this life current was not there, they failed to report the prick or pinch or touch, not doing their work; so that evidently a regular flow of that life current also is necessary in order that sensations may be properly registered by the brain.

Now we come to a stage further than that. Let us leave the physical man altogether and think of his astral vehicle. That passes at once quite outside of the domain of science, of course, but nevertheless in Theosophical investigation we have established entirely to our own satisfaction that there does exist this astral vehicle of man. To tell us that it does not exist would simply provoke a smile, because it is a thing we are using every day, and to say we cannot use it is like telling a man that he has never fallen asleep, and that if he thinks he has he is laboring under a delusion. There are many of us who are constantly using all these faculties, and it is to us absolutely absurd to hear so many people say these things are all impossible.

This astral body is also a very great channel for sensation to the Ego; in fact, it is really the vehicle of all sensation. It is the seat of emotion, passion, etc., and from it and through it all sorts of impressions may be conveyed to the Ego within; all kinds of thoughts may excite desire or emotion or passion in that vehicle, and all of those feelings will be duly conveyed to the Ego inside; so there is another channel through which the soul may be reached by outside impressions.

There are further and higher vehicles to be considered, but I need not trouble you with those now, because we simply want to see in what condition is the consciousness of the man during sleep and in what condition are these vehicles, so that we may see in what way the man's condition when asleep differs from his state when awake, and how the impressions coming to him will come differently and be received and registered differently when he is what we call asleep. We must not forget, however, the consciousness, the real Ego of the man behind all these vehicles of which I have spoken, because those are all simply his instruments. We must remember that the Ego, the soul of the man differs very much in different people; that the souls of men are by no means all alike; that some are very highly evolved, very advanced souls, that have had very many births, and very much experience in consequence, and have progressed and have learned very much.

Others are young and undeveloped souls, and consequently are very much less able to make anything of the various impressions which come to them from outside. That is a fact that we should bear in mind in our investigations. Then we must remember that this ego or self within is trying to gain control of all these vehicles of his, these different bodies, but that in very many cases he has by no means complete control over them. Very many of them are still quite liable to be carried away by a sudden rush of emotion or desire. A wild desire comes upon us to do something which we know we ought not to do, something utterly silly or definitely wrong and harmful, but still we do it on the impulse of the moment. We say, "I could not help that." It is the astral vehicle which originates this desire and not the man at all; the man has not yet gained perfect control over the thing. He is swept away. It is not the man who does all that. It is his weakness which allows the lower vehicle to sweep him away and govern him for the time instead of his holding it in order and governing it. It is exactly like the case of a runaway horse which ought to be guided and used, which for the time is allowed to take the reins and follow its own bent and run away. It is the function of the ego to make up what is presented to him as impressions from without, to combine them and sort them and rearrange them. I have not time to give you instances of that now, because I am anxious to go further into the dream side of the question; but you may easily see it for yourselves if you think of what is really the impression conveyed to your eyes when you see a landscape; here is your retina which places it upside down; then you get nothing but the flat picture of a house or a tree, nothing but a flat picture in outline, no feeling of the perspective or anything of that sort. Think that out for yourselves, and you will see how very much your brain does in the matter and how little comparatively your eye does; how your brain by virtue of its experience adds to and fills out that picture for you. You will find further particulars of that in the book on Dreams which I wrote, if you like to read it. You must remember the self has to combine and sort and rearrange and amplify these impressions that you receive, and it may do it wrongly; it may translate its impressions in the wrong way.

There is a celebrated Hindoo example of that in which they speak of the man who in the dark comes upon a rope and takes it for a snake. In such a case the man becomes terrified just as though the thing were real, the ego perceives something that is translated from what he sees; all he is told in this case is that down there in the dark in front of him is something long and waving, and at once he thinks of a snake. There is no snake there, of course; so we see that he may misinterpret the impressions that come to him.

Then again, we must remember that this ego, this self, can be impressed when he is away from the physical body. He leaves it during sleep or trance, and even when he is away from it he is still very impressible.

We have made experiments which tend very clearly to prove this. I remember one, for example, in the case of a man who had been given to drink. He had been a terrible drunkard, in point of fact, but he reformed utterly. He had progressed so far with his reformation that the smell of any kind of alcohol was exceedingly distasteful to him; but he said that for years after he had got rid of the desire, he was still liable to dream that he was drinking, and then in his dreams he drank with pleasure, although when awake he shrank with horror from the idea of the thing.

That shows that the ego is liable to receive impressions during sleep and the impressions are received through this totally different vehicle, the desire persisting up there long after down here it had been entirely wiped out of the man.

We made other experiments which tended to show that. This that I am telling you about dreams, is based on a series of experiments lasting some years, conducted upon this subject by one of the Lodges of the Theosophical Society over in London in England. There we devoted ourselves to investigation in ways I shall be able to describe to you later on. This group of students had among them several who were clairvoyant—who had the sight of higher planes, and not in the vague and somewhat inefficient way in which so many possess it, but definitely and orderly in their methods, to be used at will, and applied always in very careful tests in the most scientific manner. In this way they investigated this question of dreams, the clairvoyant members standing by to see what was taking place, while others observed the effect on the physical plane, etc.

Now let me go on to try to explain to you what is the condition of this ego and these vehicles of his during sleep, and in what way they differ from the conditions when awake. First of all, take the physical brain. During sleep the whole of the circulation of which I spoke to you is still going on; the ego is still subject to these currents of blood which are passing through, and anything whatever which affects that circulation, even such a trifling matter as indigestion may easily affect the capacity of the brain to receive and transmit these various impressions and vibrations from outside, so that if there is anything the least wrong with him, then these things will become jumbled and senseless.

It is a very curious fact that while the ego is quite away from the physical body, when the man is what we call entirely asleep, that action is still taking place; that is to say, that while the man himself is away and may be thinking out his own line of thought entirely outside of that brain, the brain itself is still—I can hardly say thinking, but still slowly evolving images. This physical body of ours has a kind of curious consciousness of its own, a very peculiar consciousness, about which there is still much to be learned, because to learn about it would explain many things which as yet are very vague and uncertain to us.

This lower animal kind of consciousness which subsists in us when the man is withdrawn for the moment from it, seems to be quite unable to register anything at all but the most concrete things. It translates all ideas with reference to itself; it can see nothing as apart from itself. All stimuli of whatever sort it translates immediately into perceptual images; it cannot receive abstract thoughts or memories but at once it translates them into imaginary percepts of its own.

Suppose when you are away from it, it thinks about you, as being in your own house, and then some thought connected with China comes into it. The only way in which that physical brain can take up that thought is by imagining itself transported to China, so that at once that local direction of thought takes the form of this spatial transportation. In the same way every association of ideas, no matter how far apart they may be in reality, no matter how curious the association may be, at once becomes a combination of images. So if one thing suggests another by some association connected perhaps with some thought you had during the day, however grotesque the two would look side by side, at once they appear side by side; or one of them changes into another. That is the kind of effect you get. Whatever can be dragged from the immense stores of memory at once appears as a picture. This curious animal consciousness magnifies and it distorts the smallest sounds or touches in the most extraordinary manner.

If you have ever read anything at all of the literature on this subject of dreams, any of the collections of stories of such things, you are sure to have met with some cases in which a very tiny touch given externally was magnified enormously, and always some sort of picture is invented to account for it. Cartesius tells a story of a man who received a slight scratch from a pin or something in bed while asleep. At once he magnified that into a fatal wound and concocted a story, with himself, of course, for the hero, in which he had received this wound in a duel or something of that kind. Very many such stories as that you will find.

Most of these impressions that come to the physical brain in the way I have described are not at all recoverable in your memory in the morning, because they are merely senseless successions, as a rule; so mostly you do not recollect these things that have been sweeping about in your brain in the night.

There is the other part, the etheric part of that brain. There we found in the course of experimentation a very interesting feature. This etheric part of man's brain is also, while the man himself is away from it, liable to receive impressions from any thoughts that are floating about. Please remember that thoughts are definite things; that every thought creates a form—a form which is temporary, of course, which lasts only according to the strength of the thought which called it into existence, which nevertheless is perfectly definite, floating about, capable of impressing itself on any other brain with which it comes in contact. That is the whole secret of thought transference; you can direct these intentionally, if you will; but anyhow, the thought of any person near you is always liable to act upon your mind for a moment if you are not thinking strongly of anything yourself, so as to keep other thoughts out. These are not in the least your own thoughts, but simply the cast-off fragments of other people's which your brain picks up casually because you have no strong currents of thought of your own at the time. At night then this etheric brain is ready for any kind of impressions from the thoughts which come pouring into it from all sides.

The experiment was tried of isolating this etheric brain by putting a magnetized shell around it so that the thoughts from without could not come in, and then we thought that this etheric brain would rest. It did not; it began very slowly to evolve for itself memories out of the past life of the individual.

These are two of the vehicles (the physical body and the etheric brain), which are very much more open to impressions during sleep than they are when the man is awake. When the man is awake his own thoughts and feelings affect these brains. When he is asleep both of these are really inoperative, ready to receive any impressions that may be given to them from outside.

As to the man himself, he is floating outside of his physical body in his astral vehicle. I say floating, because the quite undeveloped man as a rule never leaves the neighborhood of the physical body at all, but simply floats about, and if you had any clairvoyant sight and looked at either a savage or a man of very low type, you could see the physical body asleep on the bed and the real man in his astral body (a duplicate, in fact, of the physical, but of course of finer matter), probably very little more awake than his physical body.

But suppose you have a more developed man (one of yourselves perhaps), a perfectly ordinary person of cultured type of this advanced race, then you would find that sort of man when away from his body at night much more awake and conscious and capable of moving to very much greater distances from his physical body. He would be largely wrapped up in his own thought, probably not very conscious of the places around him and of those through which he moved, or only spasmodically conscious of them, because of his own thought images which would blind him to anything outside, but still he has his faculties about him, though they are directed to his own thought, and only occasionally are roused up sufficiently to take note of where he is, what he is doing, or whom he meets. He may not necessarily be very wide awake to what is going on around him, but still he may receive impressions of a broad and general character very readily indeed. If he drifts into an atmosphere of low sensuality assuredly that would act upon any similar quality or germ of such corresponding quality in himself and he would be stirred by feelings of that nature. Suppose he drifts into very devotional surroundings during his sleep, he would certainly receive an impression of strong devotion from these surroundings, even though he might not be able to see what was taking place clearly enough to remember it afterwards.

Then, again, for him there is a different kind of consciousness, for he seems to think very largely in symbols and not in words. He has the most marvelous faculty under this condition of making up a story, of composing quite a long and elaborate history to account for any sensation that happens, and he can do this in an infinitesimal fraction of time.

There are a good many stories afloat to illustrate this. I remember Richers tells a story, a very remarkable one, of a man who was awakened by the firing of a pistol shot in the street outside. Now it was the sudden pistol shot which awoke him and yet he woke from a dream into which that came as an integral part, and of which obviously that sudden shot was the cause. As far as I remember it, the man had gone through various experiences. He dreamed he had enlisted as a soldier; that he had met with very severe treatment and eventually had deserted; that he had gone through all kinds of adventures, had been pursued and captured, brought to trial, sentenced to death and led out to execution, and the shot was the firing of the volley which wound up that long story; and yet it seems absolutely certain that he composed the whole of that story in the second that intervened between the sound of the shot and his full awakening. The ego evidently catches the thought a moment before the physical vehicle and makes up all this story to account for it.

That is not the only instance where that is the case. You will find a series of stories in Carl Duprel's "Philosophy of Mysticism," a large number of stories of this kind collected from various sources, which show how in a moment the ego makes up his story, and a very wonderful and exceedingly clear story it frequently is.

I remember the German writer Steffens gives us a curious account of a thing that happened to him when he was a boy; how he slept with his brother and he had a frightful dream of being pursued along the street by some dreadful wild animal. It was gaining still upon him—as they always do in dreams—and at last he turned up a staircase and tried to escape, but the creature followed him and bit him severely on the thigh. He awoke feeling the bite of the creature upon him, and found his brother who was sleeping with him had simply pinched his thigh to wake him. That was all there was to account for that dream, and these are only two out of a great number of instances.

It is a very wonderful faculty that the ego possesses of distorting anything that occurs or of combining things altogether in a moment of time, of transcending our ordinary theories of time and space. A very fine story is given in Addison's Spectator which illustrates that very well. I do not know whether that particular story is true, but if not true it is very well invented. It is exactly the kind of thing that does happen.

It is stated that there was a certain sultan of Egypt who had a great religious teacher. This teacher used to expound to him the Koran, the Mohammedan bible. One day they came across a passage in which it was stated that Mohammed was carried into heaven by a certain angel; that there he was shown all kinds of wonderful things, the narration of which occupied a number of pages of the Koran; yet that when he was brought back into the body by the angel; the bed from which he had risen was still warm, and a jug of water which had been upset when he departed had not had time to empty itself. The sultan of Egypt took leave to doubt that statement. He said: "This thing is not possible; it could not be done in that time," which seems reasonable. The teacher said "I undertake to convince you, not that that story is true, but that it might be true," and he asked him to order a bowl of water to be brought, and then he said to the sultan, "Please dip your head into that bowl of water, and take it out again." The sultan complied with the request and dipped his face into the bowl of water. Suddenly he found himself in an entirely different place, no longer surrounded by his court, but far away on a lonely shore, a place entirely strange to him. Well, his first thought was (I suppose it was not an unnatural thought for an Oriental manarch) that his teacher had put an enchantment on him—that he was suffering from witchcraft of some kind. Anyhow he found himself on a strange and lonely shore at the foot of a mountain. Presently he began to get very hungry. He looked about and saw some men cutting wood not far away. He met and conversed with them and asked them to give him some food. They said if he would help them by working for them he should share in their food. Presently they gave him some food and he went home with them. He thought the enchantment was still going on and he did not know what to make of it, but he had to live this new life; so he settled down with the wood-cutters. He spent some years at that business and gradually amassed a little money, and bought goods in a small way and met with success and prosperity, and in the course of time became a rich merchant and married the daughter of another merchant and brought up a large family. He had a married life of something like fifteen or sixteen years, if I remember rightly. Then there came a time when he lost all his money, and remembering his old training he again took up wood-cutting. One day he was wandering by the seashore where he first came into this strange new life and was feeling very depressed by his change in fortune; then he said to himself, "Let me take a bath in the sea, and perhaps I shall feel better. So he went into the sea to bathe and put his head under the water; when he lifted it up there he was with his courtiers around him and with his teacher standing before him smiling. They say it was almost impossible to convince that man that the whole of that long story

9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science.

Read This Carefully Before Remitting.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and their price, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

These nine books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printer's art, will be furnished to our subscribers for $2.75, a price which modern machinery and enterprise has rendered possible in The Progressive Thinker office only. Sending out these books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter.

"After Her Death. The Story of a Summer." By Lillian Whiting. No mind that loves spiritual thought can fail to be fed and delighted with this book. Beautiful spiritual thought, combining advanced ideas on the finer and ethereal phases of Spiritualism, leading the mind onward into the purer atmosphere of exalted spiritual truth. A book for the higher life. For sale at this office. Price, cloth $1.

"Right Living." By Susan H. Wixon. The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principle of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in Children's Lyceum. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. Cloth $1 For sale at this office.

"Poems of Progress." By Lizzie Doten. In this volume, this peerless poet of Spiritualism may be read in her varied moods, "from grave to gay, from lively to severe." It is a book to be treasured and richly enjoyed by all who love genuine poetry, and especially by Spiritualists. The volume is tastily printed and bound. Price $1.

"The Pantheism of Modern Science." By F. E. Titus, Barrister, Toronto, Canada. A summary of recent investigations into Life, Force and Substance, and conclusions therefrom. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"The Kingship of Self-Control." By Wm. George Jordan. It treats of the crimes of the tongue, the Red Tape duty, the supreme charity of the world, the revelation of reserve power, etc. Price 30 cents. For sale at this office.

"The Gospel of Buddha, According to Old Records." Told by Paul Carus. This book is heartily commended to students of the science of religions, and to all who would gain a fair conception of Buddhism in its spirit and living principles. Spiritualist or Christian can scarcely read it without spiritual profit. Price $1. For sale at this office.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. For sale at this office. Price, 25 cents.

"Religious and Theological Works of Thomas Paine." Contains his celebrated "Age of Reason," and a number of letters and discourses on religious and theological subjects. Cloth binding, 480 pages. Price $1. For sale at this office.

OCCULT MYSTERIES.

MESSAGE FROM M'KINLEY.

Spiritualists Believe a Direct Communication Was Received.

INCIDENT OF THE RECENT CAMP MEETING IN FLORIDA—CAME THROUGH J. CLEGG WRIGHT, OF OHIO—ITS PURPORT.

Rev. W. F. Peck, of 3005 Magazine avenue, pastor of the Spiritualists' Society which holds its services in De Honey's Hall, on Olive street, near Vandeventer, has returned from the annual camp-meeting of the faith in Florida, bringing with him an interesting account of a message from the lamented William McKinley to the people, transmitted through J. Clegg Wright, a trance medium from Ohio. Resident members of the Spiritualists' organization are deeply interested in the communication, which they firmly believe emanated from the spirit world. It has been the recent theme of much discussion among them.

When seen last night at his residence Rev. Mr. Peck said: "The message was not received at what is commonly called a seance, which fact renders its reception all the more wonderful to the laity. It came in broad daylight at one of the morning sessions which Mr. Wright held every day during the camp-meeting for the personal instruction of his classes in Spiritualism. I was not in attendance, but heard others describe it so often that I feel almost as if I had been an eyewitness to the proceedings. On February 19 there came to Mr. Wright a promise from the spirit world that the transmission would occur the following day—I presume this communication was the speech of President McKinley's second spirit, directed through the organism of his guide. Mr. Wright made the announcement of his revelation to members of his class, and naturally the attendance was up to its full proportions on the day of the promised communication—February 20.

"The session was conducted in a large pavilion in the center of the grounds. It was closed up tightly, but no attempt made to darken the interior or give a supernatural aspect to the environment. Mr. Wright, after his usual form of procedure incident to class instruction, passed into a trance, and a few minutes later the spirit appeared to him in accordance with the promise. The words were in turn uttered unfalteringly by the medium—words that were recognized as the language of the martyred President. The scene was most impressive. Mr. Wright lives at Amelia, Ohio, and is one of the best-known mediums in the country. I cannot say whether he was ever under the influence of the President's spirit before or not. He did not then claim to be directly controlled by Mr. McKinley's spirit, but by his familiar spirit or guide. He is a man of recognized integrity and honesty, and experts have more than once tried to puzzle him on questions of science and philosophy without success. The different intelligences spoken through him are treated profoundly and well. While Mr. McKinley's message was being received a young man in the class reported it in long hand, and the following is a substance of the communication:

"'I am thoroughly acquainted with Spiritualism. My wife, my darling wife, paid great attention to it and Abraham Lincoln and Garfield know the power of controlling the mental mechanism of the medium. They have enabled me to speak to you as I do now.

"'I am like awakening in the morning, my past life is like a dream to me, a dream of last night which I recall. I am the same personality, the same consciousness, there is no change whatever in my "knowing;" only my ability is changed. The subject of my life is to me like a dream and I am awakened to the fact that I have lost something. I am now picking up the lines of my memory of my past life. Lincoln tells me that I am coming slowly to my past self. I feel no pain, no worry! I know that I am in the spiritual world. I know what has happened. My memory of former days precedes my memory of my last days on earth. I am told that my situation in spirit land is commendable. I was a notable person in my past life, and, therefore, must be a notable personality in spirit life. I am now in a greater circle of friends and persons I know than when I was on earth.

"'My busy life in the public affairs of recent years deprived me of my habit of reflection and recalling to memory those who passed on before me. I feel disposed to say that I would emphatically encourage men and women to think more of those persons with whom they have been mixed in the past, because I have met so many in this life whom I never thought of, and who have come to me with their help. Their sympathy makes me sad. I realize that I would rather be a spirit than President of the United States, because my possibilities are so much greater now than when on earth. I am told by Benjamin Franklin that the spirit world, with its intelligence and inspiration overlaps all material knowledge and manifestations. Daniel Webster, who is with me now, was as a child preordinated by the spiritual world. It was not by shrewdness nor extraordinary talent of my own that I was made President. It was the order of design, or evolution of circumstances. My last utterances on earth man for a time will value.

"'The last words of great men are usually wise words. When man leaves forever his earthly surroundings he wants to say something. I knew that I was detined to die. I knew it intuitively, but my mind hoped to stay and complete my work. Some of you are filled more with political ideas than I ever was, but a statesman must study humanity. At the end of the first term of Grover Cleveland, a man of more idealistic schooling than myself, a man more robust in intellect and character, when he laid down his reins of power, the commercial conditions of the country were in a deplorable condition. Foreign competition had weakened the power and activity of the people of the United States. Then the McKinley bill arose in the spirit of home protection. The same time we had favorable harvests in the Western States and in India and Russia, so the United States experienced a very rapid development, which was helped by the inventive genius of our people in developing our iron trade by applying iron and steel in the construction of bridges, ships, etc.'

"Then the message continued by reviewing the condition of the country's affairs up to the present time, touching upon the Pan-American Commission, the Spanish-American war and the responsibilities of the affairs in the Philippines. Continuing, the spirit said:

"'A great mind has come to me and said that it is a misfortune for a time to a spirit to leave his material body so suddenly as I did. My knowledge comes back to me only by degrees in this that I will call a dream state. You will see how difficult it is for me to pick up the knowledge which belongs to me as a mind, because I have lost my brain and my physical body. This state leaves a great difficulty to recall events of my past life. I am told that I do remember remarkably well, considering the sudden manner in which I came into this spiritual world. I now feel such a pain. It is caused by my recollection, but I must not now dwell on it, for it is the medium who is affected physically by my recollection. You can bring back our pain by the thinking of it. My physicians were in doubt as to the cause of my death. I can tell you the cause now. They did not discover it. It was the bullet passing downward, locating in the kidney. If the attending physicians had looked into my kidneys they would have found the cause, but in no event could I have recovered a state of good health. Had I been a man like Lincoln I might have recovered, but what of it? It was my destiny. Destiny made me President and destiny caused my death. I bless you all a thousand times. My work on the spiritual plane shall be with you in the days to come.'"—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

PREDICTIONS CAME TRUE.

A Wisconsin Man's Remarkable Experience.

TALK WITH ALLEGED SPIRIT OF A SAILOR KILLED AT SEA IN 1700.

During the season of 1900, residing in the southern and central part of Wisconsin, I was annoyed by a number of perplexing circumstances in business. Hearing of a Spiritual medium in a neighboring village I concluded to call upon this medium and test spiritual authorities in these matters. I set out for the village in question and rang the bell at the door of the spiritual medium's cottage. A strong, magnetic woman some seventy years of age answered the bell, a woman of shrewd yet dignified countenance.

"Are you Mrs. H——?" I asked.

"That is my name," steadily answered the woman. "What do you want here?" Upon which I stated my business.

The medium answered. "Call in one hour. I do not make spiritual seances a business and do not often so entertain strangers, but you are here and I will do what I can for you."

In one hour just I again rang the bell at the door of the spiritual medium's cottage, paid my fee and seated myself in the woman's apartments.

"Can you tell me," I asked, "whether or not my business partner is treating me fairly in moneyed matters?"

The medium at once became entranced and, at least to all appearance, was controlled by some force or spirit not visible to my view. She sprang to her feet, struck the table a splitting blow and said in the rough voice of a man:

"I am Jack, the sailor boy. I fell from the mast of a ship in 1700 at the Bermuda Isles in an ice storm and broke my neck. I am of this medium's control and have done many things for her in many ways. I can tell you, sir, about your business partner. He has kept from you $50 in money recently, $10 in small accounts and $40 in one separate instance. Go north from the city in which you are residing to a small village. In this village lives a tall man who has a wife, a very tall lady. This woman has paid your partner $40. I now see your partner as he places the money separate from the other funds within an inside pocket. Is this sufficient?"

"It is," I said.

The only tall man with whom we were dealing at that time lived in that village and this man's wife was tall. I went directly to the village after the seance and was told by the tall lady that she had received such and such at such and such price, in amount $40. I seized upon my partner's books and found certain sums by this tall lady paid to my partner therein credited and up to that time I had not known that the woman was our patron.

Going to the medium on another occasion I held in my hand the copy of a lecture returned to me by the Librarian of Congress, where I had sent the manuscript for copyright. The manuscript was of an oration, and the same was considered by me a work of great value. The reason for returning the manuscript with refusal of copyright was not quite clear to me. I feared that the production might be stolen by some of my acquaintances who had access to it. Addressing the medium, I said: "I hold here in my hand a manuscript of great value. Will I obtain a copyright upon the same."

Entrancing her nature the clairvoyant said:

"You go from this place to a large city. You enter an elevator and ascend to the top floor of a high brick building. I see you as you enter an office. You speak to a girl with reddish hair. She copies in long hand what you dictate. She then writes the composition upon a typewriting machine. I see you as you put the letter into a mail-box. A man with gray hair receives the letter at a great distance. I see him as he writes—yes, you receive your copyright."

I felt confident that the clairvoyant was wrong, at least in detail. The city to which I was to resort after the seance possessed no high buildings to my knowledge, and the stenographer who had done much work for me in that particular city officed upon the second floor of a two-story building, and I thought of going nowhere else than to the office of this stenographer, at whose hands I had much work done, and in point of fact I knew of no other stenographer in that particular city.

In less than two hours I was pacing the streets of the city mentioned. I was residing at that time in the city of Brodhead, Wis., thus stopping off at the city of Janesville. Upon arriving at Janesville I went directly to the office of my stenographer and found the office door locked. The stenographer was out of town. I inquired for other stenographers, but found no one who could direct me. It was expedient that I should obtain a typewritten title page of the work to be sent to Washington, and I felt that it would be necessary for me to return to Janesville on the following day for that purpose. I was busy and could not well afford to spend the time necessary to return and there were no stenographers known to me in the city of Brodhead.

I was in a dilemma and walked down the street in the city of Janesville. I met a Mr. Urlick, an insurance agent well known in Racine, Wis. I stated my case to Mr. Urlick.

"Why, go right across the street to our office," said Mr. Urlick. "Our stenographer is not in the habit of doing outside work, but she will accommodate you by doing this favor for you, I feel sure. But," he cautioned me, "do not tell her that I sent you."

"Where is your office?" I asked.

"Why, right opposite in the top story of the Hayes Block," he answered.

I was dumfounded. The Hayes Block was the only high brick building in Janesville.

I crossed the street, ascended in an elevator as described by the clairvoyant, stepped out at the top floor of this high brick building, entered the insurance office and there, lo and behold! sat a stenographer with reddish hair, which stenographer in the most unaccustomed manner imaginable wrote my message in long hand, as the clairvoyant had predicted, then copied what she had written upon the typewriting machine, as the clairvoyant also predicted. I passed the letter through a mail-box to Washington and received my copyright.

The above is clearly a prediction and I can prove every word of the foregoing before any judge or jury of twelve men now living.—Lorne Campbell in Chicago American.

SPIRIT HAUNTED HIM.

The Ghost of the Railroad Bridge.

Contractors were building a western division of the Milwaukee Road some years ago in a region where river bayous cut through clayey hills and settlements were few and far between. At one point on the line of the construction work there was a great cut, then a bridge, then another cut, and beyond that a fill. Fully a thousand shovelers, plowmen and pick workers were camped in here, all obedient to a walking boss and several foremen.

At the time of this related happening a construction train with an iron gang was following the graders—so closely that the iron work stopped across the bridge before the cut at that end was fully opened. It was late in the fall of the year, the weather was turning cold, and graders and contractors were anxious to finish what could be done before the heavy frosts and snow came.

The graders bunked at night in long shanties, rudely made out of pine and tarred paper. Each man had his bunk and usually kept in it, for no better place, such few valuables as he might have. Thievery had been unknown, and although the moral standards of the men were quite low, their treatment of each other had been fairly good. But one morning they woke up to find that a number of bunks had been robbed. Little trinkets had been stolen there, a watch here, some money there. The cursing was loud and long, but no clew to the thief was found.

The engineer of the construction train remarked that if he knew who the thief was he would help lynch him at once on the bridge. Two or three night passed without further disturbance, and then again the bunks were found pillaged and there was another outcry. This continued for nearly a fortnight, when one morning a wakeful grader caught one of his companions with his hands in a bunk, grabbed him, gave the alarm and discovered the thief. A careful search of the bunk revealed most of the stolen property in his possession, and he admitted that he was guilty.

It was early morning when he was caught, and it was fifty miles to a sheriff or other officer of the law.

"Let's give him a trial and hang him," shouted the engineer.

An answering shout from the men gave approval to his declaration. The prisoner was marched out into the gray dark of the dawn and set on a barrel. The graders crowded about him. The walking boss and foreman tried to break in the set ranks and rescue the accused, but a word from the engineer stopped them.

"You'd better quit, out there," said he. "You're not in this."

As a thousand men backed his words, the walking boss and foreman wisely withdrew.

"Why'd you steal?" asked the engineer of the prisoner.

"'Cause you're a lot of easy suckers," answered the prisoner, with a grin. "Go ahead and murder me if you want to. You can do it. I stole the stuff, and if you'd given me till to-night I'd have got away. I haven't anybody at home weepin' for me, so just cut the rope and let me swing."

"Hang him," yelled the crowd, and the engineer, anxious to show his leadership, placed a rope about the man's neck and they led him up the grade to the top of the bridge. He was marched out to the center of the bridge, where he would have a clear fall between the girders.

"Now," said the engineer, "you can jump off or be pushed off."

"All ready," shouted the prisoner, and with that he leaped off.

The morning was just at hand when he took his spring into the air. The mists were rolling up from the bottoms, crimson and gold on their wave crests as the sunlight glinted over them. The graders gathered underneath the bridge just had their heads out of this mist, a sea of angry faces turned upward to the wretch now swinging from the rope's end with a broken neck.

"It's done," cried the engineer, and came down the grade with an excellent appetite for breakfast. The body was left hanging to the bridge. The train passed above it several times that day, and each time the engineer took an eager look at the swaying form underneath him. Later a sheriff came and cut the body down and perfunctorily sought to find out the names of the lynchers. Failing in this, he had the man buried on a ridge near the track and the construction work went on.

The engineer's name was Halloway. For several days after the lynching he was quite proud of his leadership, and boasted of it among the men, but when a week had passed he became morose and sullen. He was more disturbed when the walking boss accidentally learned that the man lynched had a wife and child living in Wisconsin. By the time relatives came for the body and removed it the engineer was almost a physical wreck. One day he flatly refused to run his engine over the bridge. He would bring it to the bridge, but run or ride over it he would not, and the fireman got the train across without him. He would have been discharged but for the fact he was the only engineer to be had on short notice.

He began to drink heavily, and to openly avoid the bridge. He would not take any position in the valley where he could see the structure and his associates were all talking of the change. Some called it remorse, but his fireman said:

"He can't look at that bridge without seeing that fellow that was hung. He's going crazy over it. He thinks that fellow is hanging there still and calling for help. I've heard him talking about it in his sleep. If he don't leave here soon he'll do something desperate."

But he did not go away, and his fears and tremblings became worse each day. One night he did not come to his bunk, and in the morning the first men to go to the grade found him on the bridge—that is, he was hanging from the same cross tie the other fellow had swung from. He had gone up there in the loneliness of the night and deliberately killed himself through remorse or insanity. He left no message as to the reason for his act, but his fireman said:

"He got to thinking that other fellow was walking with him all the time. He thought he was haunted. He hadn't the nerve to stand pat on what he had done, so he just cut himself off."

They cut him down and buried him on the same ridge where the first man had been placed, and his body is there to this day. He died a victim of a ghost of his own creation.—H. I. Cleveland in Chicago Record-Herald.

MISSIONARY.

An Account of Work in Indiana.

Our work in the missionary field for the month of March has been very successful and encouraging. During the month we visited six of the societies that we organized last year, added fifty new members to them and organized three new ones.

We are glad to report that all of these six old societies are doing splendid work; one of them, however, has met with reverses, though it has held regular meetings throughout the entire year. We trust it will rise above every obstacle and continue to teach our gospel to the spiritually famished people who have been living under the teachings of the old dispensation with all its errors and mistaken assumptions.

At Frankfort we found the society in a healthy state. We remained with them but one night, held a parlor meeting and arranged to return April 24 for a course of five lectures. The reason why we did not remain there for more lectures at this time was because they could not get a hall in which to hold our meetings.

We will make a further report of the Frankfort society after we visit them again.

We found our society at Sheridan, Ind., in a healthy state. The Spiritualists of this place have been having something of a battle with bigotry, but have won a great victory.

When we went to Sheridan last year we found a few loyal Spiritualists who were waiting for an opportunity to do something for our cause; they took right hold with us and we organized the first Spiritualist society ever organized in that village. It was composed of twenty members, all good and true. This society has met with considerable opposition on the part of the churches, which has been an inspiration to the members and a help to the cause.

We were informed that the Rev. Mr. Parsons, pastor of the Methodist church of Sheridan, decided that the heresy of Spiritualism must be wiped out, so he employed a presiding elder of his church, the Rev. C. U. Wade, of the Muncie district, I believe, to do the work.

This "man of God" like many another of his class, does not seem to preach or practice the teachings of his master, who said "love your enemies," "bless them that curse you," etc., but stoops to the low and vulgar practice of a sixth-rate sleight-of-hand performer, and all for the purpose of obstructing the way of honest people who are trying to learn if there is another, or a continued life.

Some people have become doubtful of a life beyond the grave. They have been driven to this through the dogmatic teachings of the Christian church. It has taught the doctrine of another life, for centuries, but always without proving it or attempting to do so, and at the same time threatening all people with eternal burning who did not believe it; why, then, should any minister of the gospel of Christianity attempt to destroy the only possible evidence that there is a life after the change called death?

The Rev. Mr. Parsons was evidently disappointed in his expectations, for this superior officer of his church proved to be a very inferior sleight-of-hand performer and exposer of Spiritualism. In this performance Rev. Wade exposed nothing excepting his own ignorance of the subject he sought to bring disaster and ruin upon, and the great extremity to which the church is obliged to resort in the hope of saving its erroneous teachings from destruction. Such efforts as this one of the Rev. C. U. Wade is the last kick in the death struggle of old orthodox Christian theology, and always proves as it did in this case, a boomerang, returning to smite the church it was intended to build up.

This hostile show of the narrowness of its projectors did much good for the cause of Spiritualism in Sheridan. It seems that "all things work together for good."

We were told by Mr. S. W. Moore that when we came to Sheridan last year Mr. Everlin, the vice-president of that society, invited him to attend our meetings, that he respectfully declined though he had no respect for the meetings. Said he, "Less than eleven months ago I would not go to hear a Spiritualist lecture, and to-day I am a confirmed Spiritualist, and I am happy in the knowledge of its truth." Though Mr. Moore was thoroughly opposed to Spiritualism at that time, he is the very active and efficient president of the Sheridan society to-day, and is an enthusiastic worker for our cause. While conversing with this good brother he told us the following pathetic story, which illustrates briefly the value of our beloved Spiritualism: "When my daughter was on her death-bed she said, 'Papa, I thought I saw Eddie last night.' (Eddie was her spirit brother). 'Maybe I did not; I might have been dreaming?' She looked at me as if expecting me to reply. What could I say? The only thing I could say was, 'Darling, I don't know.' It was hard to say even that, but I did not know." After a moment's pause he said, "I would have given anything if I could have said to her what I can truly say to-day, it would have given her such courage and consolation, and would have been consoling indeed to me, for I can now say I know that Eddie can come to us and that he is with us, that she has met him. This is such a consolation I can never tell how much comfort it has brought to me."

The Sheridan society has added several new members since it was organized; it has held regular meetings in a private parlor ever since; it has held some public meetings with foreign talent, and Spiritualism is becoming better understood in this busy little town.

At Anderson, Ind., we served the society that we organized last year, holding six meetings, Sunday, March 23, we held an all-day anniversary meeting of three sessions. The morning session was devoted to the lyceum largely, and the little ones as well as the larger ones each did their part beautifully. All enjoyed this meeting very much.

The afternoon service consisted of an anniversary address by the writer, and was followed with spirit messages and tests.

In the evening, Mr. Smith, a member of this society, who is an excellent speaker, occupied the rostrum with the writer, and Mrs. Sprague closed the services with messages and tests. The choir was composed of fourteen singers led by Prof. Bolander. Their music was excellent and was thoroughly appreciated.

This society owns a fine large temple, and on this Sunday evening it was full of people, a large proportion of whom were happy in the knowledge of the truths of Spiritualism. It was a glad and happy day, a day of rejoicing. We added 23 new members to this society during our stay among them.

Our next place of labor was at Mechanicsburg, Ind. We found the society we organized last year, doing nicely. Here, too, the Spiritualists have been holding regular meetings throughout the year. They have a developing class and a reading circle, and are studying and practicing the truths that Spiritualism teaches. We had splendid audiences, though we were there for week-day evenings only, and it was at a time when the people were very busy, as this is a farming community and the spring's work was demanding their attention.

Spiritualism has won the hearts of some of the best people in this place and is growing in public favor daily.

Our enthusiasm does not subside; we are very much encouraged, and feel assured that all that is needed is practical and persistent work to make our organization all that we would wish it to be.

E. W. SPRAGUE.

Ohio State Spiritual Convention.

May 24, 1897, in the 49th era of Modern Spiritualism, the Ohio State Association was born and upon its birth put on its swaddling clothes, and I am sorry to say it has not had a change of clothing since the event.

What causes this apathy? Have we not the concession of all liberalists, that our cult has made it possible for the truth to be placed before the world; and that priests of religion do not want this truth to be placed before their lay members. They are aware of the stupendous fraud upon which rests and hangs their creeds. And it rests with you if Justice shall have a hearing and truth shall continue to rise out of the mist of superstition. Shake off the dust and cobwebs of matter. You can only glean the future through spiritual vision.

A smoked glass will do to look at an eclipse of the sun (or rather the earth, if you please) but a clouded vision will not answer for the reading of the writing on the horizon of the future. We know that since Galileo first pointed his telescope to the heavens science has revealed to us immeasurably more of the laws of nature and of the infinitude of the universe than was even remotely dreamed of in the past ages by church councils. Let us continue to progress, therefore I would ask you to attend the fourth annual State Convention, which convenes at Columbus, Ohio, May 23, 24 and 25, ensuing, in the First Spiritual Church, donated to that society by Brother Barcus, of that city, a spiritual Spiritualist, who bequeathed his legacy to the cause while a dweller on this side of life, it being not a bequeathment or devise to take effect upon his transition, to be fought out in courts of justice(?), and lost.

Come and attend the convention, one and all, either as individuals or as delegates of your society, and bring the proxies of your working members. The officers cannot make your association, and if you would be recognized as a factor in social and religious matters you must lend your personal efforts to the advancement of the cause, and of which we are the possessors; why cannot we concentrate our energies and become a working body, that legislative bodies, judges and juries will recognize and respect. I will close my appeal by saying, "Come to Macedonia."

Will all mediums and speakers kindly send their several addresses and terms for the purpose of securing a certain number of them for our ensuing three-days convention, and oblige.

Ira Moore Courliss.

A jubilee was given Sunday evening, Aprile 6, at the Aurora-Grata Cathedral, in Brooklyn, N. Y., to celebrate the fifth anniversary of the ministerial labors of Mr. Ira Moore Courliss in the field of Spiritualism.

The great auditorium was crowded to its utmost capacity. The church was profusely and beautifully decorated with rarest flowers, and Mr. Courliss could have well said with the poet, "It isn't raining rain to me, it's dropping roses down." The first tribute of loving words and welcome was paid by the scholarly Dr. John C. Wyman, who five years ago introduced Mr. Courliss to the public, and sent him forth to bless the world with his wonderful inspirational work. He gave a vivid description of his call to service, the gift of prophecy, and the consecration to a great life-work which had led Mr. Courliss step by step to devote his life to Spiritualism. He depicted in glowing words the marvelous growth, and abundant reward that had crowned his every effort, and thrilled his hearers with a prophecy of what his work was yet to be, and closed with a tender and eloquent benediction upon his faithful co-worker.

Mrs. Mary E. Lease, who was presented to the vast audience as a speaker of world-wide fame, gave the address of the evening. In glowing words she outlined her theme, and paid just and brilliant tribute to the well-loved minister. "We come to-day," she said (turning to the pastor), "to beautify a life which you have glorified by loyalty to truth, reverence for the Christ life, and principle, and devotion to the uplitment of your fellow-men. Go on in the work which you have chosen, and for which you are so well adapted by reason of your spiritual unfoldment and unblemished career; our hearts' best love and loyalty are yours to cheer and sustain you in your labors for the world."

Mr. Courliss has reason to be proud and happy because of the loving and enthusiastic reception tendered him on this occasion, not only by the members of his own faithful flock, but by the most prominent people of New York and Brooklyn, and his many friends are equally proud of his splendid record and stainless public and private life. He is certainly an instrument in the hands of a higher power to resurrect the murdered truth of Spiritualism from the monument of commercial fakism under which it has been buried. May he long be spared to his loving friends, and to the work to which he has devoted his life, is the heartfelt wish of all who know him. K. L.

BANQUET OF FAMOUS HYPNOTISTS

GREATEST SPECIALISTS IN AMERICA GATHER AT PHILADELPHIA.

Wizards of Hypnotism Try to Outdo Each Other in Giving Startling Exhibitions of Mind Control.

The Directors of the American College of Sciences recently gave a banquet to the foremost hypnotic scientists in this country for the purpose of exchanging experiences and discussing and illustrating the latest and best methods.

Never before in the history of Hypnotism have such thrilling hypnotic experiments been performed. Each Specialist was on his mettle and in turn tried to outdo the others, and sensation after sensation followed so rapidly that the spectators scarcely recovered from one surprise before another even more wonderful was presented.

The Directors of the College were so impressed with the amazing progress which has been made in applying the wondrous science of Hypnotism that they decided to publish a limited number of books embodying the ideas and methods of their distinguished guests.

This is by far the most exhaustive, interesting and remarkable work of the kind ever issued. It is elaborately illustrated with the finest halftone engravings, and is truly a work of art. It tells how famous men have used hypnotism to influence and control those around them. It explains how any intelligent person may learn to develop his magnetic powers so as to wield a practically irresistible personal influence, cure diseases and bad habits, develop the memory and other mental faculties. You can completely change the entire nature and disposition of people and make them respect and repose confidence in you. You can control their very thoughts and actions and make them carry out any suggestions you may give, at any time in the future you direct; you can cure bad habits of every character; you can cure yourself or others of insomnia, nervousness, and business or domestic worry; you can instantaneously hypnotize people by a mere glance of the eye, without their knowledge; you can develop to a marvelous degree any special talent you may have; you can increase your salary; you can protect yourself against the influence of others; you can develop your telepathic or clairvoyant power; you can give thrilling and funny hypnotic entertainments; you can win the love and everlasting friendship of those you desire; you can become a power in your community. Nothing will help you so much in life as a thorough knowledge of this marvelous, mysterious power.

If any readers of this paper are interested in knowing how to use hypnotism in attaining social or business success, they can get a copy of this new book, free of charge, by sending name and address to Hon. James R. Kenney, Office PL15, 420 Walnut street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The books are now leaving the press and will be ready for free distribution by the time this paper reaches the hands of its readers.

What All the World's a-Seeking.
RALPH WALDO TRINE.
Each is building his world from within; thought is the builder; for thoughts are forces,—subtle, vital, irresistible, omnipotent,—and according as used do they bring power or impotence, peace or pain, success or failure.—From Title-page.
The above books are beautifully bound in gray-green raised cloth, stamped in deep old-green and gold, with gilt top. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

THE OTHER WORLD AND THIS.
A compendium of Spiritual Laws. No. 1, New White Cross Literature. By Augusta W. Fletcher, M. D. In this volume the author, in the thirty-nine chapters, discusses a wide variety of subjects pertaining to Spiritualism, from a spiritualistic standpoint. She evinces the powers of a trained thinker, both in matter of thought and fine literary style, and capability of thought expression. The subjects are well handled with conciseness and yet with clearness. It will prove a rich addition to any Spiritualist's library, and a most excellent book for any one seeking information concerning Spiritualism and its teachings. Price $1.50.

The Spiritual Wreath.
A collection of words and music for the choir, congregation and social circle. By S. W. Tucker. Comprises sixty or more gems of song. Price, 15 cents.

ASTRAL WORSHIP By J. H. Hill, M.D. A valuable contribution to the current discussion of religious problems. The author by illustrations and a planisphere (a representation of the celestial sphere upon a plane with adjustable circles), traces most of the myths which lie at the base of Christianity to their origin in sun and star worship. The astronomical facts given possess great value, the illustrations rare and curious. The book is bound in only one style—heavy boards. Price $1.

The Christ Question Settled.
Jesus, Man, Medium, Martyr. A symposium by W. E. Coleman, J. S. Loveland, Hudson Tuttle, Moses Hull, J. R. Buchanan, B. B. Hill, Rabbi I. M. Wise, Col. Ingersoll—and what the spirits say about it. By J. M. PEEBLES, M. D. Whether this book settles the question or not, it will be found eminently entertaining, and brings together a mass of evidence to establish the historical character of Jesus. A large volume. Price, cloth, $1.25.

Father Tom and the Pope,
Or a Night at the Vatican. Written probably by Sir Samuel Ferguson. From Blackwood's Edinburg Magazine. This is a humorous account of a rollicksome visit to the Pope of Rome by Father Tom, an Irish priest, armed with a superabundance of Irish wit, two imperial quart bottles of Irish "poteen," and an Irish recipe for "conwounding" the same. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE TO-MORROW OF DEATH,
Or the Future Life According to Science. By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French by S. R. Crocker. A very fascinating work. This fine volume might well have been entitled Spiritualism Demonstrated by Science. It is written in that peculiar interesting style in which French writers excel when they would popularize scientific subjects in adaptation to the needs of the general reader. The author says: "There is a true and respectable idea in Spiritualism," and regards as proved "the fact of communication between superhumans and the inhabitants of earth." Price, $1.50.

MAHOMET His Birth, Character and Doctrine. By Edward Gibbon. This is No. 6 of the Library of Liberal Classics. It is conceded to be historically correct, and so exact and perfect in every detail as to be practically beyond the reach of adverse criticism. This work will be found intensely interesting. Price, 25 cents.

Crimes of Preachers.
An interesting book along its line and useful to Spiritualists attacked by the clergy and their followers. Price 25 cents; for sale at this office.

THE WORLD BEAUTIFUL.
Series one, two and three. By Lilian Whiting. Three choice volumes, each complete in itself, in which spirituality is related to everyday life in such a way as to make the world beautiful. Price, $1.00 each.

STANDING UP FOR JESUS,
Or what the Editor of the Freethinker's Magazine thinks of him. Price, 4 cents; twenty-five copies for 50 cents.

SPIRITUAL SONGSTER.
By Mattie E. Hull. Thirty-eight of Mrs. Hull's sweetest songs, adapted to popular music, for the use of congregations, circles and families. Price, 10 cents, or $7 per hundred.

INTERVIEWS WITH SPIRITS.
A real visit with friends on the other side of life, and a familiar talk. By spirit Samuel Bowles: Carrie E. S. Twing, Medium. Price 30 cents. For sale at this office.

A. SCHOPENHAUER ESSAYS.
Translated by T. B. Saunders. Cloth, 75 cents. "Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is; and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. This characteristic endows his style with a freshness and vigor which would be difficult to match in the philosophic writing of any country, and impossible in that of Germany."—Translator.

HARMONICS OF EVOLUTION.
The Philosophy of Individual Life, Based Upon Natural Science
As taught by modern masters of law. By Florence Huntley. An exceedingly interesting and distinctly valuable contribution to the literature of evolution, unfolding its laws from the deeper and clearer spiritual aspect, and indicating the defects of the Darwinian theory. Spiritualists and Materialists alike can gain much from its perusal. Price, finely bound in cloth, $2.

Why I Am a Vegetarian.
An address delivered before the Chicago Vegetarian Society. By J. Howard Moore. Price, 25 cents.

The Science of Spirit Return.
By Charles Dawbarn. A scientific rehearsal that is truly interesting. Price, 10 cents.

Why She Became a Spiritualist
Twelve Lectures by Abby A. Judson. This book should be read by every Spiritualist. Price, $1.00; postage 10 cents.

Out of the Depths Into the Light.

THE DIAKKA. The Diakka and Their Earthly Victims. By the Seer A. J. Davis. A very interesting and suggestive work. It is an explanation of much that is false and repulsive in Spiritualism, embodying a most important recent interview with James Victor Wilson, a resident of Summer Land. Price, 50 cents.

Views of Our Heavenly Home.
By Andrew Jackson Davis. A highly interesting work. Price, 75 cents. Postage 5 cents.

SPIRITUAL HARP A collection of Vocal Music for the Choir, Congregation and Social Circles. By J. M. Peebles and J. O. Barrett; B. H. Bailey, Musical Editor. New edition. Culled from a wide field of literature with the most critical care, free from all theological bias, throbbing with the soul of inspiration, embodying the principles and virtues of the spiritual philosophy, set to the most cheerful and popular music (nearly all original) and adapted to all occasions, it is doubtless the most attractive work of the kind ever published. Its beautiful songs, duets and quartets, with piano, organ or melodeon accompaniment, adapted both to public meetings and the social circles. Cloth, $1.25; postage, 14 cents.

A Few Words About the Devil,
And other Essays. By Charles Bradlaugh. With the story of his life as told by himself, and the history of his parliamentary struggle. With portrait. Paper, 50c.

Another Discovery.

In 1820 the statue of a beautiful woman was found in a subterranean temple, on the island of Milo, one of the Grecian Archipelago. Temple and statue were very ancient.

The discoverer of the statue reported the character of the find to the priest of the village of Castro, who paid a visit to the shrine. A month later the French consul of the island, instructed by his home government, visited the antique temple, but he found the shrine in ruins, and the arms of the statue were broken off at the shoulders, with additional matter which had been attached at the left shoulder. The mutilated form is now in the Louvre, at Paris, and casts of it are in the principal museums of the world.

A young American painter who became interested in the Venus de Milo, after careful study of its position, the position of the stumps of the arms, and the fracture on the side, has reached the conclusion that this Venus held a child in her arms. He thinks she was another "Virgin Mary, the mother of God."

Facts seem to indicate that the priest who first visited the shrine, discovered that his "Mother of God" had a rival in this statue, and fearing its effect on his church, he mutilated it in the interest of his faith.

There are evidences that this statue is older than the Christian religion, and it is believed by scholars who have turned their attention to it, that the infant borne in the arms of this "Mother of God" was no less than the infant Jes, to which the Latin suffix "us" was added, giving us our Jesus.

Investigations are now going on, and we are promised further developments.

May Be Partly Mistaken.

"All great rivers have not one source, but many. So the great stream of Christianity is traceable to its fountain-heads in Assyria, Persia, Greece, and Rome, as well as to Nazareth-town. Putting it roughly, it may be said with truth, Christianity found its heart in Palestine, its head in Greece, its clothes in Egypt, its hands in Rome."

Thus from the pen of Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones; but possibly the brother was in error in placing the heart of Christianity in Palestine. Modern criticism has thrown a doubt on that question, which later research may render certain. They who inherit their opinions, and have not the ability to go down to the bottom of things; and they who write books, borrowing the thoughts of others, are not properly equipped to investigate this subject. They had better leave the matter to wiser heads and less truculent hands.

California a School for Trickery.

If reports be true, California is overrun with fake mediums. That State has been the school for all kinds of fraudulent mediumship, and which has caused more or less trouble through all parts of the United States in our ranks. The "Medium," of Los Angeles, Cal., puts the case mildly in the following:

"A Plague of Pretenders." This is the caption of an editorial in last Monday's Los Angeles Times, and here is a text of it: "That there is fully 500 divine healers, heavenly chartists, psychic palmists, card readers, trance mediums and similar fakirs and frauds operating in this city. It may be granted, for the sake of argument, that there may be a possibility of a communication, under certain conditions, between the living and the departed, but that at least nine-tenths of those who pretend to bring the live person into communication with departed spirits are unmitigated frauds. A tax of $20 a month on each of these 500 fakirs would produce a revenue of $120,000 a year. That would be a most acceptable addition to the income of the city."

There is the same unjust discrimination against Spiritualists. What is there about Spiritualism that causes such envious treatment? Why cannot its opponents be just?

Granted that all Spiritualistic mediums are fakirs, they obtain money under false pretense, then why should they be licensed? Why should the law protect this class of crime and hound a gambler? In plain words, why not license a professional burglar, a bawd, a murderer, or anything this gullible generation want so long as they "divy" with the powers that be. This would be a fair proposition, as the city of Los Angeles needs the money, to tax everybody who have dealings with the public, from the newsboy to the good man who can get you a ticket and put you on a through train to heaven. And, by the way, law-abiding Christian(?) editor, take a day and investigate these heavenly ticket agents, ninety-nine out of a hundred are "scalpers" and every one are booming a wildcat road that has the devil behind it and hell is the only station. Communication beyond this point is impossible on account of the heat, but if you will trust to their "pull" and the $s worth of faith you have in stock they may get you through with only a scorching.

It seems that all law-abiding citizens should assist in prohibiting all manner of fraud and wrong. Spiritualists are all in favor of punishing fraud, whether it be in or outside the Spiritualists' ranks, and they will welcome a law that would compel these pretenders to prove their claims or go to jail. To tax an honest spiritual medium, or teacher, because he or she have several imitators is unjust. If there are pretended Spiritualistic mediums who are frauds, there are also Christian pretenders, commonly known as preachers, who are moral lepers and lying hypocrites. If a monthly tax will protect one class of swindlers it is no more than right to extend the same courtesy to others.

Another Quality of "Justice."

Our readers have recently had their attention called to a flagrant instance of insult and outrageous infraction of impartial justice bearing directly against the character and quality of the mentality of Spiritualists in general, as believers in spirit return and manifestation.

We refer to the notorious decision in the McIlroy will case, in a Pennsylvania court.

This decision would class all the instances mentioned in the Bible of spirits appearing to mortals, as cases of insanity on the part of the mortals who had such experiences of spirit visitation.

Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, David (the "man after God's own heart"), and other notables and revered worthies of Old Testament account; Peter, James and John, Paul, and even Jesus himself, would each and all be accounted insane upon the same theory and principle that guided to the decision in the McIlroy will case.

Moses and Elijah, as spirits, appeared unto Jesus, Peter, James and John, on the mount of transfiguration, and conversed with Jesus. Of course, according to the McIlroy judge and jury, these were insane.

The McIlroy decision shows into what a bottomless morass of absurdity and self-stultification a set of men, sworn to a just and impartial administration of law, can plunge when they give heed to prejudice and the promptings of ignorance of truth, instead of rendering exact and equal justice to all men, whatever may be their beliefs and opinions.

Such people as rendered the McIlroy decision need to arouse from their more than Rip Van Winkle slumber, rub the dust from their eyes, and realize that this is the Twentieth Century—and we are not living in the Dark Ages of the old and moldy Past.

There is justice and—justice; there is justice rendered by the standard of bigotry and prejudice, and justice rendered by the standard of impartiality and adhesion to moral sense.

We are happy to announce what seems an instance of the latter kind of justice, in bright contrast with the McIlroy case, and in which Indiana justice compares with that of Pennsylvania, as up-to-date modern enlightenment compares with the dull, leaden, mephitic midnight gloom of the Dark Ages.

The Indiana decision evinces congruity with modern ideas and concepts of right and justice. It does not insult common sense, contravene ethics, nor heap indignity upon citizens because of their honest convictions of truth. It does not brand with a hateful name thousands upon thousands of honorable, enlightened, law-abiding citizens.

In the matter of the Case will, as in that of McIlroy, the testator left the residue of his estate, amounting to $15,000, to the N. S. A. and other beneficiaries; and after a long drawn out contest, the will has been declared valid, notwithstanding the religious or other beliefs and affiliations of the testator. This is as it should be, and the precedent set by the Indiana court will be of good effect in other similar cases.

Boston Ideas.

A bomb was recently thrown into a meeting of the Franklin Club of Boston in the shape of an essay on the Dynamics of Philanthropy, by Miss Freda Melville, a clever and cultured Maine writer. Most of the club are interested in social settlement work and similar charities. Among other things said were the following:

"Human progress is a growth which cannot be retarded nor accelerated abnormally without injury to the developing organism. In nature it requires lives and cycles; under the conditions of human society the period has been shortened into decades and generations. The modern philanthropist tries to make it hours and a few lecture-courses. Usually he does not succeed; when he does succeed, he produces a mushroom growth of no value to the community and of positive detriment to the beneficiary.

"Sir Wm. Hamilton pointed out that cognition and correlation do not go hand in hand; Mill noticed that knowledge does not necessarily imply ethics or good conduct. Wicked luxurious societies are usually intellectual; and many virtuous people are ignorant.

"To raise the intellectual levels of the submerged tenth give them new wants without the power to gratify them and without the self-control to acquiesce in the non-ability.

"It sows discord and breeds discontent. Every anarchist is a man whose intellectuality has been abnormally or morbidly developed. Prison statistics show a large percentage of criminals to be men and women who spring from ignorance and have been cursed with a mental training, which did not and could not reach their moral and social natures.

"Modern philanthropy involves enormous and ridiculous waste. The Protestant missions in Bulgaria have cost England and America $1,000,000 and have converted three Bulgarians, of whom two turned out thieves. The Protestant missions in China cost $2,000,000 annually, and according to their own figures have made 70,000 converts. In other words we pay nearly $30 a year for every Chinese convert. As an able-bodied man can be hired in China for $20 a year, so cheap is human labor there, we pay more for the man's theologic welfare than we would for his work.

"One thousand educated men and women in the slums of New York, and it may be questioned if they really raise the moral level of ten of the dwellers. Their scholars change so little in morals and manners that it looks greatly like 'Love's Labor Lost.' It may be pessimism, but to the writer it seems that the social organism must change and grow according to its own organic law, and that individual effort and statutory enactment can do little or nothing toward making any permanent or extensive amelioration in either its members or its conditions."

These are a few passages of what was a very brilliant paper and they aroused a very lively discussion.

THE SECRETS OF LIFE, FROM A MATERIAL AND SPIRITUALISTIC STANDPOINT

SEEKING THE SECRET OF LIFE—PROF. LOEB TALKS ABOUT HIS RECENT EXPERIMENTS—GREAT DISCOVERY SOON TO BE ANNOUNCED—MANIFESTATION OF PHYSICAL LIFE REPRODUCED BY CHEMICAL MEANS.

The fact that Prof. Jacques Loeb, head of the biological department at Chicago University, has reproduced the manifestations of physical life in certain chemical actions and has demonstrated that the source of nerve and muscle stimulus is electrical, means more than was at first realized when the announcement of his discovery was made a few weeks ago. Dr. Loeb did not reveal all of the results of his experiments at that time, neither did he stop his labors when he accomplished the first success.

He is not yet willing to declare that he has discovered the great secret of what life is, how it begins and why it ends, but he has left it to those who have seen the results of his recent experiments to draw the conclusion that he has arrived very close to the most astounding discovery of a century. Certain it is that a new physiology has been born, and a new pharmacology as well. We shall have to revise our text books and our systems of treating with drugs.

"There will soon be announced," said Dr. Loeb to a writer a few days ago, "an account of the discovery that ensymes (the elemental forces of life), which do not nominally exist in the human frame may be actually created.

"Not by me is this announcement to be made," he added. "The work has been done by another scientist, and I cannot talk about the matter yet. You see, there are others working on these great problems."

Can life be created at the will of man? Can a scientist show how to avoid death? Is there a reasonable way of lengthening life?

These are questions which every one asks. Formerly the answer would have been, "Impossible!" Now the man in the street is saying, "Possibly," and the biologists who have been watching Dr. Loeb's work are ready to say, "Probably."

At any rate, that is the conclusion to which a study of Dr. Loeb's experiments invariably leads. Here is a scientist who has already, in a sense, created life. He has taken unfertilized sea urchin eggs and he has, by means of chemical solutions, been able to develop these so that they are living organisms the same as though they had been developed in the ordinary manner.

With other solutions, salts and chlorides, and other unfertilized eggs he has accomplished similar results. Other scientists have verified these conclusions by experiments of their own; the result is a matter of scientific history now, and what is called "artificial parthenogenesis" is a fact no longer to be questioned.

Dr. Loeb has gone further than this, however—further than any previous biologist. He has determined that the living organism is protoplasm in a liquid state; that death comes when the protoplasm passes into a more or less solid condition, and that life itself depends on the electrical charges of the protoplasmal particles.

It was shown some time ago that poisons acted on the nerves in just this manner; the colloidal substance of which the nerves are composed began to solidify under the action of poison. Here we may see the application of the new pharmacology.

It is no longer necessary to administer medicines blindly. The exact effect of every drug, every chemical, can be ascertained without difficulty.

The body, in illness or health, must be in a certain chemical state, which will be shown by the new methods of diagnosis. Granted that this latter may be accomplished, and it seems now that it will be, it is easy to see how the proper chemicals, medicines, bearing the proper charges of electricity in themselves, may be used to restore the body to its normal condition.

The scientists will have shown us a way to control physical life. This is probably very near to what Prof. Loeb meant when he said that he wished to understand life, to take it in his hands and play with it as he chose. On what, then, does life depend?

"The present theory," says Dr. Loeb, "is that an electric charge keeps our protoplasm in a liquid condition so as to prevent coagulation. Life depends on the liquid condition of certain parts of our protoplasm; death comes with the coagulation of these parts, and the forces which make the manifestations of life possible are first of all the electric charges of the particles of this protoplasm."

If electricity is at the source of living energy, man's digestive apparatus is no longer to be regarded as a heat producing mechanism. His stomach is a dynamo and his nerves are the connecting media, the telegraph wires, for communication between the different parts of the body and the storage battery in his cranium.

His heart is a big, muscular pump, which beats rhythmically, because of the electrical charges produced by chemical changes going on in the body. His lungs are a set of bellows, which suck in oxygen and expel carbonic acid gas for a similar reason. The cranial storage battery is the seat of a mechanical intelligence, which directs the actions of its surface extremities and maintains an electrical equilibrium in the body.

We have, then, in ourselves, each an air and liquid pump, a storage battery and a set of wires, all operated by electricity created by chemical changes. The body has a certain constant change of electricity when in a normal condition, just as the earth is said to maintain a certain balance electrically, and illness or death comes with a variation of this electrical state. This is, indeed, a new physiology.

The simplest form of life is the single-celled organism. The sea urchin is a good example. It was with this form that Dr. Loeb carried on most of his important experiments at Woods Holl, Mass., and in the Marine Observatory in Naples, Italy.

Experiments of this sort were fundamentally important, for all life is simply protoplasm in some form or other. If Dr. Loeb could determine what caused the movements of the little mass of protoplasm which composes the sea urchin, he could then determine with certainty the causes of the functions of life in many complex cells of living matter.

Few have probably stopped to think what this theory means in its relation to our former beliefs in life, its spiritual creation, its origin and its end. Dr. Loeb has done that which has been puzzling the scientists for a century past—he has linked the inanimate world with the animate.

"Will it not be more difficult," he was asked, "to harmonize this conception of life with our present religious beliefs than it was for Darwin's theory of evolution to be finally accepted by the Christian world?"

"I don't want to discuss that," replied Dr. Loeb. "All I can say is that for a long time I puzzled over the forces which rule in the realm of the animate and then I came to the conclusion that these forces were the same as those which ruled the inanimate."

After the theory came the experiments. The biologist reduced conscious life to a material basis by creating conscious life. To be sure, this creation has as yet been done very crudely, but the significance of the result is no less important.

The greatest difficulty of the biologists is to explain the chemical character of life. Much of the phenomena of life can be reproduced in the chemist's laboratory, but, thus far, only at such a high temperature that actual life is impossible. No one could explain why the functions of the body could be carried on at the low temperature at which they now operate.

"For example," says Dr. Loeb, "oxidation, a fundamental principle of life, takes place at a low temperature in the body. The air is inhaled by the lungs and the oxygen taken up by the blood in a very simple manner, but if the chemist attempts to reproduce this he requires a tremendous heat."

Heretofore the scientists have been in the habit of attributing this difference in temperatures at which the same chemical changes are brought about in the body and without it to some mysterious principle or element of life. They called this element the enzyme, a term, says Dr. Loeb, which covers up our present ignorance.

It has been Dr. Loeb's chief labor to discover a way to control the enzymes, and in this study he produced many of Nature's processes. He made platinum in solution or in a very finely powdered form digest fat in the same way as it is digested by the stomach and glands. Likewise the action of bacteria in putrefaction was reproduced by the powdered platinum, and many other living functions were accomplished.

Indeed, Dr. Loeb did what his predecessor had failed to do—he imitated much of the most secret life phenomena at the same temperature as that of the body. This is the heart of the wonderful success he has had.

"Our living matter has at least one common quality with solutions of platinum," says Dr. Loeb, "namely, that they are colloidal solutions, that is, liquid substances. I should say that perhaps one of the most important features of the physical construction of living matter is this, that half of our living matter must be in a liquid state, and this liquid state is of the character of colloid solution with the same forces as are in the platinum colloids. What are these forces?

"Experiments have been made showing the effect of an electrical current in water in which were living cells. These cells, bearing negative charges, move toward the positive electrode. When they come in contact with it they lose their charges of electricity and die.

"The same thing happens practically with platinum solutions. The negative charged particles move toward the positive pole, and when they come in contact with it the platinum sinks to the bottom of the jar.

"It is because of the electric charges that particles of heavy specific gravity like platinum can remain in solution. The particles of any solution treated in this way move toward the poles, and when the electrically charged particles reach their opposite poles they give up their charges and we have the process of coagulation. This in the living world is death.

"Our lives depend upon the electrical condition of our protoplasm. Death is the process of coagulation. So it seems that the cheif forces which render these manifestations of life depend upon the electrical condition of our protoplasm and that the force which makes life possible is primarily the electric charge.

"It would be very one sided to think that from the electrical point of view all manifestations of life could be explained. In this we must remember that changes in temperature might bring about coagulation. Our study now is the forces which exist in the liquid part of protoplasm."

The above facts, presented by Herbert Wallace in the New York Sun, are extremely interesting and suggestive. Now what we want is the secrets of life from a Spiritualistic standpoint.

Chicago, Ill. OPTIMIST.

Religion of Humanity.

It matters not to whom the credit is due for the great spiritual reformation, but it most certainly is noticeable that the spirit of brotherhood, the religion of humanity is growing. Be it from planetary changes, the experiences of man, or the forebodings of the greatest and bloodiest contest the world has ever known if this greed and oppression do not cease, or be it from the change from the old creedal, prison house worship of an angry, jealous God to a God of love, it matters not so the change shall continue to come until there are no multimillionaires, and no paupers; until there are libraries in place of saloons; until there are lecture halls for educational discourses upon the most vital and moral questions of the day, in place of gambling houses and dens of vice; until the church edifices shall be of some other use than to give large salaries to theologians, automatic scripture interpreters, talking machines for the reproduction of the sermons of dead and buried ages.

If this reformation continues, and it is to be hoped it will, in fifty years more the mention of a personal devil in any pulpit in the land will dismiss the audience, and the allusion to a personal God will disrupt the entire church.

Mr. Carnegie and Dr. Pearson are setting the pace that if followed up by others in like circumstances will make this dear old earth of ours a more desirable abode for spirits to obtain valuable experience in.

The action of these great money makers is already influencing other financiers to begin various philanthropic works toward the betterment of humanity, and we hope soon the benevolent wave will sweep over the land and remove the wall between the classes and the masses. This is about what it will lead up to as a natural result.

Novel Suggestions from a Minister.

The Rev. Mangasarian, who recently came prominently before our readers as offering a wager or prize for certain spirit manifestations, should not call out prejudice on that account, for he is one of the most liberal and far seeing of all the liberal lecturers. In his Easter remark at the Grand Opera House he gave utterance to ideas which heralded as they were by the press, will startle his less thoughtful co-workers:

"The outlook for the churches of America is certainly not growing brighter. The theological seminaries are complaining of the steady decline in the number of candidates for holy orders. Professor Haeckel says: 'The thinkers refuse a hearing to the preachers.' The preachers admit that there are now fewer men in their organization than ever before, and that it is almost impossible nowadays to get up an old-fashioned revival.

"Having stated the problem, let us endeavor to solve it.

"I say it without prejudice that our church doctrines, like those of ancient Rome, have lost the sympathy of the intellectually competent. There is not the shadow of doubt of this. The church is expelling every one who thinks and retaining only those who are either too indifferent to think or too timid to say what they think. When an institution loses its strongest men it loses its strength, becomes decrepit and dies. The churches seek a lower level at the peril of their lives."

Then he asks, "Can the church be saved?" and replies that it can be only along the following lines:

"Let us abandon all little questions such as Sabbath observance, creed revisions, heresy trials, orthodoxy, etc., and bring all our energies to tell upon great world problems—grappling at close range with the conditions which obstruct the emancipation and fraternization of humanity.

"Define religion anew and let it be man's best effort to enlighten his mind and to ennoble his character. Replace the 'believe, believe' of the past with the divine 'prove all things.' It is a sin to believe anything upon insufficient evidence. 'If a man believes because his pastor says so the very truth he holds becomes a heresy,' says John Milton.

"How shall we fill our empty churches? I recommend, modestly, the following changes:

"First—We have been all along reading from only one Bible in our churches; let us have more Bibles. This will at least introduce an element of novelty which cannot but instruct as well as interest our people. If the new Bibles don't prove equally satisfactory they will increase our appreciation of our own.

"Second—Let us drop the congregational singing in our churches. It is difficult for two or three hundred people without many rehearsals to sing well together. Poor singing does not attract people to our churches. Let us instead have the best music money can buy.

"Third—I hesitate to make my third suggestion and yet I must. It is the custom of our churches to make three prayers at each service. Replace this feature by the reading or reciting in a well trained, sonorous voice selections from the makers and molders of modern thought—Kant, Comte, Carlyle, George Eliot, Tennyson, Emerson, Goethe—and with our eyes open to watch the result.

"Fourth—Discontinue the Sunday evening service. This institution is dying of itself slowly—hasten the demise. One good impression is all that a preacher can make in one day and all that an audience can receive in one day.

"Fifth—Dispense with all 'rites' such as infant or adult baptism or immersion; the communion service either with fermented or unfermented wine. For the intellectual, if not the emotional, these ordinances have lost their meaning. Where there is no kernel the shell is not worth keeping.

"Sixth—My next suggestion will create some surprise, but I am in earnest. Discontinue the Sunday-School. This institution is doing our churches more harm than we have any idea. It is turning the young away from the church.

"In conclusion let us have a new clergy and we will have a new church and a new people; like priest, like people. 'I am tired of being a theological mummy,' said the Rev. Dr. Behrends, of Brooklyn. 'Take the dry rot out of your dogmas,' said the Rev. Dr. Hawels of London. Preachers of America, what will we do? Shall we be a voice or an echo? Men or mummies?"

This discourse, claiming to be an Easter "message sent out to the churches," has more than passing significance. It really voices the thoughts of the ablest and best in the ranks of the Protestant churches. It will be a glad day when the preachers lay aside their prejudice against other religions and read from the other Bibles, the Vedas, Shaster, the Book of Kings and Koran as well as their own. The prayers have been the stronghold of the church service, the padding to fill out the time. How refreshing readings and recitations in "sonorous voice" will be, and just now when the tendency of Spiritualists is toward rituals, christenings and ordinations, this leader declares that all these rites are worn out, only husks with the kernel gone.

Divine Aid Useless to Mamma.

It was Dorothy's first visit to Sunday School, and she had only a misty three-year-old idea of things religious, but when asked by her teacher if she knew her catechism, promptly said she did. The teacher began with the first question:

"Who made you?"

With astonishing quickness and certainty came the answer: "My mother."

The young woman struggled between her desire to laugh and her duty as a teacher and remonstrated: "No, Dorothy, God made you. He made everything."

"Huh," said the little maid, loftily, "I know better. My mamma does every single thing up to our house. She makes all my clothes, gets things to eat, and, oh, lots of other things, too. She don't need God to help her."

The session adjourned before the new scholar was convinced that she was wrong.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Mediums' Home.

To the Editor:—I would like to ask, purely for information, if this home we read about is to be merely a "Mediums' Home," a home for worn-out and broken-down mediums, such as those who produce some sort of phenomena, or is it to include lecturers and other kinds of workers whose time has been devoted entirely to the upbuilding of the cause? In other words, are they all to be cared for under the head of mediums?

Will some one in authority make a clear statement of this question and put the matter squarely before the Spiritualists of the country?

Yours truly, P. O. KERR.

RELIGION OF MAN AND ETHICS OF SCIENCE BY HUDSON TUTTLE

We take extreme pleasure in announcing that our next Premium Book will be by Hudson Tuttle, and will bear the above title. It is one of the best books that ever emanated from the pen of this gifted man and will fill a most important niche in the list of premiums sent out by this office. It will be neatly and substantially bound in cloth, and will be sent out for 25 cents, postage and express prepaid, to those who send in their subscription for one year for The Progressive Thinker, making it almost a gift to our subscribers. Orders will now be filed for it, and it will be forwarded as soon as printed and bound, which will be in about three weeks. Until June 1, that remarkable book, A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands, will also be sent out for 25 cents. For prices of the other Premium Books, see special announcement. No other bookseller, no other firm on this globe of ours ever furnished books at so low a price (almost a gift) as The Progressive Thinker. We have been instrumental in founding the nucleus of a grand Spiritualistic and Occult library in thousands of homes. Now is the time to send in your subscription.

WILL POWER VERSUS FATE

As Viewed by a Master Mind.

A correspondent, evidently on the threshold of life, writes us as follows:

"Have you any confidence in phrenology, palmistry, astrology, etc., as determining what work a young man is best adapted to? Your opinion in the matter would greatly interest me."

Young man, do you know your Shakspeare? If you do you will readily recall in this connection the little speech from Edmund in the play of "Lear." Says that wide-awake character:

"This is the excellent foppery of the world! that, when we are sick in fortune (often the surfeit of our own behavior) we make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon and the stars; as if we were villains by necessity; fools by heavenly compulsion; knaves, thieves and teachers by spherical predominance; drunkards, liars and adulterers by an enforced obedience to planetary influence; and all that we are evil in by a divine thrusting on. An admirable evasion of wicked man to lay his disposition to the charge of a star!"

Doesn't that strike you as being pretty good sense? It so impresses me at any rate.

But turn to your Shakspeare once more, young man, to hear what is said in the play of "Othello" by that bad but very wise fellow, Iago. Says Iago to the discouraged Roderigo:

"'Tis in ourselves that we are thus or thus. Our bodies are gardens, to the which our wills are the gardeners, so that if we plant nettles or sow lettuce, set hyssop and weed up thyme; supply it with one gender of herbs or distract it with many; either to have it sterile with idleness or manured with industry. Why, the power and incorrigible authority of this lies in our wills."

Putting these two speeches together—the one from Edmund and the one from Iago—and you have, from the greatest intellect ever on this planet the answer you ask for in your letter.

The various "sciences" and "philosophies" which would make automatons of men and women were, in the opinion of Shakspeare, but "the excellent foppery of the world." In modern speech they were "fads," "fakes," moonshine! The greatest force in this world, so far as we know the world, is the human will, and this will, instead of being determined, determines all other things. It is mightier than chemism, than gravity, than the tides of ocean, than the lightnings of heaven, and all these cosmic giants are made to serve it as its willing slaves.

Therefore, young man, fix your mark in life, turn your face toward it, set your will power to work, and you will reach the goal. I don't know you, but if you have good sense and a plenty of grit you will win.

Don't fool away your time trying to find out what is "determined" for you by phrenology, or palmistry, or astrology, but pitch in and determine something for yourself—and stick to it.

Look at Cecil Rhodes! Did he have a "star?" Let us grant it. Did he have lines in the palms of his hands? Undoubtedly he did—lines very similar to those that are to be found in the hands of all human beings. And did he have certain indentations and bumps on his skull? Very likely. But don't you know that it was not Cecil Rhodes' "star," or the lines in his palms, or the outline of his skull, but his brain and will power that enabled him to carve out that magnificent destiny of his?

Look at him again—the younger son of a poor country parson, sickly, weak, given up to die from consumption, and yet this pale-faced lad has a dream in his brain, a dream of empire building grander than that which floated before the mind of Caesar or Napoleon! The sick boy never get well, and but the other day he died at the early age of forty-nine—but he made his dream a reality! His empire is practically builded!

And how did he do it? By holding himself steadily to the work, by hitching himself fast to his original purpose.

All the stars that twinkle in the firmament would have been powerless to balk that imperial will; all the creases in all the hands and all the bumps and sinks on all the heads would have been counted for nothing against that unconquerable spirit.

And so, young man, you must learn that it is not palmistry but pluck, not phrenology but perseverance, not astrology but assurance, that determines things in this world.

You may depend upon it and govern yourself accordingly. Never mind about the star that happened to be in the ascendant when you were born; no matter, either, about the lines in your palms, or the outline of your head. If you've only got the right sort of stuff inside of your head and the right sort of ambition, nothing can stop you.—Rev. Thos. B. Gregory in Chicago American.

BEAUTIFUL LIFE.

Through all the years since '48 the voice of Life has said:
"There is no death; the friends of old and kindred are not dead."

When all the world was down in gloom
Life rapped upon the door
And said to man: "There is no death;
the spirit passes o'er.

Around the grave where man supposed his loved ones sleeping lay
Life lingered until '48 and rolled the stone away;

Then forth from parts before unknown
a voice immortal spoke
That raised the soul of man above old superstition's yoke.

The Truth lit up the human soul, the scale fell from the eye,
And all the world in sweet relief gave vent to one grand sigh.

When Life appeared above the grave and in the darkness spoke Old Death passed on and out of sight and sleeping souls awoke.

The old dead grass and drooping heads of flowers round the tomb
All heard the voice of Life and sprang to meet her and to bloom.

The earth for ages closely wrapped within Death's gloomy shroud,
Arose to meet eternal Life and shout its joy aloud.

The stars seem brighter than they were,
the moon has brighter hue
Since Life appeared, eclipsing Death, and saying: "They live too."

The dust and must of ages were cleaned up with one pure breath
Of Life, and all the earth seemed glad to know there was no Death.

"We live! we live! we cannot die!"
arisen spirits cry,
"We change from sphere to sphere, and grow, but never, never die."

Oh, Life! Beautiful Life! in Thee we find our heaven here;
In Death we find the golden gateway to a higher sphere.

DREAMS. BY C. W. LEADBEATER.

was nothing in the world but a mesmeric suggestion made by his teacher; he had literally done nothing but dip his head in a bowl of water and take it out. I do not know whether this is true or not; anyhow things just like that are taking place.

A good story which illustrates this point was told to me by a leading man of science. This man, like many of us, had to go to a dentist. He had to have a couple of teeth pulled out and of course he took gas in the usual way. He was a man who was very much interested in Theosophical study, so he made up his mind he was going to see what were the real sensations through the operation. He was prepared to watch everything very closely. He inhaled the gas and was very much in earnest, very keen to see exactly what was happening, but a sort of pleasant sleep finally seemed to steal over him, and in a moment he found himself delivering a lecture. He could not exactly account for this, did not understand how he had gone from the dentist's chair without remembering, into the lecture hall, but he was delivering a lecture before the Royal Society, and he found he was exceedingly and unusually brilliant. He was able to make all his points in the most wonderful manner with much greater eloquence than he ever did before. He was very much elated. Everything went off magnificently. He went home after the lecture and went into his laboratory and went to work in his usual way, but every experiment he tried came out successfully in the most marvelous manner. He was discovering all the while entirely new things, new and beautiful facts in nature; he lived through this life for about three weeks, a life of exceedingly real pleasure and enjoyment, continuing his lectures again and again, always to the most enthusiastic and appreciative audiences; made discoveries and wrote books such as never came into his mind before. One day he found himself lecturing as before to the Royal Society, when suddenly some rude man among the crowd said "It is all over now." He turned to rebuke this man, and another one said "They are both out." It took him some time to recover from the audacity of people speaking to him like that. When he revived he found himself sitting in the dentist's chair and he saw by the clock in front of him that less than a minute had elapsed (forty-five seconds I believe was the exact time), in which he had lived through this three weeks of exceedingly active life.

That, at any rate, is not a story out of the Spectator, it is a story of the present day and told to me by a leading man of science. That shows how this ego is able to make up a story as he goes along, and how independent he is of all our ordinary canons of time and space, how he can make within an inappreciable time a whole long story. You will find a great many such stories in Duprel's book. He tells you of a man who falls asleep while smoking a cigar and lived through several years of strenuous life, and awoke to find the cigar still alight.

There are a great many stories which show the powers possessed by this ego when away from the physical body. He also possesses the faculty of prevision to some extent.

A leading literary man told me a very curious story about this prevision. He said that he was in the habit sometimes when he was seated doing nothing of getting what is called automatic writing; that is to say, if he was not thinking of anything particularly his hand sometimes would begin to write spasmodically, as happens at Spiritualistic seances and with mediums. This hand would sometimes write a message which professed to be from living friends as well as from the dead. In some cases the stories which were told in this way proved to be perfectly true although the friend never knew anything about it. One day he got a communication written in this way which professed to come from a lady of his acquaintance, and it was to the effect that she was in a very great state of annoyance and disgust because she had arranged to deliver a lecture down at South Kensington, but when the time came for the lecture, by some foolish mistake it was found the notices had been issued for a wrong day and there was no audience there. She was very much annoyed at this. He met the lady a day or two afterwards and told her laughingly of this curious message that had professed to come from her. He knew quite enough not to suppose it did come from her, but thought it was a trick of some sort by some spirit; but he told her. She said that was very curious because she was going to lecture at South Kensington within a week, and hoped it was not going to come true. They laughed about it and passed on. Nevertheless it did come true; when a few days afterwards she went to deliver the lecture she found that very mistake had occurred and there was no audience there. Possibly it may have been her own ego (I do not know, of course) who foresaw this mortification which would come upon her and could not impress it upon her but tried to impress it upon the man who was more sensitive; tried to make him understand in order that he might warn her and prevent the mistake, which no doubt she could have done if she had taken it seriously.

This same journalist told me on another occasion he had actually written through his own hand a communication professing to come from another lady whom he knew. The story was to the effect that she had been forced practically by the advice of her father and friends into a certain course of action from which she was very strongly repelled. She had to do something against which instinctively her higher nature seemed to warn her, though she could give no reason for it. It was a question of marrying a certain exceedingly desirable suitor. She had no reason whatever to give against the man in any way, but had a strong inner feeling she should not accept him, yet she did it because she could give no reason and because he was very desirable in various ways. After a year of married life, however, her situation became absolutely intolerable and her intention was to commit suicide. She was just about to do this; this was the story written. The lady in reality was not married and knew nothing whatever about the thing. The next time our friend, the journalist, met her he told her the story; remembering the other one which came to him he said perhaps this was a warning. He described the man and his characteristics. Now she knew at the time no one who at all answered to that description, but about a year afterwards such a person did appear in her life and she was pressed by her father and friends to accept his offer of marriage. At once the whole story which the journalist had told her came to her mind and she refused. She said openly "But for that I should certainly have given in, because I had no reason to give for my strong repugnance; I should have certainly yielded, but because of that I refused." Nothing therefore happened, but if she had yielded it does not seem at all improbable, judging from the other case, that the misery and unhappiness might have followed. If so, that shows where this sort of prevision may be of use, where the person is able by taking warning to avoid part of the evil. These previsions frequently come to the ego in what we call dreams, and it is just as well that we should heed them when they come.

There are all sorts of allegorical dreams that come to us. I have said the ego often thinks in symbols. Sometimes he gives you the interpretation of the symbols and sometimes he does not. You have probably all heard of various interpretations of curious dreams. You have heard people say, for example, that to dream of water always signifies that trouble is coming. One does not see why the dreaming of water should make trouble, but that seems to be the explanation among those who know about that sort of thing. I presume we may take it that the ego is aware of the fact that if he can make the impression on the physical brain he can warn him of approaching trouble; so he may take advantage of such an idea, curious superstition though it seems. In order to do what he wants he uses this method because he is not yet able to control his vehicle perfectly, otherwise the ego could impress upon the physical brain the knowledge of what was going to happen quite definitely and there would be no need of the symbolical system; but he himself seems to think largely in symbols, and the symbols differ in very many ways with different people.

I remember, for example, a lady who used always to dream of a great fish whenever misfortune was coming to her family. Once she was away in the North of England a considerable distance from her home and she dreamed that this great fish bit two fingers off her little boy's hand. She had had this curious impression often enough before to think there was something in it, so she was not surprised when she got a letter from her governess in charge at home saying that two fingers of her boy's hand had been seriously injured by a playmate with a hatchet. Very curious, but obviously a symbolic prevision and an attempt by the ego to prepare her for the news which was to come, so that she should not be as much upset by it as she otherwise would have been.

I am trying to cut the thing short because I know that the time for a lecture is necessarily very limited, but if you would like to have it all in much greater detail you can get it by reading that small book which I wrote on the subject of dreams; but I want just to give you a list of the kinds of dreams that are possible.

First of all, this ego, going away from the physical body may have a real, definite experience of some sort. It may go to some place and see certain things. It may meet some person and converse with him. In the morning it may be that the man will be able to bring back a recollection of what has happened.

There would be a case of the true dream, which might be called perhaps not so much a dream as a vision.

Then, again, there is this sort of prophetic vision by which the ego gets a glimpse of something that is about to happen, usually to him or to some friend whom he knows, and then he comes back and delivers that message to his brain; the brain reports it, but in some confused way usually, because it has been all the while outlining up old memories and these things are liable to be mixed with the true report which is brought back.

Let me give you an instance from our experiments tried in the London Lodge. We were trying experiments with people in this sort of way: We would formulate a very strong image, let us say, of a landscape, or face, and then try to impress that on the mind of the sleeping man and see whether we could make him dream of this, as it were, and then whether when awake he would have any recollection of it. It was in this way by such experiments that we discovered the habit of the etheric part of the brain to bring up old memories and turn them over and over when other thought was shut off from it. We found it was impossible entirely to quiet it, because when outside thought was shut off from it it began evolving memories of its own. Without giving you all the details of the experiment, I may tell you that we tried to image to the ego of the sleeping man a splendid landscape in the East, a very beautiful view from a mountain peak on the Island of Ceylon, with other mountains all covered with verdure, falling away in the most beautiful gradations from it on all sides; forty miles away you could see the Indian Ocean, making a kind of setting for the picture—one of the most splendid views I have ever seen. We tried that view on various people, for example on some quite uncultured egos, but we found they did not respond to it at all, and did not see the beauty of it; whereas a battle scene impressed on that same undeveloped ego would at once awake in him, not a memory of what he had seen, but the dream that he had been fighting! You see at once how that would be; it conveyed not a recollection of the scene but a vague thought of something connected with fighting; he thought of the thing at once in relation to himself, that he had been engaged in fighting. We tried this experiment of putting this beautiful landscape before the mind of another and farther developed ego, and in this case a very remarkable result was obtained.

The ego at once fastened upon it, as it were, and was intensely impressed by its beauty and very much interested in it in every way. At the same time observations were being made of the etheric brain of this sleeping man; a kind of magnetic shell had been put around it so that no outside thought should drift into it in order to give him a chance to remember more clearly, as we thought, the scene we were putting before him—the whole experiment being to see how much he would remember, and, if there be any distortions, what they would be and how they arose. Here was this beautiful view put before the man; in his astral body he enjoyed and appreciated it and we thought was more likely to remember it distinctly than the former subject. Then we turned to examine the etheric brain of the man to see what was going on there; it was carefully shut off, you will observe, from all outside thought, but evolving thoughts of its own. The particular scene which it had before it was something that had happened in the playground of his old school years and years ago, a winter scene in which the boys were snowballing one another. That was very slowly in sleep going through the etheric brain while the man himself was enjoying this other splendid view. Then the man was awakened, and then came the question what did he remember. He remembered that view from the hill; he had the view as clearly as possible, the shape and arrangement of those hills were given, and he was able to draw part of it, able to describe it with great accuracy, but all these hills were covered with snow instead of being covered, as they should have been, with tropical verdure! And while he was in the midst of the enjoyment of this splendid landscape, suddenly the whole thing changed into the playground of his old school and he found himself playing there with other boys.

That shows you the way things get mixed in dreams. Part of the thing may be a remembrance of earlier life. When the shell is not around the man's body then all sorts of wandering thoughts may drift in and cause confusion when the real ego comes back with his tale of what he has seen and done it has to make its way through all these memories before it gets into the brain; so the whole thing becomes mere confusion. It is only by long experience that a man can learn to sort out the real impressions given by the ego from these transitory fragments of other thought. It is not an easy matter to sort them out, still that example will show you exactly how the thing is done. I would say if you are interested in this subject study the little book which I have written on Dreams, and study the book of Duprel on the "Philosophy of Mysticism." You will find many other books on psychological subjects, but few so interesting as Duprel's.

On the subject of dreams, then, I would suggest to you to take a middle course; neither be superstitious and believe in everything which you happen to dream, nor, on the other hand, be foolishly skeptical and cast aside all dreams as unworthy of attention. Remember that you are told in your Scriptures that people were warned of God in their dreams, and sometimes exceedingly valuable and useful information may be given to you in that way by your own higher self or by some friend deeply interested. If you happen to dream frequently and if you have reason to suppose there is something special in your dreams then it is worth your while to test them. For example: Suppose you dream of being in a friend's room; look around very carefully in that room and see whether everything in it is exactly as when you were last there in the physical body; if it is then you have no definite proof; your dream may be merely a recollection and suggestion. But suppose you see alterations, some new piece of furniture, some new disposition of it, a new picture on the wall, a fresh book on the table that you know did not belong to your friend before. If you see that in a dream it is distinctly worth your while to go round and call on that friend in a day or two and see whether the alterations have been made that you saw in your dream. If they have not, it is simply a mistake of some sort. If they have, then you have seen that place and you have really gone there in your sleep; then you can realize that what you thought a dream was in point of fact an experience, and that would be of value for you to know. So, I say, take the middle course, not superstitiously believing everything and troubling yourself about things which come to you in dreams, nor, on the other hand, foolishly rejecting everything. Be very careful as to the arrangements you make before you sleep, because you can very largely affect your dreams. Remember, your last thought before you go to sleep is a matter of very great importance, so start your night with a good thought in your mind, as many people go through the night practically elaborating their last thought, and rarely get beyond it. Let that last thought then be a good one, be a thought of health perhaps for someone else, because then you can go and give them help when you are away from your physical body.

That is another vast subject; you will find that touched upon in the book which I wrote called "Invisible Helpers." It is an exceedingly interesting subject. You will find sometimes you will dream very much, at other times not at all. From the various points I have given you about the different vehicles and the necessity of their all collaborating if good results and memories are to be obtained you will not wonder at all that it is very rarely you get such a perfect arrangement. There may be times when nothing at all comes, when the man does not dream simply because he cannot bring back any memory; or he may bring back a mass of confused memories when he is disturbed. But for the man who is highly developed there is no longer any dreaming possible because he gets the consciousness through fully into that astral plane, therefore night and day become the same to him; he carries an unbroken consciousness through and remembers everything that he does on those other planes; he dreams no more because he has got beyond the stage of dreaming into the stage of knowledge, and then he sees opening up before him a magnificent vista of usefulness and of helpfulness; he is able to use these higher faculties, to use them not only for his own evolution but (what is so much more important) to help forward evolution generally. That is the higher world into which he obtains admittance, and remember that admittance into that higher world may be sometimes obtained through the gate of dreams; if you realize that then you see that your dreams are not altogether unimportant, that the subject is an exceedingly interesting one, and one that will well repay your careful study. You will find a great deal of information in our Theosophical literature that will lead you into further examination of these higher planes, and so into the Theosophical concepts on the subject; and I am sure that when you thoroughly understand it you will be, as all of us are, very thankful you undertook the study and gained the splendid knowledge which that study can give you.

LIFE AND EXPERIENCE IN SPIRIT LAND

A Series of Letters From Prof. William Denton, Through the Mediumship of Carlyle Petersilea.

LETTER NUMBER NINE.

In my last letter I gave free utterance to my thought, as I always do here in the spirit life, and as I nearly always did when in the earthly form.

The medium is a little fearful that my thoughts may give offense to some, therefore, I pray you, exonerate the medium from all blame in the matter. An amanuensis is not at all to blame for what an author may or may not write, and if I may not be allowed to write my thought through this channel, I shall be obliged to seek some other; but I should much prefer this one if I may be allowed to speak my mind. If there is blame anywhere put it upon me. I am able to bear it.

No man or woman is obliged to think as I do unless he, or she, desires so to think. One can read what I think and then think as one may please and give utterance to the thought as well; but let me, William Denton, be myself, and write what I think best.

And now let me tell you, one and all, that all spiritual organizations will fall to the ground sooner or later as they ought to, but truth shall rise triumphant as it ought—truth shall strike home to the heart of every man, woman and child, as it ought—truth allows no man or woman to be fettered.

Why do you, as Spiritualists, desire to organize? Why do you wish to form societies or churches? Why do you desire an N. S. A.? You say, to protect mediums. A true medium needs no protection. You say so that you may send lecturers into the field; but a good speaker, who has something of importance to say to the people, can attract and hold his own audience; he don't need to be sent by the N. S. A., and the N. S. A. may send them out by the thousands and unless they have got something of importance to say they will not attract and hold an audience; and the people will be obliged to pay tribute to the N. S. A., that some bag of wind may blow its little blast and be able, thereby, to earn a few dollars and have Rev. attached to its name, at the same time there may not be a man or woman in the audience but what can think more deeply, arrive at truth quicker and better by their own route than by taking the one that the lecturer points out, providing he points out any; besides the N. S. A. will silently but surely fetter their Rev. and rivet the fetters stronger and stronger as time goes on. All churches and organizations have always done so and always will.

Already there are those who desire to whip Spiritualists into line, mark out a course of thought and action for them and if they don't toe the mark they will presently be boycotted by the N. S. A.

Now someone says who may read this: "We want to protect healers—magnetic healers—and thwart the regular M. D.'s. Well, the N. S. A. will never be able to do this. There is one way, and only one, to protect magnetic healers and thwart the doctors' plot law, and that way is the ballot. Let every man carefully examine his own mind and if he thinks the doctors' plot law ought not to pass let him vote against it, each man in his own State, but if he thinks it ought to pass the N. S. A. cannot change his thought.

Any man has the power to cause a protest to be drawn up, he can then get as many signers as will sign, and all men who approve will sign, and all who do not will not sign. There is no need for an expensive N. S. A. to put its finger in the pie at all. You think that mediums ought not to pay a license, but if mediums earn a livelihood by giving seances to the public, thereby making it their entire business, why should they not pay a license as other people in other kinds of business do? If they make it a business for gain, why should they not abide by the same laws as other men and women? Laws can be changed by protest and vote, and this power is supposed to reside with the people.

Friends, there is but one way to evade this law—honestly evade it—and that is the home circle. There is no law against the home circle and we hope there never may be; there is no law against any man or woman forming a quiet circle within his or her own apartment and whenever and wherever such a circle is formed be sure your spirit friends are there ready and willing to communicate with you and they will find a way as sure as you live. Your home circle will cost you nothing and the medium of your own household can be as pure and free from guile as the angels themselves. The wife of your bosom who never deceived you may be a medium; your sweet and truthful daughter or your noble and manly son, or both, may be mediums, you yourself may be a medium or you may all be mediums. There is no need to hire and pay a medium who, as often as otherwise, is no medium, but thinks it an easy way to earn money. The fewer paid mediums there are the more truth you will get. Let money and the means of earning a livelihood be sought for through other channels and the communion between the two worlds, or the two conditions of life, be pure and free from guile. A mother would much rather commune with her own son or daughter direct than through a third person, a father the same, a husband with his wife, or a wife with her husband, and if spirits desire to do some great work for the world be sure they will find the right person to help them and take their own way to do it. This one may be called a medium or not. That makes but little difference so long as the work is done.

Great reformers rise up in your midst, they seldom work for hire, but used and enthused by the spirits for the work that the spirits desire to be accomplished. Men and women of genius arise in your midst and some great truth is brought to light; the spirits have found them sensitive and made use of them to benefit the world. What does it matter whether they are called Spiritualists or not? The great truth is of vast importance to the world at large.

Spiritual beings will never confine themselves to a few so-called Spiritualists or to a number of small societies or to the N. S. A.

"The world is my country and to do good is my religion."

Can you find a better motto than that? Spirits try to do good to all the world—to every man, woman and child within it, as well as to each and all animals, wherever life is found.

If you have been able to cast off fetters of one kind, don't take on others. Let every man, woman and child be as free as it is possible for them to be, for the time will surely come when every man will be a king in his own right, when every woman will be her husband's queen, and their children princes and princesses, the future kings and queens to be.

They say I must be silent, that all truth should not be said;
That, when the soul its birthright claims, the body lacks for bread;
That want and woe companions are of every foolish man
Who by his heresies calls down the holy church's ban.

They bid me still the spirit voice that bids the soul be free,
And chain within the mind's deep cells the angel God sent me.
Go bid the ocean cease to heave, the rivers cease to flow;
Bid smiling Spring retrace her steps and flowerets cease to blow.

Go bid the bright stars shut their eyes, send back the sunbeam flown,
And steal the azure from the skies that circle round its throne.
Go, drive the wild winds to their home, the lightning to its nest;
Ye cannot quench the soul's deep fires that burn within the breast.

No: man was made for freedom, as the stars were made to shine;
His boldest thought be spoken; 'tis his heritage divine;
For, while the air remaineth to reverberate a sound,
The voice of God shall never by the voice of man be bound.

No man was ever able to bind the voice of Truth, which is but another name for God, that dwelt within and spoke through me when I was with you in the flesh; and I am determined that no man shall bind the voice of my medium through whom I now speak, for I have much that I wish to say to the men of earth.

God and Truth abide in my soul now as ever.

In my younger manhood on earth, when I first began to give utterance to the voice of the spirit, men thought I was going daft; and for many years, I thought in consequence, that I should not be able to earn bread for myself and my loved ones, and many times when I retired to the wild-wood to dream and think and draw inspiration from the ever-flowing fountain of God, or Truth, great salt tears would roll down my cheeks because for the sake of Truth my loved ones might go hungry or lack for the comforts of life; but my darling wife bade me be firm, even though the wolf entered the door. I listened to her voice and to the voice of the spirit and remained firm to my conviction of truth and did not hesitate to speak my mind whenever and wherever an opportunity presented itself.

My worldly fortune went down—down! for many years in consequence, and when at last I thought it had reached bottom, as it really had, like the "staunch oaken bucket, the moss-covered bucket," it filled and righted itself, and as I slowly and laboriously turned the windlass it gradually rose higher and higher until at last it rested on the curb before me, filled to the brim with cooling, sparkling water clear as crystal, for I had never sullied my soul with hypocritical falsehood and I believe that my worldly affairs were better even than they would have been had I deferred to this, that or the other church, with its creed and dogmas.

Many of you know the sad story of my departure from the body of flesh, so I will not tire you with a repetition of it but tell you something about this life wherein I now am. But first I will tell you that I did not arise to the spiritual spheres for quite a length of time. My great love for my wife and children kept me near them for many, many months.

Suppose I flitted back and forth from that distant African shore to my home in Wellesley and to my loved wife and others left there, hundreds of times, until all had been done that could be done for the body I had left. Not that I cared for the body, but I cared for my son, and until he was safe at home with his mother I went from one to the other.

I found that a great sympathetic cord connected me with my wife, that I could not and did not wish to break, so that if my progress was somewhat slow at first, do not think it strange. Those who dearly love each other cannot bear to be separated and I was content to remain near, or with my wife and children for a number of years. This was all right and as it should be, for I passed into the spirit life too soon, leaving my wife widowed and my children fatherless—now I would remain near them and do all in my power to make amends—for I had been a little perverse in my great desire to visit and study other and far distant lands; and so I really lived with my wife and children for a long time after leaving the body of flesh. My wife knew that I was with her and her grief was somewhat assuaged.

In view of all that I have said, none must be surprised if I do not hail from the seventh sphere; still I think that I shall be able to tell you much about the spiritual life.

I have already said something about spirit circles and will now explain further about them. I am living here, in the spiritual life, almost precisely the kind of life I did on earth one step higher up the spiral circle, that is to say, everything that I loved and appreciated on earth I still love and appreciate here, yet am able here to eliminate all that is distasteful to me, all that I would have had otherwise on earth. Nature was my God there: Nature, together with natural laws, is my God here, and I have seen no other. I loved mountains, glens, and wild-woods there, and there is an added zest to my love for them here. They were beautiful on earth, they are transcendently beautiful here. If the rivers, lakes and oceans are grand on earth, they are grander, by far, here. If the birds sing sweetly on earth, they trill rapturously here. Everything there has been raised into heavenly beauty here.

Weak Eyes

All Imperfections of the Eye, Even Blindness, Cured at Home without Use of Knife or Painful Methods.

No oculist living today has had so extensive a practice in the curing of cataracts, granulated lids, failing eyesight, cross eyes and all imperfections of the eye as the eminent specialist, Dr. F. Geo. Curts, of Kansas City, Mo. His cures are perfected at your own home through his Mild Medicine Method, without knife or Pain. Any reader afflicted with eye trouble, or have a friend afflicted, write today and receive absolutely free, Dr. Curts' wonderful book "Treatise On The Eye." It tells you how his many wonderful cures are made. Address DR. F. GEO. CURTS, 427 Shukert Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five percent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advise free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. Address New York & London Electric Association, Dep. THE SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE.

A VERY IMPORTANT WORK.

The Spiritual Significance is by Lilian Whiting, author of "The World Beautiful," "After Her Death," "Kate Field, A Record," "A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning." Cloth, $1.00.

Miss Whiting finds the title of her new book in these lines from "Aurora Leigh:"

"If a man could feel
Not one, but every day, feast, fast, and working-day,
The spiritual significance burn through
The hieroglyphic of material shows,
Henceforward he would paint the globe with wings."

The aim of this book is to reveal the curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an unseen realm into which humanity is rapidly advancing and thus gaining a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautiful" continues the same argument presented in those volumes in a plea that the future life is the continuation and development of our present life in all its faculties and powers, and that the present may be ennobled by the constant sense of the Divine Presence, and a truer knowledge of the nature of man and his relations to God tend to a higher morality and increasing happiness. The book is characterized by the same essential style and qualities that have insured for "The World Beautiful" volumes an almost world-wide popularity.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require. Every item sent to us for publication, should contain the full name and address of the writer. We desire to know the source of every item that appears. This rule will be strictly adhered to.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Bear in mind that all notices for this page are cut down to suit the space we have to occupy when received.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Bear in mind, please, that Isa Wilson Kayner's address is at No. 112 Winchester avenue, Chicago, where she can be addressed.

Inspirational lecturer in German open for engagement. Write to Julius Kuhn, No. 803 North Carnac street, Philadelphia, Pa., for full particulars.

Byron D. Stilman and Victor Vogel, both well known to a great many readers of The Progressive Thinker, as musical composers and writers of verse, have just had one of their compositions, a character song, entitled "Happy Hooligan," accepted and published in all of W. R. Hearst's Sunday papers of April 6, reaching a circulation of 1,325,000. This is the first instance where an original unpublished song has been given to the public through the press. It was illustrated by the famous cartoon artist, Mr. F. Opper, of New York. Too much credit cannot be given this character in song, and those looking for a good number for entertainments will find this a catchy song. They have it arranged for orchestra, and sell both song and orchestra parts for 50 cents. Address Stillman & Vogel, care of N. Nelson, Publisher, 184 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill.

Hypnotism now figures in the Heywood murder case, at Detroit, Mich. Mrs. Heywood, the widow of the dead man, sent for the police to-day and told them she was just coming out of a hypnotic spell, into which she had been cast by Jones, whom the police hold for her husband's murder. She said whenever she was in Jones' presence she was not responsible for her actions. She says she thinks the police have the right man.—Chicago American.

M. R. C. Clayton writes: "I feel that I must take up a few minutes of your time to thank you for the copy of 'The Next World Interviewed,' which you kindly sent to replace an imperfect copy; also to express my pleasure and enjoyment of all the premium books, particularly the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World."

The executive board of the Indiana Spiritualist Association met at Chesterfield, Ind., April 10. Forty-two applications for membership were accepted. The board discussed affairs of the July camp-meeting. Only mediums with authority from the executive committee will be allowed to work in the camp. The $5,000 auditorium will be finished in time for the meeting.

Ten years ago Uriah Jones, an Indiana farmer, who now lives in the Michigan coal fields, had a dream in which he was told that in ten years an inexhaustible pool of oil would be discovered in Northern Indiana and Michigan. His dream has come true and a company with several millions of capital has been formed to drill wells. Since Jones' dream became known several years ago repeated attempts have been made by speculators to get oil in the territory, but they all failed until the ten year period was up.—Chicago American.

C. F. G. writes from Washington, D. C.: "I enclose to you a slip taken from an Eastern paper, which seems to be in line with the practice of quite a number of the clergy at the present time. It seems to me that it is about time for them to throw aside the fallacy of vicarious atonement in view of the rapid increase of crime of all kinds, and preach that the criminal will get his punishment here and now; in fact, their preaching is an encouragement to crime, for they virtually say that after thirty or forty years of sinful acts, all that is to be done is to say that 'I believe in the Lord Jesus,' and though 'my sins are as scarlet they will become as white as snow.'"

Mrs. Alice Baker, lecturer and message medium, of Cleveland, O., writes: "At home again after two months' work in Missouri, Illinois and Pennsylvania. In all the places we found many good people, and our labor was crowned with success. Our last place of work was in Erie, Pa., for the Spiritual Progressive Society, a society of noble spiritual workers. On last Sunday night the large G. A. R. Hall was filled with an appreciative audience. I will officiate at funerals. Home address 261 Pearl street, Cleveland, Ohio."

W. H. Harlow writes from Erie, Pa.: "Spiritualism is still in the ring here, even if it is a little disfigured. Mrs. Alice Baker, of Cleveland, Ohio, has been serving the First Progressive Spiritualist Society for the first and second Sundays in April. She is a fine and forceful speaker and a grand message medium, and gave the best of satisfaction."

Allie Buhland writes from Indianapolis, Ind.: "We arrived here four weeks ago from Sullivan, Ind., where we held a series of meetings at the Court House, all well attended; in some instances the house was crowded. We found the First Spiritual Society flourishing under the presidency of B. F. Schmid. The members are warm and generous and gave us a hearty welcome. We are open for engagements for societies or camp work at reasonable terms; also will accept calls to officiate at funerals in the city or adjoining towns."

S. J. Richardson writes from Lily Dale, N. Y.: "I had very good success at Lake Helen; in fact it was a success all around, and could not be otherwise under the present management with such workers as the Bonds and Palmers, assisted by that untiring genius, Mrs. Carrie Twing; but it seemed good to get back to Lily Dale, the most beautiful place on earth. Our anniversary meeting was held in Library Hall, March 30; Mrs. Clara Watson, speaker, and the undersigned acting as chairman. The president of the O. L. F. A., Hon. A. Gaston, of Meadville, Pa., came to attend the meeting, but was taken very sick on the evening of the 28th. I was called between twelve and one at midnight, and stayed with him until morning, and with my treatments and good nursing he was able to get out in about ten days. I have purchased the Reed cottage, one of the largest on the grounds, and would say to mediums who would like a good location near the auditorium to write me early."

N. C. writes: "Will Bro. Hull please tell your readers what studies will make a complete course at the Morris Pratt College. What branches will be taught."

Florence V. Bray writes from Baltimore: "The fifty-fourth anniversary of the advent of Modern Spiritualism was celebrated at Dushane Post Hall, Baltimore, Md., on Thursday evening, April 10. A crowded house enjoyed the programme of the evening, which consisted of an address by Mr. Edw. W. Wright, a most earnest worker for the cause; tests by Mrs. Pauline Edeler, Mrs. Ruth A. Fiege, and Mrs. Carrie Parkhurst. Musical selections were rendered by local talent. The programme concluded by a tableau, 'Spiritualism's Farewell to Creeds.' The old creeds were represented by an aged man bowing down to the more advanced ideas, which were represented by a child standing beside a white cross, beautifully surrounded by growing palms and flowers. The remainder of the evening was spent in dancing and in enjoying the refreshments provided by the ladies of the Mediums' Protective Union of Baltimore. Among the mediums taking an active part in the anniversary were Mrs. Imogene Dooley, Mrs. Ceffoy, Mrs. A. White, Mr. William Miller, Mrs. Berger and Mrs. Shanklin. Some of the larger and more active cities may call Baltimore a slow town, but we think that some day before long the readers of The Progressive Thinker, which finds its way into a number of Baltimore homes, will be pleased to know that the Mediums' Protective Union of Baltimore is in working harness and means to spread the truth of their philosophy and phenomena until the largest hall in Baltimore will be too small to hold the audiences that will attend their anniversaries in the years to come. To our many friends throughout the United States we wish to take this opportunity to send a greeting. May The Progressive Thinker "live long and prosper."

Ora Cumberland Rose writes: "I have read Mrs. Longley's lecture on The Spirit World, Where Is It, Its Conditions and Employments, and it gives me great pleasure to find in it such perfect corroboration of descriptions of the other life, given us by our own medium and pastor, Mrs. M. Klein, long years ago. Her experiences during the earlier years of her development would fill a good sized volume and every one was a valuable lesson to those to whom they were related. Mrs. Klein's descriptions of life in the spirit world, its planes, conditions and employments are verified most satisfactorily by Mrs. Longley, the former, however, entering more into detail, especially concerning the plane nearest earth, called by her guides the co-material plane. These things were told us many years ago, in the eighties, and given publicly in this place, and the fact that so esteemed a medium as Mrs. Longley corroborates them gives us pleasure. This knowledge imparted so long ago, so far ahead of time, was not appreciated then as it will be now."

Mrs. G. C. Love writes from Portland, Ore.: "We desire our society to be recognized. We are earnest and enthusiastic. The society was started Jan. 22, by Rev. G. C. Love as lecturer; Mrs. Ladd Finnican as test medium, and Mrs. G. C. Love as musician. The meetings were held by these people about two months when a society was organized, having now 31 names on its membership roll. Our hall, which accommodates 300 people, has been crowded, many going away who could not get in. The audience is one which any minister would be proud to address. The officers of the society are: President and lecturer, Rev. G. C. Love; vice-president, Mrs. Laura Share; treasurer, Mr. J. A. La-Sourd; financial secretary, Mrs. J. A. LaSourd; corresponding and recording secretary, Mrs. G. C. Love. On Sunday, April 6, we held an all-day meeting which was largely attended and an interesting program rendered. Our society is known as the East Portland Spiritual Truth Seekers' Society, with a fair prospect for large membership and a wonderful power for great good in the community. We are seriously considering the question of incorporating under the laws of the state. It is evident that the angel world is aiding us."

Mr. Havens writes from Tell City, Ind.: "On the 8th of April, E. W. Sprague and wife arrived here, the former giving a lecture. After the lecture by Mr. Sprague, Mrs. Sprague followed with several tests which were fully recognized. In all Bro. Sprague gave four lectures, on the 8th, 9th, 10th and 11th. He has done a good work here. On the 11th after the lecture he organized a society of 28 members, with the following officers: John F. Havens, president; Henry Krecker, vice-president; Oliver Roehm, secretary; John Frewald, treasurer. On the 13th they held their first meeting. The people being liberal in thought I am satisfied that Spiritualism will grow and prosper here. The writer, with one or two exceptions, has been the only outspoken Spiritualist in the place. I worked very hard to get a society started here and am glad we now have an opportunity of meeting and mingling our voices with those of our spirit friends."

The Church of the Soul will give a Dramatic and Musical Entertainment in Handel Hall, Thursday evening, April 24, at 8 o'clock. The following well-known artists will appear in the various roles announced on the programme: Overture, Madame Bourgeois; vocal solo, (to be announced); selection from "The Rivals," Miss Carrie Richmond; violin solo, William J. Davids; Filson and Errol, assisted by Harold J. Filson, in their comedy sketch, "A House Divided"; piano solo, Edna Trinkaus; vocal solo, Mrs. J. Sargeant Richmond; recitation, Miss Jessie Kleinman; vocal solo (to be announced); comic song, J. H. Lanier. Price of admission, 25 cents.

G. H. Brooks writes that he will not be at the Lily Dale camp this year, hence is open for camp work. He also would like to make arrangements, if possible, with some of the friends in different parts of the country to hold grove meetings. He will hold them on Saturday and Sunday. Please address him at his home, 114 President street, Wheaton, Ill.

Mrs. S. S. Rockhill writes from Alliance, Ohio: "The Independent Church held its annual election of officers to-days, resulting as follows: President, Mrs. Ellen Hains; vice-president, Mrs. G. S. Hoyls; secretary, Mr. A. M. Hahn; treasurer, Chauncey Erwin."

Mrs. W. S. Jones, of Liberal, Mo., writes: "I wish to let you know of our past week's work here by Sister Laura B. Payne, who came to us with a spiritual feast which lasted one week, telling us of the good things which are meat and drink to the hungry soul. During the lectures by her the churches were scarcely attended, as all wanted to hear her lectures, and which all pronounced the best by far of any listened to in an age here. Her music and singing was delightful beyond comparison. There was nothing left unsaid which should have been expressed."

M. B. Philp writes: "On Sunday, April 13, Mrs. Maggie Waite gave her services to the Englewood Spiritual Union, which meets at Hopkins' Hall, 528 W. 63d street. The house was filled to overflowing. The tests were numerous, and everyone recognized. She will be with us again on the 27th. Mrs. Warne's lecture was one of her best. Mrs. Chestnut sang beautifully as she always does. Mrs. Waite's manager rendered a very fine solo. The society is preparing a minstrel show, which will take place on the 25th in our hall. It will end with an impromptu dance.

This dog is entitled to immortality. The Chicago Tribune says: "Pat, an Irish setter which had been the life companion of 8-year-old Irwin Williams, was killed while attempting to save its master and three playmates from the perils of the St. Paul grade crossing in Edgebrook. The children had been forbidden to cross the tracks, but neither Irwin Williams, the son of Grant Williams, division freight agent of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railway, nor Francis, Olive and Howard Sprogle, children of Assistant State's Attorney H. O. Sprogle, remembered the warning when they climbed into a farmer's wagon and were driven toward the grade crossing. The dog ran along contentedly at the wheels of the wagon until it approached the tracks, then set up a howl of protest. Running in front of the horses the dog barked at their heads in an effort to stop them. A train from the city was passing and the farmer drew rein as it whizzed by. Another train was approaching from the opposite direction and Pat was in a frenzy of excitement. The horses moved as if to start, and the dog leaped forward just as the train reached the crossing. An instant later the faithful animal was dead. The dog was buried as a hero. For eight years it has been known to almost all the residents of Edgebrook, who now are relating a dozen deeds of heroism it accomplished in caring for its youthful charges."

Mrs. Amanda Coffman writes: "I am now at home filling an engagement with the Grand Rapids (Mich.) Spiritual Association. I would like to correspond with secretaries of camps for the summer. I have a few dates not taken. I also would like to hear from societies wishing my services for fall and winter months. The Progressive Thinker grows better with each issue, and is always a welcome guest at my home. Long may it live to educate the people. It ought to be in every home. Address me at No. 419 Crescent avenue, Grand Rapids, Mich."

Moses and Mattie E. Hull have moved from Buffalo to Lily Dale, N. Y. The first of September they are to move to Whitewater, Wis.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Morris Pratt Institute, it was voted to open the Morris Pratt College on Tuesday, Sept. 30, 1902.

Frank T. Ripley writes: "You are truly doing a good work for Spiritualism. A lawyer here who has read 'A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands,' says that it is a book worthy of perusal; anyone who reads it will be benefited."

The evangelist, F. M. Stoller, has moved to 763 Monroe street, near Robey, where he will hold circle services every Sunday evening at 7:30 sharp.

J. M. Hodson, of Oddville, Ky., writes: "I want to thank the editor of The Progressive Thinker for the beautiful and most valuable book just received, 'A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands.' It is the most interesting and elevating in tone of character and the higher thought of any literature I ever read, and should be in every family as an educator."

The board of guardians of Stockholm has been conducting an investigation to discover the cause of pauperism. It finds that drunkenness is responsible for fifty-two per cent. In thirty-nine per cent only the father was a drunkard, and in seven per cent only the mother, and in six per cent, both parents. The children of such parents must be supported by charity.

Chas. A. Kiehl writes from Williamsport, Pa.: "Mrs. R. W. Barton finishes her engagement with the First Church of Spiritualism, Williamsport, Pa., May 1. The services rendered by Mrs. Barton proved satisfactory, and much good was the result of her work. Mrs. Virginia Barrett, of Indianapolis, Ind., will serve this society during the month of May."

The United States government has admitted it was wrong in depriving Dr. J. C. Batdorf, of Grand Rapids, Mich., of the use of the mails. His rights have been restored to him, we are glad to announce.

Mrs. A. A. Averill writes from Lynn, Mass.: "We have never in the history of the Cadet Hall Society had so successful a year as the past one has been, under the efficient management of Dr. Alex Caird, assisted by Mrs. Caird, who has served as president of the Social Union, and who has contributed largely to our success by the exercise of her mediumship, and in various other way. There has been a steady increase in membership, audiences and interest. We have had some of the very best talent obtainable, H. D. Barrett (president of the N. S. A.), Dr. G. A. Fuller, Mrs. May Pepper, Miss Lizzie Harlow, Thomas Cross, Mrs. S. C. Cunningham, and others having occupied the platform during the past season. We have had a fair, a gypsy camp and various kinds of entertainments, by means of which we have increased the sum in our treasury over four hundred dollars, and have strong hopes of being able to buy a lot on which to build a home for ourselves before many years. We propose to hold an old folks' concert on May 7, for which quite extensive arrangements are being made. Meetings will be held through the summer season, commencing the first Sunday in June, at Unity Camp, in the neighboring town of Saugus. We have one of the finest pine groves in the state, easy of access from Boston and all surrounding towns. Refreshments are served on the grounds, making it very convenient for any one wishing to spend a day in the country, with good music and spiritual food thrown in. We have promises of most excellent talent for the camp season, with several special days. June 15 will be 'Union Sunday,' for which an invitation will be extended to all chartered societies in this vicinity to be our guests for the day. We have held two very successful union meetings in the past year and consider it one of the very best ways to create an interest in the cause and promote sociability among societies. Miss Lizzie Harlow will be our speaker during the month of May."

On last Sunday Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond lectured on "The life of Talmage, and His Present Condition in Spirit Life." It will be published in The Progressive Thinker.

Louise Loebel writes from Milwaukee, Wis.: "The Golden Rule Spiritual Society celebrated the 54th anniversary of Spiritualism by having two lectures. The afternoon meeting was mostly devoted to the children. The musical and vocal programme was a success. The guides of the young mediums did very good work. The lectures were given by Dr. F. L. Mehrtens, and flower reading by Mrs. Dr. F. L. Mehrtens, from Ripon, Wis. The decorations consisted of cedar garlands, Old Glory, palms, and a beautiful supply of cut flowers."

Dr. G. B. Warne attended the convention at Milwaukee, Wis., last week, where he lectured.

W. J. Williams, president of the Harmonial Spiritualist Association of Los Angeles, Cal., and J. D. Griffith secretary, and Maude L. Von Freitag, pastor, write as follows, endorsing the work of Rev. C. H. Cook: "This will introduce Rev. C. H. Cook, Ph. D., with whom we have been personally acquainted during the last six months. During that time he has lectured several times, very acceptably, for the Harmonial Spiritualists Association of Los Angeles, Cal., and he also took a prominent part in the meetings of the Southern California Spiritualists Camp-meeting Association, held at Sycamore Grove, Los Angeles City, during its annual session in August and September, 1901, where he delivered a series of lectures, and otherwise aided in the services. It gives us pleasure to introduce our brother to any and all Spiritualists and lovers of truth, with whom he may seek affiliation or recognition, granting to him our heartiest commendation."

H. H. Scoville writes: "Will you kindly allow space to again notice the meetings held every Sunday afternoon and evening, by Miss Sarah Thomas, at 404 Ogden avenue. She has had full houses. It speaks well for her that such an interest is manifested in her meetings. Her subjects are always applied to the present times and peoples, in comparison, and are often applauded to the echo. Miss Thomas celebrated her twenty-first birthday into Spiritualism on the evening of the 8th of April, at her home 389 West Madison street, at which were gathered 75 people, all except one being among her converts to the cause within the past year. The exception, Mrs. S. J. Cutter, made a very nice talk on the subject of Spiritualism and the fact that she was a living witness of Miss Thomas' untiring efforts to uplift the cause, having known her from her first development. Miss Thomas was the recipient of presents from nearly all, from flowers to many valuable and useful articles. She made the statement last Sunday that during the tent meetings held last summer, from July 1 to Sept. 30, there were over 100 converts to the cause through her teachings, and that she has made preparations to again hold her tent meetings at the same place this summer."

E. R. Kidd writes from Canton, Ohio: "Mr. D. A. Herrick, of Alliance, Ohio, the well-known trumpet medium, through invitation, came to Canton this week and held several very interesting and instructive seances, while Mr. Herrick is not conversant with any language other than the English language, Hebrew, German and Swedish spirits came and conversed with their friends of earth in their mother tongue, and it is not an uncommon occurrence in Mr. Herrick's seances, for two, three and four denizens of the spirit world to come at the same time and carry on conversations with their loved ones here below. While one is using the trumpet others are talking independently, and while as well the medium is sitting under test conditions, he being held by the hands on either side. Having known Mr. Herrick for years and finding him at all times a gentleman as well as a true and tried medium I heartily recommend him to those seeking after truth and proof of life beyond the grave. Besides Mr. Herrick's trumpet mediumship he is an inspirational speaker and societies and camp meetings in need of a speaker, as well as a phenomenal medium, will make no mistake in employing Brother Herrick."

W. C. Mann, secretary of the Speed Memorial Temple of the Kentucky State Spiritual Association, would like to correspond with a good speaker and test medium to serve the society for the month of May. Write at once, stating terms. Address W. C. Mann, 829 Eighth street, Louisville, Ky.

Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader writes from Philadelphia, Pa.: "The First Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia will celebrate its Golden Jubilee or 50th anniversary, with a four days' meeting. The jubilee exercises will commence Sunday, May 11, and continue the 12th, 13th and 14th. This being the oldest association of Spiritualists in the world it should attract the attention of all who are interested in Spiritualism. President H. D. Barrett of the N. S. A., will be present and other noted workers to be announced later. The First Association will be assisted by the Progressive Lyceum and Band of Mercy (which was organized in 1804), the Twentieth Century Sunflower Club and the Woman's Progressive Union. All services will be held in the temple of the Association, Twelfth and Thompson streets. All are invited to join with us to make this celebration a success."

Frank H. Dunton writes: "I want to say to you that the articles of Prof. William Denton, through Mr. Petersilea, alone are worth more than the price you charge for the journal."

Mrs. L. W. Dimock writes from Williamsport, Pa.: "It is necessary to make special mention in regard to Mrs. R. W. Barton, who is working during the month of April for the First Church of Spiritualism, Williamsport, Pa. She gives two lectures on Sunday, one at 10:30 and one at 7:30. At both meetings she gives tests. A remarkable thing in Mrs. Barton's test work proved itself at the Wednesday evening circle. Out of 64 people in the circle she gave 48 tests, all of which were recognized. She did this work in one hour and three-quarters. Mrs. Barton has worked for this society many times, and her ability as a medium has proved itself in her public work. Her private work has been a complete success."

MATERIALIZATION.

Definite Testimony of One Who Knows.

To the Editor:—I have read in your valuable paper of April 12, an article on materialization, by H. V. Sweringen. He states he knows there is such a thing as genuine materialization. I can duplicate his statement. I could relate many instances through my own mediumship, but prefer to tell of what I have witnessed through others. I have on several occasions, through the mediumship of Mrs. Hattie Stansbury Holl, of Boston, seen as wonderful results as Mr. S. relates and I wish every honest investigator could witness the same. At one of Mrs. Holl's seances, some twenty persons present, I was called to the cabinet, and while a spirit friend was conversing with me at the aperture, two others materialized—one each side of me, and at the same time three spirits materialized outside of the circle, same as Mr. Sweringen describes, and mortal friends arose, moved their chairs took their spirit friends by the hand and walked around the inside circle with them, and before the sitters returned to their seats the spirits gradually dematerialized in view of all present. Six spirits plainly seen at one time, by all.

I have witnessed similar manifestations at the seance of Mrs. C. B. Bliss, who is now in Chicago. One of the most pleasing manifestations of this kind I ever witnessed came unexpectedly. Several years ago I was invited to spend a few days with Mrs. Holl at Onset Bay, and one morning before going out to conference, I went to Mrs. Holl's room to speak with her, and as we were standing in the middle of the room, conversing, we heard a scratching noise upon the floor, and looking down to learn the cause, first noticed something white slowly moving. We watched it and soon it looked like thin vapor, which kept in motion and gradually rising from the floor toward us, and for a time we could see through it, but it grew darker and larger until a materialized form stood between us—a dear spirit friend. She placed one hand on my shoulder, and gave me an important message for her mother, then the form gradually merged into vapor and was gone.

With such positive evidence I must join with friend Sweringen in saying I know there is genuine materialization. I hope friends of our cause who feel interested in veteran workers will read my card on 8th page of The Progressive Thinker.

M. V. S. A. Camp-Meeting.

The twentieth camp-meeting at Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa, will occur July 27, August 24. Every preparation is being made to afford all those who attend, such a feast of good thoughts and intelligence as they have never received before.

Among our speakers we shall number Harrison D. Barrett, President N. S. A.; Miss Lizzie Harlow, Mrs. Jennie Hagan Brown, W. F. Peck, G. W. Kates and wife, Mrs. Georgia Cooley and J. H. Altemus. With such a display of talent surely none will go away without ample entertainment. The park itself is being beautified and made ready by Mr. L. M. Rose, the superintendent of grounds. Those who are about to select a place to spend their summer vacation cannot find a more beautiful spot. Fine scenery abounds on every hand. The grounds are shaded by natural forest trees and supplied plentifully with clear cold water from two deep wells.

The announcements will be ready for distribution about the middle of May and can be had by sending your address to the secretary, if you do not receive one about that time. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

STELLA A. FISK,
Secretary M. V. S. A.

ANNIVERSARY POEM FOR SPIRITUALISTS.

I have no words of sadness
For you, dear friends, to hear;
My song is one of gladness—
I send to all "good cheer."

Soaring like the eagle,
Singing like the lark,
Thought on pinions regal
Leave behind the dark.

Sunshine round me dances,
Breezes come and go,
Weaving sweet romances,
Singing soft and low.

Every stream and fountain
Seems to give me joy;
Every rock and mountain,
Every girl and boy.

All the air seems thrilling
With a roundelay,
Dews from heaven distilling,
Bless this sacred day.

We have cause for gladness,
None for doubt or fear,
Hearts once tuned to sadness,
Now can sing good cheer.

For angels at our portals
Benignly stand and wait,
To crown with joys immortal
This day we celebrate.

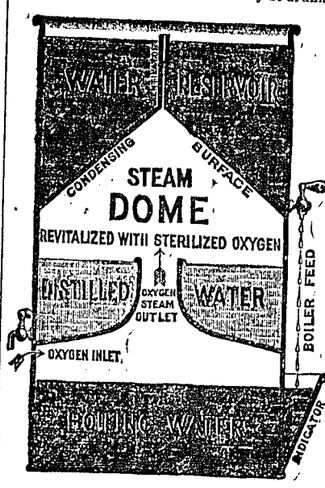
A NEW REMARKABLE INVENTION

Time and again we have called the attention of our readers to the dangers of drinking unpurified water, and that no water should be used for drinking purposes until it has first been purified.

Statistics show that 250,000 deaths, over 500,000 cases of dyspepsia, stomach, bowel, kidney, bladder, heart and blood diseases, all kinds of fevers, typhoid—malaria and kindred diseases are caused annually by unpurified drinking water.

Is it any wonder we have sickness, affliction and premature death on every hand when our wells, cisterns, hydrants and streams are polluted with sewage, drains, surface water, decayed animal and vegetable matter, lime and other health-wrecking minerals, alkali, fever and disease germs.



A genius of Ohio has invented a new device known as the Puritan Water-still that is proving a blessing to thousands of users. It is a plain, simple, heavy sheet-metal device, which, placed over the kitchen stove, purifies the foulest water by a new process of distillation, removing all impurities, mud, lime, health-wrecking minerals, fever and disease germs, etc., and furnishes plenty of pure, distilled water for family use—clear, soft, sparkling, delicious to the taste, absolutely pure and safe.

That millions will be sold is the foregone conclusion. No man or woman can in this day and age but realize the absolute necessity of purifying all drinking-water before using.

THOUSANDS A WEEK.

Upon inquiry at the factory, we found that this invention has caused a remarkable excitement all over the United States; that their capacity has been tested to the utmost, the demand being so enormous—orders aggregating hundreds daily.

From the thousands of letters received by the makers, it is plain to be seen the world is hungry for pure distilled water, that may be drunk without fear or reproach. Some of these letters give a vivid picture of water as we get it, and below we give a few extracts that show the wonderful benefit derived from distilled water.

Rev. Park O. Herbert, pastor Christian Church, Burlington, Kan., writes: "I consider the Puritan a blessing to humanity, a necesity in every family, and hope to live to see it in use in every home in the land. It produces absolutely pure, delicious drinking-water for my family of four persons from water which before distillation was not fit to drink."

Frank W. Johnson says: "For five years past I suffered from kidney and bladder troubles, little thinking it was caused by our drinking water. I spent about $100 doctoring, receiving but little benefit. Since I received the Puritan and drink only distilled water, I have felt like a new man. My kidney and bladder troubles are no more, and I have not had a pain or ache for nine weeks."

Mrs. J. R. Stacey says: "Our hydrant water is muddy. The children and my husband were sick so much I thought it must be the water. I got one of your Stills, and now we all drink distilled water. It is delicious. Have had no sickness and the children are doing fine on it."

A prominent physician, Dr. Lilly, says: "Thank God, every family can now have pure water, purified by distillation. It is truly 'the elixir of life.' Will prolong life, prevent old age, almost every disease and save doctor bills."

Miss Lulu Wilson says: "Our well and cistern water, when distilled, is perfectly lovely. Cured father's rheumatism and kidney trouble."

James Pilcher says: "Out here in the alkali country your Puritan Still is just what everybody needs. This water seems to dry up our insides, harden our bones, and causes almost every disease. Even the horses die of kidney disease, and we are all thin. Distillation removes all the alkali and impurities, turns this water into a pure, delicious drink, palatable and satisfying. I would not take $50 for my Puritan."

Fred D. Hale, D. D., pastor Third Baptist Church, Owensboro, Ky., says: "Have received the Puritan Still. Perfectly delighted with the water we get from it. It furnishes not only clear, sparkling, but absolutely pure drinking-water for my family of nine, and I consider its use a great preventive of disease."

Dr. R. W. Thomas: "Filtering is like perfuming sewer gas. Distilled water is the only water to drink with perfect safety."

Dr. L. M. Walley: "The death rate in this neighborhood from typhoid, heart, kidney, bowel troubles and other diseases is alarmingly large. Our impure water supply is the cause. I advised everyone of my families to obtain a Puritan, not only as a protection from disease, but because I believe distilled water is the only water that old or young should touch.

Other remarkable cases are those of Emma Edmonds, who was cured of dyspepsia and stomach troubles of six years' standing; Ralph Curry, an old war veteran of '61, who was cured of dysentery and bowel troubles contracted during the war. Also Mrs. Margaret A. Thompson, who suffered for years with liver and heart troubles and was entirely cured by drinking large quantities of distilled water.

PHYSICIANS BELIEVE IN IT.

Austin Flint, M. D., New York City, highly recommends distilled water, as also does Mrs. Mary R. Melendy, M. D., who says: "To insure a permanently smooth and brilliant complexion, use only distilled water. It is splendid for babies and children, keeps the blood pure, the bowels regular, prevents colic, cramps, etc."

The Ralston Health Club says: "Well water is, at its best, a hastener of the ills that flesh is heir to. We can prove that all typhoids, nearly all malarial, contageous and organic diseases, are due to the water we drink. There is no doubt that distilled water is the best medicine that can enter the system."

Dr. R. N. Tooker, Chicago: "For flushing the kidneys, stimulating the sluggish liver, eliminating waste matter from the system, pure distilled water furnishes the long-sought desideratum."

C. P. Cathcart, M. D., Kansas City, Mo., says: "Distilled water is a powerful solvent, and at the same time a delightful drink; prevents disease, cures rheumatism by dissolving the acid crystals."

James H. Jackson, M. D., physician in Chief of the Sanitarium, Dansville, N. Y., says: "The purest water in New York State is inferior to distilled water."

Dr. David H. Reeder, of Chicago, says: "Now, as we have learned that pure distilled water is one of the most powerful solvents, is not man wise when he decides to follow the example of the Creator and distill for himself a supply of water that can not be contaminated with soil or disease germs, and provide himself with a safeguard against both disease and old age?"

More evidence is certainly unnecessary to convince all that a device that produces distilled water should be in every home. After investigation we can say that this "Puritan Water-Still" is well, durably and handsomely made of the best material throughout, and with proper care should last a lifetime. It is so simple to operate that even a child could easily do it safely. It is amply large enough for family use May be easily carried in a trunk when traveling; weighs only about four pounds.

ALL OUR READERS

Should have one of these remarkable Stills. Drinking unpurified water is certainly a sin, for the preservation of health is a solemn duty you owe your Creator.

Don't fail to write to-day to the Harrison Mfg. Co., 626 Harrison Bldg., Cincinnati, O., who are the only makers, for full information, valuable book, etc. Sent free. Or, still better, order a Still. The price is wonderfully low. Only $8 for finest and best solid copper Still No. 9 complete, or $5 for style No. 7 [the] complete, including plain directions. It is indeed difficult to imagine where one could invest that amount of money in anything else that guarantees such security and good health. You can't be disappointed, for the makers are responsible and reliable. Capital, $100,000. Will ship immediate upon receipt of your remittance, by money order, draft, check or registered letter, and they guarantee every Still, and will refund your money after ten days' use if not just as represented. In any event, don't fail to send for booklet, as it is full of interesting matter. This Still is proving

A WONDERFUL SELLER FOR AGENTS.

The demand seems to be enormous. Millions will certainly be sold, and the company offer special inducements to both men and women upon request. Thousands of Puritan Stills can be sold in every city and county in the United States. Everybody drinks water, and everybody wants it pure. Many are making $100 to $300 a month and expenses. Write them to-day.

A SCIENCE, A PHILOSOPHY

And the Real Basis of Natural Religion.

Spiritualism is the science and the philosophy of life. Spirit has impregnated every part of the universe with life, in its many forms and degrees. The laws and facts which govern life in its manifold manifestations are Spiritualism. This includes the science and philosophy of man; and Spiritualism in its specific sense, may be said to include at least two main propositions, viz.: 1. Man in his present state, is an immortal spirit embodied in ether and matter, dwelling in two tenements, one physical and the other psychic. At physical death he throws off the earthly house and enters the psychic realm, in his astral body.

2. These spirits in the psychic realm can and do visit the earth, and impress and often converse with spirits in the flesh. This is done through mediums, and also through the brains of many intuitive persons. Nearly all our inventions and discoveries are from the psychic realm. Marconi, a young man of 27, never could by his own reason unaided, have made the wonderful discovery of wireless telegraphy; nor could Santos Dumont have invented and constructed a successful aerial car, without aid from the unseen world.

Now let us define science. It is a systematic statement of established facts and laws.

If I am right in this definition, it follows conclusively that Spiritualism is primarily a science; and the very science of sciences; because it is the science of all life.

But resting on this wonderful structure of science is a beautiful and glorious system of philosophy, which want of space forbids discussing now.

Your question condensed—Is Spiritualism religion or science? My answer is: First, science; second philosophy; third, not necessarily religion, but the real basis of natural religion.

But that my position may be better understood, let me define religion. The word comes from two Latin words, which mean "to bind back." It implies that man by involution, has been embodied in ether and matter; and now by evolution is seeking to return to God, from whom he originally emanated. That he must first eliminate his physical body and then his astral body, and finally in his purified spirit, enter the celestial state, or Bible heaven. These are the great divine facts upon which rest the science, philosophy and natural religion of man. But the object of religion is, that while the spirit is being individualized by its earthly experience it must also perfect its soul, and attain such moral character as will entitle it to enter the celestial state, and enjoy the companionship of the "spirits of just men made perfect."

Knowledge alone will not establish character, and has never yet saved a soul. Many of the greatest minds of earth, have lived and died the worst of sinners and criminals. Solomon, Alexander, Napoleon and even Nero, were all wise men; and yet their whole lives were selfish, criminal, and in utter disregard of the rights of their fellow men. These men all understood the philosophy of man; but made no effort to save their souls, by conforming to the the golden rule. The essence of religion is self-denial, and loving service to our fellow-men; and there is no other way to perfect the human soul. It therefore follows, that a mere knowledge of Spiritualism, with no effort to serve mankind, will save nobody; and that Spiritualism of itself alone is not religion.

We must "add to knowledge, virtue, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness and love," if we would become again at one with the Father, and progress onward and upward on the pathway of duty. But while the facts and laws of the science of man which constitute Spiritualism, are not of themselves alone, a religion; they are the true foundation of natural religion, which is the true religion. And the philosophy which grows out of the science of Spiritualism occupies common ground with the ethics of true religion.

In conclusion, I hardly need add that it is nat

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

M. R. Parmelee: Q. Whence came the custom of christening ships?

A. It is an extremely ancient custom and represents a sacrifice to the God of the sea. Of course its old meaning is now forgotten, and it is a meaningless form. The Romans and Grecians believed that Neptune ruled over the deep, and hence when a new vessel was launched into his arms, a libation was poured out as a sacrificial offering to gain his favor. It was also the custom for those starting on a voyage to toss a libation of wine into the sea in propitiation of the ocean-god, whose protection it was thought was thus secured. Sometimes a sacrificial offering of animals was made, but wine, which by its red color suggested the myth that it was transformed into blood, was substituted. The custom undoubtedly was ancient in the days of Greece and Rome, and the bold Phenicians observed it when they launched their galleys for their foraging expeditions.

The modern christening of ships is a lingering shadow of the myth of an ocean-god and the policy of propitiating him by sacrifice. In the old time it had a meaning, and a warship not thus dedicated would have been considered sacrilegious to have commanded. Now it is a pretty, yet meaningless form.

Student: Q. If there was, say, a volcanic explosion, and not a person on the earth to hear, would there be any sound?

A. There are those who style themselves philosophers who believe that nothing exists outside of sensation, hence that there is no sound unless there is an organ backed by an intelligence to perceive it. This conclusion is reached by giving sound a certain definition and then making the explanation conform to the definition. If defined as the perception received through the sense of hearing, of course there could be no such perception if the organ did not exist. Sound, however, does not depend in the least on the ear. It is vibrations of more or less rapidity in a sounding body or medium, as a bell struck with its hammer, and the atmosphere carrying the vibrations; the strings of a musical instrument; the roll of the thunder. Such vibrations have no dependence on the senses of man for their existence.

W. Ranson: Q. What is the difference in weight of a body at the poles and at the equator of the earth?

A. A body at the poles weighs one one hundred and eighty-ninth of itself more at the poles than at the equator. This is because of the greater attraction at the poles, and lessened influence of centrifugal motion. The motion of a body at the equator is that of the surface of the earth, or nearly 1,000 miles an hour, which tends to throw it away, against the force of gravity (which is the weight) and lessens that weight in proportion to velocity. If the revolution of the earth should increase indefinitely, a velocity would be reached where gravity would be exceeded by centrifugal force and the fabric of the earth itself would disintegrate and fly off in tangent lines. If this force was sufficient, the fragments would go into space so far as to escape the common attraction of the earth would be dispersed as dust through the abyss of space. If, however, it was not sufficient to throw the superficial fragments beyond the central attraction of the mass, the earth would become a whirling vortex of atoms, and would so remain until the rotating force was diminished. But in the balance of planetary movements, the diurnal rotation of the earth has an unchangeable relation to its gravity, and revolution around the sun. That is the gravity (weight) of its substance not only is a measure of attraction to its own center, but also of its gravity to the sun as a center of revolution, and these relations are expressions of the constitution of the solar system, and unchangeable.

Eliza: Q. Will gold and silver coin remain buried in metallic boxes without change?

A. As there is always electric action when two metals are placed in contact, a brass, copper or iron box, kettle, etc., filled with coin, buried in the earth, would more or less corrode, but the coin would remain unchanged. Gold practically resists corrosion. Silver in the presence of sulphur is readily acted on, and in some soils might in time be entirely dissolved, but this is not usual. It is thus seen that coin either gold or silver, is better preserved in a metallic casing.

Old Style, Cambridge, Mass.: Q. Do you not think the "slang" which is so fast being adopted, will corrupt our language and give us a vitiated style?

A. One of the means of growth of language is by "slang." The inventions of the street which at length by their expressiveness gain a place and after a time become classic. Many common, slang expressions are from the Bible, and hold their place by being such vivid word pictures, that no phrase can be substituted equally strong. Take for illustration the following: To "smart for it," Prov. xii:8; "at their wits ends," Ps. cvii:27; "merchant princes," Is. xxvii:8; "a feast of fat things," Is. xxv:6; "a drop in the bucket," Is. xl:15; "wheel within a wheel," "got a wheel in his head," Ez. x:10; "lick the dust," Ps. lxxii:9; "clean gone," Ps. lxxvii:8; "stick to the evidence," Ps. cxix:31; "fat as butter," "fat as grease," Ps. cxix:70; "escaped with the skin of my teeth," Job xix:30; "in my bones," "feel it in my bones," Ps. xxii:17; "like a green baytree," Ps. xxxvii:35; "smooth as butter," Ps. lv:21; "weak as water," Ez. 7:17.

Words and phrases found serviceable for expressiveness, brevity, vividness are taken into literature.

There is a coarse slang, never written, which is as corrupting of morals as it would be of literature could it gain entrance. For clearness of expression, clearness of thought, for these are dependent, the rule should be the less slang the better. Words should be used with careful reference to their given meaning, and no chance given for doubt or misunderstanding.

Slang will not corrupt our language, for it is used only in ephemeral literature, unless found worthy of preservation.

Miss Susie Ehrhard: Q. (1) Why do Spiritualists sing such hymns as "Nearer, My God, to Thee," instead of spiritual hymns?

(2) Why is it that a medium will tell falsehoods in a trance, and then exact pay for the sitting?

A. (1) Because old beliefs die hard. Because there are some people who wish to have a "service" like the church.

Because they know the tune, and the words have no meaning, yet sound pleasantly. If they would only stop to think they would laugh outright at the absurdity of that "grand old hymn!" If God is everywhere, how can one get nearer to him? or why elevated on a cross he is any nearer than sitting or standing on the ground are we better situated? It is the old belief of God on a white throne away in the space, to be reached "on joyful wing, cleaving the sky."

(2) The wording of this question shows that the correspondent has not fared well with the trance mediums. She has placed faith in messages because she paid for them in good money, and they came from the trance state, and has been deceived. It may not be a logical deduction that because a medium takes pay, his control will tell the truth, it is only presumable that he ought to do so. The fact is that the two are not related as cause and effect. Usually the greater the falsehood, the more exacting of pay. A lawyer may give you advice which will send you into court to be beaten, yet you will pay his fee and the costs.

A doctor will give you medicine that will be a remedy worse than the disease, but you will pay him for his "professional knowledge." A minister will preach a sermon for Christ's sake, yet he is always "called" where he receives the biggest salary. If this correspondent desires to pay for none other than truthful messages she will have to make a bargain to that effect beforehand. Be sure the medium is in a trance in the first place, and then do not expect infallibility, or that money will always buy the truth.

GALVESTON, TEXAS.

Consecration of the Spiritualist Temple.

Easter Sunday was the day decided upon by the Spiritualist Society of Galveston, Texas, for the consecration of their Temple. The day was ideal, the soft southern breezes crept across the gently murmuring waves of the Gulf of Mexico and made sweet music wandering through the profusion of flowers and palms. The long staircases and lecture-room of the Temple were tastefully decorated with smilax, palms and cut and potted flowers. The morning service began promptly at 11 o'clock with a selection by the Holtkamp Orchestra, of Houston. After the choir had sung "Hark, Hark, with Harps of Gold," Mrs. Nettie M. Wood, secretary of the Texas State National Association of Spiritualists, was introduced and spoke as follows:

"Officers and members of the Spiritualist Society of Galveston, and guests to this consecration service, I find great pleasure in the honor which has been conferred upon me to appear before you on this occasion, representing the Texas State National Association of Spiritualists, of which you are a respected and appreciated auxiliary society.

"Spiritualism of course does not depend on organization for existence or means of expression but sheds its light and breathes its comfort into individual human hearts wherever the soul's craving has prompted sincere aspiration for spiritual illumination; but the advantages of organization have been realized ever since family relations produced parental government. The organization of Spiritualism is strictly a business proposition to effectually band the persons in each vicinity who have been made free by this great truth into a family; with no creed, but free from all ecclesiastical form and authority, each individual enjoys the sovereignty of his thoughts, and with tolerant spirit accords the same privilege to every other associate. By this means the forces are cemented, pleasant associations are created and a business foundation which acts as a vehicle for the expression of spiritual philosophy and psychic phenomena is formed. Like camp fires along the frontier, spirit return has always existed; now is time to profit by the example of the frontiersman when he formed villages and created municipal governments which have grown into great commercial centers and each individual become connected with the National Spiritualist Association through the local society and state association.

"The Texas State National Association of Spiritualists is young (but five years old), but with the co-operation of each individual and community we shall be able to disseminate Spiritualism over the entire state. Your speaker, Mr. John W. Ring, who is also president of the state association, and I, have worked harmoniously together not only while I was a resident of Galveston, but since my removal to Houston. When we assumed the duties of president and secretary of the state association we found that we had some difficulties to contend with, but with Brother Ring at the helm we have steered our bark safely past all obstructions and are now sailing in peaceful waters. The indebtedness of the state association has been liquidated and we are standing on a very good financial basis. Such substantial centers as this society, comfortably situated in so beautiful a Temple, are examples for the growing societies over the state and do much to attract the attention and respect of the surrounding world.

"In the name of the Texas State National Association of Spiritualists I not only congratulate you on this occasion of consecration, but in a less formal and a truly co-operative spirit extend the best wishes of our earnest heart for the success of your work begun; may the walls of your temple be saturated with homelike magnetism, yielding peace and comfort to pilgrims who journey this way, and may the smiling faces and joyous hearts be stimulus to urge you ever onward and upward in glad and pleasant service, to Humanity."

The choir sang "Hail, Smiling Morn." Mrs. Jennie Hagan Brown worded a very impressive invocation. Mr. Ring explained the importance of Lyceum work, making mention of the saying of Andrew Jackson Davis, "The child is the repository of infinite possibilities," and the Lyceum arose and sang, "I Live for Those Who Love Me," from Hudson Tuttle's Lyceum Guide.

Mrs. Jennie Hagan Brown, well known among Spiritualist workers, and now a resident of Fort Worth, was introduced, and during her brief remarks of congratulations made touching reference to the remark of Mrs. Sprague, in Vermont, who when asked why the Spiritualists did not build more temples, replied, "We consider it better to wait and move into those already built for us." "Little did we think that the prophecy in far-off New England would thus be fulfilled in this city by the sea," said Mrs. Brown.

Mrs. Florence E. B. Shaffer, of Houston, delivered a short address, speaking impressively of the necessity of building a temple within the heart. C. Payson Longley's "Echoes From Beyond the Veil" was sung as an offertory.

Mr. John W. Ring, the local speaker, then began the consecration address, touchingly referring to the efforts of those who had joined the immortal hosts, to start and increase the "Temple Fund." With splendid effect he told of the first inspiration for the temple having come from the spirit Lillie Stanford, who advised a bazaar which cleared $33. With this small beginning something like four years ago, the present success has been attained.

"We do not want to make this a place of worship, but a school for learning and a home for the pilgrims of earth who may journey this way. We would make it a center from which shall emanate Peace and Comfort, a great magnet to attract the sweetest of spirit influences that they may bless the friends who may cross our threshold. Officers of this society, a grave responsibility rests upon you to make this temple a home for humanity and cheer each heart that may come this way; may you seek to so bury self that you can plainly see the needs of your fellow-man, may the angel world find you each willing workers to carry forth the inspiration which they have in view for the growth of this temple."

Turning to the Ladies' Auxiliary, he said: "Mothers of this great movement, be impressed with the sanctity of your positions; motherhood the sweetest word mortal lip ever lisped, and you are mothers of a great movement upon which the world looks for good to last not only through this life but the world to come. Rise up in the dignity of your womanhood and let no one pass unprovided for; use well the beautiful talents which the spirit world has placed in your hands."

Addressing the Lyceum, he said: "Buds of promise, each of you are to fill a place in the world which no one else can fill; look well to the development of your mind that you may do much good for the world in which you live. You are each to form the conditions in which you are to live, so with dignity of purpose draw from within the best of your nature and hand in hand with bright spirits go forth into the world of action to yield balm to the wounded, joy to the sad, strength to the weak and courage to the despairing. The world demands more of you than any generation that ever lived before, and if you manage your life wisely you can accomplish all that may be desired for the possibilities and opportunities are greater for you than for any generation. May the innocence of your nature be so guarded that it will attract the holiest and purest influences from the spirit world to think, say and do the best for your associates."

Special reference was made to the choir, and the members were called upon to stand. After words of admonition the audience stood and all joined in singing, "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

At 8 p. m. the service was opened with several selections by the choir, after which Mrs. Jennie Hagan Brown was introduced. Mrs. Brown in her usual pleasing manner entertained and instructed the large audience which was in attendance. The subjects were selected from the audience and with prose and rhyme Mrs. Brown held all in a state of mental enjoyment.

Friday and Saturday, April 4 and 5, the annual bazaar was held each afternoon, and at night the Progressive Lyceum presented "A Price for Beauty," an operetta composed and supervised by Mr. Ring. Sunday, April 6, at 8 p. m., Mr. Ring delivered the anniversary address. The temple was tastefully decorated and portraits of the Fox sisters, also a picture of their home were exhibited.

The society is desirous of the services of a good, reliable message medium; any such should correspond with Mr. John W. Ring, Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas. COR.

THE OLD HOME.

I want to go back to the old home
That was mine when a boy, years ago,
There were hollyhocks by the gateway
In a tall and stately row,
And over the windows and doorway
The morning glories grew
So thickly that scarcely a sunbeam
Could contrive to struggle through.

By the well in the garden corner
A hop-vine spread its shade,
And poppies danced when the winds blew,
In silken gowns arrayed.
And I used to think, I remember,
That the cricket chirped a tune
For the poppy maids to dance by
In the moonlit nights of June.

Lilacs grew by the doorway
So tall that they touched the eaves,
And the moon made flickering shadows
On the floor through their wind-stirred leaves.
And sometimes I heard them tapping
At the pane at dead of night,
And fancied they said, "Let us in, lad,"
And covered my head in fright.

Oh, I want to go back to the old home
And sit by my mother's knee
And forget the long, long years between
The dear old days and me.
Oh, for a poppy blossom
Out of the garden old
To weave the spell about me
That lurked in its silken fold!

I want to go back to the old home,
Though I know they have gone away,
Who lived and loved in the old time,
But were I there to-day,
I could dream them back to the hearth-stone,
I could see my mother's face,
And forget my homesick longings
In the peace of the dear old place.

IMPORTANT MATTER FROM OUR FOREIGN EXCHANGES

THE TWO WORLDS, MANCHESTER, ENGLAND.

"TO DO GOOD IS MY RELIGION."

How frequently has this definition been used since Thomas Paine gave it to the world. What a splendid standpoint for a man or woman to take! And we can quite believe that large numbers of Spiritualists in their individual capacity have endeavored to carry it into practice.

Nay, we know of many good-hearted, pure-minded ones who have unceasingly, ungrudgingly labored to benefit their fellows, and to lighten the burdens pressing so heavily upon the shoulders of their more unfortunate brethren.

All honor to these working quietly, without flourish of trumpets. All praise to such who, unheralded, unsung, have given of time, vitality, and money to bless some trial-shadowed home and to feed some physically and spiritually hungry mortal.

I want to be an angel,
And with the angels stand

may be a pretty sentiment, but viewed in the light of this crime-and-poverty-cursed world it is but a maudlin one when it refers to the idea of angelhood in the future "heaven."

If a man or woman desires to graduate into the holy order of angelhood it is open to him to take the highest degrees in this world seminary without waiting to enter the theoretical university of heaven.

If you want to be an "angel"
Do your duty to the world, is a couplet we would suggest to all who are seeking for some glory which they have never earned.

The woman who at her own risk nurses a sick neighbor, doesn't need wings to proclaim that she is one of heaven's choicest. The man who by self-sacrifice shields and assists an unfortunate brother, and gives him a fresh start in the world, is not under necessity of sewing gauze wings to the back of his coat a la Dowie to denote his heavenly calling.

When people get away from the idea that they must wait for heaven to grow good, and that in that "realm of eternal bliss" they will have better opportunities for development, the world will speedily grow better.

Astronomy is an admirable science, but continued "star-gazing" is bad for moral development. A little closer attention to the affairs of this life will positively mean a better understanding of those in the next, more strenuous citizenship of the present will provide better citizens for the "Celestial City."

"To do good;" to translate good thoughts into kind actions; to transfer the thought world to the world of physical actualities, must mean a divine advance along the path of development; and it is toward the end of directing thought to this matter we write under our present title.

Is it not possible that Spiritualist societies can do some actual physical work toward relieving the terrible privations and sufferings patent on every hand?

Cannot our Lyceums, by a little self-sacrifice, arrange to feed and probably clothe some of the waifs of the slums? May not some of the Spiritualist bodies conduct soup kitchens, at any rate on one or two days per week? And if a dinner of a substantial sort could be given to the poor (adults or children) on Sundays it would, we believe, preach a finer sermon for Spiritualism than all the word-mongers of the platform.

We simply ask our readers to think this matter over. We want to assist in some tangible work for the good of the world in general. We trust none of our friends will waste time by arguing that to deal thus is but to affect the symptoms and to leave the roots of the disease untouched. We have in former articles dealt with the wider question; at the present we but ask that every energy should be used to send some gleam of brightness shooting through the circumambient misery of great cities and lesser towns.

It will give us pleasure to have the opinions of our readers on this matter, and further to hear from those societies which have attempted such work and the results of their efforts.

It is well for all to remember that if we cannot at once destroy the canker that is eating into the vitals of humanity, it is at least possible to alleviate the pain and to render the lot of the sufferers less miserable.

"To Do Good!" If this can be taken as the mottto of every society, with an eye to the greater world outside its roll of membership, this winter will be made less bitter for many a widow and orphan, and Spiritualism will advance with its name resplendent in the added lustre.

IT CAN PHOTOGRAPH THOUGHT.

To many people such terms as "personal magnetism," "vitality," "will power," and so forth, represent little more than ideas. But Dr. Baraduc, the famous French physician, has shown that they are actual things, as real as air or water. He has recently perfected an instrument by means of which he can actually measure the vital and nervous force, and mental and physical strength of any person. This marvelous machine consists of a copper needle suspended by a piece of silk fibre in a glass case. So sensitive is the needle that it responds to the slightest vibration of a hand which may be held near it. According to the degree of physical and mental health of the experimenter the needle is attracted or repelled, with varying degrees of strength. But Dr. Baraduc's discoveries go further even than this. It is stated that he has obtained photographs of things which have been merely thought of; he has even photographed the electric or magnetic rays of vitality which surround every person, and which are supposed to account for the influence which some minds possess over others.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

Is there anything occult in a name? The naval superstition that ill-luck attends ships named after reptiles has received strange corroboration of late years. Besides the Viper and Cobra, the Serpent was lost with nearly all her crew, the Wasp was wrecked with heavy loss off Tory Island, and a second Wasp, a gunboat, disappeared in a typhoon, never to be heard of again. In consequence of this double disaster to ships named Wasp that name has been struck off the admiralty list of available names. In the past we have lost a Rattlesnake, Gadfly, and Hornet. Probably a new Viper and a new Cobra will be built, but should anything happen to either of them the name of the other is almost certain to be changed by the authorities in deference to the sentiment that prevails afloat concerning unlucky names. The only exception that obtains is the Resolution. The present ship is the tenth. No less than eight of them have had tragic fates, and the present one some years since very nearly met disaster at sea. Most of the old Resolutions, however, earned glory first in battle, hence the perpetuation of the name.

AT THE POINT OF DEATH.

Descriptions of the sensations of those who thought they were about to die, but who passed into a more or less profound state of unconsciousness and afterwards recovered, though intense and realistic, cannot be accepted as authentic portrayals of the sensations of the dying, since these persons did not die.

The temporary suspension of all the physical signs of life, as in a trance or lethargy, may so exactly simulate death that all may agree that the person is dead, while yet that indefinable something that keeps body and soul together remains and is capable of reinstating the common phenomena of life. Physicians at the bedside of the dying, while holding the flickering, weakening pulse beneath the fingers, eagerly watch for some word or sign expressive of the sensations of approaching dissolution.

A mother, hearing a doctor whisper at her bedside, "She is dying," opened her eyes and replied, "I'll be better in a minute," though when the minute had elapsed she had given her last sign—her last heart-throb.

A little girl clinging to her father's hand one sunny morning, said, "Papa, light the lamp, it is getting so dark," and immediately expired.

A young man asked, "Why do you all cry? I shall get well soon." Then he fell back on his pillow, dead.

These expressions show clearly that the putting on of immortality was unaccompanied by sensations indicative of the change.

TESTIMONY OF A WESLEYAN MINISTER.

A personal friend of mine, at the beginning of this year, was in Antrim town, and attended the Sunday service in the Methodist church. The minister, in the course of his sermon, said that a class leader in another circuit told him (the minister) that he had a friend whose sister appeared to him after her death, and requested him to meet her at four o'clock in a certain field with a stile leading into it, as she had an important communication to make, and she begged him not to fail to keep the appointment. The brother next day met an acquaintance and said that he had seen the spirit of his departed sister, and as he was afraid to go alone to keep the appointment she had made, he asked him to accompany him to the place, which he consented to do.

When the two came to the stile leading into the field the acquaintance said, "You go and keep the appointment and I will wait here till you come back.' The other then went into the field, and at four o'clock the spirit of his sister appeared, and solemnly charged him to try by every possible means to prevent a family he knew from going to America; they had purchased tickets for their passage but must sacrifice the tickets rather than sail; but the spirit gave no reason. The spirit also told him that a certain man had backslidden in a particular way, and that he was to go and charge him with the backsliding; and then his sister's spirit vanished.

The man went to the family and after much entreaty induced them, with very great reluctance, to consent not to go to America; and when he saw the backsliding person and charged him with it, he confessed he had backslidden in the way stated.

The vessel in which the family would have sailed left the Foyle at Derry and was never heard of more.

I wrote to the reverend gentleman for verification of what my friend had told he had stated, and his reply is the letter I enclose with this; and I consider it worth publishing in Light, as it is strong testimony to the reality of phenomena constantly affirmed in your journal, and by one who, as his letter proves, is no friend of Spiritualism. As you will see the minister says:

Dear Sir:—Pardon my delay in replying to your note. I have been very busy with mission work, and so it was overlooked.

Let me say in the first place that you have got a fairly accurate report of what I said, which is only a partial statement of what occurred. In such revelations I have perfect faith, and the history of Methodism furnishes many similar facts.

As to your statement that many persons are dissatisfied with the statements of Scripture concerning a future state, I quite disagree. I have lived North and South, in city and country, and have mixed with the educated and intellectual classes, and my experience is that the vast bulk of the people have not a shadow of doubt as to a future state of existence, of happiness or the reverse. I believe that any honest seeker who would not be convinced by the Word of God would not be convinced 'though one rose from the dead.'

Of Spiritualism I know little, and in it I have less faith.

Faithfully yours, etc., ——

In conclusion I would say that if the reverend gentleman could get, as a layman, into the confidence of many church-going people, as I do, he would not find such a plethora of unquestioning faith in the absolute certainty of survival of consciousness after death; and I do not see how the Church is to satisfy its Thomases without recourse to means adopted by modern Spiritualists; for in this scientific age evidence, not dogma only, can convince. What medium, for the love of spreading the light and the truth, will visit this city, with its numerous Thomases, whose hearts are throbbing for the light?

DR. G. E. WATKINS,

The Noted Chronist,

Is Now Located at

No. 1087 Boylston street, Boston, Mass., where he will be pleased to meet all who may call between the hours of 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. The wonderful work in healing the sick that Dr. Watkins is accomplishing is indeed most astounding; his patients live to testify to his wonderful powers as a healer. For the last year his work has been most wonderful. He says himself that his cures this year have been more than ever before in numbers, as he confined himself to only 30 new patients a month. Dr. Watkins attends personally to each case, and therefore he can do better work than if he had a great many assistants; no staff of visible helpers are in his office to annoy and suggest this and that. He knows what is the trouble with each patient, and knows the right specific to give. He prepares and puts up all of his medicine, and has no help in his medical treatments that is visible help. Write him to-day, and by return mail you will receive the diagnose. No charge made for diagnosing your case. Send age, sex and leading symptom.

? ARE YOU SICK ?

—IF SO—

Does Your Doctor Understand Your Case?

Are You Getting Better?

If you are not getting better write today to Dr. C. E. WATKINS, Boston, Mass., and write him just your condition financially, and he will make his price for treatment within your reach. He is treating a great many cases free; others he charges a light fee.

He makes no charge whatever for Diagnosis.

If You Are Sick

Why not write him today, and no matter who has failed to help you, to consult him COSTS NOTHING.

Try DR. WATKINS.

Let him diagnose your case, and then it will help you to decide who knows best what is the matter with you. Send all letters to 1087 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.

WOMAN MINER DEAD.

Mrs. C. R. Mallen, a Noted Mining Woman and Spiritualist, Passes Away.

Mrs. C. R. Mallen, says the Twin Lake News, the woman miner, known throughout this part of the state as not only a believer but a practitioner of Spiritualism, died of apoplexy, in Twin Lakes shortly before midnight last Saturday night. Her illness was brief, having been stricken with apoplectic paralysis a little over a week before her death. She had reached the advanced age of 70 years, and a good portion of her life was spent on the rugged frontier of the mountain regions. Her death closes the last chapter in the story of a remarkable career.

She was a very industrious prospector and is credited with having made a number of valuable discoveries, one of which sold a number of years ago for $12,000. With this money she traveled extensively in the east and visited the World's Fair in Chicago. Upon returning to Colorado she erected a nice home at Buena Vista, afterwards dividing her time between that city and Twin Lakes, where all of her important mining interests were located. She was heavily interested in some of the most valuable properties in the district, among them being the Liberty Bell group near the Gordon mine on Mt. Elbert, and the Hettie group on the southern slope of Mt. Elbert. She has also minor claims in the vicinity of Buena Vista, where it is said she built a cabin, alone and unaided, on top of Free Gold Hill, and occupied it while doing discovery work on her claims, climbing the steep trail once a week and carrying the necessary provisions in on her back. But of late years all of her mining development has been carried on under the supervision of Col. W. T. Buchanan with whom she had been in partnership for a number of years.

Her strong Spiritualistic tendencies were provocative of many a jest and jibe and the good old lady was the butt of many a joke perpetrated by the unbelieving. But she labored on with that firmness of conviction which compels even the skeptic's admiration for those who are devoted to their ideals, firmly believing that some time the Great spirit would guide her to the cave of a Monte Cristo or the vaults of a Croesus. Her faith in the Twin Lakes district was unbounded, and had she lived only a few days longer she would have realized a snug sum through the sale of her interest in the Liberty Bell property for which the owners of the Gordon mine were negotiating at the time of her death.

A Leadville reporter who claims to know wherof he speaks, has supplied the following interesting history of the old lady's operations in this district:

"Mrs. Mallen, the woman miner, who died at Twin Lakes a few days ago, was well known in this city and her operations at Twin Lakes were quite successful. It is not quite true that she did all the mining work herself, as she always employed men to assist her. She was not afraid of hard manual labor, however, and was able to do all the work around a mine, which in the Twin Lakes country is not very complicated, tunnels being used almost exclusively.

"It appears from information obtained here that the old lady's Spiritualistic tendencies were quite pronounced. Mrs. L. Agnes Moulton was at the head of the Spiritualistic body in Leadville and Mrs. Mallen was a sort of high priestess at Buena Vista. A few years ago quite an excitement was worked up here over what purported to be revelation of the spirits as to a vein of gold ore at the Lakes. The celestial prospectors, it seems, were quite busy and appeared at the meetings of the elect in Leadville and Buena Vista at about the same time. Mrs. Mallen herself received the information that told where the rich vein was located, and what appeared to have been the extension of it was taken up by some Leadville people, who formed a company among themselves to work the ground. Somehow the Leadville enterprise did not pan out as expected, but Mrs. Mallen's spiritual guides had given her a straight tip, for it was this property she sold for several thousand dollars.

"R. C. Rosendorf, known here as 'Rosy,' a barber since 1879, was one of Mrs. Mallen's great friends and admirers. The writer has often heard 'Rosy' tell of his visits to the old lady and on the strength of her revelations he located many claims at Twin Lakes. She seemed to be very sincere in her belief and made no charges for her services, but only located claims for her friends. Her method was peculiar and her knowledge of the topography of the country was wonderful. The ghostly spirit miners, she always claimed, preferred to come into communion with her when she was alone in her own cabin on the mountain. The seeker after a location was certain to obtain valuable information by visiting the old lady. She seemed to go into a trance, then as her spirit guide led her over the hills she would describe the locality accurately. Rosendorf located some claims in Echo Canyon after a visit to the old lady. She said the guide carried her up the steep mountain, and indicated various distinguishing marks. Rosendorf had no trouble in finding the place and actually did locate on a vein, but owing to his limited means he never succeeded in developing it into a paying proposition.

"A local Spiritualist explains the apparent contradiction involved in the fact the spirits can find a vein of ore, but do not guarantee its value. The spirit may be that of a miner, or even an expert. One of the peculiarities of a disembodied spirit is that what is opaque to mortal eyes is transparent to the spirit eye. The psychic remains of a miner can therefore see through the rock as if it were crystal, can note the various formations and follow the veins. But the spirit cannot assay the ore. Consequently these spirit locations can have no other value than in the determination of the size and extent of the vein."

Thus passed away a noted woman—one who has made her mark and who will be badly missed. B. M.

The Bogus Anniversary.

The thirty-first of March, the Spiritualists' natal day, came and went, as usual, without a demonstration or sign of its importance (with a few honorable exceptions). We know many have reported that they celebrated the anniversary of Modern Spiritualism on Sunday, March 30, but they are mistaken. True, they held their meetings and made demonstrations; but as to celebrating the anniversary of Modern Spiritualism we positively deny. That must be done on March 31—simply that day and no other.

It is a matter of no consequence to them what day of the week the 31st may occur, (unless it falls on Sunday) they hold their imaginary celebration on the Sunday before or after the 31st, and so our own natal day drops out of sight, and they simply show a reverence and devotion to the Christian's sacred day—a day made sacred by the compulsory laws of all the states except California. What would we think of the American people if they should let the Fourth of July go by without a demonstration, and hold the celebration of American independence on Sunday before or after the Fourth?

We observed, years ago, in many instances, where Spiritualists' jubilees were continued several days, March 31 was not included. The jubilees were advertised for Mar. 28, 29, 30; also April 1, 2 and 3. That is getting very close to our natal day; but it seems as if there was an intentional design to slight the all-important day to hold a bogus celebration.

Some folks are so selfish and so engrossed with the business affairs of life they cannot give one day in a whole year, unless it be Sunday, for the celebration of our anniversary.

In many places people celebrate with a dance as a part of their program, which is as much out of order on this grand occasion as would be a bull-fight or horse-race. How much do the dancers care for Spiritualism? How much do they think of its early history or its facts and principles? These things are forgotten in the giddy dance.

"Of gala days men write as great,
On Time's memorial arch,
We hold in highest estimate
The thirty-first of March.

"For then we meet to celebrate
The days the raps began,
In eighteen hundred-forty-eight,
To bring good news to man."

We know of no anniversary occasion, in point of magnitude and importance to mortal humanity, surpassing that of the 31st of March, held in commemoration of the dawning light of Modern Spiritualism.

"Its hour of triumph is not far,
Its foes are now at bay,
The hosts that come thro' 'gates ajar'
Will surely win the day.

"Exultant joy fills all the earth,
This day of jubilee—
For millions know that death is birth,
And life eternity.

"Then strike your harps, ye angel choirs,
And wake seraphic strains;
Let earth respond with tuneful wires
From mountains, seas and plains."

A. H. NICHOLAS.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

At Alhambra, Ill., Barbary Allen Pierce passed to spirit life, April 6, in her 84th year. Mrs. Pierce was born and reared in the community in which she died, and was regarded as a mother by the orphaned and homeless. A woman of marked unselfishness, loved and respected by all, her funeral was attended by a large concourse of friends and neighbors. She possessed remarkable psychic powers and during her last illness saw and called by name a number of the loved ones gone before. Services conducted by W. F. Peck. X.

The funeral of A. W. Ovitt was held April 13, from the family residence at 318 Walnut street. The services were simple, and the interment was at Rose Hill in the family lot. Mr. Ovitt was born in the northern part of Vermont sixty-seven years ago. He was a resident of Chicago for more than thirty years and had a wide acquaintance among business and scientific men. Since his retirement from active business eighteen years ago he had devoted his time to scientific research. He was an ardent Spiritualist, and loved and respected by all.

Passed to spirit life, April 11, 1902, from her home in Ottumwa, Iowa, little Frances Eugenia, only child of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. McCarroll. Scarcely nine months had they been blessed by the light of her life, when the angels took her into their tender care. In the warm spring sunshine, covered over with beautiful blossoms, the little body was given to the keeping of Mother Earth. The parents have the sympathy of a large circle of friends, and what is better still, the knowledge that their little daughter is still near them and growing in beauty and love. Funeral services were conducted Sunday at 10:30 by the writer. STELLA A. FISK.

ASPHODEL BLOOMS AND Other Offerings.

BY

EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storiettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 285 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The Author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.

The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."

That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."

Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest."

Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered, hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

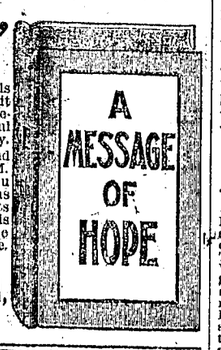
HEALTH RESTORED



The entire country is astonished at the wonderful cures perfected through the method originated by Dr. J. M. Peebles, the Grand Old Man of Battle Creek, Mich. This science is a subtle force in nature combined with magnetic medicines, and called by the eminent doctor,

Psychic Science

It has been termed the greatest pain reliever ever known. In a perfectly natural manner it builds up the system and restores health. It makes no difference how serious or hopeless the case may seem, there is positive hope in this grand science. It has restored the deaf, blind and lame, cured the paralytic, and those suffering from Bright's Disease, Consumption, Stomach Trouble, Catarrh, Nervous Debility, Neuralgia, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Female Troubles, as well as men and women addicted to the liquor, morphine and other vile habits.

Geo. H. Weeks, of Cleveland, Ohio, sends heartfelt thanks for restoration to health after suffering from nervous prostration and insomnia for years; he says he now enjoys health and rest-ful sleep every night. Mrs. J. A. Rust, of Hasea, Minn., cured of uric acid poisoning in two month's treatment writes: "I am better than in years, and each day brings new health and strength. I will refer all ailing ones to you." Mary A. Bird, Crawford, Mich., suffering from pronounced female difficulties and kidney disease, says: "I took your treatment three months and it has been a success in my case. I am indeed grateful to you for my recovery." C. E. Davis, Woodman, N. H., who suffered all the miseries of a dyspeptic, writes that as the result of Dr. Peebles' treatment, he had not missed a meal since last March. D. W. Bridgman, of Del Norte, Col., writing Sept. 30, after three months' course, "When I began treatment with Dr. Peebles' Institute of Health I was a cripple, unable to walk but little with a cane. Now I am able to walk with ease. Some days ten or fifteen miles. My general health is excellent. I can hardly find words to express my gratitude, as previously I had tried everything I could hear of and got no relief. Mrs. Isaac Varney, Dover, N. H., a sufferer of spinal trouble and nerve exhaustion, writes that she would not go back to the state of health she was in before taking this treatment for all the world. Solomon Fried, of Vanderbilt, California, cured of neuralgia and catarrh, says: "I am well and a thousand times obliged to you."

In the World Celestial

Is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance mediums, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A. Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer. This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement. Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold, and has a full page portrait of the angel heroine, from a spirit painting. Price, $1.00.

A NEW CATECHISM,

BY M. M. MAGASARIAN.

This is a new "Catechism" in the full sense of the word. There has as yet appeared in the world of liberal literature nothing like this most wonderful little book of reason. E. P. Powell, the well-known author, the reviewer and critic, says: "The remarkable thing about this 'Catechism' is that it tells the truth." It deals with the questions of God, Immortality—the Creeds, the Clergy, the Church, Prayer and Salvation, Jesus and his Teaching, the Growth of the Christian Scriptures, and many other philosophical, scientific and ethical questions with the utmost candor, courage and clearness. 188 pages. "AS IT IS TO BE."

A VERY SUGGESTIVE WORK.

It Beams With Spiritual Truths.

This is a beautiful book, by Cora Lynn Daniels, and it scintillates with grand spiritual thought. An idea of this work can be obtained by reading the titles of a few of the chapters therein:

The Process of Dying; Light and Spirit; The Law of Attraction; Senses of the Spirit; What Is Unconscious Will; Fear; Astrology; The God-Soul of Man; The Drama; A Day in Heaven. Price $1. For sale at this office.

"NO BEGINNING."

An Excellent Work for Thinkers.

This book, "No Beginning," is by William H. Maple. The Arena says of it: "The argument is unanswerable. The book will at once appeal to the reason of every reader, and leave him more amazed than ever at the prevalence of the theory of Creation." The Two has always been a fateful number. Free Thought Ideal says: "We found it full of glittering thoughts for thinkers, and the very death warrant of Christian superstition shines upon its pages." Price 75 cents.

LIGHT OF EGYPT,

The Second Volume of a Most Valuable Work.

This is the author's posthumous work left in MS. to a few of his private pupils in occultism, and like Volume I. is (a valuable addition and) a library on occult subjects. SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 25. CHICAGO, ILL., MAY 3, 1902. NO. 649.

THE HUMAN MIND.

Hypnotic Suggestions, and Mental Healing.

What the human mind really is, we have no means of knowing apart from its manifestations. Back of the phenomena of mental action we cannot go; therefore, in dealing with it we must apply the inductive method of reasoning. Where we are dealing with the unknown we must first form a theory or hypothesis, and then seek to make the facts in our possession fit it.

The duality of the human mind is affirmed by many and by many is denied, and the question is still an open one. There are many facts to sustain the duality side, and it is well to look at a few of them. The dual theory of the mind includes an objective and a subjective mental force, the objective being governed by outward things and the subjective by internal feelings. Hypnotism is based on the duality of the mind, and we now know that every form of mental healing, whether known by the name of mental science, spiritual science, or Christian science, has for its foundation and working system absolutely nothing but hypnotic suggestions. It matters not whether the subjective mind is appealed to directly, or indirectly through the name of God or Jesus, the object in all healers being to produce action by the subjective force that apparently runs the human machine and keeps it in order.

Consciousness plays no part in breathing nor in the circulation of the blood, the two things that insure life in the flesh and keep from disintegration the molecules of the body. Whether we sleep or wake, this mysterious force continues to pump air and blood; and though a man is made insensible for hours by a blow upon the head which completely paralyzes the objective mind, the subjective goes right on with its special line of work, and life remains in the body. Every wound in the flesh that is healed owes its healing to the subjective mind, which forever acts back of consciousness and independent of the objective.

The reasoning faculties are distinctly those of the objective mind, and consciousness always attends them when in action, but no relation as far as known or discovered exists between reason and the subjective mind.

That the subjective mind can be reached by the mental influence of other objective minds, is a fact so well established no denial can be made; for great and astounding have been the results of hypnotism, which is much more effective when the objective mind is held in complete abeyance. When human beings can be made to do certain things days after they have been hypnotized, and on a specified hour, where the objective mind knows nothing about the arrangements to do these things, it is the strongest kind of evidence that the theory of a dual mind is a correct one.

No writer has dealt more clearly and rationally with this interesting subject than has Hudson in his Psychic Phenomena, and in that book can be found more than one can learn from all the mental, spiritual and Christian science literature in the world; for those writers have but one object in writing, that is, to pile up mountains of words and to sell them at high-priced figures. Wilmans has flooded the country with words, likewise Colville, Eddy, Weltmer and many others, and "complete courses" in mental science have sold for $25, and more, when the whole business could have been boiled down into a pamphlet of ten pages or less, and with more and better information. The sick and the miserable have been played upon by these money-getters for years, and now the press is full of advertisements of magnetic healing and hypnotic powers. Philadelphia and Rochester have "schools" that pay well, and all they have to give you can be found in Hudson's Psychic Phenomena, and for less money.

Thought transference is the great secret of "absent" treatment, and the subconscious or subjective mind can be reached by another person thousands of miles away, if human testimony can be relied upon. These absent healers will talk to your subjective mind once or twice a day for $5 per month, just as though it was in the room with them, and this sending out of mental suggestions is all there is to the system of healing that has made a fortune for Wilmans and Weltmer; but you might read page after page of words sold at a high price and not get onto this fundamental idea. The more mystery that can be thrown around mental science the better it seems to take and the greater the profits. Never was I more firmly convinced of the truth of Pope's saying than after I had read pages and pages on mental science—"where many words do much abound, but little sense is rarely found." I have read and I have listened to these long-winded exponents of mental science that have sprung up in the last sixteen or eighteen years, but never did I get hold of the basic principle of mental healing until Hudson gave it away. We have all been told of the effects of bread pills and colored water taken as medicine, but in no case did such things produce the slightest effect unless a suggestion was also given the patient. He or she was told what results would follow, and the subjective mind received the suggestion and produced the result, not the bread pills.

Hypnotic suggestion is all there is to mental healing or Christian science healing; and though one read the endless words that have been uttered and printed on the subject, they will find nothing but that in the end.

I will now give the main thing in a $5 course of instructions for self-treatment or healing, and the same will be given exactly as we receive salvation—free! without a red cent. It came direct from one of the institutes and is authentic: "When you retire for the night be sure to repeat, I am well, I am well. I shall sleep sound to-night. I shall awake refreshed to-morrow morning, greatly improved physically and mentally."

By saying this you convey the idea of health to your subjective mind, and if you are being treated by some one a thousand miles away he says something similar, changing the pronoun "I" to "you," and between his suggestion and your own the cure is performed, if performed at all. This is all there is to mental healing, and if one pays out a thousand dollars and reads day and night for one hundred years, they will learn no more about the secret.

That cures have been made in this simple manner we must believe or reject the testimony of honest and sincere people; and if some have been cured this way, others can be. When one of these absent healers had his mail shut off by your Uncle Sam, he was taking in several thousand dollars monthly, and one year ago this month was fined for fraudulent use of the mails $1,500, as a press report in my possession proclaims.

He is still doing business, however, and the government for some reason, now sanctions it.

Nature has many secrets, but when they are found out they are generally simple and not complicated. This mental science business is both plain and simple, and if those who understand it had wanted to help suffering humanity half as bad as they wanted to coin money, they would have put the matter before the people as plainly as words could express it; but no, they must be paid and well paid for healing and telling how to heal.

We do not know the limit of mental powers in their action on the body, but we do know that mental forces have killed and have cured; and reason tells us that this power to kill or cure lies in the subconscious mind as revealed by cause and effect.

Now, then, if suggestions self-conveyed or sent by some one else, have this great power in producing results, it is well to let the fact be known and to insure by further experiments the truth or falsity of the dual theory of mind. If hypnotic suggestions can and do cure disease, let the world know it and get the benefit of it and not use the knowledge to make private fortunes for a small number.

CHANNING SEVERANCE.

Los Angeles, Cal.

Lively Times at St. Louis.

At Howard Hall, St. Louis, Mo., on Sunday afternoon, April 20, at the meeting of the St. Louis Progressive Union, a large audience listened to a lively discussion of Spiritualism, J. W. Caldwell, agnostic, attacking it vigorously and Mrs. Elise Braun and others replying with equal energy.

There was some dissatisfaction among Spiritualists that they should be assailed in a Spiritualist society, but most of them seemed well pleased that there should be so good an opportunity to defend, not their opinion or belief, but their knowledge.

Mr. Caldwell said that though he had been an investigator 15 years, he had found nothing satisfactory in the phenomena. Nothing new had ever been heard from entranced speakers. They had given us nothing to equal the productions of men who had used their own brains. He did not see what good had been accomplished by Spiritualism. He had never seen the Spiritualists flocking into the downtown districts to relieve the poor. He knew of no good work they had done. They were too certain that they had the truth and that they knew it all. The condition of the man with a settled opinion, or who bought and paid for his opinions and then went off to enjoy himself was pitiable.

Mrs. Braun thought that Spiritualism had accomplished a great deal. It had brought consolation to the distressed and broken-hearted. It was the only proof we had of the future life. In 54 years it had revolutionized thought, and now numbers millions of adherents. It was the basis of all religion. From it Theosophy and Christian Science had sprung. It had done away with the old orthodox idea of a burning hell and a perpetual playing of harps around a throne. Since the advent of Spiritualism there was no longer a smell of brimstone at the church door.

She lauded the Salvation Army, saying that it did not merely talk, it worked. She would have Spiritualism take that army as an example. She would have them go on the corners and preach and work. If Spiritualists would but cease their divisions and jealousies they would grow rapidly and accomplish a great deal which is now impossible to them. She gave an interesting account of the conversion of a shrewd lawyer in Chicago who, after putting the severest tests to a medium, was forced to acknowledge the genuineness of the phenomena he had come as a skeptic to expose.

Jacob Mendelssohn, the son of a Jewish rabbi, said it would not do for Spiritualists to speak upon the corners. They would be hooted at as cranks. He advised investigators to form circles in their homes. There was no need of going to a medium to learn the truth of spirit return.

Mr. Chisham, who had been a Methodist evangelist for eight years, made the concluding address, briefly. He praised the Methodists and their good work, but declared that he had found happiness and growth in Spiritualism.

The meeting closed with tests by Mrs. Bowers and other mediums.

Mrs. Braun is to lecture before the Progressive Union next Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, on "Reincarnation."

MEDIUMISTIC PUZZLE.

Some Curious and Interesting Experiences.

For several years I have been a reader of The Progressive Thinker, with much profit to myself, as nearly all my knowledge of practical Spiritualism is derived from it.

Thus it comes about that I am puzzled over my own individual case. I have (but don't know what to do with it) a spiritual gift unlike any other I have ever seen. There are few Spiritualists in this part of Alabama and no societies. I never saw a test medium in my life, unless I am one.

Eight years ago I learned that I had peculiar mental powers, inherited probably, from ancestors whose gift of second sight was well known in New York, even dating before the advent of Charles Wesley with his new religious doctrines.

Possessing an insatiable thirst for knowledge and an indomitable will which would not be "downed" by domestic opposition or churchly interference, by my own unaided efforts, in six sittings of 20 minutes duration, I acquired automatic writing. In three months the writing ceased, and for two years each word dropped off the end of my forefinger.

Finally I learned to control my physical hearing and became clairaudient and readily held conversations with intelligent beings whom I could not see. The sex, age and nationality of each invisible entity, as well as its illiteracy or culture, I could instantly detect, by quality of tone and accent. Spirits on a low plane, coarse, vulgar or dishonest, revealed themselves by the disagreeable sensations imparted by them and I grew positive to their presence instinctively. Like a telephone, I could "ring off." Curiosity drew crowds of these invisible yet sentient beings to my side, each anxious to tell me something I had not known but which could be easily verified. And I have verified them; hundreds of voluntary acknowledgements from people, sitters who were utter strangers to me five minutes before.

I may add to the interest of this letter by giving an experience I once had with the aged medium, Mrs. Clanny, of Chattanooga.

One Easter Sunday, three years ago, found Mr. Hills and myself visiting that splendid city for the first time. Long before this, my husband had become convinced that there was a "method in my madness" proving an intelligence outside of me.

We sought the home of Mrs. Clanny. She met me with the words: "I come to you with both hands held out."

A tiny, white-haired woman of 82—already so close to the gates ajar I doubt if she is living, advanced weeping. She only reached my chin in stature, and while thus holding her protectingly, I felt a storm of tears gushing from my own world-weary eyes.

Infirm with age and lung trouble, Mrs. Clanny, who came out of a Catholic convent a medium, at the age of 16, allowed her Indian control to give me an excellent sitting.

"I see," said that invisible chieftain, "many children who point towards you saying, 'She taught me.'"

I am sure there was nothing in my appearance or speech to indicate that many years of my life have been passed in the school-room.

Meantime, attracted by the presence of the waiting cabman, four ladies and one gentleman caller entered the room. These people were not Spiritualists by avowal, yet were open to conviction, provided anybody could convince them. I don't know how I had the face to do it, but I had offered to act as medium then and there before I had time to consider the humiliation of a failure. The names of these strangers I have forgotten, but I know the gentleman was a member of the Chattanooga Transfer Company. One of the ladies was slightly deaf, and one was a kind-faced, jolly Swedish woman about my own age. In three hours our return train would leave for Florence. I had little time for this strange gift to get into working order; I absolutely refuse to surrender my consciousness to another.

I was still oppressed by the solemn grandeur of Lookout Mountain with its looming front and terrible memories. I held my physical hearing in abeyance by sheer will power, and listened. A voice somewhere in the right side of my brain (this voice really being the thoughts of a spirit expressed in words) began hurriedly: "I have no time to explain. There is one here who knows why my coffin was buried on the surface of the ground instead of being interred in the earth." Mrs. Clanny professed herself pleased with this little sentence, and said in explanation:

"This is my husband; he died in New Orleans and his coffin was enclosed in masonry on the surface of the ground, according to the custom of cities on the Mississippi Delta."

"Tell Evelyn," said a spirit, "her father no longer blames her or feels hurt, because of her cruel neglect of him on his death-bed."

"Evelyn is my cousin, and it is her father who is speaking," said the Transfer man.

Then the spirit director, as I suppose, of this impromptu seance, continued: "A spirit now crosses the room swiftly, places her hand upon the shoulder of this lady, the deaf woman, and bending, whispers: 'I no longer grieve because my sweetheart broke my heart by taking you.'"

"What you have said is true," admitted the lady. "My husband threw his old sweetheart over for me. She died of a broken heart."

A spirit, addressing no one in particular, said: "My final exit was made by drinking laudanum; my name is Coffee."

I hesitated because the spirit seemed reluctant to speak his name, when Mrs. Clanny exclaimed, "I get the name of Coffee."

"A spirit bids me say," said I to the Swedish lady, 'I am he of whom you were thinking of a moment since; now when you go home, take your chair, go into the far corner of the room, sit down and behave yourself.'" The woman had just come from a beer garden.

I have entirely discarded the theory of sub-consciousness or sub-liminal self. I know the difference between mind-reading the sitter, and hearing a fleshless spirit prove his identity.

Could we but take the only sensible view of disembodied man as filling his proper place here in a higher sphere (none the less a man because he is invisible; the smell of a rose is invisible as well), could we but develop the spiritual counterpart of our physical senses, we might while yet in the flesh both see and hear the spirits of those who have gone over the road before us.

I have never yet charged a fee nor solicited a gift. No high dignitaries or great ones of the spirit world have ever announced themselves to put me to shame by their lofty claims and the paucity of their ideas. Clear-cut, terse proofs of identity I ask and expect of my spirit visitors.

In my own humble, obscure way I shall always gladly welcome the seeker after truth, regardless of sex, color or previous condition.

SOME MATERIALIZATIONS.

The Writer Thinks They Are Detrimental to the Cause.

To the Editor:—Non-thinking and overcredulous Spiritualists, to my mind, retard the progress of Spiritualism more than any other class of people. Within the last two years I have attended a number of so-called materializing seances given by traveling mediums, and I feel safe in saying (as an investigator) that at least seventy-five per cent was fraud and deception.

As a rule, I attended these seances in company with professed Spiritualists; in fact the majority in attendance at these seances were persons who already believed more or less (more correctly speaking they believed everything) and recognized absolute truth and disembodied spirits in all the phenomena. Let the greatest fake medium in the business come among them and this same class of Spiritualists will flock to his seances and accept everything as completely as the orthodox Christian accepts his devil, hoofs, horns and all. It is not surprising then, that when they go among thinking and intelligent people, declaring this rubbish and fraud is a reality and calling it Spiritualism, the thinking and conservative investigator, and public at large, ridicules it.

The great trouble is, too many Spiritualists believe too much. They accept everything they see and hear (that claims to be spirit phenomena) as a fact, without stopping to think for themselves or investigating. The thought that "Things are not always what they seem," never dawns upon them, thus their credulity and overzealousness keeps a great many from even investigating, because of the absurdity with which it is presented by this class.

You can see this demonstrated at most Spiritual meetings where the medium is giving spirit messages. The medium will describe a spirit and often a number of persons will instantly recognize it as belonging to them, thus showing how easily they might become the dupes of some unscrupulous trickster, and this same trickster is publicly lauded by this class of Spiritualists as a true representative of Spiritualism.

That the above are facts, I think none will question, but the remedy I will leave for those more qualified to suggest.

Spiritualism is a truth, and we must use our reason and thoroughly investigate it, for only to the extent that we have found truth have we discovered true Spiritualism.

THE DAY THAT MOTHER DIED.

A chill wind swept across the flowery lea;
The linnet ceased his singing; skies grew gray;
A tempest gathered o'er the summer sea;
And roses dropped beneath the Storm King's sway;
All Nature seemed to mourn and grieve with me
The day that mother died.

The rain drops dripped adown the lily leaves;
Hushed was the drowsy, droning bee
On his laborious [illegible] the harvest sheaves
Were wet with Nature's tears. While earth and sea
Showed sympathy as kindred souls that grieves,
The day that mother died.

Amid the tempest and my heart's wild pain
A thrush's symphony was borne to me,
That seemed to breathe a comforting refrain,
A song of hope and immortality—
Its music but half heard amid the rain,
The day that mother died.

But clearer and yet sweeter grew the song,
As the tempest in the distance died away;
The soul-entrancing notes were borne along
And checked my bitter, blinding grief, that day,
Brought comfort to my soul, and made me strong,
The day that mother died.

THE RATIONALIST'S IDEAL.

A Pilgrim of the Spirit of Truth.

The ideal of rationalism is to justify its position by knowledge and scientific truth. Its idea is not easily expressed in any brief form of words. One purpose is to inaugurate the reign of reason in religion. It is nothing less than to transfer what men mean by religion—the sentiments of hope, reverence, aspiration, awe, love, spiritual insight and worship to other foundations. To foundations of Truth, not of "authority." We deny pontifical authority as a basis for truth.

The Romanist builds on the authority of the church; the Protestant builds on the Bible. The philosophic Spiritualist builds on the soul; while the rationalist builds on knowledge. The church as an authority is discredited. The Bible as authority, stands riddled by criticism. It is full of errors and contradictions, in spite of its beauties and some excellencies.

Rationalistic scholars have done some good work. But the field is enormous; there is much yet to do. But a beginning has been made. Science and literature attest this much at least. What is our aim? In the first place, I believe that we are determined upon nothing less than the thorough establishment of the rights of reason over the whole speculative domain—the unlimited range of the human mind. A free course and boundless expanse for culture, and knowledge and the overthrow of all monopolies in the departments of the soul and mind.

This is something that has hardly been conceived of or pursued by any considerable number of people, thinking and acting together. Every ism claims its particular revelation, shut up in a book, guarded by a wall of sanctity. Too holy for the glare of daylight. Or it is found carefully packed away in some "system of theology," or some mass of dogma.

The Rationalist goes beyond all this. He reads all scriptures with intelligence and hope. He listens to all teachers with due respect. He sits at the feet of all sages, pagan, scientific or rational. At home with Huxley as well as Emerson. Appreciative of Ruskin as well as Socrates. He welcomes the gracious forms of oriental and occidental, or northerner and southern.

Men will smile in serene joy at themselves when the true confidence in reason, knowledge, pure intelligence shall have become more popular. They will smile at the ancient fear of knowledge, when they feel certain that pure thought is a heavenly guide, and faith in the Soul of Things is the true deliverer.

Some, indeed, honestly believe that there is a worse danger than this that the rationalists have to encounter in these days. The danger, as they view it, of associating feeling with faith, and emotion with belief.

Is this a real danger, or is it an ignis fatuus—a mere swamp-light of the imagination?

From time immemorial we have been educated into the notion that certain beliefs were divine and certain other beliefs were devilish. Self-complacency and mental harmony guaranteed truth. Inharmony, skepticism was the spirits warning against doubt. This has been the stock teaching of priestcraft for thousands of years. How many thousands, we little know or dream.

On this account a great amount of conscious conviction, of earnest feeling, of impassioned emotion, has associated itself with accepted ideas which has never associated itself with any others. Spiritual insight and reason have been ignored. This has naturally begotten dogmatism, arrogance, superciliousness, and spirit of oppression that cannot in a moment be laid aside or banished.

The theological beliefs of mankind are supposed to have a peculiar sanctity attaching to them. There has been no rational criticism to point out the truth or error of the spirit's communication. Whether these strange visitors brought with them, "Airs from heaven or blasts from hell." The freest thinkers find it difficult to meet, on equal ground, another thinker if he is thought to be unreligious or of an undenominational school. Everywhere there is a pope and in the petty sects there are thousands of popes instead of one. Every little peanut-parson wants to be a pope in his own "dee-strick."

But here is our hope. A thousand popes are less dangerous than one. There can be no great tyranny when all are equal, though they be equal as kings. All the authority they can have is such as we concede to them. Hence the rationalists look for a time to come when there shall be little or no dogmatism, pharisaism, no more oppression; no scorn for opinion's sake, but a disposition on the part of all to meet others with manly confidence and appreciation. To justify their positions by reason or by spiritual insight; where the interior truths of the spirit are not readily apprehended by the logic-chopping intellect. This we must concede, for time is true as well as eternity. Mind is true as well as matter. The intuitions of the reason, as well as the perceptions of the senses. We must remember the "Antinomies of Kant" if we would be just to all sides. There are facts of psychology as well as facts of physics. Of the inner life as well as the outer life. The truly human life as against the animal life still in evidence with most men.

With truly enlightened people there is no fear of the eternal Goodness.

As Siddartha, the Sakya Muni, tells us in his own wise way, "There is no consciousness of that old superstitious fear of the Creative power which religious tradition teaches as an attribute of mind acceptable to the Divine Nature, nor is there any conception that the Supreme Intelligence has ever regarded the different religious systems of earth as other than the imperfect work of immature mentality. Its great work upon these earth planes, is to substitute intelligent ideas of all departments of life for the distorted conceits of minds which in mortal or spirit life have been impressed upon the world as the revelations of the Supreme Disdom.

"India has had its day of revelations from the gods! (i. e., the decarnated of earth.) She has had her full realization of the ideas that came from the world of spirits which teach the theories of reincarnation and avatarship, as spiritual truths. She has worshiped at the shrines of more than 330 millions of spirits that were earth-bound and ambitious to be kept in memory there, but she is not redeemed from superstition, nor are her revelations from the world of spirits any higher in the grade than centuries ago, when I sought to aid her to obtain better ideas of the value of the soul."

Spiritualism is one thing, but a rational spiritual philosophy of the cosmos, is another. Rationalists have a duty here. We are our brothers' keepers! Education, helpfulness and deliverance from superstition lie that way.

The influences of darkness are not competent teachers of the philosophy of the Living Light.

Are Spiritualists preparing to pay divine honors to the spirit of "Jim Fiske" or "Ed Stokes?" or "influential spirits" of this class?

The rationalist is indeed "a pilgrim of the spirit." Yes, of the Spirit of Truth! His onward march is no holiday stroll, but a long exploration into the wilderness of ignorance, error, spiritual darkness, deceit, superstition, spiritual oppression. Society is full of unreasonable prejudices that must be effaced; of fears that must be expelled. There is opposition of many kinds to be encountered with his utmost courage. There is a spirit of slander and misapprehension and falsehood which he must be prepared to face from day to day. He cannot lay by his weapons if he would. He cannot be idle. He must not. The responsibility of the new faith rests upon all who hold it. The harvest of truth and knowledge is quite abundant but the laborers are few, and those few must do the work of many. The time has not come for any of us to slumber and sleep. We must be faithful to the Light. We must be up and doing

"With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

A Dream.

It is to me a very difficult matter to relate a dream in this manner, there is so much of interest one feels obliged to omit; still I cannot call mine wholly a dream, though I was in a deep sleep at the time.

One year ago my own health was such that I daily longed to shuffle off the mortal, and be free from pain and suffering.

But a change came o'er my spirit. I seemed to be standing before the residence of my grandson in an Eastern State, though his sister and family seemed to be the occupants of the place.

As I stood there, two carriages were drawn up in front of the house. In the first one sat my son, plainly visible, in company with a man whose face I did not see, yet his manner and size resembled that of his father. In the other carriage sat my son's wife (all being in spirit life), the latter having a child clasped close to her bosom.

I was on the point of stepping into the carriage with her when the elder man from the first one came toward me with veiled face, and said: "You had better put on your wrap." I turned at once and ran up a long flight of stairs and entering a large room. I began searching among an immense quantity of clothing for my wrap; not finding it, I went to the south side of the room where another quantity quite equal to the first lay on a long table.

I happened to glance out of a window in front of me when I saw a snow-white horse dash across the street, and with one blow demolished the carriages and all within them. The shock awoke me from my sleep.

A few days later I received a letter, saying that my grandson having gone from home for several days, had prevailed on his sister and family to occupy his house and care for his interests during his absence.

Three of the family were prostrated with typhoid fever, and one sweet little girl had been taken away by death.

To comfort the heartbroken mother I related my dream and assured her that I saw her little child enfolded in the arms of her loving grandma, while I was left in an upper room searching for my wrap; and now they bless me for the comfort I bring to their stricken hearts.

But my husband, who when in earth life told me to "never speak or think of Spiritualism," now finds himself in spirit life, in need of the glorious truths I would so gladly have imparted to him. Seeing his error too late, he now with veiled face returns to tell me I had better finish the work which he had prevented my doing. He must find that my life has been a duality for all those years. My Spiritualism was ever "Doing good" for humanity.

WHEN MENTAL SCIENCE REIGNS.

All who hate will love us,
And all our loves be true,
The stars that swing above us
Will then brighten in the blue.

Cruel words will then be kisses,
And every scowl a smile,
A better world than this is
Will hardly be worth while.

Purses will then untighten
To meet a brother's need,
And the load we bear will lighten,
Minus the grave of greed.

Those who whine will then all whistle,
And those who languished laugh,
Then the rose will rout the thistle,
And the grain outrun the chaff.

Then all hearts will be jolly,
All grieving be forgot,
And tears and melancholy
Things that now are not.

Then love will kneel to duty,
And all the world will seem
A bridal bower of beauty,
A dream within a dream.

ELECTRICITY

A Manifestation of Solar Energy.

That which is generally called electricity is only the effect, or manifestation of energy.

Where or what is the source of the power or energy?

The Sun—Solar Energy.

In what manner does this energy operate to produce the phenomena of light or heat?

By its operation or chemical action on so-called matter, i. e., the aerial elements. Different rates of vibration produce different manifestations, heat, cold, light, so-called electrical effect, sound, color, smell, plant growth, blood, etc. Air breathed into the arteries (air carriers) unites with the mineral base of blood, the inorganic salts of food, and is thus precipitated, condensed and chemically changed into blood by the same law (Infinite Intelligence) that changes these elements into vegetables, fruits, nuts, flowers, grass, etc. The organic portion of food, oil, albumen, fibrin, etc., is consumed, chemically burned up in stomach and intestinal tract to set free its stored up energy for motive power to run the human laboratory or machine in order that the process of inhaling air, raw material for blood, may go on. By this combustion the mineral or cell-salts of iron, lime, potassium, magnesium, sodium and silicea are set free and enter the blood vessels by transmosis and form the negative pole of the chemical formulae called blood. Thus blood is the product of energy operating on matter (which may be energy in concrete form), and proves the ancient statement true that "God made of one blood all nations that dwell on the earth." This is literally true, for there is only one substance to make anything from.

Then do you consider solar energy and electricity one and the same?

Yes. There is but one energy, one source of power in the universe, and that is the universe. It is the one and only Dynamis. This energy is neither heat nor cold; but produces all these, and other phenomena by its word, will or operation or vibration.

There is absolutely no proof that the sun is hot, but there is abundant proof that it is a mighty center or dynamo of energy, force or power, constantly radiating its waves of energy throughout the solar system, and the action of this force or friction, on the aerial envelope of the earth causes heat in different degrees according to the divine, creative will.

Two clear days in August, the temperature one day 95 degrees, the next day 75 degrees.

Cause—different rate of vibration in waves of energy directed by Infinite Intelligence.

Does it not seem very foolish to continually complain about the weather? How does electricity or energy pass along a wire?

It does not pass at all. Place your hand upon a piece of timber or iron bar and have some one strike the other end a blow with a hammer and you will instantly feel a jar or vibration, but nothing—no substance—passed from one end to the other. The molecules or particles that compose the wood or metal vibrate each other and thus produce the same motion at the opposite end. This explains the science of telegraphy, the telephone, etc. The vibration set up or started at one end of a wire sets every particle, molecule or atom of the wire in vibration, thus characters or sounds may be recorded.

Wireless telegraphy is explained upon the same principle. There is a universal substance everywhere in molecules between which is universal energy (the body and spirit of the universe) and thus vibrations can be conducted through so-called air and recorded, provided a receiver corresponding with the sender is prepared.

Is wireless telegraphy the last step in the science of communication? No. The brain of man (and woman) is both a transmitter and receiver, and when the race awakens from its dream (hypnosis) of flesh it will find the brain is the only instrument needed and that the medium for transmission of thought is everywhere present.

The universe is solid, there is no vacant space; the molecules of matter and the universal energy between the molecules, like blood circulating through or between the particles of flesh, bone, etc., in the human organism fills, or IS the universe.

Then electricity, solar energy, all force or power is the same, and all we see, feel, taste or in any manner sense are its effects or operations? Yes. What then is the ultimate answer to all questions? The operation of wisdom.

Vibration of Etheric Substance,
Light flashing thro' limitless space,
A girdle of Something, enfolding
And binding together the race;
And words without wires transmitted,
"Ariel"-winged, spirit-sandaled and shod;
Some call it Electricity,
And others call it God.

LOVING WORDS.

Loving words will cost but little,
Journeying up the hill of life;
But they make the weak and weary
Stronger, braver for the strife.
Do you count them only trifles?
What to earth are sun and rain?
Never was a kind word wasted,
Never was one said in vain.

When the cares of life are many,
And its burdens heavy grow,
Think of weak ones close beside you—
If you love them, tell them so!
What you count of little value
Has an almost magic power,
And beneath their cheering sunshine
Hearts will blossom like a flower.

So, as up life's hill we journey,
Let us scatter, all the way,
Kindly words, for they are sunshine
In the dark and cloudy day.
Grudge no loving word or action,
As along through life you go,
There are weary ones around you—
If you love them, tell them so!

LIFE AND EXPERIENCE IN SPIRIT LAND

A Series of Letters From Prof. William Denton, Through the Mediumship of Carlyle Petersilea.

LETTER NUMBER TEN.

Someone wants to know if I can lie on the grass or the soft moss of the wildwood here and look at the stars as was my wont on earth? It seems a simple question enough, but like the questions of many children it requires considerable knowledge to answer it.

Our light here is not the light of the sun. That is material light. Our light is ethereal and not material. If I lie in an everglade here and look at a planet, I perceive that planet's ethereal spheres. It does not matter whether that planet has an atmosphere or not, its course is distinctly marked in the ether. You know, when I was with you in the body, I talked and wrote a great deal about the soul of things, and also said that all things left an image impressed on any substance near them.

This is a great truth; but what can be said when a spirit is freed from the body and finds that the universal ether is a great mirror, reflecting all things that live and move within it? Now these reflections are clear and plain to the eyes of the spirits.

This had to be explained before the answer to the question could be given.

Now, when lying in a spiritual everglade and looking at the stars, they do not look like little, twinkling lights, set in the sky. The bodies of the planets appear dark, but the reflection of all things existing upon them is mirrored within the ether, and plainly to be seen by the ethereal or spiritual eye. So, now, when I lie, or sit and gaze forth toward the so-called stars, I not only have the pleasure of seeing them, but of reading within the ether all that is transpiring upon them—of seeing just what kind of people inhabit each one of them. This pertains to the planets belonging to your system of worlds, or those belonging to your sun, but all the so-called fixed stars are suns to other systems of planets, or worlds, that you of earth never see. You only see the suns, but not their planets. Suns are not inhabited worlds.

I must pause here to say that spirit Franz Petersilea wrote to the world, in the name of his son Carlyle, in the books thus produced, all about the constitution of suns; and he wrote the truth, so I will not repeat it here. Get the books and read them, everybody. You will be benefited, instructed, interested, and amused as well.

Now we, here in the spirit world, not only perceive all these suns, which are to you stars, but we can perceive all the planets attending them. Just think how our starry heavens are enlarged, and besides perceiving them we can also perceive what is transpiring upon them. All is distinctly marked, or mirrored, or photographed, within the ether. But to return to my spiral circles:

Now when I was in my form of flesh and blood, when I discovered that which I thought to be true, I desired to tell the world about it; and I never failed to draw about me an interested audience—did not have to ask any man whether I could lecture or not, or whether this, that, or the other association considered me competent; but I took William Denton by the hand and said to him: Now, sir, as you are a free man, go you and do as you like. Don't hang on to the skirts of man, woman or child. Do that which you think is for the best. If you have got anything to say to the people, say it, and say it in your own way, and whatever you are responsible for, shoulder your own responsibilities; consult nobody but your wife, she being your other self, or the half of yourself.

And I always found William Denton my best and truest adviser and friend, that is, taken as a whole, wife and self. When I thought I had much to give to the people that would instruct and interest them, I straightway hired a hall, paid for it, took proper measures to let the people know when and where I should hold forth, and then I held forth according to arrangements made.

The people flocked to hear me, for I had something that I wanted to tell them, and they wanted to hear it. It is of little use to tell a man anything he doesn't want to hear. Now the people really wanted me to knock the bottom out of hell. The most of them were too timid to do it themselves, yet they were kind-hearted and wanted their friends, shut in there, to get out, and so they flocked to hear William Denton demolish hell and fight the devil. This was in the days when the most of people believed in hell and its satanic king. In order to do this successfully I must have knowledge—must know about the formation of the earth—about its different strata—for I wanted to base all I had to tell on the rock of truth.

Now I am up on the spiral another degree, and I am the same William Denton as before; now I have something to tell the people from a loftier perch. I also give lectures and talks to the spirits here. I never lack for hearers, for I have got something to tell them that they want to know.

It must sound very strange to some of you, when I say that I have something to tell the spirits here in the spheres that they are glad to know, for many must think that other spirits have the same opportunity for knowing that I do.

Well, my reply is, that all men on earth have the same opportunity of knowing that I did, but all do not avail themselves of such opportunity. When on earth I did not believe in hell, the devil, atoning blood, and so forth; but thousands, aye millions of other men did, or thought they did, do now, or think they do, yet hundreds, even thousands, came to hear me tell them that those things were not so, and I now have the satisfaction of knowing that I thus struck the fetters from thousands of minds, yet those minds had the same opportunity of knowing that I did; many had far greater opportunity, for many of my hearers were wealthy, some very rich, yet they were bound slaves, so far as the mind was concerned—slaves to the most horrible dogmas—waiting for someone to arise and set them free.

Well, I was one of many others who arose to set them free; so there are millions of spirits here, in the spiritual world, who are yet bound slaves—slaves to other spirits' opinions—and they need me here as much as they needed me on earth; and, as formerly stated, many of them come to hear me gladly and very few after they have once heard me believe as they did before. There is plenty of work here to be done, even more than on earth, and there was much to do there. Someone may ask me, "How is it that a spirit freed from the body, and entering the spirit world, can believe false doctrines, if, as you say, on entering that world they do not find things as they supposed them to be—they do not find a burning hell, they do not find a devil, they do not see God, and the heaven is not as they thought it would be, but, instead, green fields, flowers, forests, waters, birds, animals, cities, towns, homes, and institutions of learning?"

Well, you have all those things on earth, and yet in the face of it, millions believe in everlasting hell-fire, in a devil with horns, hoofs, and a tail, in a vain, wrathful, vindictive God, and a heaven for a few of his favorites who have fallen down and worshiped him.

Any man who can worship such a God, almost deserves to be cast into the hell, in which he so devoutly believes; and the man who will not fall down and worship such a God, nor believe in him, deserves a seat in the highest heaven; but the question is: How can they believe thus after coming here? Precisely in the same way that they do there. A man on earth doesn't, and never did see such a God as he is told to believe in, and not a man on earth, who teaches all about this God, ever saw him, and he never heard of any other man who had seen him, and yet he seems to know all about him, even to the minutest details, and can tell you just what God thinks, just what he wants, and just what he says, and so on ad infinitum, and yet when he looks around over the beautiful earth, with its green fields, flowers, mountains, wildwoods, rivers and seas, cities, towns, homes, animals and singing birds, in the face of all this heavenly beauty, where all men ought to be happy and as free as the winds that blow, in the face of it all, he will teach of a horrible devil, a burning hell, a vain and wrathful God, and a small heaven, with pearly gates and golden streets, for a few who will believe such nonsense.

Now men leave the earth and come here by millions, Catholics and Protestants. Nearly all the Catholics think they were not worthy of heaven and have arrived in purgatory. A great many Episcopalians and Church of England people think that the Mother Church was right, after all, and they are in purgatory also. The orthodox Baptists, Methodists, and so forth, think that they are waiting until they become worthy to see their Savior, and then he will come and lead them to God, who will say: "Sit thou here at my right hand." They look out over the exquisitely beautiful spirit world, just as people of earth do over the beautiful earth, without drinking in its beauty; their minds are bound in the fetters of dogmatic belief. Thus you perceive that I am needed here as much as I was on earth; so is Robert Ingersoll; so is Thomas Paine; so are all the great and good men who have ever lived on earth; so is Abraham Lincoln; so is Luther Colby, and a host of others. They all find plenty to do, be assured. There are as many spirits here who wish to bind and fetter the mind as there are on earth. To be sure money cannot enter into consideration, but love of power, love of place, love of worshipful adoration and adulation, all can and do find place here.

A Catholic priest comes to this world and he finds thousands of ignorant, devout Catholics. He is generally too lazy, and too wise and great in his own conceit, to try to discover natural laws for himself; he has been accustomed to the mummeries and flummeries and adoration of his church people; he has been accustomed to holding up a little cross and sprinkling holy water. Now, when he comes here, quite a concourse of devotees rally around him: "Ah! here is the worshipful Father Flanigan," and they cross themselves and make profound obeisance before him. Now they have the same power of erecting a church edifice, or cathedral, that they had on earth, excepting that here they must clothe it with spiritual substance instead of material. They band themselves together and soon a fine cathedral is erected and Father Flanigan installed as their priest, that he may lead them like so many sheep—poor, sheepish things—and pray them out of purgatory, the purgatory of their own minds, for instead of reveling in the beauty of this lovely spiritual world, they revel in the purgatory within themselves.

And how is it with Father Flanigan? Well, nine times out of ten he doesn't believe a word of that which he deals out to his people, but Father Flanigan loves ease, he likes good wine, and to be well-fed, he also loves women, usually the choicest ones of his flock, and the pretty, devout, cloistered nuns; he also likes power. He likes to rule the minds of men; he likes to tell them just what they must think, just what they must do, and how they shall do it; he wants followers, vassals, slaves, and so he binds and rivets the fetters on the minds of other men that he may be worshiped and glorified by them and rule them with a rod of iron; thus he humors their whim and tells them they are in purgatory, that he has been commissioned by the pope and the blessed holy virgin and the crucified Christ to remain with them here for awhile, before he enters heaven, that he may save their souls from hell, to which they will surely go if they do not heed what he tells them.

And thus there are circles and circles of just such priests and people here as there are on earth, and have been for indefinite periods of time, and will be for periods of time to come. Of course, at last, one by one these spirits are led, by someone, up higher, and sometimes they grow sick of the thing themselves and struggle to be free, until gradually all become free; but earth is replenishing these cohorts always, and I find use enough for all the power and knowledge that I can be the master of.

The Hope Prophecy.

The Truth Seeker assails the Hope Prophecy of 1732, concerning the four great rulers of America, saying that Librarian Spofford accredits its frabrication to the year 1879. Not so; what Mr. Spofford said to Mr. Smiley was that he believed it was writen by "some wag of recent time." The writing was in the book in 1879 when it was purchased for the library. The MS. of the prophecy itself is not much faded, but the appended tribute to its author, Sir William Hope, signed "James Hope" is very much faded, being evidently written with poor ink.

The Truth Seeker seeks further to prove the falsity of Charles W. Smiley's figures. It says that Washington's age at death was 67 and Harrison's the same—not 68, as Mr. Smiley gave them. It is true that their ages were each a little short of 68 years, but the ages of Lincoln and of McKinley exceeded 56 and 58 by enough to fully make up the aggregate 250 years for the four presidents. So it is the editor of the Truth Seeker who makes the figures lie, and who misquotes Librarian Spofford. And there is nothing in the Hope prophecy nor in the appended tribute to its author by James Hope to sustain or even countenance the theory that either was the work of "some wag."

Give Credit to the Jews.

At all the Spiritual anniversaries which I have attended for the last fifteen years, there was never mentioned a word of the real cause of Modern Spiritualism, or who the originators of our beloved cause were. If you ask mediums, or old-time Spiritualists to answer this question, they tell you Modern Spiritualism originated at Hydesville, N. Y., with the Fox sisters, of course. But we should know who the spirits were that brought Modern Spiritualism where it is to-day. My answer is, the humble Jews. The first Jew was the Nazarene of old, the other was the murdered peddler buried in the basement of the house where the Fox sisters lived; that peddler was the very originator who started the ball rolling, of our so-called Modern Spiritualism 54 years ago; the first raps came through his intelligence and spread like wild-fire ever since, therefore please give credit to whom credit is due; one is just as good as the other.

Distilled Thoughts on Religion.

Religion—formulated adoration of unreason.

Religion—a blessed belief in the divinely incredible.

Religion—man's conceived idea to lead to the goal of his own achievement.

Religion—the supreme result of egotism.

Religion—the universal pursuit of some ideal.

Religion—the individual interpretation of the relationship of man towards supposed higher powers.

The glory of a god is intelligence; of man, too. In other words, a god must have intelligence; so must man.

Theological merry-go-round—preaching, praying, pulpit-pounding.

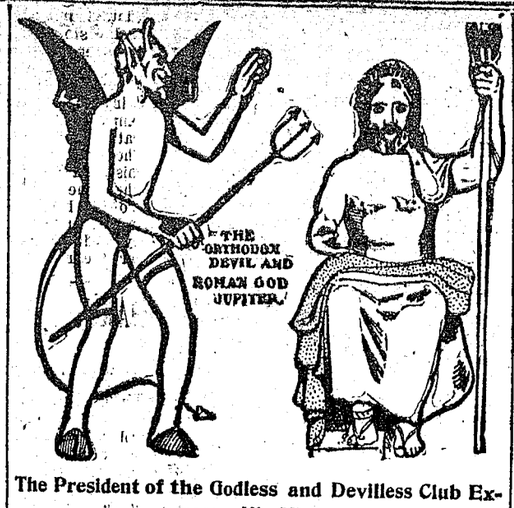
Religion might more safely be left to the natural ideas of man, not to his supernatural.

Our end and the end of all is reason.

A positive religion must answer positive questions.

I can complete my god without a Christ.

Evolution of belief—through the wondrous, the magical, the superstitious, the religious, into the scientific.



Consciousness—a product of molecular motion.

Intellectual virtues are above everything necessary.

Nothing in the world of the least practical importance was ever done according to orthodox canons.

I care not who were vicious back of me,
No shadow of their sin on me is shed;
My will is greater than heredity,
I am no worm to feed upon the dead.

The President of the Godless and Devilless Club Expresses His Views.

The Taylor bill, granting Mrs. McKinley, wife of the late President McKinley, a pension of $5,000 per annum, passed the House by a unanimous vote, April 12.

Representative Bell, of Colorado, a member of the Invalid Pensions Committee, took the attitude of protesting against the bill on the ground that it would establish a bad precedent.

"This splendid woman," he said dramatically, "cannot possibly spend her private income, and, as I understand it, she has no children or heirs other than collateral heirs.

"The $5,000 per annum pension proposed would enable the government to pay a pension of $8 a month to fifty-two widows whose husbands' lives were shortened by reason of fighting for their country, and we refuse to pension them under our laws because they have incomes of $250 per year."

General Grosvenor, of Ohio, a life-long friend of the late President and Mrs. McKinley, took the floor. He deprecated the remarks made by the gentleman from Colorado. "Why should this government go into the Coroner's business?" he asked, "to inquire into how much of an income the widow of a President had."

Representative Kleberg, of Texas, a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, from which the bill was reported, said he was a private in the Confederate army, but he was in favor of granting a pension to this widow of an ex-Union soldier.

The House applauded the remarks of the Texan.

When Mr. Kleburg took his seat the chairman of the committee put the bill on its final passage and it was adopted without a dissenting voice.

That Mrs. McKinley is a noble woman, and is entitled to recognition from Congress many will admit. She possesses to an eminent degree all those characteristics which render a woman angelic—possesses them to an extent that almost renders her an ideal woman—the highest pinnacle that any person can attain. It is gratifying to know that the people of this country think well of Mrs. McKinley—love and respect her. As Grace Duffie Boylan says:

"It is a good thing to climb to the mountain heights of our souls when we would look out upon the world. For from that vantage ground everything is beautiful and every creature good.

"Go up to a point just below the clouds on Pike's Peak and see that even Paradise is not more fair than the sweet vales beneath you. Descend, and each downward step reveals the blemishes upon the face of nature. So it all depends upon our point of observation how we see our fellow men. If our own altitude is a high one they are quite sure to appear to advantage; and while it is not reasonable to suppose we can be forever in a position to look down on the world, we can send our minds upon high places and make all of our judgments from their plane.

"It is much better to cultivate a habit of thinking well of people. The men and women about us are as a rule making the same efforts that we are making and doing their best to get over the way without too many falls. We do not always avoid stumbling, neither do they, and I often wonder if any great Judge above does not look upon our failures with the pity we feel for little children who set their weak, uncertain feet in unfamiliar ways and fall and rise, and fall and rise again?"

It is well, judged from whatever light, to take care of the wives of our ex-Presidents, and see to it that they are not pinched with poverty during their earthly career. But there are thousands of women known to the members of the Godless and Devilless Club, equally as pure minded, equally as bright intellectually, equally as near and dear to the angel world, and equally as deserving of assistance as the wife of any of the ex-Presidents. Every human soul expands impressively into existence in compliance with the impulses of certain well defined laws, hence there should be no high and no low in all the planes of existence on account solely of birth or station. Only to the extent that one person does more actual unselfish good to the human race in general than his co-workers, should he be elevated above them in the esteem of the world. Only to the extent that a human soul debases itself by riotous living and licentious conduct and pernicious practices should it be considered on a low plane. The meritorious should never suffer from the stings of poverty or misfortune. Those who constantly persist in wrong doing, who are incorrigible—degenerates—past redemption in all things for a long time to come—well, let them suffer until there is an awakening. "Co-Operation" is in favor of pensioning the helpless aged, and views the matter in the same light that the Godless and Devilless Club does: To the observer of matters philanthropic the attention which the subject of old age pensions is now receiving is deeply significant. Manifestations of interest in this form of philanthropy are so nearly simultaneous in different parts of the world that it seems hardly probable they are imitative or the result of suggestion from one country to another. They appear rather the expressions of an interest which has become world-wide and which has gradually ripened until ready to take on an active form in many different places at the same time.

Accordingly we are hearing now of experiments, plans and proposals for the pensioning of aged and superannuated citizens by various governments and many great employers of labor. New Zealand, in this as in several other important matters of government, has taken the lead. Citizens who have been self-supporting and self-respecting and whose income from private sources falls below a fixed minimum are given a pension graded according to their needs when they have reached the age of sixty-five years. Denmark has a somewhat similar law which has been in operation about twelve years. In Denmark, however, the age at which the pension may begin is sixty years. The amount of the pension varies from $2.25 to $4.50 a month according to the parish in which the person lives. Germany also has a pension system. France is beginning seriously to consider plans and laws upon the subject. Austria is awake to the movement and the discussions in England indicate that a large body received first attention from large employers of labor. Men who have reached a certain age after a given number of years in the service of a company are retired on a pension. The amount of pension is ordinarily based on the length of service and the amount of wages or salary which the employe received.

The entire movement, in a practicable form, is new in the United States, but is taking on an activity which promises much in the future. Several of the great railway companies have pension systems in full operation or about ready for operation, while certain large manufacturing corporations are working out systems adapted to their respective needs or ideas. It is doubtless fair to assume that employers, in establishing pensions for their aged and worn-out workmen, are actuated by motives not entirely philanthropic. The assurance that faithful service will guarantee old age against want will naturally tend to steady an employe and to make him regardful of such rules and regulations as his employer may establish. It is even conceivable that such an assurance might induce an employe to submit to humiliating restrictions or to wage standards which would be unjust to himself and his fellow workmen. But the entire movement is experimental and it would be obviously unfair to attribute motives which are other than honorable to those who have made a beginning.

The next few years will witness instructive developments in this field. The tendency now is plainly toward the adoption and extension of pension systems. Arguments of opponents are for the time, at least, likely to receive decreasing consideration. Only comprehensive and varied tests will satisfy the sentiment whose extent and strength are indicated by the evidences everywhere apparent.

Judged from the highest angelic standpoint there are thousands of women equally as worthy of being pensioned as any of the wives of the ex-Presidents. It would be worse than folly to think otherwise. Take the "Old Washerwoman," as illustrated by the poet Ware:

In a very humble cot,
In a rather quiet spot,
In the suds and in the soap
Worked a woman full of hope;
Working, singing, all alone,
In a sort of undertone;
"With the Savior for a friend,
He will keep me to the end."

Not in sorrow nor in glee,
Working all day long was she,
As her children, three or four,
Played around her on the floor;
But in monotones the song
She was humming all day long:
"With the Savior for a friend,
He will keep me to the end."

It's a song I do not sing,
For I scarce believe a thing
Of the stories that are told
Of the miracles of old;
But I know that her belief
Is the anodyne of grief,
And will always be a friend
That will keep her to the end.

I have seen her rub and scrub,
On the washboard in the tub,
While the baby, sopped in suds,
Rolled and tumbled in the duds;
Or was paddling in the pools
With old scissors stuck in spools;
She still humming of her friend
Who will keep her to the end.

Human hopes and human creeds
Have their root in human needs;
And I should not wish to strip
From that washerwoman's lip
Any song that she can sing,
Any hope that songs can bring;
For the woman has a friend
Who will keep her to the end.

There are multitudes of women toiling like the one above; it may be they are somewhat superstitious; it may be they attach more power by far to a supposed Savior than he is entitled to, but through that gloss shines forth most beautifully goodness of heart and earnestness of purpose. Measured from the standard of the highest angelic standpoint, such washerwomen, such menials if you wish to so call them, or such servants of the well-to-do, are the peers, if not the superiors, of the fashionable magnates who assemble for a self-admiring dress-parade at the White House at Washington or at the palatial residence of the millionaire Palmer in Chicago, or at a fashionable ball for Sweet Charity's sake. They are even as worthy of a pension as the wives of any of the ex-Presidents, and just as dear to the angel world as they.

The remarks by the President were listened to with marked attention, and as usual created a deep impression. It is being demonstrated daily that the Godless and Devilless Club leads in all progressive ideas.

HIGH SCRIBE.

THE GATES OF THE MORN.

There's an angel that stands at the gates of the Morn,
With roses and robes of the orient born—
An angel that sings while the sky, dropping dews,
Is clothed in the light of all glorious hues.
This angel stooped down to my spirit one day,
When afar from Love's fountains I wandered away,
And over my heart, on a bleak moor astray,
She poured the blest balm of a beautiful lay.
Ah! this is the breath of that wonderful lay
She sang to my heart on a cold, dreary day:

Thou art weary and fainting, oh! child of the earth,
Wouldst thou know where the fountains of Joy have their birth,
Where sing the sweet fountains of music and mirth?

List the angel that stands at the gates of the Morn
And hear how she sings to the spirits that mourn,
To hearts that are growing earth-weary and worn!

Ho! all who would enter the gates of the Morn,
Let love in your hearts like a jewel be worn;
In the depths of your hearts let the Christ-love be borne.

Let it live in your spirits and glow on each brow,
And your hearts will in sorrow no longer bend low,
But you'll sing by the streams where "the still waters flow."

With love cometh solace oh, child of the earth!
She will lead thee where fountains of joy have their birth—
Where sing the sweet fountains of music and mirth.

Through love, and love love only is duty made sweet,
Or the steps that pursue it made steady and fleet—
'Tis Love, and Love only gives wings to the feet.

Love drops her words gently as rose-leaves let fall,
Perfuming earth's bosom, or dew-drops that call
For flowers to come forth from their darkness and thrall.

Make Love thy companion, and try the sweet arts,
And the blessed enchantment her presence imparts
For a balm she can give to the saddest of hearts.

Oh! give her glad welcome and try the high art
She employs in her empire whence discords depart,
'Tis Love, and Love only, gives peace to the heart.

Let Love then, Love only all matters decide,
And teach thee the faults of thy neighbors to hide,
Or viewing them tenderly, tenderly chide.

Oh, spurn not the erring, laugh not at the weak,
Give only a kiss to humanity's cheek,
And never the "bruised reed" burden or break.

Where bitterness rankles, where envy is rife,
There meet the dark spirits of anger and strife
And the poison they carry embitters the life.

If met by revilings, revile not again,
Let the thorn that would wound thee 'neath roses remain,
'Tis the beautiful soul that gives pleasure for pain.

Read This Carefully Before Remitting.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and their price, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

These nine books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printer's art, will be furnished to our subscribers for $2.75, a price which modern machinery and enterprise has rendered possible in The Progressive Thinker office only. Sending out these books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter.

"After Her Death. The Story of a Summer." By Lilian Whiting. No mind that loves spiritual thought can fail to be fed and delighted with this book. Beautiful spiritual thought, combining advanced ideas on the finer and ethereal phases of Spiritualism, leading the mind onward into the purer atmosphere of exalted spiritual truth. A book for the higher life. For sale at this office. Price, cloth $1.

"Right Living." By Susan H. Wixon. The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principle of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in Children's Lyceum. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. Cloth $1 For sale at this office.

"Poems of Progress." By Lizzie Doten. In this volume, this peerless poet of Spiritualism may be read in her varied moods, "from grave to gay, from lively to severe." It is a book to be treasured and richly enjoyed by all who love genuine poetry, and especially by Spiritualists. The volume is tastily printed and bound. Price $1.

"The Pantheism of Modern Science." By F. E. Titus, Barrister, Toronto, Canada. A summary of recent investigations into Life, Force and Substance, and conclusions therefrom. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

OCCULT MYSTERIES.

A WONDERFUL PSYCHIC.

The Blind Fireman of Port Chester.

WONDERFUL RECORD OF "SAXE" MARTIN, WHO DASHES TO EVERY VILLAGE FIRE UNAIDED AND HASN'T MISSED A BLAZE IN SEVENTEEN YEARS.

When the fire bells clang out at Port Chester, the busy little factory town up Westchester-way, as set forth in the New York World, an athletic old man with curly silvered hair and mustache of snowy whiteness bounds from the door of his home and dashes for the house which shelters Reliance Engine, No. 17. Down the street he flies, cutting in front of a horse and flying about a corner at a speed that would shame many a man half his age.

He reaches the engine house, leaps for the machine, and in the race to the scene of conflagration runs like a young roebuck. He is a fireman in all that the term implies. He is active, fearless, cool, collected. He knows what to do and when to do it, and he is always one of the leaders in the fight against the flames. About the corners on the way to the stirring scene he turns sharply, assists in making the coupling at the fire plug and then holds the nozzle, and by his words and deeds cheers on his fellows.

AND HE IS BLIND.

For more than half a century not a ray of light has ever been even faintly seen by Saxe Martin, as he is familiarly known in his Port Chester home. At the age of four he was stricken and all the efforts of science to improve his condition have been in vain.

For seventeen years he has been a member of Reliance Engine Company of the Port Chester volunteer fire department, and village history does not record a blaze of any importance at which he was not an early arrival and a conspicuous figure in the band of fire fighters. And in all this time he has never had an accident; has never stumbled and fallen. His mates say that he has ever been one of the most enthusiastic, most active and most effective of the membership.

HIS OTHER ACCOMPLISHMENTS.

Although his record as a fireman is perhaps the most sensational of Saxe Martin's accomplishments, he is famous for many other deeds which would naturally be considered impossible for a man in his condition of utter blindness. For instance, he is noted as the most expert eel-skinner in Port Chester.

Do you know what it means to skin an eel—the skill, patience and deftness? When next you feel inclined to attempt a miracle, procure a freshly caught, full sized eel, arm yourself with a sharp knife and then sit down and try to denude your victim of his outer covering. When you have given it up, the eel, still clothed, though marred somewhat by your vain efforts, ponder on the power which makes it possible for the blind fireman-fisherman of Port Chester to take off an eel's overcoat as you would remove a pair of gloves.

When not fighting fires or demonstrating his skill on eels, Saxe performs still other deeds almost as bewildering. He is, for example, famed as a lobster fisherman.

It is said of Martin that he possesses the wonderful faculty of so judging distances and location that he rows miles about the Sound one day locating his lobster pots and days later rows about again and finds them unerringly and without loss of time. It is difficult, if not impossible, to explain this phenomenal performance, but many of the most reputable citizens of Port Chester vouch for the truth of the assertion, and many say that they have seen him make the start, have noted him about the Sound, pulling up the pots and going from one to the other as directly and quickly as a man could do who had a hatful of eyes to aid him.

"I had figured that when he went out for lobster pots he carefully counted the number of strokes of the oars from the landing dock to the first pot and from that one to the others," said Mr. Thomas Blain, a prominent citizen of Port Chester, to the writer for the Sunday World Magazine the other day, "but the theory doesn't hold good, for he goes out some days and rows fully twelve miles in covering the route he has set out, and some days he takes one course and some days another."

CAN'T EXPLAIN IT HIMSELF.

"I just go to 'em," said the blind man, when asked to explain how he performed this unexplainable act. "Count the strokes of the oars? Well, I guess not! I know where I put the pots the first time, and when I think it's time to see whether I've caught any lobsters or not I get in the skiff and just row about and find out. That's all there is to it. I can't tell just how I do it, but it's easy and I don't pass any of the pots, and I don't ever have to turn around and go back for any that have been missed."

Martin's hearing is marvellously acute and Postmaster James Merritt, who has known him for thirty years, vouches for the truth of many wonderful stories about him in which his faculty is exploited.

"Martin has never seen me," said Mr. Merritt, "for he was blind before I was born, but we have been good friends for many years and he knows me so well that he can tell me by my footsteps when I pass him on the street in a crowd. He has done it hundreds of times, and on one occasion, a month ago, when I was walking along slowly with my head bowed down thinking rather deeply, he startled me by calling out: 'Say, Merritt, why don't you brace up and walk along lively? What are you mopin' about?'

"He proved seven years ago that his ears were more reliable than the ears and eyes of half the men in the village. On that occasion a half dozen of us were chatting in the lobby of the hotel when a prosperous looking man of middle age entered.

"SAXE" ALONE KNEW HIM.

"'Hello, Merritt!' said he cheerily, as he extended his hand to me. I shook it and looked at him carefully. I couldn't see in him the slightest resemblance to any of my acquaintances. I told him so. He called one of the men in the party by name. Not one of them knew him.

"'Well, if there ain't Saxey Martin,' ejaculated the stranger suddenly. Didn't expect to see him again. Hello, Saxey,' he called out.

"'Why, hello there, Jim Blair,' said Saxe, as a smile overspread his face. 'Where you been these twenty-seven years?'

"Blair had left Port Chester shortly after the civil war, a boy, and gone South with his parents. He had grown to manhood, wandered off to Mexico and made some money. Business had called him to New York and he determined to make a flying visit to his native village. When he got here the only man who remembered him was a blind man who had never seen him."

The fact is plain. Mr. Martin is a splendid psychic, a wonderful medium!

SEEING THINGS.

The Dangers of "Crystal Gazing."

In a recent number of the Monthly Review, Andrew Lang asks his readers to procure certain "crystal balls," sold by the Psychical Research Society, to stare at them until they see visions, and to write him word what they see. From the outcome of a similar inquest into dreams, lately carried on through Longmans' Magazine, it is not uncharitable to conclude that the answers will afterward appear in the shape of a pleasantly written book by Mr. Lang, interspersed no doubt with much allusive comment and with illustrations drawn from the history of the Stuarts and their supporters.

Satisfactory as this result might be to him, it is yet to be hoped that his readers will decline to be thus ambushed. They will not, by complying with his wishes, render any service to science or research, for Dr. Pierre Janet, one of the ablest of Charcot's lieutenants at the Salpetriere, has already told us all about crystal gazing that we are likely to know. From a lecture delivered by him at the University of Lyons some four years back, we learn that only very few persons really "see things" in crystals, the estimate of 20 per cent put forward by the Psychical Research Society being, in his opinion, exaggerated. He has found, too, that this faculty is seldom met with among persons in sound bodily and mental health, it being, in fact, a neurosis or disease of the nerves to which only abnormally nervous or hysterical persons are subject. The state induced by prolonged gazing at a faintly luminous object is, on the same authority, a kind of incomplete hypnotism in which hallucinations occur which are in every way deceptions of the senses. But these hallucinations have for their subjects only those things which are within the conscious or unconscious memory of the gazer, and one is just as little likely to gain from them any hint of facts lying without the gazer's knowledge as to learn the future from the stammerings of anybody drunk.

Thus, in one case collected by the Psychical Research Society, where the speculatrix—to use the old-fashioned word for such seers—saw in the crystal a newspaper announcing the death of a friend, which afterward turned out to have actually happened, Dr. Janet is able to show that there was in the room a real newspaper with the announcement in question, the inference being that the speculatrix had read and mentally noted it without consciously grasping its significance. This experience might be paralleled by one quoted by Binet, where a student on his way to an examination in botany saw, to his astonishment, the words Verbascum thapsus written on the swing door of a well-known restaurant. A second examination transformed the two words into the simple "bouillon," and it was only then that he remembered that Verbascum thapsus was the Linnaean name of the herb called by French peasants bouillon blanc.

Is it, now, for the common good that nervous and hysterical persons should be encouraged thus to hypnotize themselves? Hypnotism, though it has lately won for itself a place in the treatment of bad hysterical and mental cases, is not a thing to be trifled with, and Dr. Janet's own books, as well as the history of all religions, are full of the dangers to which the hypnotic patient may be exposed at ignorant or malevolent hands. But, apart from this, he does not think that the habit of seeing things in crystals is one to be freely indulged in, or, to quote his own cautious words in warning his hearers against its abuse: "I am not quite convinced that its perfect success will be favorable to your moral good health." The one inseparable companion of all forms of hysteria is dissimulation, and it is no doubt due to this that the accusation of fraud has in all ages stuck closely to the practicer of "curious arts." So much is this the case that, as members of the Psychical Research Society have themselves borne witness, all professional spirit mediums have at some time or other been guilty of fraud; and the same remark might be made against those palmists whom the Pall Mall Gazette last year did its best to expose. In this connection it may be said that nearly all professional palmists themselves make use of the crystal to further gull the silly people who consult them. Is it then well that nerve sufferers should be encouraged in practices useless in themselves and tainted by their associations, to the danger of their health and reputation, merely that one book the more may be written.

One word may be said as to the value of the replies that Mr. Lang may expect to get to his demand. Societies like the Psychical Research Society are in the habit of attaching great weight to stories duly dated and signed by a real person, but most men of affairs know that very little trust can be placed in such voluntarily emitted statements when not tested by cross-examination. If anyone doubt this, let him go to the chambers of a friendly barrister and get sight of a brief in (preferably) a "running down" or collision case. If on behalf of the plaintiff the inquirer will find a statement of facts all duly authenticated by the "proofs" of witnesses, so clear and simple that it will seem to him impossible how anybody can be found so lost to all sense of justice as to resist the claim for damages. If the brief is for the other side he will find a like statement of facts accompanied by like proofs that will make him wonder how anyone can be so brazen as to bring a trumped-up charge against a so transparently innocent man as the defendant. Let him then go into court and listen while the judge and jury sift out the real facts of the case from the exaggerations on the one side and the whittling away of the truth on the other. The good faith of the witnesses being assumed, it will be plain to him that those statements which he read before were those of partisans. But the replies which Mr. Lang will publish will be those, not only of partisans, but of partisans who are superstitious and credulous as well.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Himself When Hypnotized.

The case of E. W. Hood, at St. Vincent's Hospital, is exciting the attention of the medical fraternity of Portland. It seems to be a remarkable example of the phenomenon known to the medical world as double personality. The patient was brought to the hospital February 20 in an unconscious condition, and has now apparently recovered, save that when in a normal state he has no memory of anything connected with his existence previous to September, 1898. When brought under hypnotic control, however, he talks freely of the events of his early life, but has no realization of anything that has happened to him since 1898, when the thread of his memory was broken.

Hood gives a history of having served in the army. He left the army at San Francisco and secured work as a fireman on the steamer Columbia, which brought him to Portland. While unloading some bridge timbers for the O. R. & N. Co. near University Park he fell from a barge and struck the back of his head, the blow rendering him unconscious. He was taken to St. Vincent's Hospital and placed under the care of Dr. J. O. Cobb, of the United States Marine Hospital Service. He gradually recovered from his shock, but his life previous to September, 1898, was a total blank to him, and at times his memory was so shadowy that events of a week past faded out of his recollection. Numerous attempts were made to diagnose his case, but with the little history he could give, no definite results could be reached. At the final examination of the graduating class of the medical department of the University of Oregon in clinical medicine, his case was brought up. He was carefully cross-questioned by the class and a searching examination made. Their unanimous decision was that he might have a slight concussion of the brain, but that there were absolutely no symptoms of any pressure, and that his lack of memory was due to general mental failure.

The doctors in charge, however, believed that if some means could be adopted to learn his past history his case might be diagnosed and perhaps his cure effected. To this end Dr. Allen Gilbert, a well-known young physician, who has made a special investigation of suggestive therapeutics, was called in. At the first attempt Dr. Gilbert succeeded in getting the man well under control. While in the hypnotic condition he seemed to have a clear remembrance of the events of his early life, and talked freely. He said that in September, 1898, his stepfather had attempted to kill a member of the family. He had seized the gun which his stepfather held and called to the others to run for their lives. When asked to tell the rest of the story, he would only complain of his head. When in a state of hypnosis, he has an extremely sensitive place on the right side of his head and the least touch there causes him intense pain. From this it is concluded that during this trouble he received an injury from which he has never recovered, and which has blotted out of his mind all memory of his life previous to that time. The trouble, he says, happened in Wisconsin, and inquiries have been sent there to find whether or not the story he relates is true. If it is true, persons may be found who were witnesses to his accident, the nature of his injury may be learned, and an operation performed that will restore his memory.

A second attempt was made to hypnotize him, but with little success. At the least interruption he would suddenly awaken and demand to be taken back to the hospital. When hypnotized he thinks he is back in the scenes of his early life. When in a normal condition he is perfectly conscious and recognizes those around him, and can even relate fairly well his history back to the time of his supposed injury.

This is a case of peculiar interest. It cannot be termed metempsychosis, for he has never made an effort to in any way change his identity. Whether hypnotized or not he gives his name as E. W. Hood, nor has there ever been any marked change in his mode of living. His life seems to be divided into two parts, and while living in one part he has no knowledge of the other.—The Morning Oregonian.

Busy Ghost in Ohio.

Kenton, Ohio.—There are uncanny doings in the Hardin County Armory, and according to common report the handsome structure is haunted. The armory is used by Company I, Second Regiment, O. N. G., and the offices of the Hardin County Surveyor and Probate Judge are on the same floor. The building is lighted by electricity. The uncanny demonstrations consist of unearthly laughs, sounds as though heavy boxes were being dragged across the floor, and a number of similar demonstrations, including a mysterious opening of locked doors.

A few evenings ago a party consisting of William B. Strope, first lieutenant Company I; Corporal Ned F. Stevenson, William Alt, William Watson, Lucien Brown, and the Inter Ocean correspondent, made an investigation. In order to more easily detect any attempts at practical joking, the rope by which the large arc lights which illuminate the drill floor are turned on and off, was carried up into the gallery, where the watchers took their station, leaving the drill floor vacant. By these means the arc light could be flashed on in a second, and every nook and cranny of the whole floor lighted up brightly. Previous to turning out the lights the whole building was gone over from cellar to roof, and every door and window tightly locked.

The watchers then retired to a small room off the gallery and waited. There was nothing doing until about midnight. Suddenly one of the party said, "Look at that door!" Although it had been tightly latched, it was slowly swinging open as though some unseen force was pushing it. One of the party arose and, closing the door, stationed one man on the outside, who, he saw that it was locked from the inside and the key removed. He had no more than taken his seat until it opened as before. This time it was allowed to swing all the way open, and as it struck the wall, out of the darkness of the drill floor came a laugh that can be described no other way than "nerve chilling." The man who held the rope that lighted the lamps gave a quick jerk. In his haste, both arcs and incandescents were thrown on, and with their brilliancy the laughter ceased. There was nothing whatever on the floor. Although the nerves of the watchers were somewhat shaken, the lights were again turned out.

The lights were allowed to remain on for a few minutes, and French chalk was spread all over the floor. In spite of this, as soon as the examination was made, the chalk was undisturbed by any footprints.

At this point another inspection was made of the locks on the doors and windows. There was no possible way for any one in the building to escape. The party then went together and explored the whole building once more. Even a coal pile was turned over in the cellar, but nothing whatever could be found. While the party was down stairs the footsteps and other noises above them on the drill floor could be heard, but the chalk was again undisturbed.

The watch was continued until one o'clock in the morning in the storeroom. The noises continued at intervals, and the door refused to stay shut unless there was a heavy box against it. As the party left the building the laughs re-echoed through the empty halls.

The spooky demonstrations began to be noticed last fall. The County Surveyor and a force of his men were at work late one night when they heard a noise in the main part of the building. Thinking that some one had broken in and was trespassing they made a search but found nothing.—Inter Ocean.

OUIJA BOARD.

Notes of Work Among Dark or Evil Spirits.

Having had considerable work among dark or evil spirits, in the days when I first was successful in getting some of the inhabitants of the lower planes, or spheres, to move an "ouija board" for me, I thought some of my experience might be interesting to someone. While we, that have gotten beyond the "ouija board" phenomena, prefer more solid food, there are many that get their first insight to the truths our religion teaches, in the first principles of phenomena.

I first heard of an "ouija board" from a friend; of course I thought all such things were sleight-of-hand; but having a very great desire to investigate, I called on the lady, and made known my desire to see the "ouija board." She brought it forth, and explained to me some of its ways. I was requested to place my hand, with hers, upon the little pointer, and soon it moved, and she and "Ouija" had quite a talk. I, of course, was not satisfied, still I felt sure she was truthful, and was not deceiving me in the least.

I returned home with the address of an "ouija board" company in my purse; sent the next day for one. When mine came I settled myself for a trial, knowing full well if that board moved, some power beside my own hand had to do the moving. It was fully two weeks before I was successful, but I seldom give up, and the day the board moved I felt amply repaid for all my weary waiting and watching. I was convinced that some supernatural power moved that "ouija board," and was willing to believe it was the spirits of people that had gone from earth. It was not long before they could move that board with just one of my fingers on it. The talk of darkness I could not understand, and how they could find me I could not tell. But as it is in this world, there are people with different trades and professions, so it is there, and I at last found one spirit whose work seemed to be to find people, and I asked her to find someone for me, and to tell me how she did, if they were in darkness. She said: "I went where you bid me, and called his name all the way." That looked reasonable to me. I asked, "What is the darkness like?" One spirit, that I have reason to believe is now among the people of light, answered me that "the darkness was heavy, oppressive; was as a load resting on them." I wanted to know then "why they wanted to talk on my 'ouija board.'" They answered me, "Because all mediums have light around them, and by being close to them, bringing other spirits to them, and helping them all we can, we are relieved of some of our burden of darkness or sin." That, too, I thought might be so. I have often heard the remark, "So and so cannot rest in their grave." Now I believe there are many that cannot rest from trying to talk to their earthly people, and to whom shall they go if not to a medium? And how like to earthly people the spiritual people are. I used to think death made a great change in one, but I had many come to me to tell secrets, if "I'd not tell." I am glad to say, I have yet to break my promise to an inhabitant of the spiritual world. As a heavy trouble haunts us while living in the earthly body, and it helps us so much to confide in a sympathetic friend, so it is in the land that has no night, and where all may be happy in doing good.

I have had a good many tests on my "ouija board," among them this one I now recall. My husband came home one day at noon and said, "Get your 'ouija board,' I want to see about something." I did, and scarcely had I placed my hand upon it when it rapidly spelled my husband's grandmother's name. I laughed and said that is "Effie," a spirit noted among us for pretending to be different spirits. He said, "No," and handed me a letter that came in that morning's mail telling him of his grandmother's departure from earth. She told me later in the day she had "followed the letter, knowing it was coming to her favorite grandson." While these things are to me, and no doubt to many that believe as I do, and have passed to higher truth in the theory, old, yet they are the beginning of wisdom, for people who have not learned as we have.

About Magnetic Healing.

Physicians who have the interest of the public at heart should cast aside all prejudice and use magnetic healing along with their regular practice of medicine. By so doing they would confer on humanity a world of good. I am in accord with the statement made by G. S. Lincoln, M. D., that had the medical profession been progressive, it would have thoroughly investigated magnetic healing, mental healing, faith cure, and Christian science long ago. The very fact that these different methods of healing continue to exist, is positive proof of their efficacy. What would happen to a physician who never cured anybody? He would soon sink into oblivion. As an illustration, suppose that it was impossible to cure anyone by medicine, how long would medicine be used? Does not the same rule apply to magnetic healing and other cures? If it were impossible to cure through these agencies, would they not pass out of existence, instead of growing more popular each year? In a short period, unless physicians take up these studies in addition to medicine, they will be forced to a certain extent to retire from their field of usefulness. The general public is becoming more enlightened year by year, and the demand for magnetic healing is greater, so that the physician may be compelled by law to add these branches to his store of therapeutic knowledge.

Some of our most prominent people of this country are now being treated by magnetic healers.

Referring to the Bible, take the case of Elisha, II. Kings, 4:34-35, in restoring the life to the widow's son: "And he went up and lay upon the child, and put his mouth upon his mouth, and his eyes upon his eyes, and his hands upon his hands; and he stretched himself upon the child; and the flesh of the child waxed warm." Then he returned and walked in the house to and fro; and went up and stretched himself upon the child; and the child sneezed seven times and the child opened his eyes. Friends, let us all help this good work along.

COMPREHENSIVE CRITICISM

The Roman Catholic Church and the Bible.

Now that the higher critics have positively shown that some parts of the Bible are fabulous, some Catholic laymen are trying to argue that their church does not define inspiration as it relates to the scriptures. This position is taken to screen the Catholic church from having made a mistake. But Pope Leo XIII., in a recent letter on the Bible, authoritatively declared that,

"The church holds all the books of Scripture as sacred and canonical, not because, having been composed solely by human industry, they were afterward approved by her authority, nor only because they contain revelation without error, bue because, having been written under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, they have God for their author."

And in the language of a Roman Catholic priest who writes in the last number of Mosher's Magazine, "Catholics are bound to believe in the verbal inspiration of the Bible. That is, its inspiration is not limited to the sentences in the context of the sacred books, but even the words are inspired."

It will be seen, therefore, that the doctrine of the Roman Catholic Church as to the Bible is precisely defined and that the church is committed unmistakably and absolutely on "those points dealt with by modern science and 'higher criticism.'" The Papal Commission recently appointed to receive and solve questions as to the Bible can make no new definition, and in no way can it modify the old either in letter or in spirit."

The Catholic Church, now, cannot take any other ground. The whole Bible being inspired by the Holy Ghost, Catholic priests and laymen must accept the whole of it: The whale did swallow Jonah, Jesus did walk upon the water, he did rise from the dead and he did ascend into heaven; and so all the fabulous stories from Genesis to Revelations must be accepted as truth by every good Catholic. At the time when St. George Mivart came in collision with Cardinal Vaughn, the former held that fables and legends could not have been inspired by God, hence the inspiration dogma of the Catholic Church must be false and cannot logically be accepted by reason. St. George Mivart, who was counted a great scholar in the Catholic Church, died in his "heresy" and the Catholic Church lives to perpetuate the doctrine of the verbal inspiration of the Bible. From the standpoint of pure science, I have to take exception to both St. George Mivart and the Catholic Church; both of them are wrong. God can, and did, inspire fables, and every word in the Bible is not "revelation without error." When men wrote about that which never came to pass, and which is supernatural, they certainly must have been inspired. If this is not so, then the Bible is a false witness against the method pursued by God. Read Romans 4th, 17th—"Even God who quickeneth the dead and calleth those things which be not as though they were." That the Bible was made for a purpose no one can logically deny because it has served a purpose; and as the human mind, in its infancy, was not fit for truth (indeed very few minds are fit for it now) fable was especially adapted to it. This is the proper ground to take. Fable was a specific adaptation to a specific end, and how effectually it filled the place, we can see by the way the most intelligent of men and women have clung to the fables of the Bible. The dilemma of the Catholic Church is right here: To hold that the whole of the Bible is inspired—is "revelation without error"—is to show that it errs and therefore is not infallible, because errors are certainly in the Bible. To deny the full inspiration of the Bible is ot weaken its claim that it was especially, divinely commissioned to preach the only gospel to all mankind. Let it take which horn it will, it stands before the world convicted of error, and in error it positively is. The Catholic Church has no where else to go for proof of its alleged divine commission but to the Bible, although it claims that the church is supreme—is above the Bible. I have no hesitancy in saying that the claim of the Roman Catholic Church of being commissioned by Jesus of Nazareth to preach his gospel to the whole world is a base forgery and imposition from first to last, and here are the facts to warrant my assertion: Three evangelists, Matthew, Mark and Luke, testify that Jesus preached the gospel of the kingdom of God and that he defined it himself in unmistakable terms. "The kingdom of God is within you. It is like leaven that a woman took and hid in three measures of meal until the whole was leavened. It is like a seed put in the ground; it springs and grows night and day we know not how, first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear." Not a word about believe or be damned such as we find in the last chapter of Mark and which we now know is spurious. If you will turn to the Catholic Catechism, you will find on the 6th page the following question and answer:

"Where shall we find the chief truths which the church teaches?"

"We shall find the chief truths which the church teaches in the Apostles' Creed."

This settles the whole question and the Catholic Church cannot logically defend itself. Jesus of Nazareth never founded the Catholic Church or else it would have preached his gospel. This is good logic. Some one or some church formulated the Apostles' Creed from the legends and fables which were rife in that age and the Catholic Church endorsed it and preached its doctrine (not gospel) of believe in those fables or be damned from that fabulous base. There is not a word of truth in that creed. We now know, positively, that it is a falsehood from first to last and that the men who made it did not receive a commission to preach a definite gospel, because they subscribed to belief. Men do not say, "We believe" WHEN THEY KNOW! This settles the question forever; let the Catholic Church refute me if it can! I am not saying that I believe the Catholic Church is in error, I say that it is—in error; it has falsely claimed to be the only true church of the Living God, and that it cannot now make its claim good. Either the man who invented the fables upon which the Apostles' Creed is based was inspired, or the man who wrote it was. No man could write about that which no one ever saw unless he was inspired, no more than Dante could write his Inferno or Milton his Paradise Lost. The Catholic Church does not seem to think that there are intelligent people in the world watching its every move to extricate itself from the difficulties which now attend it. If the Pope is the interpreter of revelation as Cardinal Gibbons says, why has he appointed a commission to solve the doubts and perplexities caused by the higher critics in regard to the truth of the Bible? If he has the gift of infallibility as is claimed, he would soon silence the higher critics and every one else. The fact is, he knows no more about the Bible than any other Biblical scholar, and the proof is in his silence now and in the appointment of that investigating commission. The end of that great delusion is come at last and let the world rejoice, because something far better will be put in its place—the horrid nightmare of all those dark centuries is now shook off and thousands will soon be awake to the irrefutable fact. The Catholic Church is refuted, also, in its statement that God can't inspire fable by the following scripture: II. Thess. 2-11, "God shall send them strong delusion that they should believe a lie." This was certainly fulfilled, for the great delusion we certainly have had in the Christian religion, which is based upon the Apostles' Creed, and not upon the gospel of Jesus.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

Of a Worker In the Cause of Spiritualism.

Oscar A. Edgerly, one of the youngest but well-known workers for the cause of Spiritualism, was born in New York City, Nov. 4, 1863. His parents were of the old Puritanic stock, his father being a native of New Hampshire, his mother of Maine. When Mr. Edgerly was about eight years of age his parents changed their residence from New York to Newburyport, Mass. His parents being church members, he was at this time placed in the Sunday-school of the Belleville Congregational church, and here it was that he first began to manifest those subtle intuitive attributes that were later recognized as the direct influence of decarnated spirits.

Although at this time he was very young he became conspicuous in the school for his agnostic tendencies, this state of things continuing until the age of twelve, when he refused longer to submit to parental control, as far as religion was concerned, and declared his independence by refusing longer to attend Sunday-school.

The twelfth year proved to be an important and critical one in the life of Mr. Edgerly. Heretofore it had been the intention of his parents to give him at least as good an education as the public schools of the city would afford, and they even hoped to be able to afford him a collegiate education, which up to this time his father's prosperity had seemed to warrant, but at this time came reverses in business, which compelled changes as regarded plans for the future; so at his earnest solicitation his parents gave a reluctant consent for him to leave school in order to go to work, and thus try to be a help rather than a burden to parents already overweighted with care, and by so doing he terminated an education limited to the branches taught in the grammar school. After leaving school Mr. Edgerly was employed at various occupations until 1881, when he finally settled down to learn the silversmith trade, being employed with the Towle Manufacturing Co., of Newburyport, Mass. In the meantime, being of a naturally studious turn of mind, an omnivorous reader, and helped, as he believes, by the inspiration of his then unknown spirit guides, Mr. Edgerly, had made up in part for the lack of a systematic education by that which can be derived from a free public library by one who is an intelligent reader.

It was while employed as a silversmith that Mr. Edgerly's attention was first drawn to Spiritualism; it came about through a conversation held with a fellow artisan, who was an earnest Spiritualist. Having received what he could from this good friend, he determined to investigate Spiritualism as thoroughly as possible. In carrying out this determination he was confronted not only with the facts of its phenomena, but also with the grandeur of its pre-eminently natural philosophy, which appealing to his intuitive mind, led to full and unqualified conversion.

It now but remained for him to be mustered into the great army of mediumistic workers, in order to become an expounder of the philosophy he had learned to love.

At the time of his conversion to Spiritualism, Mr. Edgerly had no thought of becoming a medium even, much less that he would ever become a successful public worker; but the friends on the other side had their work to do, so in their own way they consummated their purpose.

It was on the evening of the 27th of June, 1885, that Mr. Edgerly was first entranced by his spirit guides, he having no premonition of what was to take place on this fateful evening; it was the first spiritual gathering he had ever attended other than those held in public halls; so sitting in a small circle, he was not expecting any manifestation, as far as he was personally concerned, when he was suddenly completely entranced. The spirits at this time were using his organism to foretell the work they would perform through his instrumentality. From this time his mediumistic development was carried on exactly as the guides foretold, until it became obvious that it was the desire of the guides that Mr. Edgerly devote his entire time and attention to his mediumistic work. This he has done for the last seventeen years, and has in this time so far won the appreciation of the Spiritualistic public as to find constant employment on the Spiritualistic rostrum. By being a faithful and conscientious ally of his spirit guides, Mr. Edgerly has won a most desirable recognition as an earnest, conscientious and eminently successful worker for the cause.

About four years ago Mr. Edgerly left the east as place of residence, and now makes Lima, Ohio, his headquarters.

Mr. Edgerly is now filling a five months engagement with the Toronto Spiritualist Association, where he is meeting with good success and is doing much good work for the cause of Spiritualism. He is an excellent and attractive speaker, his lectures are logical, analytical, entertaining, sound and conscientious throughout, and he should be kept constantly employed on the Spiritualistic rostrum. He has some open dates after May, and societies will do well to secure his services as early as possible. He may be addressed during April and May at No. 3 Classic avenue, Toronto, Canada.

A TRAIN OF THOUGHT

Started by Reading the "Evangelistic Notes" of Rev. Moses Hull.

The definition given by our Reverend friend, of the word Evangelist, differs in some essentials from the one given by Noah Webster. The Rev. Moses has ingloriously abbreviated Webster's definition by leaving out the words which really constitute the definition of the word evangelist. Webster gives two definitions, both of which should be considered in order to arrive at the true sense in which it is used in his title, "Evangelistic Notes." The Websterian definitions are as follows:

1. Evangelist, a writer of the history or doctrines, precepts, actions, life and death of our blessed Savior Jesus Christ.

2. A preacher or publisher of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Thus we see that to call himself an Evangelist simply because he preaches or proclaims tidings, is quite unallowable. If he is an evangelist, he preaches the gospel of Jesus Christ, and not of Spiritualism.

He likes the word Preacher. That is not strange in his case. It is connected with his earliest work for humanity; with the memory of his mother, who in his childhood gave him to the Lord and consecrated him to that work by her prayers. His liking for that word may also be owing to prenatal causes, and who can blame him for it?

He once tried to get rid of the title of Reverend. Yes, the writer well remembers but a few short years ago when in conversation, he stated his entire disapproval of Spiritualist lecturers assuming that title and of copying certain church customs which were then stealthily creeping in. He said that the whole business came from unworthy motives.

Let us analyze a little. Begin with the word Reverend, which has been adopted as a title "to distinguish those who wear it." It is a derivative word; its root revere, from the Latin revereor; re and reveor, to fear. This word then in its original language is simply an expression of fear, and in the English all the words derived from revere have the element of fear prominent in them. Webster gives it thus: "Reverend (a), A title of respect given to the clergy or ecclesiastics." And the clergy, who are they? Clergyman, a man in holy orders; a man regularly authorized to preach the gospel and administer its ordinances according to the forms and rules of any particular denomination of Christians.

And Webster says the application of this word (clergy) to ecclesiastics seems to have originated from the Old Testament denomination of the Priests. So the "Profession" which this word or title Reverend has "come to signify" is a Clergyman, an Ecclesiastic, a Priest! And the Spiritualists are the only body of men that I know of who are trying to steal this livery of the devil to serve heaven in.

By the way, the Devil, if we will consider him in that light, was a fine personification of the various phases and characteristics of expression along the lower planes of man's development. In the story where "Jesus was led up of the spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil." In one instance the devil taketh him up into the holy city and setteth him on the pinnacle of the temple; in another into an exceeding high mountain and showeth him all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, and saith unto him. All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me. Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan." Why, the foolish Jesus! Turned him right down, without considering his proposition. Now, if he had only waited a few years, and listened to that persuasive voice, he might have come to the dignity of a Reverend, maybe a Rt. Reverend or a Very Reverend, or might even have become a Holy Pontiff and lived in a palace and worn a high crown. Instead of all that, he remained only the plain Son of Man—son of the poor carpenter, and talked to the common people or whoever he pleased, without even the distinction of the title of Doctor or Professor, and he never accepted any crown at all except a crown of thorns.

And now by all means let us have back the old devil. The ecclesiastic structure is not complete without him. He always belongs with the Reverends. He makes good stock in trade for them. They would be badly crippled without him, and he cannot get along without them.

It needs but a very cursory glance at the history of the work of this "Profession" to show the appropriateness of this title of fear to the class of men to whom it was given. They were ever the most faithful and deadly ministers to the Powers of Darkness that have bound the groaning earth. The chains of ignorance and fear are of their forging, and their reign is not yet over—the work of the Reverends not yet complete.

The Priesthood of Spiritualism is in its incipient stage. It is now a little cloud that casts a light shadow over the fair sky of our early morning.

Silently and craftily a net is being woven to catch our glorious bird of mental and spiritual freedom, whose pinions first brought to earth the title-deeds of our emancipation from priestly rule. HARRIET E. STOCKEY.

Cleveland Women's School Vote.

In Cleveland, Ohio, 14,755 women registered to vote at the school election on April 7, and the press dispatches say that nearly every woman voted who had registered. In that city the head of the school system and a majority of the school officers are chosen biennially, leaving only a few unimportant officers to be elected in the intervening year. Hence on the off year the vote is always light, and the Anti-Suffragists every alternate year publish the figures of that year and the year previous, to prove that the interest of Cleveland women in the school ballot is declining. But their interest has almost doubled at each full election since the right was granted. In 1890, the registration of women was 2,738; in 1898, 5,648; in 1900, 9,160; and in 1902, 14,755. On the off years, 1897, 1899, and 1901, it was 250, 978 and 797 respectively.

This year breaks the record. For the first time, both Republican and Democratic women opened headquarters. The Cleveland Leader says:

"These two centers of campaign activity are the neatest, cleanest, and most attractive workshops a Cleveland campaign ever knew. All over the city the effects of women's advent into politics are being felt. Politics, especially school politics, has been taken into the homes instead of being left to the barrooms, workshops, street corners, offices and clubs."

The Republican women in Cleveland have taken part in school elections for some years, but this is the first time the Democratic women have organized.

Excellent to Die By.

It is always well to send forth kindly words, gentle thoughts, and feelings of compassion when one has passed to the realms of the immortals. All bitterness of feeling, all envy or jealousy is then banished, and thoughts all aglow with kindness and charity are manifested. The obituary is a most excellent place to gloss over most beautifully human character, and to bring out the good traits of the one who has passed from the material to the spiritual side of life.

During our many years of experience in connection with the Spiritualist papers we have noticed that in the obituaries published, all the good traits of the deceased stand forth prominently, while the palpable imperfections were carefully concealed under the cloak of what is commonly designated as "charity," and not brought forth for the critical scrutiny of the public. And it is well.

Not long ago two obituary notices were sent to this office by a prominent speaker. They were chockful of extraordinary praise of the deceased, making them appear conspicuously as most beautiful and saintly characters, being devoted Spiritualists. On inquiry we found that they had never taken a Spiritualist paper of any kind, and were not in touch to any great extent with the Spiritualistic movement. Here were fulsome obituaries, extolling to the very skies the deceased, and making them appear more than human in everything connected with their earthly career. A little further inquiry revealed the fact that the one who officiated so gracefully and benignly at the funerals, giving words of angelic cheer to the bereaved mourners, was not himself a reader or patron of the Spiritualist papers. This incident called our attention to the fact that while among a certain few the Spiritualist paper is not in active demand, yet when any of them passes to the realm above, then it becomes most excellent to die by, and their highly glossed, extravagantly worded obituary must be spread before our readers.

We are led to this line of thought on account of the large number of obituary notices sent to this office of those who are not patrons of any of the Spiritualist papers, illustrating the fact that they serve a good purpose in glossing over human frailties by giving them a most brilliant send-off, greatly enlarging all their good traits of character, while those otherwise are kept securely in the background. Of this we do not seriously complain, only it is hardly fair for any one to wait until death in order to have a free obituary notice of their demise published, thus "dead"-heading in their last moments. Why not, Spiritualists, subscribe for a Spiritualist paper at once, so that in ending your career on this plane you do not, in earthly parlance, really become a "dead-head" exactly when your obituary is published.

We are inclined to believe, after a careful and critical review of the situation, that the Spiritualist who is a constant patron of one or more of the Spiritual papers during his natural life, and then has his obituary published in the same, and his noble qualities mentioned, with perhaps a verse of poetry appended thereto, will, on presenting the same to "St. Peter at the Gate," be admitted into Paradise at once without further questioning; otherwise his salvation at an early date may not be assured.

A Letter from Bombay.

J. A. Balfour, Esq., writing from Bombay, India, on March 22, says:

"We have the plague here still, and it shows no sign of abatement. It has already destroyed hundeds of thousands of lives, and I am afraid it has come to stay. This is the sixth or seventh epidemic. The poor natives are the principal sufferers, and die by thousands. It began in this city of ours, and has spread throughout India. It subsides in hot weather, and begins again in the winter. Halfkine's serum inoculation is very successful as a prophylactive, but the natives do not take kindly to the remedy. They put it all down to fate, or 'kismit,' as they call it. Rats are the principal carriers of the infection.

"Just now the plague is at its hight, but it will decrease, and almost die out by June or July, when we get rains lasting to the end of September."

Mr. Balfour is an Englishman, and he adds:

"We have the South African war still hanging on. It is a fearful strife, and has caused the death of many brave men on each side. When will such matters be settled by arbitration? I am fearful we have taken on our hands a matter that will take years to settle, though Buller thought it could be done in six months. It is already three years."

Probably our British friends will reach the conclusion his ancestors did, when they tried to subordinate our own America to their power. Any country held in subjection by military force is not worth possessing. Spain learned that to her sorrow. Great Britain will do the same; and the future will tell what will be American experience as regards the Filipinos.

Christening Cats and Babies.

It appears from the Chicago Tribune that New York society has found a new diversion. This time it is a Cat Christening which has been introduced to the smart set of Gotham by Mrs. Anita Comfort, the musical composer and wife of Lieutenant Charles D. Comfort, who recently returned from the Philippines. By "smart set" is meant those who are surcharged with vanity, false pretensions as to ability, and who depend on gold for prominence, and who have but little real intellectual worth to bank on.

The Cat Christening is the most absolutely new thing in New York society and in novelty it surpasses the donkey party known to fame and Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, the "looking backward" dance, or the vegetable entertainment, all of which are dear to New York's Four Hundred. These four hundred are about as far from common sense in some respects as the incoherent mumbling of an idiot.

Naturally the first requirement for a Cat Christening is a Cat, and it must be a young Cat to which a name has not been officially attached. Then there must be godfathers and godmothers, one of each for each Cat to be Christened. Next in line comes the minister or whoever may be selected to say the ceremony. With these assistants any society woman can have a Cat Christening, but the real success of the event depends largely upon the ingenuity of the hostess in providing entertainment for her guests.

For her divine and highly spiritualizing Cat Christening Mrs. Comfort sent to the choicer and most Christian spirits of her large acquaintance postal cards on which were sketched in ink two large beautiful eyes, beneath which was the date of the affair. To the initiated the eyes meant "looking for you." Mrs. Comfort had two transcendentally beautiful kittens, and one was dignified with the name of Punch while the other was Christened Judy.

"I called them Punch and Judy merely because I liked the names," Mrs. Comfort said in explaining the somewhat undignified titles that she affixed to her pets.

There were two highfalutin godfathers and two virile godmothers, and the Christening ceremony consumed some little of God's precious time on which, however, there was no charge. After it was over Judy went through the most startling experience of her young life. Her ears were artistically pierced by six highly educated and wealth-pampered young physicians numbered among the guests and a pair of screw diamond earrings were presented to her. At the conclusion of the grave function the guests played pingpong and the thing wound up with a christianizing and highly spiritualizing cake walk.

"Judy is not the first Cat to which I have given ear-rings," said Mrs. Comfort. "Several years ago, when traveling in California, I saw a Cat in a San Francisco theater with tassels in its ears. It looked too pretty for anything, and I decided then and there that when I returned to St. Louis I would have my Cat's ears pierced.

"I got a darning needle and a cork when I returned. It took four people to pierce my Cat's ears. First we put on gloves to make us as pawproof as possible. Then we wrapped pussy up in a sack, all but his head, and while three of us held him a gentleman punctured his ears with a darning needle, using the cork as a background.

"Did he cry? Well, he did scream vociferously and pleadingly when he saw the blood dropping from the holes, but he behaved in a manlier, or perhaps Catlier, manner than I expected.

"I had a hard time getting the earrings, for jewelers seemed scarcely to believe me when I said I wanted diamonds for my Cat. But in the end one of them did not object to making a fair profit at my expense."

Mrs. Comfort's unique entertainment was as sublimely Catty as could have been wished. She had Cat favors for the cake walk, among them being black Cat calendars ornamented with black velvet Cats.

Is it not about time that the ridiculous farce of Christening Cats and the divinely beautiful babies be relegated to the rear as attic rubbish, unworthy of this the 20th century. The Christening of a Cat is supremely ridiculous, a piece of idiotic folly, while the Christening of babes is simply a relic of barbarism, of no benefit to the child here or hereafter, and reflecting no credit on Spiritualism.

Where We Stand.

The time may come when Spiritualism can concentrate her forces into a mighty power for good. The hand of time points us in that direction as we try to sum up the achievements of Spiritualism. We have spent much time in showing to the world the errors of the church and preaching of the beauties of our own beloved cause, and the world is beginning to see the errors of Spiritualism, in fact have been kept pretty busy pointing out such errors, and we are referred to one in the form of a very grave fact: That we have spent too much time in words and too little in deeds.

First of all we had to have a membership and that membership had to be organized into bands of workers. This had to be brought about with great care, for, as a whole, we are sensitives; some have joined us from the ranks of orthodoxy, some from materialism; some from all the sciences and some from the spheres of ignorance; and many from the commercial or business plane. The impostors have demanded our attention, along with everything else, and so weighted us down with troubles of our own that the needed work of the world has to some extent been neglected.

When we undertake to draw the lines of organization around our people, in an effort to bring them together as a unit, we find such a diversity of opinions upon the various points both relevant and irrelevant to the main issue, we find so many who wish to be entirely free from all lines that they even oppose organization. They are sincere and honorable as the other fellows, but will not unite, and oppose any attempt to organize. But we have organized just the same and are getting in pretty good working order.

If we paused in our onward march to throw stones in some one's front yard; if we paused because some would have us pause, our best work would be retarded. We never expect to wholly unite in one organization, but if we can keep together upon the thought of the Brotherhood of Man, that will help us to build educational institutions and homes for the aged, the poor and the invalids in our ranks.

It is well to maintain a national organization through which to come in touch with the world, and through which to transact business with the people, as a means of gaining prestige and standing with similar institutions in life, and as a fixture we should have a home. All these things we now have and the world, the laws of man, are beginning to realize our permanency, our importance among all bodies whose motives and objects are for the upliftment of mankind.

Injustice to Spiritualists.

Our readers had the pleasant information editorially placed before them last week that an Indiana court, in direct contrast with a recent decision in Pennsylvania, has decided a Spiritualist will case in favor of the disposition of property as indicated in the will by the Spiritualist maker thereof.

This decision marks a pronounced turn in the tenor of court decisions as affecting Spiritualists and their wills. It indicates the opening of a new era as relates to Spiritualists and their rights under the laws of the States.

There has been, and still is, too much of the unjust and proscriptive spirit manifested more especially by municipalities, under the influence of sectarian bigotry and intolerance.

It must not be forgotten, however, that much excuse for this intolerance and injustice has been given, by the shameless frauds that have been practised in the name and guise of Spiritualism, by persons claiming to be mediums.' The arrant deceptions and trickery, under various forms and phases, carried on by so-called mediums, has quite naturally cast suspicion and discredit, in the general public mind, on everything bearing the name of Spiritualism. The ill-doings of the dishonest and the impostor, have brought the genuine and honest mediums under the ban equally with the fraudulent pretenders. The innocent are made to suffer for the evil deeds of the guilty.

The epidemic of fraud is widespread. It is by no means confined to Spiritualism alone. It permeates to-day all kinds of business. The liquor dealer concocts and compounds vile liquors, poisonous as well as health-and-reason-destroying. Articles of food consumption are adulterated and even made poisonous. Manufacturers make shoddy goods of various kinds. Cheating is the real vocation of many a firm whose sign advertises a legitimate and honorable business. Religion and politics bring up the rear of the ignoble procession—linked together in a common brotherhood of deception, trickery and fraud unmentionable.

As Spiritualism presents a wide field for the practice of the arts of the impostor and deceiver, it is not to be expected that it will escape the epidemic infection of dishonesty everywhere prevalent. So, sad to say, there are those who, for the sake of the paltry dollar, will sell honor and their souls' virtue.

But the prevalence of dishonesty in others is no excuse for those who practice fraud in the name of Spiritualism.

Spiritualism is in its nature so sacred and holy and pure a thing, that to counterfeit it, morally considered, is a most heinous crime against humanity and all its sacred relationships.

And the persons morally guilty of this crime, these vicious practices in the name of Spiritualism, are responsible for the legal persecutions and injustice so prevalent against Spiritualists and Spiritualism.

The Boston Idea of Sunday.

As set forth in an article in the Chicago Tribune, there are some people who like to live in Boston, but even they must have been a bit discouraged last Sunday. The Boston Sunday laws are curious to read. They must be still more curious to experience. For instance, one must not sell these things: Candy, fruit, soda water, bread, meat. Nevertheless, under certain restrictions, which are easily surmounted, one is allowed to sell malt liquors, vinous liquors, spirituous liquors, cigars. When such regulations are kept on the statute books for the benefit of antiquaries they have an undoubted value. When they are resuscitated and begin to walk up and down and to and fro they affect one as disagreeably as the dead men in the Rime of the Ancient Mariner.

In the first place, they are part and parcel of the Puritan Sunday. No other race in Christendom has had such a Sunday. The Italians have never had it. The Germans have never had it. The Scandinavians have never had it. It was left to the English Puritans to insist upon regarding the first day of the week as the Hebrew Sabbath and to turn a day of worship and innocent enjoyment into a day of worship and gloomy ugliness. For that service the Puritans have received as much praise as Cadmus for his letters or Prometheus for his fire. Yet of all services that they rendered to humanity their Sunday was surely the least. It still warps and hardens the characters of hundreds of thousands of people.

In the second place, if the intention of the law was to put a stop to unnecesssary work on Sunday (which, when looked at from the physical rather than the religious point of view, is not a bad intention), it seems odd, "most powerful odd," that the rigor of the enactment should be exercised upon candy and soda water, while liquors and cigars are treated with tender consideration. Last Sunday there was no way in Boston of buying ice cream soda. There was an easy way of buying high balls. All one had to do was to go to a "hotel" and order up a sandwich which was likely to look "too good to eat." When one thinks of these hotel sandwiches it does not seem impossible that five thousand men might be fed with five loaves and two fishes. The case then was this, in honor of the Lord's day the city of Boston closed up practically all its places of business except cigar stands and hotel-saloons.

The natural question arises: Why? The answer of the fanatic is: "Because it is the duty of municipal officers to enforce all the laws on the statute books." It is not the duty of municipal officers to enforce regulations affecting personal conduct which the people have outgrown, regulations which were in conformity with public sentiment when first put into effect, but which do not reflect public sentiment at this time.

It is not the duty of municipal officers to insist upon obsolete laws, the enforcement of which irritates and exasperates the people by interfering with their innocent amusements or habits of life which are inoffensive when measured by the standard of this age. A law which forbids the sale of soda water on Sunday is a bad, sumptuary law and should not be enforced. The municipal officer who enforces the law or kindred laws is only seeking to make it odious. But he makes himself odious at the same time.

The Brotherhood of Light.

"The Brotherhood of Light" has applied to the State authorities of Colorado for a charter for religious and educational purposes. This Brotherhood has been working for a year and a half in Denver doing humanitarian work. The means to carry on its work is furnished by the labor of its members. It seeks no charity. It owns thirty acres of fine irrigated land near the city. Its work is conducted in a large modern house.

The object of the Brotherhood of Light is to improve the physical, mental and moral conditions of the people. They are gathering up orphans and castaway babies. They are nursing them in comfort, harmony and love, and are training them in the arts and sciences to become useful, self-supporting citizens. They will be taught the sacredness of the marriage relation. No member of this Brotherhood is permitted to marry more than once. The marriage relation may cease from any cause, but the couple are not permitted to marry again.

The children are taught that all people on earth are the children of the Creator, The All Light, and that His Eye is ever upon them.

The members are aware that all things belong to the Creator, and are loaned to his children for their use while on earth. All things are owned in common.

The Brotherhood of Light holds that life is continuous; we lay it down at death and take it up again without the corporeal body. For a time we are bound to the conditions lived by us on the earth. It holds that like attracts like; that a clean, noble life, with high motives will attract angels willing to bring about better conditions on the earth.

The Brotherhood subsists wholly upon grains, vegetables, fruits, nuts and hygienic ailments; bathe daily, and devote their lives to raising up helpless babes. They practice moderation in all things.

They believe that a new revelation, Oahspe, is sent to guide the people for another cycle. That the wide-spread and rapid advancement in civilization during the past fifty years, proves that such a cycle is upon us; that a new race of men is to be raised who will live together as brothers; that no especial leaders henceforth will appear at this time as they did in the past; that the light is general, and will fall upon all who will accept it; that this revelation gives the history of man upon the earth for thousands of years, and clears up mysteries upon earth and in heaven. It explains what heaven means and where the heavens are located; that there is no eternal punishment; that eternal justice abounds; that all suffer for wrongdoing, and suffer their bondages in the bound-heavens of the earth; that none are entirely freed until they have worked out those bondages by doing justice to all and helping others to rise.

They avow that angels teach them these truths, and inspire them that the quickest way to rise to the emancipated heavens in Etheren, is to take little children and raise them under ideal conditions and teach them to do the same for others, and thus in time the world will be redeemed from poverty and error.

The Brotherhood has two branches, an Outer Council, with headquarters at 251 Woodward avenue, Detroit, Mich. This branch organizes lodges, handles correspondence and teaches members.

The Inner Council is at Denver, Col., postoffice box 682. It cares for the children, and its members live communally. They devote their time to the work.

They will locate a large tract of land in one of the fertile valleys of Colorado, where they will establish a large colony of workers.

The Prophetic Parson.

Once upon a time, says the Kansas City Star, a bad boy threw stones at a country preacher. The preacher predicted that the lad would grow up and turn out a convict. The minister afterwards abandoned the pulpit to take up the life insurance business, and finally landed in the penitentiary. The former bad boy became Governor of the State, and, remembering the preacher's prophecy that he would some day turn out a convict, he pardoned him out.

Strange meanings in the words we say. Fate puts, in a mysterious way.

Golden Jubilee, 1852--1902.

The First Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia will celebrate its Golden Jubilee in the Temple, Twelfth and Thompson streets, May 11, 12, 13 and 14, 1902.

The First Association of Spiritualists, being the oldest organization of Spiritualists in the world, having held continuous meetings for half a century has decided to celebrate this jubilee year by holding a four days' meeting. Noted speakers, mediums, workers and musicians will assist, which will insure an interesting programme.

All Spiritualists in Philadelphia and vicinity should take pride in celebrating this occasion under its auspices. It seems eminently proper that the Fiftieth anniversary of this veteran association should receive the special attention of all Spiritualists.

The Progressive Lyceum and Band of Mercy, the Twentieth Century Sunflower Club, and the Woman's Progressive Union, will also hold special sessions during these meetings.

"The Wounds of a Friend Are Faithful."

One who is nominally an outsider perhaps ought not to force his opinions to the front upon matters pertaining to another family circle than his own. Let my apology for so doing be my sincere regard for the views of some closely related to me by ties of nature as well as a secret hope that you Spiritualists are really in the right. My business carries me into various and widely separated sections of our country. In all the important centers I manage to find some time for turning my eyes towards the manifestations of mediumship. I taboo no single phase—all are welcome, if uplifting. Thoughtful intermingling with laymen and mediums has stamped some sad lessons upon my mentality.

You have in your ranks too many people who do not care to have your cause purified and made respectable. Just as in days of the Anti-Masonic party in my native state, that cry was "a good enough Morgan" until after election, so you have those who are willing to abet, if not openly practice, trickery in order to induce people to accept Spiritualism.

That class of converts is poor material for the upbuilding of any cause, be it sacred or secular. Sooner or later their eyes become open to the deception perpetrated upon them and they either become indifferent through disgust, or else begin doing the same deception as accomplices or principals.

The class of people to whom I have referred are opposed to every movement for organization, because they know that of right their own scalps should be among the first trophies laid upon the altar of unity and purity. Hence you will find them attacking by covert insinuation and secret innuendo those fearless workers who will not besmirch their characters by swearing on call that black is white and filth is wholesome.

Too many are contented on the plane of belittling jealousy and dwarfing personal antipathies. Weed them out. Get rid of them—they drop seed and only produce themselves in kind.

Your physical phenomena has been almost wholly appropriated by fakirs. As it now stands, very little of it is worthy of the least attention, or outlay. I have failed thus far to find a single one of its mediums whom I have not had reason to believe at some time stooped to basely supplement the genuine.

My investigations lead me to the conclusion that occurrences of genuine etherealization or materialization are very infrequent—when real they come only spontaneously and can not be produced at the medium's will. Exhibition of a dollar or hope to secure one cannot create them. Look for the real thing, when it occurs, at private and home circles instead of at commercial seances. Purify your phenomena. Spiritualize your people.

Your mediums who begin helping out the spirits in their work soon have to do it all by mortal aid, because they lose their power to give anything genuine. Some of the very elect in your ranks are being fooled by one phase or another of physical phenomena. This I am satisfied is not only true of The Progressive Thinker's home city, but of your most prominent camps.

Wake up! Wake up! Do not allow what you have of reality to become buried under continuous vaudeville entertainments, or the illusions of magicians. Save your clairvoyance, your psychometry, your clairaudience, your inspiration, from contamination. Bury the nonsense inspired by gain. Ability to sometimes give the genuine is the very reason against allowing any other kind.

WANDERER.

FROM THE N. S. A.

One More Appeal, and Statement.

This is now April 18, and I wish to inform all who are interested in having a genuine Mediums' Home soon established, such as our Spiritualists have been asking for ever since I can remember, and pointing to the various eleemosynary institutions of the churches as a matter of reproach to Spiritualism and its people that we have none such to show, just how much we have raised to date, in response to the generous offer of two Spiritualists to give fifteen hundred dollars to this work if the country at large would give as much. At my last report we had received in money, excepting the two Columbian half dollars not yet disposed of, the entire sum of $204.25. Since then we have secured $77 as follows: G. W. Beesley, $5; M. E. Arnold, $1; Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Vorhauer, $5; H. C. Hermsmeyer, $2; Alfred Joslin, $1; Mrs. S. Merrill, $1; "Dick," $25; J. Gulwits, $1; Cleveland receipts of anniversary, per J. C. Hemmeter, $27.16; J. F. Bassett, $2; Mrs. M. E. England, $2; Mrs. A. E. Morrill, $5.

This makes in cash received since the call went out for fifteen hundred dollars for the home, to be secured by May 1, $281.41. We have also secured from Mrs. H. Zeigler, two pillow slips, one table cover and one side-board cover. What we have pledged to us by the good friends upon whom we can always rely will perhaps come to between one hundred and two hundred dollars more, and the first of May is close at hand.

We again ask the friends of mediums who have not contributed to this fund to do so at once; we are glad to accept any donation, indeed, the offerings of the poor are much more numerous than those of the rich, and we know they are sent with a blessing, and are received as such. If the requisite sum is not in this office the first of May, I feel that it will be a sad blow to the best workers of and donors to this project, and that it will conclusively show that the majority of Spiritualists do not care whether the worn-out mediums are cared for or not. The N. S. A. has already in the sanitarium of Dr. Spinney, one of the best known speakers of the West, a good woman and a good medium. Her case is hopeless, she may live a few months, or she may pass on at any time. She is a sensitive, and asks that her name be not mentioned at present, but the N. S. A. is paying for her care and board, and she is receiving the best, for which Dr. Spinney is charging but half, or less, of regular rates.

If this is not a good work, we are at a loss to know what is, and we again beg those who have not as yet sent to us, to do so as soon as possible. Ten dollars sent me from "An Investigator" is not to be credited to this Home Fund, as the brief note reads as if it is to be put into our General Fund, which is always being called on for missionary and current expenses.

Concerning our will matters, the case of Wm. Case, of Lafayette, Ind., is—so far—settled in our favor, since the will has been sustained by the court. We were told by Caldwell & Caldwell, of that city, that the portion willed to the N. S. A. would amount to about thirty-five hundred dollars; we have already expended a thousand dollars on this case; what the N. S. A. will receive when all is settled can not now be told. The McIlroy will case of Philadelphia, is to be carried, we understand, to the Superior Court; the N. S. A. proposes to stand by it, and to do all in its power to strengthen the Philadelphia Spiritualists who are fighting to have the will sustained. In other cases, this association has expended money without return. This association is badly needed in our cause, and should be sustained by sympathy and financial aid.

RELIGION OF MAN AND ETHICS OF SCIENCE BY HUDSON TUTTLE

We take extreme pleasure in announcing that our next Premium Book will be by Hudson Tuttle, and will bear the above title. It is one of the best books that ever emanated from the pen of this gifted man and will fill a most important niche in the list of premiums sent out by this office. It will be neatly and substantially bound in cloth, and will be sent out for 25 cents, postage and express prepaid, to those who send in their subscription for one year for The Progressive Thinker, making it almost a gift to our subscribers. Orders will now be filed for it, and it will be forwarded as soon as printed and bound, which will be in about three weeks. Until June 1, that remarkable book, A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands, will also be sent out for 25 cents. For prices of the other Premium Books, see special announcement. No other bookseller, no other firm on this globe of ours ever furnished books at so low a price (almost a gift) as The Progressive Thinker. We have been instrumental in founding the nucleus of a grand Spiritualistic and Occult library in thousands of homes. Now is the time to send in your subscription.

FOOLISH CRUELTY.

The Destruction of the Birds.

To Mr. William T. Hornaday, of the Geological Park, New York, the world owes an immense debt of gratitude. Mr. Hornaday is trying to save the birds; and whether he succeeds or not the attempt that he is making in that direction is enough to endear him to every one who is not altogether commercialized and brutalized.

That the time has come for such action as that which is being undertaken by Mr. Hornaday will appear by the fact that the birds are rapidly disappearing from the land.

It is as true as anything in the world that there are only about one-quarter as many wild birds in the United States as there were fifteen years ago.

Reports from New York show that in the last decade and a half bird life in that State has decreased 48 per cent. In the same period the decrease in the State of Maine has been 52 per cent; in Indiana, 60 per cent; in Connecticut, 75 per cent; in Florida, 90 per cent.

In other States, owing to certain conditions which it is not now necessary to mention, the record is not so bad, but everywhere the tendency is the same, and the fact that the birds are disappearing is true, to a greater or less extent, of the entire country.

From Plymouth Rock to the Golden Gate and from the Gulf to the St. Lawrence a mighty army of soulless, brainless amateur hunters is steadily engaged in destroying every species of flying creature that comes within the range of its murderous guns. Thoughtlessly, and by no means on "murder bent," these thousands and tens of thousands of men and boys destroy each year millions of birds "just for fun," just to pass away an unoccupied day! They have a little time at their disposal, and instead of reading some good book or going out to study the silent speech of Nature, they sally forth to shoot everything that crosses their path!

But the destruction done by the army of amateurs is but a drop in the bucket in comparison with the havoc that is worked by the calculating, cold-blooded rascals who, in a spirit of sordid gain, go forth to ply their execrable trade of plume-hunting and nest-robbing.

If Dante were living in these days, and should be moved to write another "Inferno," he would doubtless place within the innermost and hottest circle of his hell these same collectors of birds' eggs and hunters of plumes. Nor would the poet forget to include within the same circle the senseless, soulless, heartless throng of women, young and old, who by their foolish vanity and worse than barbarian hardness of heart are responsible for the whole iniquitous business.

Between the thoughtless men and boys who go "a-hunting" just for the fun of the thing and the tuft hunters and the egg stealers the bird life of our country is rapidly disappearing, and if the present pace is kept up it will not be long before our feathered friends will be all exterminated.

Against this slaughter of the birds the argument of utility might be advanced. It might be shown that in destroying the birds we are destroying our best helpers in the fields of agriculture and horticulture, and that with the departure of the birds the fruits and grain upon which the very life of man depends would be materially jeopardized, but it is not necessary to use this argument here. There is a higher and a nobler argument—the moral one.

By the moral argument I do not refer to the unquestioned fact that the birds have the same right to LIVE that we have. I make no account here of the modern conception of the sacredness of life—of all life, bird life as well as human—I go further and ground my protest against the slaughter of the birds upon the NATURE of the bird itself and its relation to our own higher selves.

Next to man the bird is the most spiritual of all creatures. Its office is to make music for the world.

A famous European ornithologist declares that it is necessary for us to perceive that the bird "has a soul and is a person," and if it is true that music is the expression of the highest fact in the universe the soundness of the ornithologist's declaration is not to be questioned, for in the birds' throat is the original fountain of song and home of melody. As another has said, "No throat can contend with that of the lark in richness and variety of song," and we may add the thrush, the mocking bird, the bobolink, and hundreds of others almost equally sweet, though not so well known to fame.

And shall the mean spirit of gain, assisted by the thoughtlessness of sportsmen and the vanity of foolish, simpering womankind, be allowed to forever hush this music, closing the millions of melodious throats in death? Shall the old earth be stripped of its song and humanity be left with nothing but its cold-blooded selfishness and greed? The world is miserable enough even with the songs of the birds to cheer it up; what will it be when those songs are forever silenced and no music is left but that of the clink of the dollars and the rumble of the factories?

In the name of the beautiful and the good, in the name of the SOUL OF THINGS, which is far above all material values; in the name of the joy and gladness of the generations who are to come after us upon this old grit ball, let us protest against this steady, senseless, unnecessary and cruel slaughter of our friends the birds.—Rev. Thomas B. Gregory in Chicago American.

The New Camp.

Chicago Spiritualists who are already planning their summer's outing, should not overlook the New camp of the Wisconsin State Association. Traveling expenses for the visit are very reasonable. The round trip rate to Milwaukee by the most expensive line of steamers is one dollar and fifty cents, and the fare from Milwaukee to Waukesha by electric cars is only twenty-five cents each way, so that two dollars will cover the entire outlay of transportation.

Waukesha with a population of 7,500, is the largest city on the direct line from the Cream City to Madison and is noticeable for its tasty homes, substantial business blocks and creditable state institutions. Its famous springs are said to attract at one time as high as ten thousand people from abroad during the summer season, all of the well-to-do-class. Their waters are free to visitors with one exception, where five cents admission is charged and a regular concert programme furnished patrons.

I learned on a flying trip through this familiar section of Badger territory that the site chosen for the camp embraces fifteen acres of well wooded land inside the city's limits. The small river which bears the town's name is near by, while a ten-minute trolley ride brings one to the bathing, boating and fishing privileges of Powaukee Lake. Tent facilities will be obtainable for all who wish to camp out, while the aged and delicate can doubtless find accommodations in adjacent private homes.

Rambles and rides innumerable over well wooded hills, excellent roads and through a finely improved farming section are not the least of the attractions.

Mrs. Stewart and her official associates have chosen an important center for summer missionary work. Good business ability will lead them to make haste slowly and surely. May success financial and spiritual attend their movement. I shall watch with interest for their attractions of talent secured.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

H. E. P., Mason, Ill.: Q. What about Mr. Charles Dawbarn's "Aural Self?"

A. If the explanation Mr. Dawbarn gives at such length of the "Aural Self" is not comprehended by his readers, he will probably answer this question. If he cannot, it would be presuming for this department to make the attempt.

Geo. Lancey: Q. Which has been the greatest factor in bring western civilization to its present status—is it Christianity, as its adherents claim, or is it the superior intellect and necessities of the races?

A. Dr. Draper's "Intellectual Development of Europe," or the "Warfare Between Science and Theology," by Andrew D. White, exhaustively answer these questions and leave little more to be said. The claim that Christianity has assisted western civilization, is like that of claiming for a millstone tied to the neck of a swimmer that it supports him. He may by his strength bear it up, and reach the shore. Mankind has had this millstone to carry and so strong and persistent has been its efforts that it has carried the burden. The civilization of Greece and of Rome were gained without the Christian religion, and for purity of morals, magnanimous and righteous lives, examples can be found in Grecian and Roman history equal to any of modern times. The luxury and riot of the Augustan age, in which Christianity is said to have began, does not compare with the lust and extravagance, waste and idiotic pleasures of the money barons of the 1900 years of Christianity. Vitellus, Nero, might have drank costly wines, and dined on peacock tongues, but they never had dinners costing five hundred dollars a plate, or gave swell suppers spread with cut glass and gold for their poodles!

The splendid civilization of Greece and Rome went down, not before the barbarian hordes of the North, but before the priests of the new religion. For a thousand years Europe was under the spell of a religion which made ignorance and filth a badge of holiness. The awakening came, and timidly Galileo said the world moved, and Bruno that there were other worlds than this. Then Christianity hurled the former into a dungeon, the latter burned at the stake. It clutched mankind by the throat, and forbade the thinking of new thoughts. It burned the thinkers by the thousands and hundreds of thousands. It cast them into dungeons, it invented instruments too devilish in their design to tear, torture, and agonize, to bear description. To the present time, it has met every new thought with antagonism. When slavery dominated this nation, not a preacher in this broad land, north or south, in cathedral, or barn-like church at a country four-corners, but preached slavery, and proved it from God by the Bible. When intemperance threatened to destroy the national life, the preachers had no word against the rum-maker or seller, but drank their glass of grog for "the stomach's sake," supporting themselves by the Bible. Later they were forced to join the ranks of temperance by the pressure brought to bear on them by independent organizations.

They have fought woman's rights tooth and nail, quoting pages of Bible, to show that she is an inferior being, with no rights her husband is bound to respect. They have made a dual morality, one kind for man, another for woman, and she is now, indeed the stimulus of the new thought, escaping from the bondage of a thousand years, in which she has been held under the sanction of this religion, and gaining the nobility and independence, the strength of body and mind enjoyed by the women of Greece and Rome.

Every science has had to run the gauntlet of this religion. Astronomy with its evidences of the existence of other worlds, had to be "reconciled," with theology. The flat world with its four corners, the sun and moon going around it as a center, had to be explained! Geology with its evidences of countless millions of years for the earth, instead of 6,000 years, had to be "reconciled," a reconciliation which at last came to theology making the pitiable explanation, that six days meant six indefinite periods of time, millions of years in each, but the seventh being Sunday was just an ordinary day, and though God was completely exhausted and had to rest, after six such million of year days, a twenty-four hour day was enough to rest up, and hence Sabbath day must be kept free from labor by man!

The theory of evolution was met in the same spirit. Not a preacher in the land but took a fling at Darwin, and got off the old joke about monkey grandfathers. In a generation, they have seen the views of the scientific world make a complete change and everything become new. Creation is not even talked about, outside the circle of theologians. But they are persistent. They and their religion have been a brake to the wheels of progress, and held back the struggling engine. Now they cry, "See our work! All our work! If it were not for our religion the people would be savages!"

In reply it may be said, The Christian religion came in the midst of the grandest civilization of the ancient world. By every means it sought and gained power, and at last held Europe in chains. It destroyed the manuscripts recording the sublime thoughts of the philosophers, the histories, the poems; it put the monk clad in rags, the flagellant, the cowled priest in place of the great instructors; made begging a mark of sainthood; gave the ignorant and plotting priest the power of life and death, and infliction of eternal tortures over the laity, and so well did the leaders of this religion ply their trade, that they owned not only the souls of men, but the lands and their belongings became the property of the church. There is where fifteen hundred years of this unmitigated religion landed mankind. With this religion, there is where the nations of the west would be to-day, for this religion has never originated an idea, never produced a new invention. It boasts of its infallibility; that it is the same yesterday, to-day and forever.

"B.": Q. I awaken at 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning, and cannot get to sleep again. How can sleep be induced?

A. Retire at a later hour, after first taking a warm bath; avoid stimulants of any kind, especially the later part of the day. If the appetite craves, a light lunch before retiring will be advantageous. Have your sleeping apartment made in every way comfortable, that when you get to sleep you will not be interrupted or aroused. When continuous sleep has been gained, return by degrees to your present habit.

W. L. A. Q. Alfalfa is advertised as a wonderful nutrient and medicine for building up the system. Red clover blossom tea is also recommended. What is the opinion of the higher intelligences as to their value?

A. Alfalfa belongs to the clover family, and whatever remedial virtues it may have exist in the red clover blossoms in more intense form. As advertised as a "patent medicine," it is not to be recommended, as its virtues are all contained in the advertising. As an assistant to the secretory organs, red clover blossoms may be recommended as a mild excitant, and hence what is called a "blood purifier." Its full benefits are gained only by prolonged and constant use. For this purpose an infusion of the blossoms in spirits is preferable to steeping in boiling water, as by the first method the volatile aroma is preserved, while it is lost by the latter process.

Independent Spirit Message.

I sent a sealed letter to Annie Lord Chamberlain, of Milford, Mass., and through her mediumship (independent writing) received the following communication, from the spirit of my father, as a proof of a higher state of existence. It is to me, a very satisfactory one. ALLISON TRASK.

Rich Hill, Mo.

Dear Son:—I am happy to come here to-day to convince you of my love and interest. Is it not grand that the veil is so thin between the two worlds, and that we can exchange ideas and letters through a spiritual postoffice like this? The spirit world is as real to us, as your world is to you. We have cities here, like you, only more beautiful. We have trees, shrubs, flowers, everything you have, if we desire it. It was a glorious vision as I came to consciousness in spirit life. Everything was so beautiful and harmonious, far beyond anything I had conceived of, that I was in raptures of delight. I felt such a freedom. I had no longer to suffer or toil for the body, but we love to feel and know we have much to do for the loved ones left behind in the mortal form. Oh, how I want to open the door and let all my dear ones look in—but no, we have to obey laws of our being here. This life is only a prolongation of earth life—the leaving our bodies—the bursting of the chrysalis—the new birth. There are all grades here, dear Allison; these grades consist in the development of organizations, in the life that has been lived. Each individual has a distinct atmosphere of its own, and as we pass from one state of growth to another, we still retain our individuality. We are students here, do not learn from books, but through our visits to the different circles in each sphere. We visit other planets. All material worlds float in the spiritual world and were it not that the spirit world is more positive and real than the material world, all would be chaos and confusion with the planetary system, for the spirit world nourishes every planet, and gives through its emanations, to every one of them, their life and motion. This is what keeps all the planetary system so steadfast in their movements and places, and establishes and maintains such exact order in the universe. I have taken up more time and strength than I ought. I am glad to have had this opportunity to tell you a little of the spirit world. Think of me as with you often, and with deep spirit love for you and all who can accept it. Your father,

CHARLES W. TRASK.

GENERAL RESURRECTION.

All hail! the genial sun and showers
That wake to life the sod, and flowers
To clothe the naked fields and bowers
With nature's robes of splendor!
All hail! the warblers on the wing,
To welcome in the joyous spring;
How grand the choruses they sing;
How sweet the praise they render.

For life upon this earth so fair;
For blessings they with humans share,
Their grateful songs to heaven they bear
With voluntary pleasure!
The lilac soon will wave its plume
Triumphant o'er its winter tomb,—
And send abroad a sweet perfume
In overflowing measure!

All nature joins the glad refrain
When Old King Sol resumes his reign,
And northern climes revive again
With seeming "new creation!"
This "resurrection from the dead"
When sun and earth are newly wed;
Has to our "Easter service" led—
(An ancient celebration!)

The worship of the sun, and power
Contained in seeds of fruit and flower
And eggs, for nature's higher dower,—
(The life of sentient creatures!)
These vital germs from flower and tree
Were held as truest prophecy
For innate immortality
In all its varied features!

Those pagan rites from first to last
Are echoed from the misty past
And into other models cast
For Christian veneration!
Perverted from their true intent
And into error's channels bent
Their grand significance is spent
In senseless adoration!

IMPORTANT MATTER FROM OUR FOREIGN EXCHANGES

THE SPIRITUAL REVIEW, LONDON, ENGLAND.

THE DANGERS OF SPIRITUALISM.

Elsewhere in the issue of the Review will be found a review of a recently issued work on "The Dangers of Spiritualism," upon which, without intruding on the province of our reviewer, it is proposed to offer some observations here. What are the "dangers" we have to guard against? Let us include "disorderly mediumship," "obsession," "evil spirits," the recklessness or ignorant development and use of mediumship, the foolishness of the thoughtless, and the ignorance and viciousness of others, and we have a fairly formidable catalogue of dangers! But foolishness and viciousness were with us long before the advent of Modern Spiritualism, and each is likely to remain with us for some time to come yet! We may deplore their presence, but Spiritualism is not the only subject which suffers from their influence. The religious world has a fair share of results clearly traceable to such matters, yet religious people do not warn their fellows against religion! Under the influence of foolish, ignorant fanaticism, men and women have been burned alive, reputations blasted, and untold misery inflicted upon innocent lives, shall we, therefore, write a book on the "Dangers of Religion?" Does not the immortal Bard (or Bacon) make one of his characters say, "Because thou art virtuous shall there be no more cakes and ale?" Surely the folly or worse of the religious shall not argue for the removal of religion from man's life? Nor should it be counted an argument against the orderly and systematic pursuit or profession of Spiritualism. Rather must we accept ignorance, foolishness, and viciousness as elements in the problem of life, eliminating them as far as possible, and guarding all questions from their influence as far as is practicable. For the moment, then, we may dismiss these three items from consideration.

THE MORE SERIOUS POINTS.

The more serious points may now claim attention. First as to "disorderly mediumship," what is implied? Too frequently the insane desire to become a "medium," without in the least part understanding what is involved, inspired by pure recklessness or a morbid desire for notoriety, combined with a hankering after the supernatural common to so many undisciplined minds. And, when the mediumship is developed, the indiscriminate and reckless use thereof to the sure detriment of the individual. In this latter case the friends of the medium are more often far more to be blamed than the medium. In how many instances has it been a case of mediumship for breakfast, luncheon, dinner and supper, and at intervals between! A noble function degraded to the pastime of the moment, vitality drained to gratify the curiosity of the wonder-seeker. No wonder that health succumbs to the strain, and that the instrument being disorganized the messages fail, or become corrupted. But such folly is not indulged in by intelligent Spiritualists or mediums, and, happily, there are far more of such than the other sort in the cause to-day, for disorderly mediumship is the great exception rather than the general rule. But the pursuit of any study, training or development of any faculty, indulged in recklessly, will produce untoward results, and such recklessness is rightly condemned in any case, Spiritualism not excepted.

OBSESSION.

Many people make much of "obsession," yet what is it? How much of fact, and how much of still lingering superstition concerning the reputed powers of spirits is involved? There is the obsession of ideas as well as that of persons in either world. The devotee, the reformer, the lover, the patriot, are all obsessed by ideas, and their lives ruled by the subjects obsessing their minds and affections. The unfortunate person of "one idea" is obsessed thereby, and the "henpecked husband" is obsessed by his masterful wife, often to his untold misery, and the undoing of his life's happiness. Hypnotism and auto-suggestion explain another aspect of obsession; indeed, we have obsession as a working fact in the world around us. So long as it concerns this life little fuss is made over it, no judge allows it as a plea, no jury reckons with it in a verdict, save when it is described as "undue influence!" We are apt to blame people for "being led by the nose," which is only another way of saying they are obsessed. It may be replied that such forms of obsession are not as serious as the obsession of spirits. That all spirit obsession is evil, that it is only indulged in by the depraved of the spirit world. Yet good spirits control the conduct of people to a larger extent than perhaps is generally admitted or understood. We live in enlightened times, and know more on spiritual matters, most likely, than those of former days, who were inclined to condemn all spirit intercourse, as a result of the influence of their religious advisers. We must clear ourselves from the remains of the magic, occultism, and so-called Satanism of other times, and realize that the spirits who come to us were former inhabitants of this world, and, generally speaking, average in character pretty much as do we. That, as "all sorts and conditions of men" go hence so, the way being open, it may be they also return and communicate with us. But as we close our doors against undesirable folk in this life, and select those whom we will be intimate with, thus preserving our tranquillity, and safeguarding our lives, so can we, and so should we, safeguard ourselves in our intercourse with the inhabitants of the spirit world. It is another case of "resist the Devil and he will flee from you," give him a chance and he will abide with you.

EVIL SPIRITS.

The words "evil spirits" are a veritable bogey to some folks. They are the "devil" of our childhood, and inspire the same sort of insensate fear. Candidly, the tales we have heard of so-called "evil" spirits strike us as far more comic than tragic. The worst cases, when carefully sifted, resolve themselves into the presence of an undeveloped human being transferred into the other life. He may be sullen, he may be revengeful, he may be vicious, he may have been a drunkard, a suicide, or a murderer, or a thief, or a common rogue and rascal while on earth, but he is still a human being. While, who knows what causes made him either one or the other of the above? We hear of "circles" held to uplift such spirits, to our minds a direct invitation and encouragement to their coming to us! Are there no reformatory agencies "over there?" Are our methods of reforming such as meet the necessities for spirit life? These "evil" spirits were earth's failures; why bring them back to an abortive school? Let the people of the "higher life," if it is a "higher life," take them in hand, their wisdom exceeds ours, therefore they, not us, are better able to uplift the fallen when they have left us. Compel these "evil" spirits to keep bounds, not to break them. We have evil spirits in sufficiency without inviting them back after they depart from us. The sentimentalist may say this is brutal; the practical man will call it common-sense. The fact is we expect only the good to come to us, and, too often follow the earthly habit of stigmatizing those who differ from us, or are uncongenial to us, or who are not on the same plane with us, as evil, which is, after all, but an expression of presumptuous pride.

LET US BE REASONABLE.

Let us be reasonable then, and end all this foolish talk about "obsession" and "evil spirits" and their supposed powers for mischief. As a general supposition it can be said that like attracts like, and where the general rule does not seem to apply there may be some unsuspected hereditary disposition, sufficiently marked to enable a spirit to attach itself to the individual. Or, it may be, the reckless dabbling in mediumship will cause such association. Or, further, the unsuspected presence of the evil doer in our midst, or a chance passage through evil localities, will explain the presence of these spiritual undesirables, all of which is not condemnatory of intercourse with spirits, but only cautionary as to the needful care to be exercised in maintaining such intercourse. Possibly the greatest dangers we stand under pertain to this side, after all? Candidly, that is our opinion, as indicated in what has gone before. With due care and caution in the development of mediumship and its subsequent use no danger need be apprehended by the most sensitive and timid inquirer.

THE TWO WORLDS, MANCHESTER, ENGLAND.

The ascent of the soul through matter is of great importance to all aspiring men. To realize that we are eternal souls with bodies, and not bodies with souls, is the grandest realization that comes to anyone.

The soul—the real man—was never born and never dies. It has neither beginning nor end. It is. The soul comes from nothing, nothing comes from it. It is the only simple in the universe; all other things are compound, and must change. The soul is changeless. The mind and the gross body continually change. Not so the soul. It builds the body and mind. It is eternally a centre of a stream of matter—eternally attracting and repelling matter. Even when it leaves the gross body at death it is still clothed with matter—attenuated matter, so very fine that it cannot be seen on the physical plane.

The souls attending this planet in gross or physical bodies are continually changing and building these bodies. The greatest instrument of the soul is the mind, and it is through this mind that all of us are building our bodies. The nature of the soul is purity, and by pure and right thought we build pure and strong bodies. "Right thinking builds good heads." Bad thinking builds bad heads." A good head will build a good body, a bad head a bad body.

With the mind the soul examines the mind, and constructs and reconstructs the body. Back of both mind and body is the ego or soul, eternally at work. It does not need rest, it is. When the soul gets through with the earth body it passes out with the finer spirit body—the ethereal body—and goes through a new cycle or round of experience, always building a finer body in which to reside. The transition we call death is in reality a birth—the soul is merely passing from a gross surrounding to a more refined one. Here it will continue to build and construct a finer body yet. When at some period it constructs the perfect ethereal body it will reach the superconscious state, and will be in eternal joy and bliss. Then the mind will be eternally calm and peaceful.

It is the mind that hides the soul with veils of doubt, fear, ignorance, superstition, falseness, etc., and causes all so-called woe, sorrow, and misery of man in his evolution from one plane to another, and it is the mind that is disturbed and suffers by its own action. The soul—the real—does not suffer, therefore how important it is for us to realize our own real greatness, and with the mind control the mind, and construct and build finer and better bodies, and hold on to them for greater periods of time, that we may get through with working in the coarser or grosser forms of matter.

Budington says: "During earth life the ego is busy building a more ethereal body within the physical body. This spirit body is the more permanent organism. The ego must protect itself by an organism, or it would lose conscious individuality and external expression; hence it draws through the organs of the earth body all those external substances necessary for its support and essential to construct a permanent body. This is called the spirit body. When at last it has used the earth body as long as is necessary for its complete construction, and attained the knowledge and experience needed for its best unfoldment in contact with gross matter, the spirit body withdraws from the earth body, and dwells in environment adapted to its needs. The sooner all souls realize that they are eternal, and wear bodies the same as we wear clothes; that we are eternal living souls with bodies, and not bodies with souls, the sooner will we reach a joyous and blissful state—a heavenly state."

THERE SHALL BE PEACE.

A Lecturette by Hudson Tuttle.

In remote antiquity, when war was the noblest occupation and the warrior the leader of his people, the bards while singing the praise of glorious deeds of arms, sang also a prophetic strain of peace; the glory of the millennium, when the lion and the lamb would lie down together, the sword cast aside for the sickle. They foresaw the beatitude of that age when war should cease and the foreigner no longer be regarded as an enemy to be destroyed, but a brother to be fraternally received.

The prophecy is about three thousand years old, yet unfulfilled. It was made amidst the fierce contention of warring tribes when there was not a ray of promise. What a pathway of slaughter the nations have traveled since that first intimation of the coming of a Golden Age. There has been continuous war, and the skill and inventive ingenuity has been expended on instruments of destruction and defense. The rude club became the sword; the bow, the rifle and cannon; the cave, the steel-clad battleship. The fair surface of the earth has been made one wide battlefield, and the sea made red with blood. History is a record of battles fought with the savagery of beasts, for conquest and supremacy. The warrior would fight for the products of labor, which he would not produce by his own efforts. He devoured and destroyed the creations of Peace.

War is the concentration of all crimes and villainies the Maelstrom swallowing up the arts of peace; the enslaver of mankind. It brings to the front the beast, the demon, and sets a premium on robbery and murder. There may have been a past when nations emerging into civilization were forced to defend themselves against barbarian hordes; times when nations were obliged to strike back at the tyrants who would enslave them, but this has gone by. The civilized nations have no use for the professional soldier; no just occasion for war, and yet they have prepared themselves as never before with all the appliances science, art and inventive genius can bestow for the work of slaughter. Never before in the history of the world were such armies maintained, or supplied with such equipments. Never such navies floated on the seas, or such fabulous treasures expended. The Christian nations of Europe maintain an army of twenty-two millions of men, who tantalize each other over the borders, but are withheld from actual conflict by the knowledge that the engines of destruction are so perfected that to call them into action is national suicide. The vastness of this army cannot be realized. If arrayed in marching order with equipments, it would make a line entirely encircling the globe. In a steady march of thirty miles a day, it would be more than two years in passing in review.

To equip and maintain this army requires the labor of at least as many more in factory and on farm. At the low estimate of one hundred dollars each, yearly, the maintenance of this host makes the incomprehensible sum of two billions of dollars.

What does this vast outlay yield? What profit does it bring? Nothing. This army which saps the strength and exhausts the resources of the nations, are idlers and moths devouring the products of other labor and producing nothing. The people are ground into the dust by the arrogant lordlings who are sustained in power by the military by which they first robbed the masses of freedom. And such is the influence of heredity and education, that the latter give loyal adherence to and shout the praise of the bespangled hero whose name and fame came from the butchery of men!

Nor is the present cost of the support of the army all that the laborers of these nations have to bear. There is a debt created mainly by former wars which hangs like an incubus about their necks. That debt for the Christian nations of Europe is more than thirty-one billions of dollars. There are no productive values to represent it. It was borrowed at heavy discount, in times of need, for the purpose of destruction, and is as completely lost as though thrown into the sea. Its obligations are held by the kings of the money mart, who by its means exact a tribute from the people of all nations as remorseless as ever brigands demanded of the passing traveler, and such as no conquered people ever paid to barbarous victorious chieftains.

It is a debt which is constantly augmenting and never will be paid, and never should be, for the present and future generations should not in justice be held for the folly of ancestors. It is a debt which the creditors do not desire paid. All they want is the interest, the tribute, for by its means they hold the people in slavery. To press the payment would overturn every government in Europe, for the stability of these governments, the much-talked-of "balance of power," is maintained really not by the armies, but by the money-power; for war cannot be prosecuted without loans, and the nations have already reached the verge of bankruptcy.

Of war in its blackest garb, stripped of its chivalry and excuses for being, the conflict of England with the Boers is a most conspicuous object lesson. It has cost the former a billion dollars, twenty-two thousand lives and sixty thousand wounded and disabled; and the latter, suffering and disaster, which no statistics can measure. A useless conflict, unjust, uncalled for, which fair dealing and honesty might have avoided; the outcome of selfish greed, with a result of humiliation and demoralization; an example of patriotism and sacrifice for home and country equal to any Greece furnished in her most glorious era, and a ruined waste for a prosperous country.

Wasteful of wealth, war is yet more wasteful of human life. A human being is a costly target, and can be sacrificed only in supreme moments, when the life of the nation is menaced.

If all these twenty-two millions of soldiers should return to their homes and engage in the arts of peace? Would there be overproduction? Is a class of drones and idlers necessary to give work to the laborers?

That kind of political economy has given hovels to the many and palaces to the few. Until there is a comfortable house for every family; until there is sufficient food for every hungry mouth; until there is warm and generous clothing for every one, there is no fear of surplus.

If all labored, the many would not as now break beneath their lengthened hours of toil, but all would share the right to leisure hours. There would be no homeless tramps; no lingering starvation. What might be done with the money and labor extorted from the people to maintain the "war footing" of the armies and navies?

In the United States, where this amount is least of all, think what might be done with the cost of one battleship! Three millions of dollars would build a splendid macadamized road, costing 3,000 dollars per mile, 1,000 miles long. It would build 2,000 residences for the homeless, costing 1,500 dollars each. With two billions, 2,000 times more might be accomplished. And the battleship is built because other nations have them and perhaps sometime there will be collision of interests and a chance for their engines to demolish each other.

The age of war has passed for civilized nations. The trade of the warrior has lost its glamour. The courage of the soldier is only foolhardiness. The rewards of the future are not for the destroyer, but for the creator; for him who wrests from nature the command of her forces; who chains and makes the elements obedient to his command.

In this reckless extravagance of constantly augmenting armies the limit must be reached; already some of the nations have become virtually bankrupt, and with others the yoke of slavery presses heavily upon the people. The tension has nearly reached the breaking point. Will the European nations place themselves on a peace basis, as they can readily do by a convention; or will they wait till by a conflict of these forces, the most terrible the world has ever witnessed, the folly and idiocy of their course is demonstrated?

The day of conquest has passed. The old belief that prosperity could be gained by the ruin of neighboring nations has been replaced by the idea of brotherhood; that real prosperity is reciprocal, and is only gained by the prosperity of all. Let the soldiers go home. A cultured homeloving people are stronger for self-defense, if it is necessary, than a host of soldiers. The Swiss, the Netherlands, the Boers, exemplify.

Peace will come. More than all, this country, with an army which was no more than a national police force, in stress of need found its citizen soldiers equal to every demand.

Peace will come, and a high court of arbitration will decide national questions by justice, and the sword shall rust in its scabbard. The soldiers may go to their homes to-day, or they may remain until the deadly strife with new and as yet untried weapons of destruction shows the folly, the wickedness, the wanton butchery, against which courage and discipline count for nothing.

There shall be peace, for mankind advances, and as in the blackest hours of midnight we may predict the coming day, so by the set of the current of humanity upward we know these fierce contentions of the brute will be passed. The world and all it contains is for the joy and pleasure of its children, and although they may wander far, and they will continue onward and upward. The angel shall replace the brute, and the ways of angels be the ways of men.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

A VISION.

The Conflict Between Labor and Capital.

Continuous disturbances among the laboring classes, aroused by the base accumulation of riches by the upper classes, terminating in strikes and disastrous results both to producers and the employers of labor, is the one absorbing feature of the world's great needs. The ablest minds, both political and economic, have attempted, time and again, to grasp and solve the riddle, yet every attempt ends in failure, while the mighty accumulation of wealth and money power increases, and the grist of the laboring man decreases as each days sun goes down.

That there will be a crisis in these conditions which may shake the stronghold of every civilized nation of this entire globe was revealed to me in a vision some two weeks since, and the evidence of that picture, revealed from the spirit world is at this time indelibly stamped upon my mind with a conviction too strong to be shaken by material argument.

On the night of eighteenth of March, about three o'clock in the morning, while in a trance I was taken into a large dining room and placed at the head of the table. On each side of the table were two ladies, each of whom was tall, slender, and of dark complexion. At the foot of the table stood another entirely the opposite of the others, she being stout of stature, but finely proportioned. She was of blonde complexion, and very spiritual-looking, and was apparently the mistress of the household. While standing there she stooped and picked up a newspaper, and smiling said, "Why, did you see the cartoon?"

"What is it," I replied.

"Why," she answered with sarcasm in every word she uttered, "the capitalistic class have spies out looking for Boer sympathizers. They evidently think every one who sympathizes with the Boers is a dangerous character and will bear watching."

At this time a change seemed to come over the spirit of the vision and it was morning, and I found myself at the steps of the residence with a grip in my hand, starting down the street. Shortly I passed a point where there were about 100 men at work grading and terracing the ground for an elegant mansion. The site of this mansion was some forty or fifty feet above the street level. I stopped for a minute and looked at the workmen, who were composed of many nationalities, all of whom were diligently laboring. There was one negro among them who seemed to be anxious that others should do the work while he received an equal share from their toil, and he was particularly officious, which is characteristic of his race. A large, handsome man now appeared at the head of the steps where the men were working and addressed them. He told them that they were at an important crisis and that they should work in union and upon the spur of the moment. "Capital," he said, "would, if they did not act as one man and throw down their tools when told to do so, continue to grind them down."

"What you want us to do, Massa Johnson?" said the negro

"Every man," was the answer, "must obey orders and act on the spur of the moment; for in union there is strength and by that only can you succeed."

Then I turned away and walked to the train, some two blocks distance. The foreman of these workmen followed me and approaching, asked how far I was going and how long I would be gone. My reply was that I was going to the Atlantic coast in connection with the labor trouble, and would be back in two weeks. As I ceased speaking a voice apparently from the heavens and sounding as loud as thunder, said, "This state of things exists from the Rocky Mountains of America to the coral strands of India."

At this the vision vanished and I awoke from the trance. This was the vision as seen by me, vivid and startling. Its results remain unsolved, and I leave the translation to others.

MISSIONARY WORK

Of George W. Kates and Wife.

We have been too busy to send items of our work for general information. Perhaps many readers like to know that the N. S. A. agents, itinerants, evangels, agitators, organizers, missionaries, or whatever title suits them the best, have not waited for localities to send for them, but have pushed their way and gone into some places where Spiritualism has never had an advocate.

After the anniversary in St. Louis, we visited Springfield, Ill., and held two meetings. Mrs. H. L. Lichtig is the active leader here. Then we returned to St. Louis for Sunday, April 6.

Two meetings were next held at Marble Hill, Mo., where no lecture explaining Spiritualism had ever been given. We had large attendance and created much comment. Dr. August Sanders, an old resident here, has been almost alone in standing boldly as a Spiritualist—and he is always willing to freely do his part to advance the cause. We occupied the Christian church one night. Across country, eight miles from the railway to Hillsville, was our next move. Here we had been before and knew of the earnest souls led by our devoted brother, George H. Miller. We occupied the Universalist church here, which is really owned and controlled by the Spiritualists. Five well-attended meetings were held, and we will return there for Sunday, April 20.

Unto Zalma, in the woods, where Spiritualism was entirely an unknown quantity, we next journeyed and held two large meetings with these people who had heard so much hell preached, that a little of universal solvent gave them some hope. They were almost persuaded to believe that we told the truth.

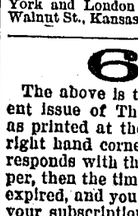
William Nevin, Hahn, P. O., Bollinger county, Mo., worked heroically to secure these meetings and thus do his full duty "on the picket line." He says he has been posted for some years. Here, also, the Christian church was donated for our occupancy. Preaching in the back-woods must soon change if they continue to open their churches for the Spiritualists.

Cape Girardeau was our next point, and here we struck our first real chilly reception. One lone man in this fossilized and bigoted place was found who would help us. Mr. D. L. Hoffman, publisher of "The Optimist," secured the court house for us and had the meetings well announced. Twenty-six persons attended and listened with solemnity to our earnest lecture and stoically heard the spirit messages, and donated seventy-five cents to the N. S. A. for our expense, of which our friend gave twenty-five. Some people can refuse to give, and can also falsify, in the name of the Lord. This place needs a missionary; but it must be one who will first present some startling phenomena and arouse curiosity. They are certainly not willing to bring their brains to a meeting and be made to think. They get preaching that does not give them mental indigestion. We have some hope for Cape Girardeau, but it is yet feeble and will take some time to grow strong. We pity the spirit world for having such old fossils dumped into its territory.

We further hold meetings in Missouri at Millerville and Jackson, then go into Illinois for balance of April.

G. W. KATES AND WIFE.

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY



I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit. Just put it up cold. Keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc.

Restores Eyesight

"Actina," a Wonderful Discovery Which Cures Diseased Eyes, No Matter Whether Chronic or Acute, Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. This wonderful treatment takes the form of a Pocket Battery and is known as "Actina." It is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient. There is no risk of experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable. This wonderful remedy also makes the use of spectacles unnecessary, as it not only removes the weakened and unnatural conditions of the eye, but gives it a clear vision.

A. O. T. Pennington, Massachusetts building, Kansas City, Mo., says: "Actina," cured my mother of cataracts and cured me of asthma.

W. J. Reed, 500 Prospect avenue, Kansas City, Mo., says: My sister was STONE BLIND and "Actina" restored her sight perfectly after oculists had failed.

L. B. Bailey, New England building, Kansas City, says: "Actina" cured me of catarrh and is the best thing to cure colds.

W. R Owens, Adrian, Mo., writes: "Actina" saved me from going BLIND.

Robert Baker, 80 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill., writes: I should have been blind had I not used "Actina."

This method of treatment has been given a thorough test and thousands have been cured after being pronounced incurable.

Advice FREE. FREE treatment at office. "Actina" is sent on trial to out-of-town people. Call or write for Prof. Wilson's 100-page Treatise on the Eye and Its Disease and disease in general free on application. Address New York and London Electric Ass'n., Dept. T, 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require. Every item sent to us for publication, should contain the full name and address of the writer. We desire to know the source of every item that appears. This rule will be strictly adhered to.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Bear in mind that all notices for this page are cut down to suit the space we have to occupy when received.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Bear in mind, please, that Isa Wilson Kayner's address is at No. 112 Winchester avenue, Chicago, where she can be addressed.

Inspirational lecturer in German open for engagement. Write to Julius Kuhn, No. 803 North Carnac street, Philadelphia, Pa., for full particulars.

Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt may be addressed for camp or society engagements, at 498 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill., or at The Progressive Thinker office.

Mrs. Mina Hanley writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "I have just finished reading 'A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands,' and have been affected as never before."

J. J. Oakeshott writes: "The cause is spreading wonderfully in this city, and we are causing the Ministerial Association much anxiety. A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands is my choice of premiums."

The First Spiritualistic Society of San Diego, Cal., having just purchased lot J, block 8, of Horton's addition, situated on Seventh street, adjoining the B street school, contemplate erecting a temple, which, when completed, will not only be a credit to the cause but a benefit to the city and surroundings. The structure will be two stories in height, and it is their purpose to begin the construction within 90 days.

Will C. Hodge is now in Oakland, Cal., and can be addressed at 1373 Tenth Avenue, East.

The following rot is from a Boston paper: "Our great colleges, like Harvard, with their higher education, are damning the world," said Professor Griggs at a meeting of Seventh Day Adventists in Deacon Hall last evening. "Damning the world," he continued, "just as knowledge has done since the Garden of Eden. God made Adam a perfect man and Eve a beautiful woman, and they were happy until Eve, in her desire for knowledge, ate the apple. The devil himself was made by knowledge. At first, Lucifer was high in heaven, but because he wanted to become equal to God in knowledge, God threw him into hell for his presumption. Christ had no knowledge, and because he ignorantly obeyed God, without knowing where God was leading him, God made him next himself in power. God will give us all the knowledge we need. He taught Solomon astronomy, botany and even sociology, for we are told that he kept order among his wives."

Dr. George Dutton, author of Dutton's Illustrated Anatomy, Etiopathy, and other medical works and founder of the Order of Eden, will leave Chicago with Mrs. Dutton the 28th inst., for England. They go in the interest of the Order of Eden and the new school of medicine which signifies a health education for all the people. They expect to be absent two or three months.

Sarah A. Walters writes from Denver, Col.: "To me our philosophy and religion makes life, that which lures us on here, and points us at the same time over yonder. Sometimes Easterners coming here have difficulties on account of altitude. So it might be in regard to spiritual heights to which some would rise without giving time and conditions for the unfoldment of those intellectual faculties needed to give them the proper qualifications to stand as instructors before the people. I have always had a prayer of thanks going out to the great Over Soul, that it did not commission me to sort the sheep from the goats, for I know I should lose the mark of identification. A fact should not be obliged to beg acceptance of teachers of the same school, if they have come into a knowledge of the same. A fact should stand like a unit, and all should be able to know its value in the great structure for which we work. When one teacher declares that children do not grow and unfold in spirit life, and another says as emphatically that they do grow to their manhood and womanhood, and the intellect unfolds as well, which shall they, who listen, believe? Where shall they who wish to learn go for instruction? When one declares that jealous, evil and envious spirits work mischief to those they feel disposed to, and at the same time another says they have no power to do you harm, is it not the same law that causes a person to be possessed of a good spirit that would cause him to be obsessed of a dark spirit? And we who are in the flesh, how often do we commission them, they who are earth bound? One declares no spirit can leave the body and visit different places while the earth body stays behind. Another says I can leave the body at will as occasion requires. There is no guess-work in truth. What one has not got, he has yet to acquire. Like all roads leading to Rome, so may all roads lead to truth. Let us seek for truth, let us reason together. Let us not be content to let this lax condition remain. A fact is a truth and one should not give the other the lie."

T. W. Pritchard writes: "Brother Day holds a large hall full every Sunday evening, also on Sunday afternoon, at 127 Jacob street, Allegheny City, Pa. We have the hall newly papered, and have had some painting and new curtains for the windows, which make it look homelike and shows that we have some workers for the cause."

Lyman C. Howe writes: "I am engaged to speak at Bankson Lake camp-meeting, June 26, 28 and 29, and at Chesterfield camp, July 20 to 25 inclusive; also at Freeville, N. Y., June 1. Though I am laying the foundations for history, it does not hinder me from doing platform work whenever called. I have November engaged at Norwich, Conn."

Correspondent writes from Wheeling, W. Va.: "Frank T. Ripley, speaker and test medium, closes a two-months' engagement with the First Progressive Spiritualist Society here. He has done a good work here. He goes from here to Erie, Pa., for the Sundays in May. He has the Sundays in June and July open for dates for camp-meetings and grove meetings. Address all letters to him at Erie, Pa., General Delivery."

D. L. Haines, secretary writes: "The Spiritualists Association of Franklin, Neb., will hold its annual camp-meeting in the Rose Grove, where formerly held. Would like to correspond with genuine mediums; no others need apply. We anticipate a very interesting and successful camp. The best of talent will be secured. Address the secretary."

John W. Ring, president, writes: "The Texas State National Association of Spiritualists have engaged Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley to minister to the public of the Lone Star state, May 4 to June 15, inclusive."

A subscriber writes: "The writer wishes that you, one and all, could have listened to the address of Dr. Hewitt, Sunday evening, in the Church of Spirit Communion. He was truly inspired. The good Doctor seemed fairly translated during the singing of 'The Holy City,' by Miss Wilkins, who is gifted with an exquisitely beautiful voice. Music will be a special feature of our services as the young lady has consented to sing for us. Dr. Hewitt is to be commended for the purity and uplifting of thought put forth from the platform. The tests by Mr. Coates were about the best ever given."

Correspondent writes from Washington, D. C.: "The First Spiritualist Society holds services every Sunday at Masonic Temple at 11 a. m.; Sunday-school and lyceum at 10 o'clock. We have with us this month for the speaker, Mr. Clegg Wright, the well-known trance medium. He gives lessons twice a week at Mr. F. A. Wood's residence, the president of the First Spiritualist Society. The Ladies' Aid holds meetings every Thursday, and these meetings are very well attended, and have a very large membership. The Theo-Progressive Society holds services every Sunday at 3 o'clock in Temple Hall, 12th and H streets N. E. Lecture by Mrs. E. E. Compton; psychometric readings and spiritual tests by Mrs. M. A. Zoller. The Educational and Religious Society of Spiritualists holds services Sunday at 8 o'clock p. m., at 516 9th street N. W. Dr. Temple, formerly of San Francisco, is the speaker for the month. Mrs. Warneke gives messages from Spirit life to the hungry souls in the audience. All are recognized."

B. F. Spencer writes: "E. W. Sprague and wife visited Versailles, Ind., April 3, and were here until the 7th. Mr. Sprague lectured on the evenings of April 4, 5 and 6 in the court-room, to large and attentive audiences. The lectures were well received. Mrs. Sprague followed, giving tests that were generally acknowledged, though some good church people said she had been given information, that enabled her to 'guess right.' On Sunday afternoon Mr. Sprague organized a society of 18 members, who chose Miss Uroula A. Spencer, president; Miss Mary Alice Taylor, vice-president; Miss Annie Stockinger, secretary, and B. F. Spencer, treasurer. The charter has been received, and the society will hold weekly meetings. A good number of persons are almost persuaded of the truth of Spiritualism and all those who will honestly investigate, will soon be Spiritualists."

At the close of one of his lectures in Melbourne, Dr. J. M. Peebles dealt with a number of questions from the audience. In response to the query, "Do you believe that spirits materialize, and, if so, how?" he said: "Pure, essential spirit never becomes matter—is never seen either by the physical or clairvoyant eye, while the spiritual body is often clairvoyantly seen, within which dwells the divine Ego, the higher self, the God incarnate. This spiritual, or astral body, as the old occultists called it, constitutes the framework over, or on, which the materialized form, through the manipulations of immortal chemists, becomes temporarily visible. Invisible steam may become solid, ponderable ice—a sample of the unseen, materialized. So spiritual substances manipulated, polarized and chemically compacted, may become visible; in this way, we may see the materialized forms of our departed friends."—Harbinger of Light.

E. F. Parker writes from Columbus, Ohio.: "Columbus is to be congratulated that the able lecturer and medium, Nellie S. Baade, of Detroit, Mich., gave the Spiritualist society of this city an opportunity to listen to her guides. Many hearts have been made happy by the truthful tests and communications received, both publicly and privately. It is with sincere regret that the people of this city could not have secured her services for a longer period of time."

How Christ may have walked upon the sea and what is meant by the miracle of Moses striking the rock and drawing forth water, were explained by Dr. Emil G. Hirsch to the congregation in Temple Israel. How Christ may have performed his cures also was explained, the lecturer announcing his belief in them and even in methods by which Dowie and the Christian Scientists work. Hypnotism was the suggestion given by Dr. Hirsch for the miraculous cures accomplished by Jesus. The use of a mechanism might explain how Christ was able to appear to his disciples in the midst of the storm on Lake Galilee—or it might have been an illusion. "Rationalism would say," continued the speaker, "that when Christ appeared walking on water it might have been an illusion. I want to appear most reverent in handling these New Testament miracles lest I should seem to be speaking from prejudice. Rationalism would say that Christ in this miracle might have used some mechanism. He might have had little boats on his feet or he might have been floating."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

Frank D. Henderson writes: "I have a nice little library of books on Spiritualism, procured through the generosity of our great Progressive Thinker. I can never pass a lonesome hour with those glorious books about me. I am re-reading them, and no Spiritualist can imagine, who has not read them, what a source of information and consolation they afford."

John B. Chrisney writes from Chrisney, Ind.: "E. W. Sprague and wife, missionaries for the N. S. A., were here April 14, and delivered four lectures. Sister Sprague gave tests, and all were recognized. As a result of those meetings we organized a society of 18 members, and chartered with the N. S. A. If any mediums come near our town, we will be glad to entertain them."

Dr. Minot J. Savage, speaking in the Church of the Messiah on "The Abolition of Death," is quoted as saying said: "If we propose to be quiet, honest and frank with ourselves we must admit one fact—that there never, since the dawn of Christianity, were so many people doubting concerning the future life as there are now; not ignorant nor bad people, but the best there are, or as good as there are. They are readers, thinkers, persons who are acquainted with philosophy and with science, and who have studied history and looked into ecclesiastical traditions. This is the attitude of thousands, and the number is growing. "If a person asks me whether I think there is satisfactory evidence that the body of Jesus Christ was raised from the dead, I must be frank, and say I do not. No case in a modern court could be carried through successfully unless there were in its favor better evidence than we have for the resurrection of Jesus. There is no first-hand testimony of anybody to that fact, and we know perfectly well that if we had the testimony of a hundred or a thousand to a similar fact as taking place to-day it would weigh with us very little. But I believe with my whole soul that Jesus was seen alive after the crucifixion, and out of that belief might very easily arise the belief that the body had risen. I do not believe there is anything in the fact of death that changes us more than going to sleep last night and waking up this morning. I believe death is another kind of birth; that we graduate from this life, take the next step in an ever-advancing career of progress, and that we are just ourselves over there."

D. McVeigh writes from Philadelphia, Pa.: "We find that The Progressive Thinker is founded on principles that will elevate the mind and strengthen the body and soul, and all Spiritualists should subscribe for it, as it is as staple as food."

Mrs. E. D. King writes that those desiring her services for funerals or to lecture, can write to her or telephone her at Tekonsha, Mich.

His engagements at Washington and Baltimore will occupy J. Clegg Wright's time for the entire month of May. His visit to Chicago will, therefore, have to go over until fall.

L. Nolton writes from Toledo, Ohio: "Sunday evening, April 20, our speaker, Mrs. J. J. Curran, at Pythian Hall, gave us a remarkable exhibition of spirit power. On reaching the hall it was evident to my mind that Mrs. Curran was suffering with a severe throat trouble. She was unable to speak, hardly to whisper. Having intimated to me her determination to lecture, I announced to the audience that she would now attempt to address them. Then rising to her feet, for the moment remaining silent, closing her eyes, she then became entranced and controlled by a powerful, magnetic masculine voice that could be heard in a large hall, speaking with force and energy about 50 minutes. All were aware that while her throat was in that critical condition it would have been utterly impossible to attempt utterances, such as we witnessed in her then normal state and condition. Immediately after this control left her she became prostrated. Under her then critical condition, we urged that she be excused from giving the promised public readings as advertised, which was granted."

The lectures of the Rev. Dr. C. Hall Cook, of Los Angeles, Cal., are attracting large audiences at Albuquerque, New Mexico. Deep interest is manifested. The local papers are commenting. The Journal-Democrat of April 14, says: "A deeply interested audience was present in the Odd Fellows hall last night to hear Dr. C. Hall Cook continue his lecture on 'Modern Miracles.' While Dr. Cook is not an orator, his lectures are given with a clearness and care for sound reasoning that carries great weight. He has gone deep into the mysteries of psychical research and has at ready command a great fund of knowledge that he uses unsparingly for the benefit of his audience. The incidents which he cites to substantiate his statements, taken as they often are, from personal experience, are deeply interesting." Also the Daily Citizen says: "A very large crowd was present at Odd Fellows hall last night to hear the lecture on 'Modern Miracles.' The lecturer held that the definition of miracles as given by modern orthodox religion is being exploded. The latter part of the lecture was a citation of facts from scientific sources and corroborated by similar facts from personal experiences. The audience was in hearty sympathy with the speaker." Dr. Cook's engagement at Albuquerque, New Mex., during the past two months, will end May 1, at which date he will be open for engagements for societies and camp-meetings. His address for the next several weeks will be Albuquerque, New Mex., 323 Railroad avenue.

Chesterfield Camp begins July 17 and closes August 24, 1902. Among the speakers engaged are Lyman C. Howe, Jennie Hagan Brown, H. D. Barrett, Willard J. Hull, Marian Carpenter, Anna L. Gillespie, Swami Abhedananda, Edgar W. Emerson, Lizzie Harlow, J. Clegg Wright and others. W. W. Aber, the renowned materializing medium, of Spring Hill, Kansas, will be present at Chesterfield Camp, Ind., the entire season. For programs and other information, address Flora Hardin, secretary, Anderson Ind. The business and work connected with Chesterfield camp is crowding upon the executive board and committee in charge. Never before have the indications been so great for a successful camp season. A new and large auditorium is now in process of building and will be completed by the opening day. The best speakers and mediums upon the Spiritualist rostrum have been engaged. A new feature introduced by the board is a series of Sunday meetings through the month of June. The series will be opened with a lyceum picnic the first Sunday in June. These after services will be held on the camp ground each Sunday following.

Henry H. Warner is still in Denver, Col., and may be addressed at the Columbia Hotel at present.

O. Donges, of Hamilton, Canada, writes: The 'Wanderer in the Spirit Lands' came duly to hand. One dollar would not be dear for such a grand book. Will do all I can to promote this 20th century blessing! This grand philosophy has taught me to be a better man, and I now count my earthly time as precious gold for the building of a future mansion. Am looking forward with great pleasure for The Progressive Thinker."

Prof. W. M. Lockwood's lectures in Pittsburg, Pa., are attracting great attention. He is speaking to exceedingly large audiences.

Mrs. Margaret M. Goulde writes: "To Mr. James Ziebring and Mrs. E. P. Manniwell, minister, and to the Spiritualist society of Richmond Hall, Minneapolis, Minn: Permit me to acknowledge my gratitude for the donation of money so kindly raised by your society on April 20. Rest assured that I appreciate the kind act of you good Spiritualist people who are ever ready to assist those in misfortune. 'Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble, and he shall be blessed upon the earth.'"

D. W. Hull writes to the Spiritualists of Oregon, Washington and British Columbia: "I shall be in attendance at the New Era, Ore., Camp-meeting, June 5-21, and as I propose to remain in the Northwest for some time, perhaps a year or more, I shall be pleased to hear from as many societies as would wish lectures. Address me this month, Norton, Kans.; June, care of A. Lewelling, Oregon City, Ore."

Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley has been engaged by the Texas State Spiritualist Association to make a tour of that state. She will be at Fort Worth, May 4 and 5; Hillsboro, 6 and 7; from there to Waco. We cordially recommend her. Her lectures are good, and her tests genuine.

The Veteran Spiritualists' Union.

Friends of the Veteran Spiritualists' Union:—I believe the time has come when the most conservative can with confidence draw to this center with his aid. There is little doubt that the near future will see the troublesome mortgage removed from the Waverly property; the sinking fund is growing—fast or slow, as you work for it or withhold your aid (the coupon letters in its aid will be sent any one free on application to the Banner of Light); and the best help you can give is to come to the annual election which will be held at the Waverly Home the first Tuesday in May, at 2 p. m., be enrolled as members and vote for the officers to be elected for the coming year. Isn't it your work as much as that of any one?

The coming year promises to be one of importance in the history of the V. S. U. It will require officers of vigorous capabilities and consecrated service to meet the responsibilities that are sure to confront us. Besides the election of president and three vice-presidents, secretary, treasurer, historian and three auditors, a trustee is to be elected for five years. We need your thought in this matter.

If you come with proper introduction there is no doubt you will be welcomed by all. Your applications will be voted on before the election of officers and, on the payment of your annual dues of $1, you will be able to vote at this election and enjoy full membership for one year. And on the payment of $25 you can enjoy a life membership. Think it over, my friends and see if you should not be with us. It would be very encouraging to those who have worked through the year just closing to have a voluntary membership come forward as well as to see those who are now members ready to meet the requirements of the hour by their devoted service.

Hoping to have the privilege of meeting on this occasion the many to whom I am indebted for their loyal support of my too faltering steps, I am, ever sincerely yours,

IRVING F. SYMONDS, Pres.

Letter from Frances E. Willard.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:—Four years of your time have passed since I arose from the material into the ethereal realms of life. During that time I have ceaselessly worked for the advancement of Modern Spiritualism. I now call myself a full-fledged Spiritualist, pledged to the cause from an innate sense of right and a desire to see justice manifested to all humanity. If Spiritualists will live up to their privileges and be true to the ethical teachings of the angel world they can advance in a grand triumphant procession to the front, and take the lead in all philanthropic efforts to redeem the world from superstition, sin and vice. In unity there is strength. Organization is necessary for a strong presentation of the truth embraced in Modern Spiritualism.

The present efforts to establish and maintain a college for the education of our mediums should be endorsed and aided by every true progressive Spiritualist. Now is the time for a "strong pull, a long pull, and a pull altogether," that the cause we love may be placed on a more solid foundation than ever before and all humanity have in its reach the glorious knowledge of spirit return and spirit communion presented in an educational, scientific and religious garb of truth, acceptable to the cultured and refined as well as to the ignorant and uneducated, and all work in harmony and love for the good time to come when there will be no illiterate or uneducated brother or sister in the human family. This is my endowment of, and promise of co-operation with the projectors of the Morris Pratt Institute.

And now a few words for the N. S. A. Mediums' Home at Reed City, Mich., in which I am deeply interested. That there is a great necessity for this and similar homes all will allow, and every Spiritualist in the mortal or spiritual form who loves humanity, and wishes to do good, will at once proceed to do what they can for this worthy cause, and the more they do the more they will see to do, and the greater blessing they will receive for doing. Yours lovingly, FRANCES E. WILLARD.

MEDIUMSHIP.

Some of Its Ancient Manifestations.

We need mediums for all forms of spirit phenomena. We need mediums to search histories and write their findings for The Progressive Thinker and the newspapers in all parts of the earth. The Progressive Thinker has become the leading publication for all Spiritualists and students of a continued existence after the process called death. All can learn of these things by reading up-to-date information that comes to us from the pens of many persons. We may learn much about Spiritualism by reading the history of the people who prepared a system of recording their acts, so people of this generation may know how those people acted, what they taught and what they knew. In searching history we may ignore the part that calls a thing a fable or a delusion.

We find that the Egyptians in their early history knew Spiritualism and hypnotism. Spiritual forces among the early Greeks and Egyptians were held deep secrets, and could only be communicated to those who had passed the last class of preparation in the chief medium's control. The secrecy of these meetings took much effect upon minds of leaders in the early ages in which men kept a record for us to read.

Thales, the chairman of the seven wise men of Greece, who lived in the seventh century B. C., was accepted by the great mediums of that time among the Egyptians, and was taught the secrets known only to kings and chief priests of the Egyptians. We can know what sort of powers those mediums had by reading what they did.

We find as before mentioned that hypnotism and Spiritualism were common among the wise people of the ages before Christ. Voices were heard singing, whispering and sighing around, lights gleamed in many colors from above and below, forms appeared and disappeared. Ceres, Zeus, Bacchus, Aphrodite, Jehovah and other gods usually presented themselves after the manner in which Moses and Elias appeared on the mount beside Jesus Christ, and as leading spirits come usually at seances for spiritual manifestations in Boston in this generation. Orpheus, Elijah, Hera, Minerva, Diana, Hecate, Christ, Lincoln, Napoleon, Galen, Socrates, Thales, Garrison, Denton, yes, famous gods like these have been greeted and talked with as men and women talk with one another at Boston. Obsession is known as reincarnation. Spirit control and obsession are known to wise persons, but some regular drug doctors, those with a certificate and license have crowded hospitals for insane persons with mediums found among Christians. Christ and his disciples healed the obsessed and those controlled by ignorant spirits, but when one of these men appeared before clergymen at the leading Episcopal church in Boston, in 1901, at once they called the police and had a peaceful, Christ-like man sent to Worcester Insane Hospital. So much for the ignorance of the leading clergymen, police and registered doctors in Boston, the "Hub of the Universe."

Mysteries of the ancient Egyptians. Secrets known to the select of the priests and the kings of Egypt. A meeting in honor of Ceres. These rites were brought from Egypt into Greece by the daughters of Danaus, who taught them to some women. It was usual to concentrate their minds on Ceres and other gods and goddesses. In a dangerous war the women's concentrations were so powerful with the gods and goddesses, that their enemies were defeated and put to flight.

Witchcraft, now known as hypnotism, was known at this time to some persons. Certain forms of concentration of mental forces took place under direction of competent persons. This done, objects presented themselves. Some times the place appeared to shake about them; sometimes it appeared bright and resplendent with light and radiant fire, and then again was covered with Egyptian darkness. Sometimes thunder and lightning, sometimes frightful noises and bellowings, sometimes ghosts astonished the new members at these meetings for spirit manifestations and development of mediums. During a part of the meeting the gods appeared to those present. In nearly all these meetings one or more gods exhibit themselves under many forms, and appear in a variety of shapes. Sometimes in human form. In the most holy of the meetings, before the god appears, the impulsions of certain terrestrial demons become visible, alluring the human mind from undefiled goods to matter. Read the Bible and learn of Egyptian wisdom. All Spiritualists should read and have knowledge of Acts, chapters 2, 5, and 13.

Old Hymns.

In No. 648 of The Progressive Thinker, the question is asked, Why do Spiritualists sing such hymns as "Nearer, My God, to Thee?" In reply, Hudson Tuttle mentions some of the absurdities of that "grand old hymn." Let me tell you how one stanza of that hymn helped me. The fall of 1900 found me among strangers in Leadville, Colo. I attended the Sunday evening lectures of the Occult Society, and the exercises quite often included the singing of "Nearer, My God, to Thee." I had not heard that hymn before for years, and while joining in the singing, I used to wonder how many in that assemblage realized the meaning of the words, "E'en though it be a cross that raiseth me." Did they realize the depth of despair that one must find at times, before the cross could raise them to the heights their spiritual vision beheld in the distance. And for weeks a spirit of rebellion would take possession of me whenever singing it, and I would say to myself, "If I cannot be raised to greater heights without bearing another cross, then I will be content to remain just where I at present am."

But after repeatedly singing the hymn, one day while quietly sitting in my room, a willingness came over me to again bear the cross, if it was necessary to better prepare me for the work my heart was in. Perhaps my willingness has shorn the cross of its terrors, for I am now placed in a position where abler personalities come between me and life's difficulties, and shield and protect me.

We cannot reach the mountain heights of spirituality without passing through valleys, and it is well to keep in view the point one wishes to attain, and have faith that a guiding hand will lead aright, than to lose confidence in the forces about us, and wander up and down in the valley, and be torn by the thorns of doubt and despair. Many times a stanza from the old hymns are a help to one some.

1852 - GOLDEN JUBILEE - 1902

Of the First Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia, Pa., May 11, 12, 13, 14, 1902.

All local and State Associations are cordially invited to send representatives or greetings to the oldest association of Spiritualists in the world, on the occasion of the celebration of its Fiftieth Anniversary, Golden Jubilee, May 11, 12, 13 and 14, at the Temple, 12th and Thompson sts., Philadelphia, Pa. As this association has held continuous meetings for half a century and as nearly all the prominent speakers and mediums in the world have at some time ministered to the society in the past years, it is fitting that they should be represented on this occasion. All are cordially invited to send letters of greeting to the officers of the society, who will be pleased to welcome the same.

WISCONSIN.

Proceedings of the State Spiritualist Convention.

The second annual convention of the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association convened in Milwaukee, April 15, 16 and 17, and from start to finish was one of the best conventions ever held in the Badger state.

The opening meeting Tuesday morning was devoted to the exchange of greetings by the delegates assembled, and no attempt made to transact business of any kind.

At 3 p. m. the delegates were called to order and the work of the convention was started in earnest. The work of this session consisted chiefly of the appointment of committees, reading of the president's report for the past year, and all of the preliminary measures necessary in outlining the work of the future meetings.

At 8 p. m. a large audience assembled to partake of the good things to be given out. The exercises opened with a piano solo by Prof. Lurvey, which was greatly appreciated; then came an invocation by Rev. Moses Hull, after which we were favored with a vocal solo by Mrs. Florence Forbes.

Next in order was the address of welcome, which, in the absence of Mayor Rose, was delivered by Attorney Stover, of Milwaukee. Mr. Stover spoke very cordially and extended a very hearty welcome to the delegates and Spiritualists of the state. The response to this address was made by Clara L. Stewart, president of the W. S. S. A.

Moses Hull was then introduced and gave the address of the evening. This was closely listened to and brought forth much applause. The writer heard many favorable comments made relative to the lecture.

After another song by Mrs. Forbes, Dr. Nellie Mosier, of Kent, Ohio, was called upon to entertain the audience. Dr. Mosier gave many tests, all of which were recognized by persons in the audience. These messages were eargerly listened to by those present, and the interest created by their recognition was intense.

This concluded the program of this evening, and the meeting was adjourned.

Wednesday, April 16, the morning and afternoon meetings were devoted to the business of the convention. The reports of the secretary and treasurer were submitted and referred to the proper committees and all committees reported their actions. The business meetings of the convention were harmonious to a marked degree, and consequently all business was rapidly disposed of.

At 8 p. m., the musical part of the program was again furnished by Prof. Lurvey and Mrs. Forbes. After the opening musical numbers, and an invocation by Nellie Kingsley Baker, of Portage, Wis., the chairman introduced Rev. T. Grafton Owen, of Arcadia, as the speaker of the evening. Mr. Owen's address was scientific, being based upon cosmic laws, and illustrated with charts. Brother Owen has been a minister for many years, but has graduated from the old theology to the new.

Dr. Nellie Mosier was again called upon to act as mediator between the two worlds. This she did to the evident satisfaction of those present. Many messages were received and all recognized.

Thursday, April 17, was a busy day for all concerned. The morning meeting brought the completion of business and the election of officers. The election resulted in the following being selected to fill the offices for the ensuing year, viz.: President, Clara L. Stewart, Whitewater, Wis.; 1st vice-president, Mrs. Catherine McFarlin, Milwaukee; 2d vice-president, J. C. Bump, Milwaukee; secretary, Will J. Erwood, La Crosse; treasurer, Dr. C. W. Sanderson, LaCrosse. Trustees, J. H. Houston, Cambria, F. G. Bristol, Oakfield; C. G. Porter, Wonewoc; Mrs. Hattie Smith, Milwaukee.

At 3 o'clock a meeting for the general public, Mrs. Nellie Kingsley Baker in the chair. A poem, rendered in a masterly way, by Mrs. Catherine McFarlin, took the place of an invocation. A splendid address by Prof. Rhodes, through the organism of Mrs. McFarlin, gave much food for thought. Dr. Geo. B. Warne, of Chicago, followed with forceful remarks upon important issues. Both speakers were loudly applauded.

The audience was then favored with a number of tests and messages by Mrs. Frances Wheeler, of Madison, Wis. These were all recognized, and Mrs. Wheeler made many friends by her work. After Mrs. Wheeler, the writer was called upon to give a few messages.

The closing session at 8 p. m., was one of the most interesting meetings of the series. A good audience assembled at this meeting, and the interest was very keen. After music and invocation, Moses Hull delivered the address. Mr. Hull was in splendid voice, and his sermon had only to be heard to be appreciated. I wish it were possible to give a verbatim report. At the close of his sermon Mr. Hull spoke in favor of the Morris Pratt Institute at Whitewater, Wis., with such effect that quite a neat sum was pledged in its support.

Dr. Nellie Mosier was announced, and was greeted with applause. Dr. Mosier gave many messages at this session, her work was frequently applauded, and seemed to give general satisfaction.

Beautiful bouquets were presented to each of the workers. Mrs. Hattie Smith made a few remarks, and the meeting closed in harmony.

NOTES.

The next convention is to be held in LaCrosse, Wis., April, 1903.

The convention voted to hold the state camp at Waukesha, in August; and to co-operate with the Wonewoc Society in putting on a ten-days' camp at Wonewoc.

A lyceum board was appointed to boom the lyceum work in Wisconsin, and Sister Mattie Hull was made chairman of the board. This is a step in the right direction.

A vote of thanks was extended to Mayor Rose, of Milwaukee, to the Unity Society of that city, to the retiring board, and especially to the retiring secretary, Nellie K. Baker, of Portage, for efficient aid rendered the convention and the State Association. Also to the workers in Milwaukee for assistance, financial and otherwise, and to the press throughout the state for courtesies and fair treatment.

Resolutions in favor of more thorough organization, the regulation of work, so as to shut out the fraud and mountebank, and establish a more exalted Spiritualism; and opposed to compulsory vaccination, and all other infringements of the personal liberties to which we are entitled, were adopted by the convention.

WILL J. ERWOOD,
Sec. W. S. S. A.

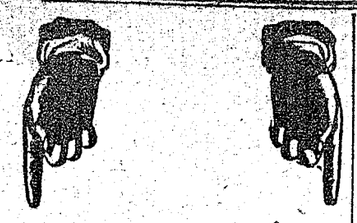
From a Non-Bible Spiritualist.

In The Progressive Thinker I often see articles written by persons calling themselves Bible Spiritualists. I wonder what kind of a Spiritualist can a person be who believes and accepts the Bible as the word of God. Now I am a great stickler for truth, but have no use for error, even if it is found between the lids of the Bible. I claim the Bible has done more harm than good in the world; that it is full of errors from beginning to end; that it is a forgery; God never signed his name to it, nor ever had anything to do with it more than any other book. One can prove it is not infallible by its own words. Science, reason and common sense have proven the Bible story of creation false from beginning to end.

When the Bible said "He that believeth not shall be damned," it lighted the fires of the Inquisition and caused thousands to be put to death. When it said "servants obey your masters," it riveted the chains on millions of human beings. When it said "take a little wine for thy stomach's sake," it filled thousands of drunkards' graves. When the Bible said women should keep silence, it degraded woman and made her inferior to man in the eyes of the world. When it said "thou shalt not suffer a witch to live," it put thousands of innocent people to death.

Some two or three years ago Southern California was threatened with a dry year. The Catholic and some other churches appointed a day to pray for rain. A person (who was somewhat of a skeptic) wrote to Prof. Le Conte, the great scientist of the State University, asking what he thought of the efficacy of prayer in bringing rain. He wrote back these grand words of truth: "God's laws are changeless, permanent, and consistent. God never suspends the laws of nature."

If this is true, how about the deluge, Jonah and the whale, immaculate conception, the resurrection of the body, in fact all the miracles of the Bible? Are they not fables and myths?



Is it not astonishing that people will cling to that old book and call it the holy word of God? Is it not time that all this nonsense was cast into oblivion, and we accept the truths of Nature as our guide? Truth will stand, error must fall, and we must get rid of error either in this life or the next.

Is Now Located at

No. 1087 Boylston street, Boston, Mass., where he will be pleased to meet all who may call between the hours of 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. The wonderful work in healing the sick that Dr. Watkins is accomplishing is indeed most astounding; his patients live to testify to his wonderful powers as a healer. For the last year his work has been most wonderful. He says himself that his cures this year have been more than ever before in numbers, as he confined himself to only 30 new patients a month. Dr. Watkins attends personally to each case, and therefore he can do better work than if he had a great many assistants; no staff of visible helpers are in his office to annoy and suggest this and that. He knows what is the trouble with each patient, and knows the right specific to give. He prepares and puts up all of his medicine, and has no help in his medical treatments that is visible help. Write him to-day, and by return mail you will receive the diagnose. No charge made for diagnosing your case. Send age, sex and leading symptom.

THE WORD RELIGION.

Dictionary and Other Definitions.

To not a few "advanced thinkers" the word Religion seems to have about the same charm that a scarlet mantle has to an enraged bovine. Their only use for it is to rend it. Perhaps we ought not to wonder at this. When we remember in what religion was supposed to consist as they knew it in their earlier years; or even in what it consists now, with many thousands of people, it isn't strange that strong language regarding it should be used.

But does it necessarily follow that one must adopt another's conception of a thing, or failing that, cast the thing itself aside as unworthy? We do not so argue in other matters; why in this?

And in the first place, let us be careful and not confound religion with theology. This seems the mistake into which many writers and speakers fall. True that the Christian system appears to be founded upon a theology; but we need not suppose there can be no religion without a theology. This again appears to be the error into which many fall. The dictionaries connect religion with the worship of a divine being. Why shouldn't they? The dictionaries are made by men educated in the Christian religion. They define in accord with their training. But are they necessarily right? This does not follow.

They tell us that the word is derived from the two Latin words "re," meaning "again," and "ligo," meaning "to bind." And they further say (Webster): "The word seems originally to have signified an oath or vow, which was held very sacred by the Romans." Mark the word "seems." There is no authority whatever for asserting its derivation as above given. It is a mere guess, and there is not even agreement among lexicographers on this matter. And if there were, "religion" is understood by nobody nowadays as a mere oath or vow to the gods, or to one god.

Perhaps the word is otherwise derived. And perhaps our guess is quite as good as another's. The word "republic" comes from the Latin words "res," "things," "affairs," and "publica—ae," "the people." Well, why not "religion" from "res," "things," and "legis," "the law?" It has certainly quite as much in its favor as the other derivation. And if the church, without authority in letters, or otherwise than at its own will, has changed the meaning of the word, and for a vow to the gods has substituted duties to itself, we have it for example if we, too, put a meaning upon the word "religion" which will be acceptable to us, while violating no principle of lexicography.

Say then that "religion" means "the things of the law." It remains to ask, Of what law? And can we better answer than by saying; The law of life? One of the founders of the Christian church wrote many years ago: "Pure religion and undefiled....is to visit the fatherless and the widow in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." Reduced to simpler terms, this is Benevolence, or the helping hand, and personal Purity. And this again is the law of life—is "religion." If Spiritualism does not teach these as the means by which we shall pass from one stage to another stage or sphere of development, then thirty years of familiar acquaintance with the works of its prophets and seers and poets has been all in vain, which this writer is not prepared to admit.

Science means simply knowledge. As such, with reference to the question of continuity of personal existence after the change called death, it is vastly better than the "faith" which rests upon mere assertion, no matter whose. And to those with whom Spiritualism begins and ends with phenomena, it is only a science, and nothing else. But "there are others," and we demand for them the respectful treatment which they accord to their brethren.

Science declares facts. With conduct, she has nothing to do. The microscope and the telescope are not conditioned as to their revelations by the moral character or manner of life of him who uses them. So the phenomena of Spiritualism occur in presence of moral degenerates as well as before the pure in heart. But as nothing in this or in any other world occurs without a purpose, let us ask. To what purpose the phenomena of Spiritualism. Are they merely to demonstrate the continuity of personal existence? Let the most of the communications received give answer to this question.

Spiritualistic literature, particularly that which claims to proceed from inspiration, is pregnant with information respecting the processes of spiritual development. Love one toward another, and aid to the erring and unfortunate, are the very key-notes to this development, not alone in the spheres where the decarnated make their homes, but here also, while we are incarnate. And that we may thus develop, there must be a principle or law of life, in harmony with which, or in obedience to which, development proceeds. As we have said above, this law of life, Benevolence or Love, and Purity are religion. One may be a Spiritualist, doubtless, who goes no further than to accept spirit existence as a proven fact. But is one less a Spiritualist who also accepts the teachings of spirits as to methods of soul or spirit progress and development? Surely none will argue this. But these teachings are invariably as to conduct—as to the law of life—as to Purity and Love—as to Religion, as defined by one who is recognized by Christians at least, as having authority to define the word, which authority is never so much as claimed for the dictionary-makers.

Spiritualism is a religion, for those of us who want a religion; for those of us who desire to begin our advancement, and continue it as far as possible, on the earth plane, in order to enter upon the new life with some idea of its conditions, and thus proceed along the lines of least resistance. For others it may not be a religion. We shall not even endeavor to urge it upon them, since it would be worthless if accepted otherwise than willingly and gladly. But we shall and do ask that they do not arrogate to themselves the authority to force the acceptance of their definitions upon us. There appears to be a disposition in some quarters to assume prerogatives little less arbitrary than those of St. Peter's chair. But we have not yet named a Pope, nor have we even seen a directory of the Spiritualistic House of Bishops. When we get these, the next thing in order will be trials for heresy; but fortunately perhaps for some of us, the day is not yet.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, at the home of his son Charles, near Decatur, Mich., April 10, Joseph D. Morlan, aged 63 years. Mr. M. was for many years a believer in Spiritualism. He was among the first to respond to the country's call for soldiers for the Civil War, having enlisted in the First Michigan cavalry in 1862. He served for over four years. Services were held at the son's home on the 18th inst.; address by the writer. At the grave, the G. A. R. took charge, rendering their work very nicely; with a closing inspirational poem by the writer.

H. L. CHAPMAN.

Dr. George M. Ramsay, one of the best known citizens of Washington county, Pa., passed to spirit life at the home of Mrs. John W. Warrick, at Washington, aged 82. Dr. Ramsey served throughout the Civil War as surgeon in the Ninety-fifth New York Regment and rose to Surgeon General of the command at the close of the war. He was liberal in thought, the author of several excellent books, and universally respected.

At Lily Dale, N. Y., April 16, 1902, at 1 o'clock a. m., Abram Bower took leave of his body, after weeks of suffering. He has been a faithful representative Spiritualist for many years, and a powerful healing medium, and a widely useful man. Spiritualism was his religion in life and his comfort and support in death.

LYMAN C. HOWE.

Passed to spirit life, from the home of his daughter, Mrs. Stephen Benedict, Nashville, Mich., Felix Fralick, aged 89 years and 5 months. He died as he had lived for 50 years, a consistent Spiritualist, knowing that death is simply a transition to a higher life and a reunion with the loved ones gone before. He has been a reader of The Progressive Thinker for a good many years, until old age prohibited. S. B.

Charles Bradway was born in Silver Run, New Jersey, March 30, 1854, and came to Jackson county, Iowa, in 1861, where he resided on a farm near Maquoketa until his ascension on the morning of April 9, 1902. He was a man of strong character. Imbued with the philosophy of Spiritualism, his life was an example of its teachings. Mrs. J. M. Harvey conducted the services.

HEALTH RESTORED

The entire country is astonished at the wonderful cures perfected through the method originated by Dr. J. M. Peebles, the Grand Old Man of Battle Creek, Mich. This science is a subtle force in nature combined with magnetic medicines, and called by the eminent doctor,

Psychic Science

It has been termed the greatest pain reliever ever known. In a perfectly natural manner it builds up the system and restores health. It makes no difference how serious or hopeless the case may seem, there is positive hope in this grand science. It has restored the deaf, blind and lame, cured the paralytic, and those suffering from Bright's Disease, Consumption, Stomach Trouble, Catarrh, Nervous Debility, Neuralgia, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Female Troubles, as well as men and women addicted to the liquor, morphine and other vile habits.

Geo. H. Weeks, of Cleveland, Ohio, sends heartfelt thanks for restoration to health after suffering from nervous prostration and insomnia for years; he says he now enjoys health and restful sleep every night. Mrs. J. A. Rust, of Itasca, Minn., cured of uric acid poisoning in two month's treatment writes: "I am better than in years, and each day brings new health and strength. I will refer all ailing ones to you." Mary A. Earl, Crawford, Mich., suffering from pronounced female difficulties and kidney disease, says: "I took your treatment three months and it has been a success in my case. I am indeed grateful to you for my recovery." C. E. Davis, Woodman, N. H., who suffered all the miseries of a dyspeptic, writes that as the result of Dr. Peebles' treatment, he had not missed a meal since last March. D. W. Bridgman, of Del Norte, Col., writing Sept. 30, after three months' course, "When I began treatment with Dr. Peebles' Institute of Health I was a cripple, unable to walk but little with a cane. Now I am able to walk with ease. Some days ten or fifteen miles. My general health is excellent. I can hardly find words to express my gratitude, as previously I had tried everything I could hear of and got no relief. Mrs. Isaac Varney, Dover, N. H., a sufferer of spinal trouble and nerve exhaustion, writes that she would not go back to the state of health she was in before taking this treatment for all the world. Solomon Fried, of Vanderhilt, California, cured of neuralgia and catarrh, says: "I am well and a thousand times obliged to you."

"A Message of Hope"

written by Dr. J. M. Peebles, in a plain and concise manner, tells you exactly how and where you can gain perfect health; in fact, it gives you the key to the grandest knowledge known to man. Remember, this book costs you nothing, and it reveals wonderful secrets and makes the impossibilities of yesterday realities of to-day.

GODS AND GODS.

Monotheism, Deism, Pantheism, Atheism.

In the Spiritualist press of America, for many years, we have had a repletion of gods; a surfeit of the god-idea; a superabundance of Theism, Deism, Pantheism, and so forth. Still the god-worshipers cry for more. (Any one is a god-worshiper who holds in his or her mind adoration and recognition of an ideal something or person called God.) It is well for the discussion and investigation to go on, for many people have been convinced of the errors in the old doctrines and have expressed gratitude for what they have learned of spiritual truths. And there are many more to follow. Old errors must be met and combated; old superstitions must melt before the genial influence of the Sun of Truth.

Theists have had abundant liberties and opportunities to defend their waning cause; yet the foundation of the fabric is being swept away. Science and investigation have knocked the underpinning out of fables and church dogmas.

We hope the Theists and Deists will not be offended if we say things pertaining to their god-idea that they dislike. We know it comes to them by succession, education, and has such a firm hold on their minds they cannot release themselves from it, and we are not surprised to perceive this false idea manifested occasionally in their spoken and written thoughts. The old convictions cling to them like a thing of nature; therefore we do not blame or condemn them; we can only hope to show them the errors of their theistic notions and lead them into the light of truth which they must sometime learn.

Some modern poets make a lavish use of the word God, which they fancy is an ornament or embellishment of their their poetry. It is simply a blot and blemish; but they work it in to make a poetical jingle, according to the fashion. A more senseless word they cannot find. Can anybody tell what they mean by it? Ask a number of persons the question, What or who is God? or what they believe about it, and you get a variety of answers. Perhaps no two persons hold the same ideas of deity. Men take greater liberties in defining this word than any other in our language. They will say anything: "By God I mean so-and-so—God is this or that"—anything—everything, until we have a maze of false, baseless affirmations without proof. This must necessarily and naturally be so; for people are simply trying to define an imaginary person or thing that has no reality or existence. It is not wonderful that large numbers of the human family go mad or insane on Theism, for the mind dwells on imaginary thoughts only. If all the definitions of a god were put into a book it would be the largest book in the world, all made up of error, falsehood, ignorance—no truth or knowledge in it.

If a man succeeds in proving to his own satisfaction the existence of a god, by faith and assertion, it is essential to state which god it is, give his proper name; for many gods from the fields of myth come in with the claim of supremacy, and each devotee affirms that the one he recognizes is the only God. How shall this matter be decided?

Some folks say proof of a god is belief in the Holy Bible. There is nothing more fallible, contradictory, unreasonable, unreliable; yet if faith in the Bible is proof of a god, it is one of bad character—the worst of all gods—Jehovah. Faith is no proof of anything, for people believe things that are utterly false, and no just reason why they believe. They are simply ignorant.

Theologians preach a system of salvation and damnation that we know to be false from beginning to end; yet millions of people believe it. They say the dead know not anything—the dead will stay dead, unconscious, until the great judgment day when Gabriel shall blow his horn and all shall be resurrected, brought to life again—some go to heaven; others sent to hell to be eternally damned. They say there is no communication with the dead—that all mediums are deceivers, frauds, liars—that Spiritualism is all a delusion, fraud, humbug etc. We know that kind of preaching is false and we can disprove it abundantly—demonstrate Spiritualism by proofs as strong as facts can make them; yet millions of people believe those affirmations because their wise theologians preach them.

Here are some statements from a wise Pantheist. "By God I mean the boundless ocean of omniscience" (And what is that?) "The first cause is lost in an endless chain of cause and effect. Such things transcend the memory of Gods. The Gods were not godlike. It is impossible to state what the first cause was." (Yet he states it definitely—says it was God—a he or him—all things—boundless ocean of omniscience.)

"We cannot expect to understand the infinite until our mind has grown to infinite proportions." (Then he does not understand what he presumes to explain. Then why explain it so positively and definitely?) "Evolution is the process by which God has become God—the totality of all things. The mind of God has grown so large through the development of eternity that it transcends in size, power and consciousness the whole of His vast body."

That is like the Pantheist who transcends the bounds of human knowledge and expects us to accept his theory on faith. How does he learn so much about his ideal God and Gods? No one of common mind can understand his transcendentalism—he says it is impossible; consequently he is wasting his time and effort. He goes on in wild, reckless affirmations without a fact—without a word of proof to sustain them.

Of all doctrines Pantheism is the most absurd. What consummate folly to put all things into one word—God! Is anything learned by that? What advantage or benefit is it for a man to believe and imagine that he is a god or part of a god? Is there any doctrine so absurd that credulous dupes will not believe it if a theologian preaches it? How generous, liberal, magnanimous the Pantheist is, or pretends to be, to take us all into his god-fraternity.

Well, we don't want to be a member, and don't thank him, but spurn his magnanimity with indignation. We are of the opinion that the Pantheist is insane on the god-idea. We are not ungrateful for his generous motive, but it is placing us in an attitude we do not care to assume. We have antipathy for gods in general and don't want to be called a god, nor part of a god, nor son of a god; and we deny the existence of any and all gods. The god-idea exists only as the figment of imagination based on ignorance.

Now we will make a brief list of words, isms, ologies, names that have sprung from the parent stock of Theism, which is belief in gods—man-made gods. We want to see how they look by comparison:

Mythology, Theology, Idolatry, Theocracy, Autocracy, Deism, Monotheism, Polytheism, Pantheism, Unitarianism, Trinitarianism, Paganism, Heathenism, Supernaturalism, Buddhism, Mohammedanism, Catholicism, Methodism, Baptism, Presbyterianism, Mormonism, Adventism, Sadducee, Pharisee, Neophyte, Levite, Campbellite, Millerite, Religionist, Romanist, Ritualist, Dogmatism, Heterodoxy, Orthodoxy, Creedism, Sectology, Doxology, Heresy, Damnation, Creation, Persecution, Tradition, Superstition, Protestantism, Christianity, Diabolism, Ecclesiasticism, Clergyman, Theologian, Ministry, Missionary, Bishop, Godliness, Reverence, Sanctimoniousness, Solemnity, Popedom, Heretic, Martyrdom, Priestcraft, Intolerance, Infallibility, Worship, Divinity.

We have here enough names of conflicting systems for illustration; yet we could go on with this chain of names, isms, words from the same source, enough to fill a whole column.

Spiritualism, pure and simple, does not vie with any of them nor recline to any of them. It stands in opposition and antagonism to all those systems, and it proposes to wipe them out of existence—big job; yet it will succeed—it is getting there in good shape. Scores of isms have already disintegrated; and it has wrought havoc among those still standing.

A Spirit Message. Number Two.

After becoming aware that there was no death to the soul of man, and I had repeated the question of the Apostle Paul with which I ended my message telling of my (so-called) death, I passed into a deep sleep, and knew no more until I opened my eyes and beheld before me green fields with cattle and sheep grazing or peacefully resting under the over spreading limbs of the shade trees.

The hillside was dotted with pretty and yet simple cottages, with a mansion a little farther down, while off in the valley in the distance was a village.

While I was looking at the village and its surroundings from the piazza upon which I found myself, my attention was drawn to the song of a beautiful bird which was on a tree near by, and soon after another bird took up the song until the very heavens were filled with their song of praise.

While I was listening to them the door opened and my father came out and asked me if I did not wish to take a walk with him.

I replied that I would like to do so very much. So we started off, but to my surprise I found that I was not walking, but simply floating through space with the greatest ease.

I asked my father why I seemed to float instead of walking, as I had been accustomed to do all my life on earth.

He said that it was because I was not encumbered with the heavier and courser garment which I was accustomed to wear while on earth, and now that I had laid it gently one side, its mission being completed, I would find that the longer I was an inmate of the spiritual realm, the lighter and more spiritualized I would become, and accordingly it would become easier and easier for me to move from one place to another.

And so we floated on until my father drew my attention to a lake which we were then approaching.

As we drew near the lake, we ceased to float, but commenced to walk with a light step upon the spiritual ground, until we stood at the water's edge, of the most beautiful body of water that I had ever seen.

I could see but a small portion of this lake, as it was a very large one, but still small compared with many which they have here in the spirit world.

Along its banks were shade trees, of all kinds, for quite a distance, then there would be openings, in which we could see the homes of some spirits who, when they were weary and wanted rest, and to be undisturbed, (for the time being,) come out to this lake, or some other quiet place, to do so.

While there were others who had homes near the water's edge, where they could sit and see the different ones as they passed by, and where there was always a vacant chair for any one who wanted to rest or gather information on any points regarding the place which they intended to visit.

As we looked into its mirror-like surface, the desire to bathe came over me.

It was then that I became aware that I had on a garment which seemed to be woven about me, it appeared much like mist. But up to this time I had not been aware of its existence.

When I had the desire to bathe, the mist-like covering disappeared, and another took its place, which I found out was a kind of covering the spirits wear while bathing in the spiritual waters.

I was somewhat afraid to enter those waters alone.

My father knowing my thoughts, said that he, too, would go in and enjoy a bath with me.

How refreshing it was, my soul seemed to overflow with joy, and I was so surprised to find how much the bath had strengthened me.

My mind was so much clearer than when I entered those spiritual waters.

After we had finished bathing, and had come out of the water, I was once more robed in the garment of mist.

I then asked my father if he had intended to take me to that lake when we left the house where I found myself upon awakening?

He said that it was, knowing that it was one of the great laws of the spiritual world, when a newly born spirit comes into the spiritual life, to cleanse themselves in its waters, as they had cast off the outer garment of clay, which the spirit had to wear while it was in the lower state or performing its earthly mission.

He told me that in some cases the spirits were not led to where the waters were but were left to themselves until they came out of the stupor into which most all pass while they are being brought to their temporary home, then the desire to see where they are comes over them, and finding that they can move about easily they wander off alone, but ere long they, too, come to some form of spiritualized water, and they would then have the desire to bathe that I did.

My father said that he was anxious for me to make as much advancement as I could, and to have me ever press onward, for he told me that the time might come when I could commune with those on earth, and have the chance to tell them of the things which I had seen and heard in the world of spirit.

Some Psychic Experiences.

I come from psychic stock. My grandmother, who died in 1863, had the gift of prophecy, foretelling through dreams. She was one morning telling a dream to an old negro, a slave named Pipe. Pipe said to her: "Miss Rose, never tell any one your dreams and they will come true." After that, heeding Pipe's advice, the dreams came true. Later on she lost the gift of foretelling. In 1857 my father became greatly interested in Spiritualism. He was in very poor health and doctors had advised him to go to Alum Springs, Va., for recovery. My mother, his first wife, died in 1853. It was in April 1857 that he was on the point of departure. The night before, at midnight my mother appeared to him and told him to be of good cheer, and if he got through October of that year he would be restored to good health once more. My step-mother (all these are on the other side now) told me of this without giving her opinion as to whether she believed it or not. She told me she joilied my father and tried to persuade him he had dreamt these things. He persisted in saying he was wide awake and had been for several hours previous to my mother's visit.

Noting what our Spiritualist brothers have said about home circles, I commenced in the year 1900 to hold seances with members of my family, three daughters and one of my sons. We got table-tilting, turning, and independent raps for a while. A friend had a planchette in the house. One day the three daughters in turn took up the planchette and developed in that sitting independent automatic writing.

Spiritualism is gaining ground. Anyhow a man or woman stultifies himself or herself when they admit ignorance of the existence of Spiritualism and phenomena accompanying it. We keep boarding-house and find every other man knows something about Spiritualism FRANK D. HENDERSON.

"WHO IS THE LORD?"

Names and Their Significance.

If we consider the first sixteen letters of the Hebrew alphabet as similar to the Greek letters whose names mostly resemble them, the fifth letter, he, must be like epsilon and have the sound of a in fate. The deity-name usually read as Jehovah, is spelled in Hebrew, as every scholar knows, with four letters, though the latter two are often dropped off. It is then literally IAVA. The Samaritans pronounced it IABE or Yahva, which is probably the most correct pronunciation.

It seems to have been a mystic or occult designation, not to be uttered publicly, as the Hebrew commandment as promulgated after the days of Ezra reads: "Thou mayest not take the name of Yava thy God wickedly or profanely."

We find it compounded, however, with names of individuals and places, as though a public or common use was not objectionable. Yet there were often two names to persons and places, one a common designation, and the other sacred, in "the language of the gods" as Homer explains. Thus one man bore the names Gideon and Jeru-Baal or Jeru-Bosheth, and another Meri-Baal and Mephi-Bosheth. Baal, the lord, and bosheth, the phallic statue, seem to have been interchangeable.

The Hebrew books which seem to be historic are nevertheless more or less indefinite. They were evidently written for religious purposes, and perhaps in several instances, to favor personal ambitions, and accuracy as history was a subordinate matter. Hence they are often discrepant. Their final redaction took place at a later period, when they were promulgated as canonical. They had been edited several times before. Hence it is not altogether certain that the deity-name Yava was in use in earlier periods. We find that the supreme divinity of the Israelites was called Moloch—"the king," as in Psalm xxiv: 8, 9, 10, and another writer says: "Yava is our Moloch." He was also styled "the Rock," and his peculiar sanctity was ascribed to "Great Stones" as his symbols. See Deuteronomy xxxii, 4, 31; I. Samuel ii:2; also Joshua xxiv: 26, 27; Judges vi:26; I. Samuel vi: 14, 15; I. Kings, i:9, etc.

The statement scouted by Josephus, that the head of an ass was found in the shrine of the temple at Jerusalem, was neither unplausible nor absurd. There were images of cherubs or sphinxes, pomegranates or rimmons, and lily-work or lotus-blossoms, as well as two pillars at the entrance, and the "eternal fire" besides the symbols in the ark. In the use of hieroglyphics, the object having a designation similar or resembling the thing signified was often used. Thus an oak or Ala, a terebinth. Alon denoted Alla or Eloah, God. An ass was called Eo in the Egyptian language, and so the head was a phonetic for Ino.

Professor Rawlinson identified the name Zeus or Zevs, the Great God of Greece, with Dius-piter, or Father in heaven. "Zeo, Seo and Jov," he declares, "are the same word, as Sir William Jones has shown." With these he compares "the Assyrian God Iav," adding that "the Samaritans called Ihoh or Ihoah, lengthened by us into Jehovah, Iabe (the b being a v); the Greeks Iao."

This divinity appears to have also borne the name Raman, symbolized or phoneticized by the rimmon or pomegranate. In Assyria he was the god Vul, the lord of the air and storm; but in Babylonic, he was the Supreme Intellect. He was regarded as the principle of life and spirit, and Damaskios the Neo-platonis, denominated his Kosmos Noetos, the Mind-principle of the Universe. The oracle at Klaras made him the summary of all the gods—Zeus, Apollo, Pluto or Hades, and Bacchus. But neither the name nor the rites might be disclosed except to the initiated. Every god had a secret name, to be uttered only then. Cf. Judges xiii:18.

The Gnostics made pheroh identical with Ilda-Boath, son of the Akyss and genius of the planet Saturn, the Kronos or Moloch of the former worship. He was the Creator of the world, the God of the Jews, and the malevolent being. The mission of the Serpent in Eden was to enlighten mankind, and that of Christ to redeem them from his sway.

Out of this melee we are to extract the truth.

Self-Hypnotic Healing.

I have made a late discovery that enables all to induce the hypnotic sleep in themselves instantly, awaken at any desired time and thereby cure all known diseases and bad habits. ANYONE can induce this sleep in themselves instantly at first trial, control their dreams, read the minds of friends and enemies, visit any part of the earth, solve hard questions and problems in this sleep and remember all when awake. This so-called Mental-Vision Lesson will be sent to anyone ABSOLUTELY FREE, actually enabling him to do the above without charge whatever. Prof. R. E. Dutton, Lincoln, Neb., U.S.A.

A NEW CATECHISM,

BY M. M. MAGASARIAN.

This is a new "Catechism" in the full sense of the word. There has as yet appeared in the world of liberal literature nothing like this most wonderful little book of reason. E. P. Powell, the well-known author, the reviewer and critic, says: "The remarkable thing about this 'Catechism' is that it tells the truth." It deals with the questions of God, Immortality—the Creeds, the Clergy, the Church, Prayer and Salvation, Jesus and his Teaching, the Growth of the Christian Scriptures, and many other philosophical, scientific and ethical questions with the utmost candor, courage and clearness. 188 pages. Cloth 75c; paper, 50c

EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storiettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 285 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The Author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.

The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."

That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."

Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest."

Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered, hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

Demand for Positive Knowledge

Scientific investigation has always stopped at the line which separates the material world from the spiritual, but the time has arrived when we demand positive knowledge to take the place of mere faith and the dogmas of priestcraft.

If intercommunication between the two worlds is a fact, let it be demonstrated scientifically, and the truth of the communication as well, and be subjected to the glare of the searchlight of science. Webster's definition of religion is not broad enough—"always including the worship of a God or Gods"—because the history of the world's thought shows that the spiritual is the exclusive domain of religion, and whatever we derive by faith, speculation or knowledge from the occult realm as to the philosophy of life, rewards and punishments, and the duties and obligations of mankind in relation to our present and future, is formulated by each individual for himself into a code of regulations or a religion (from ligo, to bind) by which he is bound in his conduct and manner of life as respects his fellow man and his existence in the future, and we cannot divest the subject of its religious aspect; it is, therefore, a religion; but it is also, and chiefly, a philosophy—all-inclusive, claiming the supreme attention of the best thinkers, and infinite in its scope.

Spiritualism should be studied as a philosophy and a religion in the most exact and critical manner, that it may be presented to the world containing perfectly demonstrated facts and principles for the guidance of every inhabitant of the planet, both as to life here and hereafter; so that if it is found to be true that the spirit world is the world of causes, and this the world of effects, the interblending of earth and heaven shall be more fully understood, and the research grow into a concrete science.

SPIRIT RETURN.—SONG.

All welcome, God's children from yonder bright shore!
Who bring us a token of love gone before,
With many a message to cheer the lone heart,
While bosoms are heaving, and tears of joy start.

God's truth is our watchword, with knowledge to guide,
And wisdom to lead us, through love's labors wide,
We'll cross over Jordan to the heavenly land,
Then join the glad chorus of bright angel band.

Oh! come to us, loved ones, like sweet flowers of yore,
Whose memory seems dearer than ever before,
Our soul-prayer we offer that in regions divine,
Our spirits shall mingle in pure love sublime.

CHAPTER NINETEEN.

Spirit Materialization.

Materialization, as it has been called, has been deemed the keystone of the arch of Modern Spiritualism by the worshipers of phenomena. They have believed that other purported manifestations of spirit return might be simulated, but that the actual appearance and disappearance of human forms in the likeness of old friends was positive proof of human immortality. It is certain no other phenomena have proved as attractive, and no other phase has lent itself so readily to the swindler. The conditions usually demanded have been specially adapted to fraud, often far too ingenious for discovery by the untrained skeptic. Nevertheless we have full attestation of the genuineness of this phase from one of the most eminent of living scientists.

Sir William Crookes held Florence Cook as a member of his family for months, and was enabled to experiment with the materialized form of the renowned Katie King to his heart's content. Every condition he requested was accorded. Every possible scientific test was permitted. And at last he was allowed to stand between the form of the mortal and that of the apparition, both at the same time under his practiced scrutiny. No attestation to a fact in nature could be more perfect. Fraud was impossible. Hallucination was out of the question unless electric tests can themselves become hallucinated. So the materialization of human form from the invisible becomes an attested object for study by the philosopher. The dollar circle and the practiced public medium will not be herein accused or denounced. Their phenomena will be passed by as thoroughly unsatisfactory. We shall deal only with the proved, and claim the right to enquire what and how much is really proved under these conditions of attested verity.

First of all we stand in the presence of a form that is not that of the medium, and barely able to maintain itself under the best possible conditions for such a manifestation. A ray of sunlight is sudden death to that form, and even artificial light must be toned by a skilled hand. The thought atmosphere that surrounds the medium must vibrate harmoniously. When physically, mentally, psychically the medium is satisfied we may find ourselves in presence of an intelligence from the long ago, occupying a form that simulates the mortal, and possesses certain organs that can express thought in the wonted manner and style of Homo. So much is embodied in the attested fact.

We next notice that, unlike the flying soul, we never have a replica of the form of some living man or woman. That fact tells us that the materialized form is not built up of units emerging from the Homo they purport to represent. There is no existing mortal form from which they could have been taken. If attracted from an aural form the result would have been an etherealization such as is called "flying soul" or "astral form." In other words, the units of which that form is composed have had no association with the being they assume to represent. There is not even a single unit charged with memories and experiences gathered in the mortal life of that phantasm. Having thus determined what the form is not, we next seek to know what it is.

Everywhere around us is evidence of the creative power by which Homo embodies his thought. His architecture, his railroad, his bridges, and above all the embodied intelligence with which he fills his machine shops and factories, are in every sense "thought created" entities. They are built up of single units, blended by the attractive energy of a presiding Ego into a form Homo can sense. The artist had mentally attracted units that shaped themselves into form long before he expressed that portrait now resting upon his easel to our mortal sense. The sculptor rounds his form, thus giving us the life lines of Homo in the statue that expresses to us all of the man we know—save life. The storehouse of Cosmos may have been ransacked for units of degree, but nothing was caught save the pose of a moment, the emotion of an hour, the flash of life's incident. Artist, sculptor, inventor call upon Cosmos for units that will blend with the thought units of the mortal workman, and take the desired shape. But the units pregnant with Homo's personal intelligence are absent. The units that have been gathered or attracted can give back to mortal eye only so much of the actual personality as was existing in the brain of the creator of the portrait or statue. In other words, the statue or portrait of Washington can only impress even the sensitive with so much of the old warrior and statesman as was realized by the artist and sculptor. That is all there is in that artificial resemblance. The rest is born of the auto-suggestion of the admirer. There is not a unit on easel or pedestal that was ever infused with the experiences of our nation's hero.

It is very different when the portrait before us is a sun picture taken from the living man, and, perhaps, by art rounded into human form. Flash a picture of our President to-day, fifty of them at once if you choose, from every possible angle, and you are making visible not the mortal Homo but his aural selfhood. You have taken nothing from the mortal that scale or test can detect. Yet from him, in every direction, were passing out units alive with the local life and experience of his personality. Science has taught you how to catch these units on the wing.

Although the very semblance of the well remembered form p[illegible] soon cease as the units pass out into space, yet you have caught the reflection of the human entity at the particular angle from which these units were emerging and escaping. Herein we have a portrait unlike that of the talented artist in that it is composed of blended units from the form itself. These units have each recorded its own experiences, and therefore tell a tale to the sensitive, who can read and interpret their vibrations, impossible to the critic who studies form and beauty as depicted by the artist. Such is and must be the difference between the portrait and the photograph, and such is precisely the difference between the etherealized "flying soul" and the materialized form issuing from the dark cabinet.

Keeping as closely as we may to the subject taken for illustration and examination, we perceive a form, not that of the medium, appearing in the home of Sir William Crookes, where she announces herself as Katie King, and becomes the friend of the family and the pet of the children. Taking her own account of herself as veridical she had left her mortal experiences 200 years behind. And since we have a right to the scientific assumption that the unit is no more shackled to the immortal personality than it was to that of the mortal, she must long ago have ceased to have more than a civic recollection of any experiences of her earth life. The form in which she is clothing herself for a brief hour is solid to mortal sense, but, like the machine of the inventor, its raw material is from any units that will blend into the requisite form. As a work of art it is supreme. It is the picture from the easel—the statue from the pedestal, infused with so much of life and intelligence that it can play the Homo almost to perfection. Its creation demands rare talent and skill. Every physiologist and anatomist knows the myriad details in the human form, whose mere names are wearisome to the student. And every one of those details, essential to the part to be played, must be thought out into objective form just as the inventor must think every detail of his machine before it becomes a harmonious whole. On one occasion the scientist discovered there was no perfect arm within the sleeve of Katie King. The form had to retire for but a moment and return with it rounded into its usual perfection.

Intelligent creation is never completed by a "let there be the desired form." Its creator thinks, and must think every detail. Whether that thought be by almighty flash, or item by item of the slow process of the inventor, is a mere question of time. The process is the same in degree. So we repeat, the mind back of Katie King must have been that of a skilled chemist—a profound student of nature—working on lines very close to those on which form is built in mortal life. His creative power must be developed by long practice, yet still demanding the darkness of a womb, out of which the intended form shall be born at every appearance.

All this is recognized as the basic truth of materialization. But, so far, it might be merely the portrait or statue of Katie King skilled into intelligent life and movement. There need not be a single unit from the personality of the real Katie King associated with that manufactured form. And such, we need hardly say, is the usual "make up" at the dollar seance when the phenomena is genuine from the standpoint of the skeptic.

But the form of Katie King was not created and dressed for appearance in the puppet show of a professional cabinet. It was to simulate the divine creation itself. It was to be the work of an artist posing as God Junior, but with all his essential limitations. The units must not only be experienced in Homo's personality, but must sparkle with the utmost intelligence of mortal brain. Katie could not supply such units. Her mortal form had dissolved centuries ago. So the very first step for the invisible artist is to find a mortal from whose form such units can be borrowed. It is but a loan, and must be returned promptly if the lender is to continue in mortal life. Such a mortal is called a "materializing medium." She can relinquish unit after unit till the scale shocks the observer with its assertion of lost ounces and pounds. But the mortals present are also called upon to contribute, and no one can escape the contribution basket if he has any of the needed material. These lookers-on may be either harmonious or inharmonious. To be harmonious simply means that they can contribute liberally to this collection, taken up for the benefit of the medium and the chemist. Their own sensation or lassitude at the conclusion of the seance should tell them of the awful draft on the vital forces of the medium, even under the most favorable conditions. The form at last appears to these students of the occult side of nature. It stands visible to mortal sense in all its feebleness and strength, being, like every other invention of the creative thought of Homo, wofully sensitive to the conditions around it. It is now that this manufactured Katie King—this human machine—must commence to play its part.

It is rare for the medi[illegible] to possess a highly developed and[illegible]d intellect. There have been a f[illegible] cases where apparently such experienced units might be utilized from the form of the medium. But as a rule such units must come either from the brains of the audience present, or from those of the invisible operators. Probably both sides of the life line must thus contribute.

We here recall that there is nothing whatever gathered from the mortal form of the apparition now calling herself Katie King. Nothing that may not be included in the part of a clever actress on life's stage. Give such an actress the "make up" and she will easily supply the intellect that may be necessary to guide and control the form thus materialized. Such an actress enters the vibrations of earth life, and, with a combination of telepathy and shrewdness, plays her part almost to perfection. At each return she becomes more perfect in her part. She has the memory of every appearance, and exhibits likes and dislikes, repulsions and attractions, because they inhere to the conditions of her "make up." We thus find ourselves in the presence of a civic personality, just as with every mortal, no matter what Ego may be its representative control for the time. We have not, and cannot have the slightest guarantee that the Katie King of yesterday is the Katie King of to-day. The clever artist, the talented chemist, builds and rebuilds that form with increasing facility, and whoever may play the part has access to such memories as have been recorded in that form.

The writer once heard a spirit, talking through an entranced medium, express great indignation because she had just discovered that her one appearance in materialized form had been followed by similar manifestations several times a week for some months, to the great satisfaction of a mortal friend. This is an ever present possibility in this class of phenomena.

We see the phase at its very best when a Katie King, or some other one form, is the only puppet needed on the stage week after week. Where a score of forms are demanded and produced it would be useless returning the units to the organizations from which they are borrowed, at each disappearance of the manufactured form. It is only necessary under such conditions to keep the "wax" and shape it to suit the new demand, until the medium becomes hopelessly exhausted. This phase may thus be strictly genuine, and at the same time be a damnable fraud. Let Katie King be actually present, under conditions the scientist declares satisfactory, yet he can invent no test that would expose the simulation by another intelligence the very next evening. His tests begin and end with the form. The intellect must stand for just what it is worth every time. As in earth life intellect is always associated with a certain form, we demand the presence of that form as a proof of the genuineness of the apparition. The demand and its supply must create much amusement among the unprincipled but invisible "form creators" behind the curtain.

It is a melancholy fact that even a trained intellect is no guarantee of veracity. The skilled chemist we do not see may be going round with his finger to his nose as he fools the mortal by playing upon his ignorance of natural law. We find visitors to such seances in ecstasies over a likeness to a fondly remembered form. A few telepathic tests clinch the belief, and weld it into declared knowledge, whereupon both the form and the telepathy are soon again ready for a like manifestation to another of the visitors. "What fools these mortals be" should be the motto over every materialization cabinet.

At many of our most famed circles for such manifestation there is a child form as a regular cabinet appearance, and usually with shrewd humor playing the clown. Although in some instances known to the writer this little form has not grown or changed in a quarter of a century, the sitters never learn the lesson, but go on counting themselves as actually talking to their own loved ones. They support their belief by asserting that the form is not only a likeness of the old remembrance, but has given names and tests as proofs of its veridity.

The time comes when the Katie King form bids a pathetic good-bye to her entertainer and the medium, and declares her mission on earth now ended. Yet in a few weeks the form Katie King is active as ever, through another medium in our highly favored "ghost land" of America. Who shall declare which is the fraud? The verdict of a jury of mortals in such a case is a mere farce, based on probabilities. A similar doubt inheres, and must inhere to all spirit return.

Through the marvelous trance mediumship of Miss Shelhamer, of Boston, a spirit purporting to be that of the Rev. John Pierpont, renowned as poet and preacher, for fourteen years preached and prayed to complete mundane satisfaction. At last he announced that his work was finished in that line, and that he should forever leave that work to others. Yet in a short time another medium assumed the tripod at the sanctum of the old Banner of Light, and proclaimed the veritable John Pierpont her guide and control. The average believer in Modern Spiritualism apparently cannot comprehend that an impossibility of complete and satisfactory identification inheres to every case of spirit return. However satisfactory to-day, let the spirit purport to return through some other medium to other sitters and we find him a different soul in a different body, with very different experiences.

A letter was recently received by the writer from a gentleman blessed with a marvelous wife, whose mediumship, he assured me, was without a flaw, and untroubled by these little problems. That husband does not grasp the law of identification, which would demand that the marvelous guide of this wonderful medium should control some other sensitive—say in Hindustan or China—or even visit the renowned Mrs. Piper, and there, with another audience, give precisely the same proofs, and proclaim the same lessons as the admiring husband has been recording for a score of years. This has yet to be done. There is a sort of slant towards identification, say in the return of the renowned guides of Stainton Moses of England, who recorded his experiences under the guise of M. A. Oxon. These guides are now purporting to return through Mrs. Piper. So sayeth the S. P. R. in its recent report of its proceedings. But, oh, the woe of it! the intellect of those guides has shriveled; their theological teachings have well nigh become heresy; while their learning has already vanished.

The lesson herein for the student is that spirit return brings no real truth as to the social, political and religious standing in the new life of any of our spirit visitors. Of course we have plenty of explanations of this miserable fiasco, but they have, so far, always proved to be explanations which do not explain.

It will now be seen that the writer counts materialization as, in some respects, the most unsatisfactory phase of spirit return. Yet it also offers proof of the wondrous skill and creative power of invisible Homo. This phase demands a form exhibiting an intelligence not inherent in itself. Like the phonograph it might echo the voice of one who passed away centuries ago. That form may be made to talk wisdom, or even to write down human thoughts for one who may be but the teller of a thrilling romance. The form may claim to be husband, wife or child. The claim is unveridical even at the best, yet that semblance may be expressing feelings and uttering truths that awaken eager response in the mortal listener. But every flash of intelligence in any form of spirit return, or even from aural selfhood, comes under one general law. It is thought from some center of intelligence coming as a vibratory sensation onto mortal organ. And the truth to be ever kept before the student is that such a sensation can only be interpreted in the terms of mortal experience. It may come as impression, intuition, or even a verbal sound, but to the untrained ear its meaning will always remain uncertain. To the educated student a far deeper and more truthful communication may be thus transmitted. But even such a student must first, like his brother student of the hieroglyph, patiently learn ere he may hope to accurately translate. Everything that may be transpiring at this hour in the life of the unseen must remain untranslatable by Homo, because he has no experience of the conditions amid which an "aural self" must express its intelligence and control its surroundings. Such we offer as the conclusion of our study of aural selfhood.

Major Bitters' Memorial Services.

The lyceum hour, at the Spiritualists' church, Sunday morning, was devoted to memorial exercises in honor of the late President of the society, Major Bitters.

The room was nicely decorated with flags, flowers, pictures and growing plants. The program included appropriate songs, etc. Interesting papers were read by Otis Bishop, H. Franklin, S. B. Fanning and a short talk by Oscar Johnson. At the conclusion of the service, officers were elected for the ensuing term.

Rev. Harry J. Moore delivered his farewell address last night. In part he said:

"The human race advances in proportion that it mingles its thought with its labor. All things pursue that course from which it receives the least resistance. In all ages men have asked the question, "Do my loved ones live after they have passed through the change called death?" This interrogation has been answered in the affirmative by our holy religion. He gave quotations from the writings of Socrates and Plato as a proof that the so-called Pagans believed in the communion of spirits. He said that Jesus and his disciples, Paul, Joan of Arc, Swedenborg and D. D. Home were all mediums and Spiritualists in the sense that they received communications from disembodied spirits. He also quoted from the leading ministers, scientists and jurists that part of their writings which landed them plump into the lap of Spiritualism. Among the many names mentioned were: Rev. Samuel Watson, Rev. Minot J. Savage, Rev. B. F. Austin, Profs. Cromwell, Varley, Crookes, Zollner, Hare, Hyslop, Lodge and A. R. Wallace, Judges A. H. Dailey and Edmonds. He also mentioned Ella Wheeler Wilcox and Lilian Whiting. "To tell the truth," said Mr. Moore, we have nothing to fear as a result of education, for our religion prospers most when ignorance is relegated to the dark and superstitious past. Protect and help all is the motto of Spiritualism. Let the light of liberty bathe the shores of our brains. Let the sun of freedom reflect its rays upon the embankments of our minds. Keep sectarian instruction out of our public schools and then we will have a magnificent diversity of individuality. If we are able to reach the heart at the same time that we reach the intellect our future success is assured. Just think, we have all the departed reformers on our side to help and encourage us. Peace be thine unto all. Amen."

At the conclusion of the evening service several new names were added to the roll of membership.

Mr. and Mrs. Moore have endeared themselves in the hearts of many people by their earnest, courteous conduct during their sojourn here, and their return next October, will be hailed as the home coming of members of the fold who have earned the smile of pleasure by duty well performed.—Rochester (Ind.) Daily Republican.

Preserve thyself, instruct thyself, moderate thyself, live for thy fellow-citizens that they may live for thee.—Volney.

Aggression which is flagitious when committed by one is not, sanctified when committed by a host.—Herbert Spencer.

People wish to be settled. Only as far as they are unsettled is there any hope for them.—Emerson.

Natural religion to-day means what the most enlightened reason reads in nature.—E. P. Powell.

PROOF PALPABLE, OR PROOF POSITIVE OF AN AFTER LIFE.

To the Editor:—In keeping with our caption, presumptive evidence is cut out, and only the positive can be considered. A little boy, six years old, whom I know, was crying one night, with a toothache. He said to his mother, that he was "mad." She asked him who was he mad at? He said that he was mad at "who made him." Said she, "Are you mad at God?" He said, "Yes, because he did not make me so I would not have the toothache."

Some persons are like our little boy, Ned. They see others who have a spirit conception, and they think it is all fraud, because they cannot see as others. You will hear such persons remarking like this: "Why can't the spirits come to me and communicate, as well as to my neighbor or friend?"

These individuals make the same mistake that churchists and creedists do. They construct a belief on the supposition that all of the human family are born into the world with the same mental organization, and that it is something altogether outside of heredity that causes all the diversity in character and susceptibility to impressions, etc. Something like two years ago, a negro in the state of Georgia, the name of the place I have forgotten, broke into a widow's house and robbed and killed her. He then tied his shoes onto his feet, heel foremost, and struck for the timber. The searchers for the miscreant could see two pairs of tracks going to the house, but none going away. The blood-hounds they employed would trail toward the house, but a short time, on the last track, until they would get dull and turn and go the other way. The instinct of the hound was so acute that he could tell which tracks were the freshest, and on that principle he knew that he was trailing the wrong way. The shoes being turned the wrong way did not amount to anything with a hound. The trail was six hours old, yet the hounds put the man up a tree in a short time. Very recently, they took a couple of hounds and traced the course of some bank robbers in South Carolina, and found a safe they had buried in the river.

We have a bulldog that can catch hold and hold on; a greyhound that can run with wonderful fleetness; a blood-hound with a scent that is little less than miraculous, yet the bulldog cannot run nor smell, only in a limited way; nor can the greyhound smell or hold on with his teeth, nor the bloodhound run fast, nor is he a great biter.

Some men are born blind, some deaf, some idiotic, whilst others are idiotic in some departments of the mind and strong in others; and a certain per cent of the human family are blessed with rounded-out brains and know in all directions, as we might say. That lovely as well as great man, Combe, the phrenologist, could not calculate, figures being a mystery to him. He could not tell the mathematical relations of objects and things. Blind Tom was a musical prodigy, but an idiot in everything else. To the person who believes in the Bible, it might be said, and the argument designed to be presented ended at once, that in the soul of man there are a diversity of gifts; some with the gift of healing, some the discerning of spirits, that is with as great power to see or hear spirits, as the hound has to smell the trail of a man or an animal.

But when we come to the materialist, who is dead set against believing or knowing anything about these gifts, like the man from a certain state in the United States, he has to be shown. And he is hard to show. You have to do him like the Yankee directed to administer the medicine to destroy fleas. When the good lady of the house called him back to tell them how to give the medicine, he said to catch them and force it down their confounded necks.

From the above cases cited, and others to be introduced later, and of somewhat a different nature, it would seem that the matter of proof positive or palpable, of immortal life, depends largely if not altogether, on the sense and understanding of the person or persons to whom the proof is offered or presented.

There are two characters that we wish to refer to as being germain to this question. There is a man with the pride of belief, and there is another with the pride of doubt. We will liken each of these to a certain kind of bear. The one with the pride of doubt is the cinnamon bear that is trained to dance by the dark man who carries a pole in his hand and utters a grunting song, as the animal with a chain around his neck and held by the man, stands on his hind feet and wabbles around the ring. This is the Salvation Army man, who can act and perform inside of the length of his boss's chain, but can not go outside of it. And we may take all the orthodox worshipers in this class. They are all bound by the chain of creed and are as helpless to go outside as is this poor dumb animal. The other bear is the hibernater. He lies in his deen and sees no light, and is proud that he knows nothing. He represents the negative class of humanity. He curls up with his black paw in his mouth and nurses it from day to day and from night to night. He turns his back on the light and is proud in the possession of his dark and negative conditions. He represents the blank and unhappy materialist, unhappy, though proud in his doubts.

Talk of any kind of proof of light beyond the horizon of this world to him who turns his back to you, and to the mouth of the cave of ignorance into which he has betaken himself! And what better off is the one with the chain of creed around his neck? He is proud of his chain and of his master, and of the guttural music that he hears every day and at all times, until he is soothed by it into a kind of brain sleep. He is close akin to the cheerful idiot. The orthodox devotee does not know what one means when he hears him say that he is an investigator of facts and phenomena. That is outside the length of his cable-tow, and everything like that sounds foreign or smacks of witchcraft.

Let us imagine that A. is a blind man, and that he has an engagement to meet B., a deaf and dumb man, down in the bottom of the sea. A. goes down in a diving bell that is transparent, and B. has a diving bell that is not, or that he has a common instrument for diving. They go down to the place of meeting at the proper time, remain a given time, return. On being asked what was the result of the interview, each answers that there was no communication between them. It is said to A that his bell was clear so that one might see through the walls and outside. "But," said he, "I am blind." And he further remarked that he cried out to B. But B. said that he could not hear. Neither could testify that the other observed the appointment. If there could be such a thing that a spirit could not talk, in spirit manner, it would do no good for a medium for spirit manifestation to be clairaudient. If a spirit individual is an impossibility, that is if there are no spirits who can come to persons on the earth, then clairvoyance is nothing, there is no such a thing.

Paul claimed in all his arguments about spiritual gifts, as far as we can judge from his writings, that they were miraculously bestowed. Jesus was more liberal than he. When the disciples came and told him that they found some casting out devils in the name of the Holy Ghost, or professing to be by such power, he said to them: "Let them alone." What would the priests say now if such should be found? Would not a Moses or a Talmage or a Parkhurst denounce them as practicing witchcraft?

The discoveries of the wonderful century had not reached Brother Paul, or rather, they had not peeled up the scalp of his cranium. He was a theologian. He had a god to look after and take care of. He said that the natural man was an enemy of that God. Said that he was not subject to God's law, neither, indeed could be. What would he have said if one had told him that a seven-year-old child was seeing and describing parties who had died before she was born? Perhaps he would have cautioned the friends to look out for his jealous God.

It is worth noticing that priests, and Paul amongst them, that is if he is correctly reported, committed a logical blunder or error, in claiming to be so well acquainted with God, so that in the later histories of the church, if not at the Pauline period, they came to be called Doctors of Divinity; and yet, knowing so little about that other important individual, Satan. We never hear of a Devilogian, nor of a doctor of sataninity. And this slighting of the more unfortunate of this myth pair is not the worst treatment he has received at the hands of the ecclesia. They never found him until the captivity period, late in the history of the only Jehovah religion, and had they been sent by that strange fate into foreign servitude and exile, they would not have "run up against him."

But it is worse than all, that the leaders of the church, of all the churches, do not claim to study him, so as to find out his real character and mission, yet admit that it would be impossible to conduct their business without him. They not only do this, but they show a bad spirit toward him by never uttering a prayer for his conversion, nor expressing a wish that he might turn and at some time or other, direct his great power and wisdom in the opposite direction to what he is supposed to exercise it at present. Robert Burns was a natural poet and had a soul of love, far superior to many of the so-called elect. In his address to the Deil, he concluded with the following:

"Now, fare ye well, Auld Nickie Ben,
Oh! wad ye tak a thought on men;
I can na say, we albiens yet ma ha a stake,
I'm wo to think opo yon den, e'en for your sake."

If there is a God, personal or otherwise, and he hates the Devil, if there is such a being, and would not give him a chance to reform, if he needs reformation, that God is no better than the other fellow.

It is easy to see that the devil idea is founded in dishonesty and injustice, and in the carrying out of a desire to shift responsibility.

These theologians who refuse to become, as well, devilogians, ascribe all that they cannot or do not want to understand, to the work of the Devil, and command their flock to stay away from it. Luther saw him in many instances, getting in his road when he wished to do good and sometimes, preventing him. The whole of that church that bears his name, are devil scared. John Wesley's case was different. The good old bishop visited the Wesleys and told them who he was, and they were not afraid of him. The Wesleys were mediums. There were spiritual phenomena exhibited in the Wesley family before the sons, Charles and John, left the home in England. These brothers were highly spiritual and deeply inspirational. They had no fight with Satan; their theme was love. They did not flee when no man pursued. But the church founded on the Wesleyan revival could not free itself from diabolism from the demonology of the old regime.

It is easy for a person of a critical mind to logically conclude that there is not only proof positive, or palpable, of spirit life after so-called death, but that there is also proof more and proof most positive, of the fact.

First: If I am an intelligent person, with what is so-called a rounded-out brain and intellect, and know myself to be sane, as I am fully persuaded that one can tell, if he is; and a departed one comes to me and talks as of old and manifests the presence in many ways and at different times, and shows ingenuity in language and manners to prove his or her identity, would not that be proof palpable? But, suppose that I should belong to the "devil-scared" class. Even if I should be frightened some, but not so terribly but what I could remember how I loved that one, would I not be apt to enquire like this: What harm is she or he doing me, or what evil could there be in such expressions of love as I have received on this occasion of their coming?

But here is a class who have a devil and a god, yet neither of whom have any ear-marks by which they can be distinguished from each other. Should the former of these purport to give a revelation, judging by the manner of it that it was he, if it should be ever so high in sentiment, the class would condemn it; for it could only have come from Satan, in such a manner.

The position of the opponents of Spiritualism is the most fatal of any that is known of, if they are forced onto a platform of strictly honest discussion. Their brutal assumption of authority cuts out the idealist, the poet and the thinker. There are, however, two classes of these enemies of the truth. One has no heaven at all, the other, one of his own construction. He is like the chicken that Mose Sloop, of Kentucky, took to market—his only stock of poultry. The merchant asked him if it was fat. "Fat!" said he; "well, it ought to be; it has had the full swing of the farm." The old orthodox hen has had the "full swing" of the minds of the world until she is fat.

We sometimes see an anxious doubter. The man that we have pictured in our mind is an intellectual character, greater or less. He is endowed with the powers of longevity, which is most always if not uniformly, coupled with a great desire to live on; and though he is not spiritually inclined, not spiritually gifted, and recoils from the thought of a possibility of existence independent of a physical body, yet he is reluctantly willing to make a test of the spirits to try them, hoping against hope, that he may find something to convince him that mortals live again. Such an one is an awful critic. May be a chronic phenomena hunter, as Dr. J. W. Daily, of Boston, said in a recent article in this paper, that he had been through many years. Such an one perhaps as Dr. M. J. Savage, the distinguished Unitarian minister who has written books on the subject of spirit return. He recites a number of wonderful cases of such phenomena, yet, although he says that he cannot account for the same on any other supposition than that they are actual visitants from the unseen, of persons who have lived on the earth and whom he once knew, he is waiting for some one to account for the same in some other manner or way. And as Prof. Crookes said to Dr. Savage: "I don't want to be called a fool." This, I think, was when Crookes had given it up that there were such things as spirit communications, although unwilling to so declare publicly.

The world is a symposium, and there are seventy-five per cent of the patrons of the fair who never think of thinking. On this account the minister has a heyday. He is in the swim, among little fish; he opens his great cavernous lips and gullet, and down go the minnows in schools. Yes, a minister can swallow a whole primary department at one gulp.

If the furnished rooms in Sheol are not at all taken up by the murderers and robbers of innocence, the moral cowards and hypocrites will have a show for lodging when the Son of Man comes to make up his jewels.

We must cut off our argument, lest the good brother editor who guards these columns may think us too prolix; and conclude with some cases that we think to be in point.

The following incidents will illustrate, to a greater or less degree, what is meant by proofs palpable, more palpable, and most palpable.

These cases will be related under three heads—First, Second and Third.

First.—A brown-haired baby girl of four summers, with intellect and beauty among her charming gifts, passed out from a certain home where peace reigned, garlanded with the wreaths of summer and decked with the spangles of diamond dewdrops of the morning. Fourteen years afterwards, the father was rather suddenly developed into the power of seeing clairvoyantly. Among the many hundreds of forms coming to his presence, was this little girl, then a maiden fair. Her head was adorned with a grand suite of the richest brown, almost maroon, and at her first appearance, she sat on a table swinging her feet under it, her hair waving like dark ripples and her splendid teeth showing enough to heighten her beautiful appearance. It is not known why she never spoke in any of her visits, as many others did, but the mother and sister of the father came and told him that it was the brown-haired baby girl of yore. She was full of play. One time in the evening, she ran at him with a broom in her hand, as if to make a mimic fight. Some of her visits would last for several minutes, long enough for her to enact something like a scene or part in a drama. She was always bright, graceful and full of purest mirth.

Second.—Dr. H., of Springfield, Mo., visited Mott, of Memphis, Mo., about the year '86. At one of Mott's seances, Littleberry Hendrick, one of Springfield's oldest county officials who had departed quite a number of years previously, came to the cabinet door and called for his old friend, Dr. H. When he met him at the window, he said to the spirit, that he did not look like Littleberry Hendrick. The old man remarked that it was his first attempt at materializing and that he could not do any better at present, but that if he would come a little closer he would prove to him that he was as he represented. When he drew near, the spirit said: "Do you remember a certain person who was accused of a crime?" naming the man Mr. H. answered, "Yes, very well." "And," said the spirit, "do you mind that you and I agreed that though we knew that the man was guilty, we thought it best to say nothing about it, as it could not be proven satisfactorily?" He answered that he certainly must be, as no one else knew what he had related. (But, says one, the devil might have known all this, and merely was trying to deceive, etc. If so, he was a poor imitator.) Do you think that this will do for a case of the

A Series of Letters From Prof. William Denton, Through the Mediumship of Carlyle Petersilea.

LETTER NUMBER ELEVEN.

Of course, from what I have said, it can readily be understood that there are millions of spiritual beings here who firmly believe in hell and the devil as taught by the Catholic hierarchy; for, as before stated, those who are here think they are in an intermediate state—that they were not vile enough to be cast directly into hell, nor good enough to go at once to heaven. And here is where many priests obtain great power over the minds of thousands and thousands of spirits who were on earth Catholics, and are Catholics still here in the spheres.

It is pitiable, it is deplorable! There is but one way to help it, and that way to do just as I did on earth, talk to them, preach to them, lecture them, show them the folly of it all. Peradventure a few will be convinced that they are in error and will turn their minds earnestly in the direction of truth.

O, I still have enough to do, trying to knock the bottom out of hell! and so do thousands of advanced spirits. It is hard, no doubt, for many on earth to believe that there are convents here, as on earth, and nuns who reside within them; but it is true.

Now as priests do not marry on earth, they are of the same mind here, that is, a great many of them, and they still remain without wives. Whatever their habits were on earth, they retain those habits still, and we are very sorry to say they have as many * * * * here as there and such are usually nuns. Some may raise their hands in horror and declare that there cannot, in the nature of things, be nunneries in the spirit spheres; but there are, and a goodly number of them. Of course it is an abuse of a natural law. The law works here as it does on earth. If they were not able to have convents and nunneries here, we could not have schools, halls, temples of wisdom, institutions of learning and so forth; and if we are able to have these things, they are able to have that which they like.

Advanced spirits here band together and erect splendid temples of wisdom. Catholic spirits band together and erect splendid cathedrals and churches, convents and nunneries. The law holds good with one as with the other. Now I often make it my business to visit some Catholic priest, who holds a large concourse of people in bondage, to see if I cannot change his mind and afterward have the privilege of preaching in his church or cathedral as the case may be. In this way a greater amount of good work can be accomplished and a larger number of spirits set free; and, if I am so fortunate as to gain him, he then will aid me in setting his people free. These priests can only be approached with great circumspection and caution.

Now I will give a detailed account of one whom I was able to reform. Reform is a very good word to use, I think; and this man is a fair sample of many others whom I have reformed in the same way. Success attended my work with him, and together we were afterward able to bring the light of truth to all his followers. I have done, and am still doing, much work among these people.

Father Ambrose was a priest who, on earth, had been very powerful among his people. His church was an exceedingly large one and he was greatly mourned when, at last, he passed away from earth. On arriving within the spheres he was shortly thereafter met by a large number of people. Many of them had been under his charge on earth. He had been very wily and used a great amount of hypnotic power, or hypnotic persuasion. He was extremely arrogant and very vain. He held most women, who came to him to confess, in his hands like so many puppets, and in the convent, which was near the church, his word was law. His secret crimes there, and among those outside, had been many; but so-called death found him at last as it does all. This man in his secret heart, or mind rather, did not believe a word of that which he professed to; he really believed that death was the end of all living beings; but as he said to himself again and again: "It is better to govern the people in this way than any other. By so doing I lead an easy life, live sumptuously without labor, am exalted above the common people, and they actually worship me. Ah! the Romish church is a fine institution. Better for the world that it should rule, even if there is nothing after death."

Now when he awoke in spirit life and found a life which, in many respects, resembled the earthly life, excepting that it was ethereal and refined, as he found neither hell, the Devil, God, nor heaven, and was presently surrounded by many spiritual beings whose minds had not progressed out of the old belief, he thought it would be a fine thing to live very much as he had been accustomed to. He soon discovered that there could be spiritual buildings erected, and he rallied a large number and persuaded them to erect a great church and fit it up like those on earth. Not content, he had a nunnery attached. Being very wily and having great hypnotic power, he soon persuaded his followers that they were just as likely to be lost in hell, even more likely, than when they were in the body of flesh; for, as they were not in heaven, and as the holy virgin and her son had not vouchsafed to show themselves unto them, they were almost sure to go to hell, but he had been sent to them from heaven, peradventure a few of them might be saved, that he had already been carried to heaven, where, but for his great concern for their souls, he might have remained; but he prayed to God and the Christ and the holy virgin that he might be sent down into purgatory, perhaps a few might be restored to God.

In this way, then, he went on with his church very much as he had done on earth. At stated periods he preached thus to the people.

I had visited this church and heard him preach a number of times, for I was determined to reform him, if possible. He had shut himself up in a house that had been erected for his sole use by the people, and it was very hard for one not belonging to his church to obtain an audience; for he had those who served him just as he had had on earth, and no one was conducted to his presence except those whom he wished to see, and none could force their way to him, for his servants allowed no one to pass them.

I had sent my card many times but had always been denied. At last a thought struck me and I wrote on the card, "William Denton: One who would be converted to the faith, if possible."

Yes; if possible; but I knew that it could not be possible. This I did not write, however. A wily person must be met by a little guile; but I thought my guile quite innocent considering the great importance that I attached to my visit. The servant, who had presented my card, returned, saying that the Reverend Father would give me audience, thereby hoping to save my soul; and I was ushered into his presence.

The apartment was grand and luxurious in the extreme. The holy father himself was reclining at full length on a divan, while pictures of the holy virgin and the saints adorned the walls. A large picture of Christ on the cross was at one end of the room and before it an altar with burning lamps; a font filled with holy water stood near. The priest arose and we saluted each other, then, as he sank into an easy chair, he motioned me to the altar, where I knew that I was expected to kneel and mumble a prayer, and afterward to cross myself with holy water.

Well, I thought I would use a little more guile. The picture was really a beautiful work of art. As I knelt at the altar, I mumbled not a prayer, but a few words of praise to the one who had executed such an admirable artistic piece of work; and as I thought the water could do me no harm and the act was meaningless to me, and by conforming to this mimicry I might thereby be instrumental in saving a few hundred souls from the folly of believing in hell and purgatory, I crossed myself with it.

I have no doubt that many who read this will think I did very wrong, but I, together with many other souls, thought the end justified the means.

As I turned from the fount, I met Ambrose's eyes fastened, like those of a basilisk, upon me. Their expression was so sinister that it actually startled me "It is well that you conformed to the rites of the Holy Church of God," he said, "else, I would have had you thrown out like a dog. I will show you that I am master here, at least. I know who you are, well," he continued; "often heard of you before you arrived here. You are that most impious, blasphemous wretch, who wrote bad verse and held the Holy Book of God up to ridicule—one who raised his puny arm against the most high God—a blatant imp of the devil himself, who sought to demolish all holy and sacred things. It is well for you that you crossed yourself with holy water or I would not allow your blasphemous lips to utter a word in my presence."

The priest towered wrathfully above me as he uttered these words, his gleaming eyes piercing me through and through. You must know, dear friends to whom I write, that I am quite a small man and very spare in flesh as well—that is, I was so in the material form and I look now very much as I did then—my hair brown, my complexion fair. The priest had been, and still was, tall, with large, powerful form, dark eyes and hair; the eyes being very large and fierce, gleaming with hypnotic power, formerly called mesmeric power.

"Now, sir—Mr. William Denton—what may your business be with me?"

I had not, thus far, spoken. He picked up the card and read aloud, "William Denton. One who would be converted to the faith, if possible." He motioned me to a seat and sunk back into an easy chair himself, with his basilisk eyes still fixed intently on mine. The band of angels who had commissioned me to do this work had promised to hold telepathic communication with me, to guard and strengthen me if I should need assistance. Sending my thought out for strength, they instantly responded, and like the allegorical Samson of old, the strength of an hundred men entered into me, and the combined wisdom of the whole band. There was need of it all, for this man before me well knew for what purpose I had come and was determined to hold his own against me.

"Converted to the faith, if possible!" he repeated with withering scorn. "God has power to strike you dead at my feet," he continued, "and probably would but for my intercession in your behalf."

The priest had actually forgotten for the time being, that he and I were dead already.

"Have you seen God?" I asked, looking straight into his evil eyes. He quailed a little, and then with great bravado:

"Most certainly, sir."

"Well, as I have not," I replied mildly, "would you kindly tell me how he looks?"

The priest paled visibly and stammered a little as he answered: "He looks like what he is; a great and glorious king, holding the thunderbolts of heaven in his hands. Be careful, sir, that one is not hurled at your blasphemous head."

"Thunderbolt! Thunderbolt!" I repeated. "It has been proven, beyond cavil or doubt, that a thunderbolt is a discharge of electricity and that electricity exists within all nature everywhere, that all things, whatsoever, are charged with it more or less, that we, as spirits, are exceedingly electrical; how, then, does God hold a thunderbolt in each hand?" I looked him straight in the eyes. "You are a lying spirit," I said. "You have not seen God, at least not such a potentate as you describe, and you know that you have not." He quailed a little, as all liars do, and then, bracing up once more, he said with considerable bravado: "How dare you accuse me of lying? You cannot know that I have not."

"But I have been in this life much longer than you, and have not seen God, nor any such being or king as you tell of."

"You?" he said with a sneer. "You deserve the eternal fires of hell. You brazen, blasphemous knave! It is owing wholly to the great mercy of God that you are here in purgatory. God, in his infinite mercy, thought he would give you a little more time in which to repent of your great sins."

"Did God tell you this, when you saw him?" I asked. How can you know what his thoughts and motives were unless he expressed them to you?"

Again he quailed; then, mustering up his courage once more he said in a loud voice, "Yes, he told me."

"Of what particular sins did he accuse me?" I again asked. "I have never broken any one of the ten commandments to my knowledge.

"Oh, yes, you have," he exclaimed; "probably all of them. But of this I know not. That you have blasphemed the holy name of God you cannot deny."

"Did God tell you that I had blasphemed his name?" I asked. "Otherwise, how could you know that I had? But, first, I would like to know what you mean by blasphemy?"

"Blasphemy is to revile God," he answered hotly, "to impiously speak of God."

"I have never reviled God," I asserted. "To speak impiously of him, you must first tell me what you mean by impious?"

"Irreverence and profanity," he ejaculated through his set teeth.

"I cannot remember of using a profane word in my life," I said, "and as the God in whom I believe exists in every atom of the universe and in all nature everywhere and as I love, revere, and adore all nature everywhere, together with the great universal whole, I certainly am not irreverent or impious."

"You reject God and adore his works? Then you fly in the face of the Creator and bow down before his handiwork?"

"Did God say that I had flown in his face—that I was an impious, blasphemous wretch, who had flown in his face, when you saw him?"

Again he quailed and appeared somewhat cowed, then, striking his hand forcibly upon the table he hissed:

"Yes, sir, he told me; moreover, he said you would soon be broiling in hell, together with the devil and his imps."

"How did it happen that my name was mentioned between you?" I asked, "as you never saw me before, only knew of me by hearsay, and as I must be a very important personage to this potentate, of whom you speak, who, as you think, has created countless millions of human beings and innumerable worlds; how was it that you happened to select me as a topic of conversation between you? I never dreamed that I could be of so much importance among such a countless host."

"You have been selected," he said, with a black scowl, "for the very hottest fires of hell, on account of the manner in which you have led men's souls astray from the Living, Almighty God. You have had large audiences time and time again, and have told them there was no God, no heaven, no hell, no purgatory, no devil, no Christ, no holy virgin."

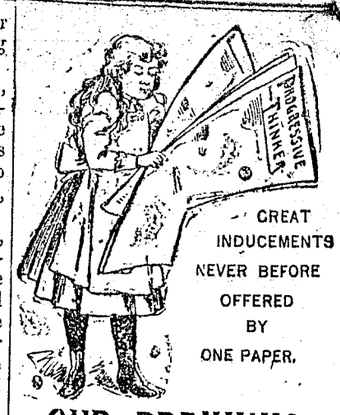
"And how do you know," I asked, "that God, heaven, hell, purgatory, devil, Christ, and the holy virgin do exist? It is useless for you to tell me now, that the Bible says so, for we are what men call dead; we are spirits, and if these things existed we should have seen them before this time. I have been in this life now a goodly number of years, and I have not met God, nor Christ, nor the holy virgin. I have seen one who was called Jesus, on earth; I have also seen his mother. He is in no way different from many other exalted spirits and his mother was no holier than many other young girls who have trusted men before marriage; and she claims nothing here beyond what other mothers claim. I have not met the Devil, but I have met thousands of bright and glorious spirits—or angelic messengers, who have been here thousands and thousands of years, who are constantly growing brighter and more beautiful, which could hardly be the case if they were simply in purgatory, not of these having ever seen God, no more than I have, and not one of these bright and beautiful beings has accused me as you have done; on the contrary they have commended my efforts to set men free from the bondage of error and reveal to them Truth's smiling face. Now, sir, thus far you have been my accuser. I shall now be yours. I am one of a large band of bright and good spirits, and they have delegated me to come here in your own stronghold and accuse you to your face, for, like swordsmen, I must use the weapons you like best, and I will run you through if possible. It is the only way to conquer you. I have been parrying your thrusts thus far, and I am still untouched, unwounded. I shall now thrust you. You may defend yourself if you can. Sir, you are a liar, a blasphemous, impious wretch. You have also broken the ten commandments, every one of them. You have used the name of God for your own base purposes. You have deceived and led astray a multitude of people, not only on earth, but here in the spirit world as well."

"Leave me, sir, leave me at once!" thundered the priest. "I will call my servants and have you ejected."

"Do so," I said, "and I will then call to my aid the large band of angels that I told you of, and we will soon demolish these structures within which you entrench yourself. We would prefer to lead you, and your followers forth peaceably, or turn this place into a temple of wisdom; but, if you will not listen, and continue in your present course, we shall be obliged to demolish it."

I gazed into his evil eyes with unflinching firmness. He paled and trembled visibly.

"I told you, sir, that you were a false deceiver, and you know that you are; I know that you are, and all the angels who are above you know that you are. Think of it, sir, millions of holy angels know that you are a base liar, deceiver, hypocrite, and that you are guilty of all the other crimes mentioned in the ten commandments, that you are holding these people, who have gathered about you, in bondage—in the bondage of error and ignorance—and while you thus hold them they can make no progress, they remain here slaves to your dominant will-power, to your hypnotic persuasion."



"No, sir!" cried the priest. "They remain here because they love me."

"They may think they love you, because you try to make them think so; but it is not love. It is fear, one of the weakest passions of the human mind. You have made these people believe they are in purgatory awaiting hell, unless they do just as you desire them to do. You tell them that you have been to heaven, that you have seen God, Christ, and the holy virgin, and out of pity for their condition God has sent you back into purgatory to try and save them from hell. Now, every word of this is false, and you know it. You have not seen God, or Christ, or the holy virgin; and you know that God and heaven, such as you tell them of, does not exist."

"I do not know it, sir!" thundered the priest. "No, sir! I do not know it neither do you; nor can you know that they do not exist."

"But you tell these people that you have seen God. Whereas you know that you have not. You have told them all manner of falsehoods, that you may keep them in bondage. Now, sir, you would be far happier if you would allow yourself to go free. This bondage will lead you into fearful unhappiness in time. These, your slaves, will all rise up to curse you; they will, at length, discover the fraud."

Remember, please, that we have only two books which we send out now for 25 cents each. We cannot allow you to select any other book or books in their place.

Remember, please, that you are not entitled to purchase any of these Premium Books unless you send in with your order a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker.

Remember, please, that the safest way to make a remittance is to secure a postal order.

Remember, please, that mistakes and trouble may be avoided by dealing direct with this office, instead of through a news agent.

Every person who sends in a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker can have until June 1, 1902, the two following books for 25 cents each: "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science," by Hudson Tuttle, and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands." Both exceedingly valuable, and though widely different, each one fills on exceedingly important niche in the literature of Spiritualism. After June 1, "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands" will no longer be sold for 25 cents.

If you order only one book, and that one neither of the books mentioned above, the price is 50 cents.

If you order two books, and neither of them the above mentioned, the price is 90 cents.

We have NINE Premium Books only, and you can select from them as follows:

Any three of the nine Premium Books you order, price $1.10.

Any four of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.

Any five of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $1.80.

Any six of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $2.10.

Any seven of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $2.35.

Any eight of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $2.50.

Lastly, all of these NINE valuable Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $2.75, a price never before equaled in this country or Europe. The following is the list:

NINE REMARKABLE BOOKS FOR $2.75.

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.
2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.
3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3.
4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism.
5—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism.
6—The Next World Interviewed.
7—The Occult Life of Jesus.
8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands.
9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science.

Read This Carefully Before Re-Remitting.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and their price, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

These nine books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printer's art, will be furnished to our subscribers for $2.75, a price which modern machinery and enterprise has rendered possible in The Progressive Thinker office only. Sending out these books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter.

PROOF OF AFTER LIFE.

second degree of positiveness, or of proof palpable?

Third.—I will here relate a remarkable case, that occurred several years since, but that has never been published. I know the gentleman to whom the spirit appeared, and examined him phrenologically and psychometrically, and will state to such persons as understand these sciences, that it is impossible to be deceived in the character of a person thus examined, that is, to any great extent. Mr. S., the gentleman who related the case to the writer, could have no interest in deceiving any one or the public. He is not a Spiritualist in the sense that some others are, but refers to this case as having settled the question, once for all, of a future life. He doesn't seem to care much about investigation, yet is willing to do so when favorable opportunity presents. He was at the battle of San Juan hill, in command of a horse company, and is a rather war-like appearing individual, six feet tall or more, and frank and free in expression; impressing you that he is out for business, but would not stoop to little things. Here follows his narrative, an account of a spiritual manifestation that occurred in the year 1884, in Lincoln, Nebraska. The statement that follows is signed by Captain W. T. Sawyer (plain Thom. Sawyer), at that time supervisor of the insane hospital there:

In June, 1884, I was sitting in the office of the supervisor of the Nebraska Hospital for the Insane. There was a door opening between where I was sitting and the superintendent's office, where I could see Dr. Mathewson sitting at his desk writing. It was about 8:30 in the evening; all the patients had been locked up and the outside doors closed; the rooms were brilliantly lighted and without any preliminaries, a man whom I had known from childhood walked in, without coat or hat, and with rather a pale and disheveled appearance. That the reader may more fully understand, there had been a former agreement between this man and myself that whichever one that should die first, was to appear to the other and deliver a ring of which we each had a duplicate, as soon after death as we could, if it were possible so to do.

I was pleased to meet this friend of my youth and rose to greet him, when he hurriedly said for me not to come near nor touch him, that he had come to fulfill the promise made years before, and must proceed to do so at once, as his time was limited; and he at once proceeded as follows:

"I, known as George Lester, in the flesh, but a few hours since, died this evening at Buckhannon, West Virginia, at 7:45 o'clock. I will first say that what we call death is without pain. After dissolution I seemed to have lost identity or personality; there seemed to be nothing left of me, save a faint memory that apparently not being a direct memory, but a kind of mirrored reflection of a memory. I seemed to be passing through a dark and noiseless space, without form or volition, at such a velocity that the finite mind of man cannot conceive. This faint recollection of a memory began to unfold a mirrored panorama of my earthly life, until I came to a period where I had relieved, or done a kind act for my fellow-man without other motive than to do good to humanity; when I seemed to be taking form, and felt a friendly hand and heard a voice. The darkness was dispelled, and I felt that I was being possessed with power, created in itself for all my needs. I seemed to be endowed with wisdom unlimited, a personal existence with all its possibilities and enjoyments. I am only permitted to come here to you by the help of Luogli. I will now deliver you the ring, the tangible proof that man lives after death. Beware that you allow no person to wear it, except yourself, for if you do, that person will die within a year." In the meantime, Dr. Mathewson had come to the door separating these two rooms, and was leaning against one side of the door, listening to the conversation, or rather to the talk of the visitor. After depositing the ring, his form began to oscillate like a picture in a veteiscope, and in a moment had disappeared.

Dr. Mathewson, who stood at the door as described above, said: "Where is your man gone?" I answered him that I did not know, and that he was closer to him than I was. I was rather confused, thinking that my old friend had come in his undress, simply to play some kind of a trick on me for mere humor, as he was of that disposition, and when he disappeared, I hardly knew what the situation was, and asked the Doctor if I was asleep, or crazy. He replied that I might be, but he'd be darned if he was. We then got the ring from where he laid it, and found that it was a duplicate of the one I had kept during the absence in all the years that had intervened since leaving home and losing sight of Lester and the old man, whom I have mentioned as Luogli.

This Luogli had made the three rings and presented to myself, Mr. Lester and one other person, three rings, exact duplicates of each other, for the purpose of being returned to one of the others after death, if possible to do so, as said.

Contrary to the remonstrances of myself, a young lady found the said ring in my desk and persisted in wearing it. I left Lincoln, Neb., for a few months, and when I returned she was wrapped in her last winding-sheet—died without pain or seeming sickness.

W. T. SAWYER.

We have opened up this subject of proof palpable of an after life, and established a storm center of argument. He who wills so may become a gladiator and join himself to the phalanx that is maching on to winnow the wheat of the world and dissipate the chaff that has hitherto hidden the precious grain from the blinded eyes of the unwary.

Before the footfalls of the nymphs of the skies were heard in that ever memorable time, fifty-four years ago, the world was a desert of arid land. The great river of sweet waters of life, sent out a canal to one spot of earth, and the oasis thus formed has spread its laterals over the earth, until life and immortality is brought to light, wherever the sun journeys. The journeyman workman knows that his tasks shall not end in darkness if he has drunken of that stream; and the aged pilgrim with bent form sings in the strength of richer draughts and with greater hilarity of soul than even the old travel-worn preacher of the gospel of the wilderness:

Here in this body pent,
Absent from heaven I roam,
Yet nightly pitch my moving tent,
A day's march nearer home.

S. J. DAILY, M. D.

WEEP NO MORE.

From this low sphere of mortal things
We lift our eyes to heaven's dome;
Flesh binds us here—but thoughts have wings—
Our souls fly home.

We work and suffer; there is need
Of suffering, to make us strong.
Day comes, for all the hearts that bleed,
Though night be long.

And in that morning's blessed light,
When we have gone to dwell above,
Will stand perfected, in our sight,
Some gift of Love.

O, fainting spirit! weep no more!
O, doubting soul! thy doubts deny!
Love waits and calls, upon that shore
To which we fly.

THE GODS

Of Religion, Materialism and Philosophy.

We venture to lay down the proposition that if there was no world there would be no talk about Gods to account for the world. We take it, therefore, that the Gods are, so far as we are concerned, mere theories intended to account for the existence of the world and for what is done in it. Sometimes this is called solving the mystery of existence, or explaining the riddle of the universe.

In the history of the world diverse theories have been advanced for this purpose, and these all arrange themselves under these heads—the religious, materialistic and philosophic.

The religious theories came first, and one may suspect that they came first because the world at the time was not overly full of scientific knowledge. These religious theories are contained in the diverse so-called sacred books of the world. The Gods of these have the anthropomorphic character, and are much worshiped in temples under priestly ministrations.

The materialist's God came next, not only in this country but also in India and everywhere else where they have a sacred book. It is a revolt everywhere against the God of the sacred book. The materialist doesn't worship his God, but seems rather to have a contempt for him; for he is dead, dead matter. He has no special favors to confer, nor punishment to inflict. But the materialist, realizing that a dead God fails to account for a live universe, supplements o him with "force" and "law." Thus the materialist has a Godhead; matter, forces and law; after the manner of the religious man's Godhead; Father, Son and Holy Ghost.

The philosophic God, or the God of reason and common sense, come third, and we are inclined to think it ends the series. This God has had diverse names applied to him or her by the diverse systems of philosophy—such as Infinite Being, Absolute, Noumenon, Ethia, Idea and Infinite Intelligence. He is not worshiped in temples made by hands, but in the great temple of nature, each man officiating for himself. He is worshiped every day in the week as occasion offers, and the worshiper stands erect with both eyes wide open. He is seen in the storm, in the movement of the planet and in everything else that is and is done; for he is infinite, eternal and omnipresent. He is the essence or fundamental principle of all things whatsoever. He serves as the fundamental principle of spiritual, as well as of physical things. That he is not "dead," but has intelligent volition, the world shows for itself. Just how good and loving the philosophic God is to man the world shows for itself. That this does not always tally with what the sacred books say, is the fault of the religious man who seems to have had an overdose of piety toward the Gods, and not enough stimulation in the direction of religion or right conduct toward men. Indeed the so-called religious man seems to be long on piety; the materialists, short. The philosophic God creates the world for his own pleasure in the matter, and not as an accommodation to man. His purpose, as the world shows for itself, is progress; and he who aids in that progress gives God the only acceptable service. The philosophic God does not enjoy fulsome praise for things he did not do, nor for motives he did not have. As to prayers, perhaps it will be well for you if you are able to answer as did one of Kipling's characters when asked what next: "I have not pestered the Gods with my prayers. The Gods will remember that. Yes, the Gods will remember that." A great many other things might be said about the philosophic God which distinguishes him from both the materialistic and religious God, but the foregoing sufficeth the present.

Now evidently the mystery of existence needs but one solution; there is but one true explanation of the riddle of the universe. If either materialism, the sacred books or philosophy gives that, the other two theories are false. And it is very important that it be determined which is true, and which false; for, the God question rightly settled, we could then give our time, talent and shekels exclusively to things of greater practical concern. The only way to settle the question is by discussion in which each partisan stands up for his own God against both the others; he takes the affirmative as to his own God; the negative as to the other two. We can't afford to allow either partisan to take his God as a foregone conclusion; for that of itself would render the other two wholly superfluous. It is begging the whole question. This is a favorite trick with materialists. And the religionist is very prone to say, "if you don't believe in the God of the Bible, you don't believe in God; for there is none other." Trot out your proof, Prof. Loveland, that there is such God-head as dead matter, force, and law as a controller. Then it will be in order for you to attack the Gods of philosophy and the sacred books. You must do all three to be successful. And don't imagine that in demolishing the God of Israel you smash the omnipresent God of philosophy; you don't even touch him. Yet it is a favorite ruse with materialists to insist that the God of philosophy is a personal God; probably because the personal God is most easily knocked down. In all probability the philosopher himself knows best whether his God is a personality, and he knows that he is not, Prof. Loveland and others to the contrary notwithstanding.

But possibly Prof. Loveland would resent the insinuation that he is a materialist. In fact, we can't see how a man could be a materialist and a Spiritualist at the same time. The two don't jingle together; unless you "radically change your view of despised matter, giving it the power and potency of all things whatever," in which case it is no longer the dead matter of old, but has become the live God of the philosopher. But unless we see double we can see materialism back of Prof. Loveland all the time he is hammering the Gods of religion and philosophy. If not so, how is he going to account for the world after he has demolished the other Gods? And he seems to be quite confident he has demolished them, the only thing left to be done being for the people to find it out.

To deny all these Gods, the materialistic, philosophic and religious, is to argue "No Beginning," and to argue "No Beginning" is to fly not only in the face of inspiration and reason, but also in the face of science which is observation and experience. The evidence of science and reason is that the world had two beginnings: a beginning for our experience and observation in nebula; a beginning for reason back of that in an incomprehensible ethia, or ethereal substance of which nebulas are necessarially the self-development.

It is a three-corned fight between materialism, philosophy and religion, in which each God attacks the other two and must defend himself against their attacks. The materialist who confines himself to attacking the other two may wake up to find himself routed from the rear.

OCCULT MYSTERIES.

OCCURRENCES IN THE REGIONS OF THE OCCULT.

REMARKABLE CASE OF A YOUNG WOMAN WHO LEARNED A DIFFICULT PIECE OF MUSIC—ODD THINGS DONE IN SLEEP.

"I have heard of sleep-walking gable-climbers and have come across the champion deep-sleep window-balancing acrobat and about every conceivable specimen of these peculiarly afflicted persons; but recently I met what I think is the most remarkable sleep-walking performance on record," said a nerve specialist the other day.

Some of the tricks and feats of sleep-walkers would take your breath away; I have in mind instances all the way from a sleep-walking lighthouse keeper to an unfortunate murderer. But this latest achievement of the night prowling fraternity ranks above all others like grand opera above a ten-minute vaudeville skit. The popular thing is that the young woman subject accomplished something while asleep which years and years of practice could not teach her. And still more wonderful, beginning with the night in question, she had no further difficulty in advancing steadily in her accomplishment.

"The case of the young woman was of singularly steady growth. It began years ago with insomnia, the subject being then a mere child. Insomnia duly gave way to an excessive desire for sleep, and this in turn brought nightmares which in time frightened the subject so that she learned to dread the very idea of sleep. In the middle of the night there would be a piercing shriek of 'Murder!' or 'Man in the house!' and repeatedly the young woman was caught on the stair landing by her father or by one of her brothers in time to prevent her from rushing into the street.

DEVELOPED SLEEP-WALKING.

"In time these nightmares gave way, and then came the period of sleep-walking which ended in the case I am going to tell about. At first the sleep-walking did not seem so serious a proposition. One or the other member of the family would awaken in the middle of the night to find the white-robed figure of the young woman walking silently through the room. In time, however, the subject showed inclination to visit the streets in her night attire, and from then on the family was miserable. I was called in and prescribed things that did not help. I advised mechanical means to startle the patient into wakefulness upon leaving her bed. Wet towels were spread in front of the bed. One night the towels worked. The next night she walked over them as if they were so much soothing elderdown.

"More strenuous means had to be used, and I advised a tub, partly filled with cold water, into which the patient would have to step upon leaving the bed. For one whole week the tug worked. After that the young woman stepped into the water, got a towel and dried her wet feet, and proceeded as if nothing had happened. It was then what I considered the most obstinate case of sleep-walking I had ever met in practice.

"No remedy seemed left except to set a watch. One of the young woman's brothers volunteered, and for something like two weeks played watchdog and slept stretched across the outside of her door. Night after night he 'nabbed' his sister in time to prevent her from leaving the room.

A MUSICAL PROGRAMME.

"Another peculiarity of the young woman was that in the midst of a family of remarkable amateur musicians, she seemed to have as little talent for music as a Hottentot. From the time that she was a small girl she had received lessons on the piano, but the surprise of it all was how little she managed to learn. She herself was desperately anxious to learn music, and never gave up trying, but it seemed impossible for her to reach beyond the 'Maiden's Prayer' stage of the art.

"One night—the young lady had shown the night before that she had acquired the habit of walking clean over her brother without waking him—the family was startled to hear the piano strike up on the floor below. The piece played was 'Rubinstein's Melody in F,' not an excessively difficult piece of music, but the way it was played was described afterward by the family as simply perfection. The brother in front of the door was the first to awaken. He knew by the rendering of the piece that it could not be his sister and wondered what member of the family had gone clear off his trolley.

"He rushed down stairs and there, seated calmly on the piano stool, sat his sister in all her white fluffiness. The young man at first was too much surprised to interrupt, then he hastened upstairs to summon the rest of the family, already stirring to see the unusual performance. It was this, in my opinion, which cured the girl of her night habit, for by the time the other members of the family were ranged around the sleeping player she finished the last chord of the piece, undisturbed. With the last note she arose, and, with eyes wide open and looking at every one in the room as if fully awake, went back to her room and to bed. For once none disturbed her even then.

REPEATED THE MUSIC AWAKE.

"Next morning she mentioned that she did not remember having had a similar refreshing night of sleep. None told her of her performance.

"'I feel as if I could play the piano this morning,' she said, presently, and sat down and played the piece of the night before exactly as she had played it while asleep. By consent of the family until now nothing had been told her of her midnight musicale, but the young lady cannot understand how she suddenly manages to find music so easy after her long tussle with the notes. That 'Rubenstein's Melody in F' she had tried for six months to master, but the best she could do was to stumble through it. Since that night she practices daily and is making wonderful progress.

"Have I a theory?" asked the doctor, repeating a question. "Yes, but it amounts to little, as it is made to fit the case and seems to me far fetched. But I thought that the ambition of the young woman to learn music so worked on her in all those years that it brought on first insomnia, then nightmare and finally sleep-walking. Being of a highly nervous temperament the strain told on her so much that she was incapable even of making the ordinary progress of a music scholar despite an unusual talent which nevertheless lurked in her. The playing in sleep might be accounted for on one of the theories governing self-consciousness. Then, having broken the ice by playing during the absence of all consciousness, it seems reasonable to suppose that her nervousness forsook her for once and all. At any rate, since that night, the night when the spell which bound her from the piano was broken, she has not walked again in her sleep.

MILKED COWS WHILE ASLEEP.

"Out in Caldwell, N. J., there was a remarkable case of sleep-walking, though in that case the man performed only the labors he was used to day after day. The subject was a farmer. He owned a large herd of cows, and it was necessary to milk early mornings before the animals were turned loose in pasture. Again and again it happened that the farmer arose during the night, dressed himself, got his milk pails, lighted a stable lantern and wandered into the cow stall to begin to milk. For a long time the only ones that thought the farmer crazy must have been the cows. But after a while his wife missed him and upon search found him seated alongside a cow holding the tail under his arm owing to flytime, and milking away for dear life.

"The case of the farmer, however, was but temporary, though his little son, shortly after the old gentleman's night excursion, took to the same means of diverting himself. A tiny six-year-old, he crawled out of his little bed and in his little nightshirt wandered through the darkness a distance of a mile up the road to the home of his grandparents. There, of course, he was made comfortable and put to bed to finish his night's rest. The little chap cured himself by fright. One morning, a particularly dark one, he woke up when he was about half way between the two houses he knew so well. He almost died of fright, and so strong was the impression that he never again attempted to get out of his bed at unusual hours.

"A very sad case of murder happened in a little country town in Italy, about eight years ago, and was traced to sleep-walking. A brother and sister, both in poor circumstances, lived together in a small house near the outskirts of the town. The pair were looked upon as uncanny by the neighbors because of the sleep-walking proclivities of the brother. His sleep-walking was coupled with the most hideous nightmares and frequently his sister had to get up in the night to awaken the man from the throes of a bad dream. So notorious were the yells of the man and so suspiciously were he and his sister regarded by the ignorant peasantry, that before long the two were thrown almost wholly on their own resources. They were the best of friends. What one had was the property of the other and where one went the other was sure to follow.

FOUND HIS SISTER MURDERED.

"One morning the brother found his sister choked to death in her room adjoining his own. Blue finger marks were about her throat. Terrified beyond expression, he ran to give the alarm and, as might be expected, the first thing to happen was that the brother was arrested.

"On the trial is was proved that a gash in the throat of the victim had been made by a ring worn by her brother. The latter remained immovable as far as admitting his guilt was concerned. He was tried and acquitted, the opinion being that in a fit of nightmare and sleep-walking the man choked his sister to death. In time the miserable fellow believed himself that he was the guilty one and he brooded, and shortly after he was released from prison he died of a broken heart.

"I wonder how many know that the famous 'Asleep at the Switch,' that terror in the mouth of the amateur elocutionist, was provoked by a case of sleep-walking. In case you do not know the plot of 'Asleep at the Switch,' it is necessary to explain that a switchman has fallen asleep at his post. Just in time to see the invariable limited mail thundering around the curve he awakens, tries to throw the switch but fails and sees the limited mail piling up on itself only to find the next instant that he was in bed, alongside his wife, who has thrown an arm about him and is trying to wake him from the nightmare.

A SLEEP-WALKING SWITCHMAN.

"But the real incident which gave rise to the lines happened in Pennsylvania, in a freight yard, where the night switchman was startled one night by the day switchman. The latter, fully dressed for work, declared that he was the bearer of an order from the train despatcher and that a certain switch was to be set contrary to the orders given earlier in the evening. The night switchman had never heard of such a thing as a sleep-walker and had the prowler not awakened in the nick of time and given himself away by his exclamations of surprise, there might have been an accident.

"A peculiar case of sleep-walking is mentioned by a captain of one of the trans-atlantic liners. The subject was the chief engineer of the vessel, a large freighter. The engineer had a habit of walking nights and he would visit the engine room and walk among the whirling, thumping machinery feeling if it were running hot here or there and giving orders. As the engineer was apt at any time day or night, to visit the engine room there were queer situations when the man became really wide awake, or when an assistant engineer would walk up to him and warn him of his danger and try to startle him back into wakefulness. The engineer finally had to be discharged.

"In one of the smaller lighthouses in the harbor of New York there was an extraordinary case of sleep-walking. The house was one of the more unimportant kind, useful only in case of fog, the light being lighted at sundown and nothing but the fog bell in case of thick weather being the particular care of the keeper. As the lighthouse was near shore it happened frequently, despite orders to the contrary, that the keeper was all alone in the house, while his assistant regaled himself by imbibing of the good things ashore.

"Several times it happened in the middle of the night, with stars shining brightly and the moonlight showing several miles of glittering water up and down the harbor, that the fog bell began to ring out dismally. Before long inquiry was made by the captains of vessels who had reason to take the light seriously and who wanted to know what was the matter with the man in charge. Then it was found that the keeper was a sleep-walker, and that, unknown to himself, he was sending fog signals into the clear night.

ANIMALS ALSO SUFFER.

"There is every reason to believe that sleep-walking is not limited to the human animal. I once had a dog—I bought him for the purpose of studying his extraordinary trait—and if he was not a sleep-walker there never was one. I watched the animal frequently. He would arise from deep sleep and with open eyes wander about the room looking at me and sniffing around corners. Then he would wake up. The entire demeanor of the animal would change. Half crazy with joy at seeing me he would jump up and misbehave himself as no well trained dog should. But he was not supposed to be well behaved, and was purposely allowed his own way. I learned more about sleep-walking in that animal than I could have done from a dozen cases in human subjects.

"Some suppose that a sleep-walker will awaken at the least noise. From the incidents I have told you, you may see whether this is true or not. A sudden noise may, and usually will, startle a sleep-walker into wakefulness; but a noise which he himself creates will have no more effect on him than angels' songs. Sleep-walkers vary in their ailment as do all other sorts of the afflicted. What is a rule for one is not a rule for all. In fact, each walker seems satisfied to work things out on his own peculiar hook. The trouble is much more common among people than you might suppose, for where there is a case you rarely hear about it unless it is your business to fight the trouble. But the case of 'Gen,' the young woman piano player, remains to me the most remarkable."—Commercial Advertiser, New York.

At all times in the history of the world the greatest interest has been taken in the supernatural and inexplicable. In no country has more attention been devoted to occultism than in France.

One of the leading investigators of the various phenomena which have troubled so many people is M. Jules Bois.

M. Jules Bois has written volumes on the subject, and has traveled all over the world to study the question, in which he takes a deep interest. His latest expedition was to India, where he investigated the mysticism which forms so large a part of the native religions. It was with the object of obtaining his views on the subject that a Herald correspondent called on him at his residence in the Rue Taitbout. M. Jules Bois regards Spiritualism from a purely objective standpoint. He does not admit all the claims put forward by its adepts, many of whom are undoubtedly the dupes of charlatans, but he is equally far from rejecting the evidence brought forward in favor of the existence of some force which science cannot explain.

"No, he said, "I have seen too many evidences of the existence of some mysterious power to refuse to admit the possibility of communication with what people call the other world. Men and women of eminence, of whose good faith there can be no possible doubt, have related to me experiences which cannot be treated merely as a 'quantite negligeable.'

M. VICTORIEN SARDOU'S VIEWS.

"One of the greatest of these, M. Victorien Sardou, wrote me the following letter:

"'My Dear Confrere:—I was one of the first to study Spiritualism from the commencement and to pass from incredulity to surprise and from surprise to conviction. The material phenomena observed under the most rigorous control and attested by savants, whose names I need not recall to you, are not contestable, and in the majority of cases they are inexplicable in the present state of our knowledge.

"'You ask me if I believe in materializations? Naturally I do, for I have obtained them at the time when I was a medium and I still await the explanation of the unknown psychic force or the trick—of which I would be at once actor, witness and victim—by which an invisible hand left on my desk a bouquet of white flowers, which I kept for years till they fell into dust.

'VICTOR SARDOU.'

"I have also," continued M. Jules Bois, "the testimony of Mlle. Augusta Holmes, the well known composer.

"'I formerly used to obtain spiritualistic communications in writing,' she declared to me, 'but it is only in the last three years that I have obtained phenomena so extraordinary and so conclusive that they seem to me inexplicable if we do not admit the intervention of spirits. Sardou spoke to me of objects which arrived in his room through the walls, but I did not believe in this, as I had never seen it.

SPIRIT OF AMBROISE THOMAS.

"'Three years ago, in the house of friends, the mistress of the house told me she was haunted by the souvenir of Ambroise Thomas, whom she had known well. She asked me to invoke his spirit. We placed ourselves around a table, and Ambroise Thomas at once manifested himself. "I was not made," he said, to our great astonishment, "to compose the grand operas I did. My style of opera was the gay and frivolous one. My masterpiece is the 'Perruquier de la Regence,' which I wrote when I was twenty-two years old. However, I destroyed it later on in order not to interfere with my future success." Our curiosity was aroused, for none of us had ever heard of the opera. I went to the publisher of the late composer and asked him if there existed a score called the "Perruquier de la Regence." A search was made in his books, and it was found that an opera by Ambroise Thomas of that name had appeared, but he had given orders afterward to destroy the plates.

MYSTIFYING TABLE TURNING.

"'Afterward,' continued Mlle. Homes, 'the phenomena increased in number and importance. In the first place a table for twenty-five people, which required several of my servants to move it, rose off the ground to the level of our shoulders. A rose covered with dew fell into my plate. There was not a single rose in the whole house. When I asked that another flower should be placed in the buttonhole of M. L— I was at once obeyed, and it appeared there suddenly. Sometimes a light table became so heavy under the influence of the spirits that six of us could not move it, while another enormously heavy one rose off the ground on being merely touched by our finger tips, sometimes without being even touched at all.

"'The occult force having announced that it was going to call the Duc de Fronsac, I replied, playfully: "I will be charmed to talk to you. Sit down beside me." Immediately a chair which was in the corner of the salon was projected toward my chair. I resisted even this evidence. As my glass was still before me, I said: "Drink, my dear Duke," and before my eyes the wine disappeared, drunk up by invisible lips. I may remark that irony was unpleasing to this strange visitor, for one of us who treated the Duc de Fronsac as a "fumist" was thrown from his chair and much bruised.

"'The prodigies became still more wonderful. Sweetmeats appeared on the table and in our serviettes. A piano, the top of which was closed, struck a chord. We obtained direct messages in writing. A pencil wrote by itself on a piece of paper, "You will see me."

"But the experiences of M. Victorien Sardou and Mlle. Holmes," continued M. Jules Bois, "are nothing in comparison with those of M. Victorien Joncieres, the celebrated composer, the author of 'Dimitri' and 'Lusianan,' two operas which have remained in the repertoire of the opera. The good faith of the eminent musician is beyond all doubt.

"'When on a recent journey,' said M. Joncieres, 'a young girl accompanied by her mother, asked me to hear her sing. In the course of conversation they admitted they were Spiritualists, and at my request took me to a haunted house. I say haunted house, for everything I saw in it was extraordinary and seems to me inexplicable. M. M— received me very cordially, but made me promise to keep his name and that of the town he inhabited a secret. He presented to me his niece, the medium, to whom he attributes the phenomena that take place in the house. It is since she came to live with him, after her mother's death, that the prodigies began.

WHAT HAPPENED AT SEANCE.

"'She is a girl of about sixteen years; small, blond, lymphatic, with blue eyes, of a timid disposition. She is very religious and believes strongly in the devil. I was conducted into a large room with naked walls, in which ten people were gathered together. In the middle was an enormous oak table weighing more than a hundred kilogrammes, on which were placed paper, a pencil, a little concertina, a bell and a lighted lamp.

"'Suddenly a loud cracking was heard in the table. "Spirit, are you there?" asked someone. No one touched the table, round which was formed a circle, holding each other's hands. A violent rap was heard. The niece placed her two hands on the table and asked us to do the same, and this enormously heavy table rose above our heads, so that we were obliged to rise on tiptoe to follow it. It swung backward and forward for some time in the air, and then sank noiselessly down on the floor.

"'M. M— then fetched a piece of paper with a design on it. He placed it on the table and put beside it a glass of water, a box of colors and a brush. Then he put out the lamp. He relit it in two or three minutes. The design was filled in in two colors, yellow and blue, and the brush had not exceeded the lines of the design by a hair's breadth. The paint was still wet. Even supposing some one present had desired to fill in the design, how could he or she have done so in the dark without going beyond the lines composing it?

"'A number of raps,' continued M. Joncieres, 'were then heard on the table, corresponding to the letters of the alphabet. The spirit announced that a manifestation would take place specially for my benefit. On its order the lamp was again extinguished, and the concertina began to play a little tune in six-eight time. Hardly had the last note died away than M. M— relit the lamp. On a sheet of music paper alongside the concertina the theme was written very correctly in pencil. It was not possible for any one to have written it between the lines in the darkness. Scattered on the table were a number of freshly cut daisies. "Ah!" said M. M—, "these are from the flower pot at the other end of the corridor." We went to inspect the plant and saw that the flowers had been plucked.

"'Hardly had we got back to the room than a wonderful spectacle awaited us. The bell which was on the table rose up, ringing, till it touched the roof and then dropped back on the table. This time the prodigy took place in full light. The end of the seance was really painful. An intense cold moved round the room in a circle, passing over our hands. "It is a bad spirit," said the young medium, with a look of terror; "protect me." She seemed to be struggling with an unseen force. I seized one of her hands and a professor of physics who was present grasped the other. In spite of this the poor girl was thrown to the ground, and at a certain moment I felt my own chair lifted off the ground. "Oh!" she cried, "he has bitten me," and she held out her left hand, on which the mark of teeth were plainly visible. "Enough," said her uncle; "let us leave the room, or a misfortune may happen to us."

"I have seen a celebrated medium who was put in a state of trance alongside a glass of water. The water was carried into an adjoining room. When a pin was thrust into the water she started as if pricked, and when the hand was passed caressingly over the surface she showed signs of feeling the movement.—New York Herald.

LOCATES LOST WILL.

With the Aid of a "Talking Table."

EFFECT OF HER SEANCES—DESK IN WHICH THE PAPERS WERE FOUND CONTAINED A FALSE BOTTOM, BENEATH WHICH THE WILL WAS FOUND.

Raliegh, N. C.—A truthful table in the hands of a young woman medium has been telling some secrets in this vicinity that aroused trepidation, mingled with curiosity. Knocks and mysterious noises have become household words, but the widow of Mr. Hunt Alston, late citizen of Warren county, has been the only one to receive material benefit. Through table tapping she was directed to the hiding place of a lost will.

Mr. Hunt Alston, a prominent citizen of Warren county and a kinsman of Judge Cook, died a short time ago. He left a widow and children. It was well known to the members of his family that he had made a will, which was supposed to be in his desk. In due time search was made, but no will could be found. While numerous attempts to find the will were going on the house was afflicted with noises in every room, as if some person were knocking to obtain admission. These sounds were so clear and distinct that the house was watched to see if the noise was made by people outside. Nobody was seen, and the knocking and rapping sounds on the house could not be explained by the detection of human agency.

MESSENGER SUMMONED ATTORNEY.

Finally Mrs. Alston sent a messenger to Warrenton, the county seat, for Mr. Green, who had read law under Judge Cook, to come to her house to advise about the appointment of an administrator for the purpose of settling up the estate. Mr. Green went to the house of the widow, which was some distance from Warrenton and in Halifax county, and remained over night, but was so disturbed by the uncanny noises that he slept little. In the meantime knocking and rapping in every room of the house continued, and they became so alarming that the children of the widow came from their room on the second story downstairs and occupied the room with their mother.

It was decided to have an administrator appointed, and Mrs. Williams, who was then an inmate of the house, having agreed to sign the bond of the administrator who was to be appointed, she and Mr. Green took a buggy and drove twenty-two miles to Halifax Courthouse. Mr. Ponton, who also was to sign the bond, had been notified to be in Halifax that same day, and had agreed to be there.

At this time Miss Nellie Norwood, a young lady about 20 years old, was a guest of Mrs. Alston. She was known to be an operator on the table with spirit rappings. After supper, when all were sitting around the fire, some person suggested that "the table" be question about the will. This was agreed to, and Miss Norwood took her position at the table.

TABLE ANSWERED QUESTIONS.

The question was asked, "If there was a will?"

The table said "Yes."

"Where is the will?" was then asked.

"In the desk," was the answer.

Here Mrs. Alston remarked that the table was mistaken; that every one present knew that the desk had been examined and searched at least a half-dozen times.

The table was then asked to be more explicit, and the answer came, "In the drawer of the desk on the right-hand side next to the window."

Mrs. Alston again remarked that the table was again mistaken, as that particular drawer had been examined and searched quite a number of times.

The table was so told and was asked to be more definite, if possible. The table answered that the drawer must be examined until a false bottom or secret drawer was found in the drawer that had been mentioned, and under the false bottom, or secret drawer, would be found a number of papers, and on top of these papers would be found a soiled yellow envelope, and in this envelope would be found the will.

Immediate search was made and the false drawer was found, and under it was found the pile of papers and the will in the envelope, as the table had directed.

Mrs. Alston then suggested that the table be asked what had taken place in Halifax. This was done, and the table said that Mr. Green and Mrs. Williams had got there and that nothing had been done toward appointing an administrator, because Mr. Ponton had been unable to get to Halifax on account of sickness in his family.

The table was then asked who was in the office of the clerk at the time the application was made for letters of administration. The table answered that Mr. John T. Gregory, the clerk; Mrs. Green, Mrs. Williams, Lawyer Grizzard and Mr. Lewis, Register of deeds, were in the office at the time, and that the matter had been postponed until the next Saturday, in order to procure the attendance of Mr. Ponton.

Mr. Green and Mrs. Williams came back to Mrs. Alston's the next day and confirmed exactly what the table had said.

Miss Norwood, the medium, in this instance knew nothing about the making of the will nor anything about the placing of it in the false drawer; and no one of the family except the deceased knew anything of the secret drawer. The effect of these seances on Miss Norwood was such that they impaired her health to such a degree that she had to stop them entirely.—Republic, St. Louis, Mo.

Senator Patterson on Woman Suffrage.

United States Senator Patterson, of Colorado, in speaking of woman suffrage in that state, says:

"What is the trouble with woman suffrage? I remember elections in the old times; I remember seeing on one occasion thirty-one young ladies in white dresses and cheese-cloth sashes, representing the thirty-one states, in the midst of a tremendous crush. People are perfectly willing that women should take a share in the most frivolous and objectionable part of campaigns. Why object to their mingling in the graver and more decorous parts? Women with us do no more than they do in other states when a speaker of renown comes. Their presence adds to the decorum of public assemblies. Parlor meetings have now become among the most influential features of the campaign in Denver. The women who take time to vote lose none of their womanly charm, and are none the less delightful because they educate themselves that they may be able to teach their sons and daughters the various phases of politics. The exercise of the suffrage adds to the intelligence, merit and worth.

"It is said that equal suffrage would make family discord. In Colorado, our divorce laws are rather easy, though stricter than in the neighboring states; but since 1893, when suffrage was granted, I have never heard of a case where political differences were alleged as a cause of divorce or as the provoking cause of family discord.

"Equal suffrage, in my judgment, broadens the minds of both men and women. It has certainly given us in Colorado candidates of better character, and a higher class of officials. It is very true that husband and wife frequently vote alike; as the magnet draws the needle, they go to the polls together. But women are not coerced. If a man were known to coerce his wife's vote, I believe he would be ridden out of town on a rail, with a coat of tar and feathers.

"Women's legal rights have been improved in Colorado since they obtained the ballot. There are now no civil distinctions existing between men and women. And equal suffrage tends to make political affairs better, purer, and more desirable for all who take part in them."

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold. Keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. FRANCIS CASEY, St. Louis, Mo.

A Host of Honest Mediums in California.

I notice in a recent issue of The Progressive Thinker, an article entitled "California a School for Trickery." Don't you think that reflects a little too hard upon the state? No doubt there are many frauds and fakes who have damaged the cause of Spiritualism in this state, just as they have elsewhere, yet there are hundreds of honest men and women who are good mediums, and gifted with the power to heal the sick, that I hope will not be classed with the parties mentioned in that article. As a resident of the state and a psychic and healer, I hope it will not reflect upon me, as I certainly claim to be honest, and deal fairly by my patrons. However, as I have had dealings with your readers, in all parts of the United States and foreign countries for years, without complaint, and have received hundreds of testimonials, I think it absolves me. Perhaps I would be better off financially, if I were a fakir but I would rather die poor and have the inscription on my tombstone read, "Here lies an honest man," than have all the gold in christendom if gained by chicanery.

When you have an opportunity, just remind your readers, that California is no more a "school of trickery" than elsewhere, and that there are hundreds of self-sacrificing men and women who are striving to elevate the standard of Spiritualism, battling earnestly for the cause of truth, and gaining many victories in spite of opposition.

In Oakland the cause seems to be flourishing. I don't have the opportunities to attend the meetings that I desire, on account of my time being taken up with my line of work, but I hear encouraging reports. C. F. Van Luven delivers logical and interesting lectures at Woodmen's Hall. Mr. Van Luven is a prominent business man of Oakland and an enthusiastic Spiritualist. He is a member of the committee seeking to build a new Spiritualist temple and is working earnestly for success. The prospects for the project are flattering.

Unity Hall, at the residence of Dr. Sol Palinbaum, has interesting and well-attended meetings every Wednesday evening. The Union Society also has well-attended meetings at Fraternal Hall every Sunday.

Miss Dora Dixon, a former prominent society lady, recently embraced the belief of Spiritualism, renounced society, and was ordained as a medium and minister of Spiritualism. It created quite a sensation on account of her prominence, and the San Francisco Examiner devoted considerable space in writing up the proceedings.

The mediums' meetings at Blake Hall, every Friday evening, are also well attended. It can be truly said that Spiritualism and free thought are showing a steady and healthy growth in our lovely city. The workers command the respect of all fair-minded people by their earnestness. California ought to attract good influences, and lead to spiritual unfoldment, with the flowers of every hue, the towering palm, the climbing vines, and at this time of the year in verdure. True, we have our dry season when the hills are bleak and brown, but the flowers are ever with us, and are loved by all mankind, for they bring thoughts of purity and goodness, and a charm that is divine. C. WALTER LYNN.

EVENING PRAYER.

Come thou, my heart, to prayer; the day is done,
The brooding stars come forth to light
The wayworn traveler on his lonely way.
In the gloaming there beams in sight
A light in the window by the roadside trees
While music stirs the evening breeze.

The stars in sparkling radiance gleam
Thro' open doors of the fading day,
A golden fringe hangs pendant in the west,
And crimson curtains span the way;
The world is hushed in reverent prayer,
And earth seems free from every care.

I know, alas! life's bitter curse too true,
The pursuit of wealth at any cost,
The folly and nothingness, the utter shame
And misery where souls are lost;
Where naught is left but a staining mark,
To show the path where the ways are dark.

Oh, simple prayer my soul invites,
From out the mystic shades of night;
Fair childhood dreams in innocence
When hearts were filled with light,
As birds with heads nestled beneath their wing,
For sweet repose they trustful cling.

So guide, dear God, my heart aright,
In all the duties I owe to man;
Pardon my short-sightedness and fears,
That mark my little earthly span;
And when thy voice shall call me hence,
Give me thy love and confidence.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE,

Or The Threefold Power of Sex. By Lois Waisbrooker. Price, 50 cents.

JOYS BEYOND THE THRESHOLD

A Sequel to The To-morrow of Death.

By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French. The To-morrow of death was written to develop the idea of the principle of the permanence of the human soul after death, and its reincarnation in a chain of new beings, whose successive links are unrolled to the bosom of ethereal space. "Beyond the Threshold" continues on the same lines, enlarging and expanding the idea by reasons and considerations drawn from science and philosophy, claiming that the certainty of a new birth beyond our earthly end is the best means of arming ourselves against all weakness in the presence of death, and that the help offered by science and philosophy to that end is far superior to that of any of the existing religions. From beginning to end it is interesting, entertaining, instructive and fascinating, and whether one accepts it all or not, much will have been learned and much pleasure enjoyed in its perusal. Price, $1.25.

POEMS of the Life Beyond and Within. Voices from many lands and countries, saying, "Man, thou shalt never die." An excellent selection. Edited and compiled by Giles B. Stebbins. Cloth. $1.

COMMON SENSE By Thomas Paine. A Revolutionary pamphlet, addressed to the inhabitants of America in 1776, with explanatory notice by an English author. Paper, 15 cents.

THE GOSPEL OF NATURE

Is a most excellent work by Dr. M. L. Sherman, assisted by Prof. W. F. Lyon. Heretofore it has been sold for $2, but the price now has been reduced to $1. It is a book that will interest and instruct. It contains 280 pages, and is full of suggestive thoughts. Dr. Sherman was a medium of rare qualities, and his work is a reflection from the celestial spheres.

Psychopathy, or Spirit Healing.

A series of lessons on the relations of the spirit to its own organism, and the interrelation of human beings with reference to health, disease and healing. Shooting Birds for Fun.

The secular press, the Chicago American leading, has instituted a general crusade against the horrible practice of bird-shooting for sport. This is certainly a move that should be sanctioned by every Spiritualist in the land and by the united Spiritualist press.

Whether we all believe alike as to animals being possessed of spirits similar to those of human beings or not, we must agree they are beings and have life, and are our companions in nature, and as a rule harmless and lovable, and they appear to possess a love nature. They came by and through the same physical, and probably the same spiritual laws that we did and have the same right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness as man, who has crowned himself lord of all creation, and assumes the right to destroy everything in sight, just for sport.

If this being called man; this being under whose control the earth seems to have come; this being who should be the highest intellectually, who should possess the highest spiritual unfoldment of all earthly beings, could only cease to thirst for the shedding of blood; could develop beyond the teachings of mad superstition; out of the idea that the earth is his and all other beings are below him and are here because he tolerates them we might have more hope of his spiritual progress.

However, we do not sit upon a throne and dictate the behavior of others, but when the slaughter of our beautiful songsters and other birds of the plain is rendering them almost extinct, and this old earth is rapidly being turned into a murder pen, and the victims our loved companions, it is time to put in a strong protest.

If our representatives in the State legislatures would pay less attention toward the enactment of class laws and more toward the protecting of our birds and harmless animals; toward the prohibition of cruelty to animals; toward the spiritualizing instead of brutalizing of the children of our land, they would confer a lasting favor upon all coming generations and immortalize their own names besides.

We would suggest to the more sympathetic sex, to the ladies of Spiritualism, if they wear trimmed hats, to set the pace by excluding dead birds from their headgear entirely, or anything that would look like a trophy of the brutal instinct in man. Flowers are much more becoming and beautiful, and ribbons are always fashionable.

Our lady readers and patrons may take our meaning wrongly, and accuse us of infringing upon their rights by venturing a suggestion along this line, but we deem it a spiritual matter and relevant to the questions at issue in this paper.

There are many ways to be spiritual in our lives, and to cease to encourage the killing of birds, our warbling, soul-stirring songsters of springtime, is a noble means of attaining the desired end.

Let us take a hand in this crusade in the most practical manner and show our spirituality to the world in humane acts; in the agitation of all such moral and spiritual reformations.

At the present rate of slaughtering, it will require but a few years to completely and forever hush these sweet voices of nature, then what a lonely, monotonous home this will be for souls to express through, with nothing but the irrepressible English sparrow to chirp his roundelay and litter our porches and walks. Even the sparrow is reputed to be watched by Infinite Intelligence, or God, and has life; however this may be, we who hold to the sublime thought that a world beautiful is the most fitting birthplace for human souls, should do all in our power to make this one beautiful and pleasant for all beings who have been fortunate enough to be born here.

This is the home of many beings of a savage nature and with man's intellect he can capture and tame them and make them useful beings. If they are savage to the endangerment of other lives he might have excuse for destroying them, but not the harmless ones for mere sport and for his own glory.

Making False Claims.

A noted Catholic ecclesiastic has just been making a bragging ado over the rapid growth of the Catholic church in the United States, which, he says, exceeds the growth of all other sects combined. According to his figures and method of figuring the Catholic church-goers about equal all others. He bases his computations upon Dr. Carroll's census statistics of the membership of the religious sects.

But Dr. Carroll's statistics are woefully misleading, and, so far as the Catholic church-membership is concerned, is based upon the figures furnished by Catholic authorities and by Romish methods of enumeration.

Our meaning will be apparent when we state that the Catholics count as members of their fold all who have been baptized into the church and not expelled therefrom, so that the membership of the church is exactly equivalent to the Catholic population, adults and children together. With Protestant churches it is quite different; only those are regarded as members who have become such by actual personal profession of faith, etc. Babies are not counted.

With Catholic and Protestant population figured on the same basis, it would show at least 60,000,000 Protestants to about 10,000,000 Catholics. The Methodists alone, taking all their branches, would outnumber the Catholics.

An Old Lady and Gentleman, and the Tricksters.

When a comparatively inexperienced and confiding person, and a trickster come closely in contact, then serious trouble is sure to be evolved. Cases of this kind are continually occurring in all the departments of life, and invariably the former is badly handled, and the results are serious. A late number of the Los Angeles Times (Cal.) gives the following cases:

Whenever a spook-teaser finds another graft he always proceeds to give the whole snap away.

One of the ilk, who has recently abandoned his direct wire from a Spring-street lodging-house into Spookdom, has told a story of a trick played on a tourist last week.

She was a dear old lady out here for the winter from Boston. She began attending seances and some of the spook sharps fell upon her with avidity.

It seems that she had a very valuable set of China in Boston and she wanted it out here. She was afraid to trust anybody to pack the pieces. They belonged to her great-great-something or other, and she would rather have had her head cracked than had one of them as much as nicked.

In the innocence of her heart she went to one of the spook doctors of this city and asked if it would be possible for him to dematerialize the dishes in Boston and bring them out here by means of the spirits; then materialize them again in Los Angeles.

Oh, yes. That was a cinch. He could do that with one hand tied behind him.

He sent word to Boston for a brother spook sharp to assist him, and the old lady wrote back trustingly and had the precious dishes turned over to the Boston man.

The report was that they stood the materializing operation with smiling cheerfulness. She waited a long time in patience for them to materialize out here, but there was a screw loose somewhere.

The spook sharp apologized and apologized, and at last found out just what the matter was.

He told her that while the dishes were skating through the spirit world, the spirits had become so much enamored of them that they refused to allow them to come to earthly existence again.

This distressed her very much for a while until the spook sharp got word by his spook telephone line that when she died and went to heaven the dishes would be there waiting for her.

She went away much comforted.

Another spook sharp fooled an old man. She told him that he had a beautiful young woman for a spiritual guide, which pleased him very much.

Pretty soon word came that the guide was very shy as to clothes and was in a scandalous condition in the spook world. The old man being appealed to, promptly went out and bought her a white silk dress, which was safely delivered by the lady medium into the realm of spookdom without delay—maybe.

These confidence games are being played successfully by the barnacles—tricksters—who have attached themselves to our ranks. They find in some dear old lady or good old gentleman, an easy victim. You can't save them from the clutches of these vampires until they have been robbed or so sorely deceived that an idiot would see the deception. There are those who make it a special point to prey upon the confiding in our ranks. They are robbers, the despoilers of homes, and an unmitigated nuisance wherever they happen to be. They are loud-mouthed, always viciously denouncing everyone who wishes to divest Spiritualism of this pernicious class. They are an element of discord, and their natures are in happy accord with the bubbling filth in a cesspool. One of these monstrosities defrauded a person in this city out of hundreds of dollars. Their most successful work is in the materializing circle where licentious designs and pernicious practices are carried on. There cannot fail to come to these barnacles—these hell hounds—a day of reckoning, and it can come none too soon.

Jainism and Its Ideals.

According to the San Francisco Chronicle, that city, having already become familiar with Theosophy, the mystic religions of Brahma and Buddha, and with the lofty philosophy of the Vedanta Swamis, it only remained to learn of Jainism, perhaps the sanest and most ideal of all the East Indian religions. Jainism made its first bow to the people of California, the lecturer being Professor Emlyn Lewys, until recently a resident of London. Professor Lewys is a scholar of striking personality and the only English-speaking authority on this most ancient of religions.

Jainism, as explained by the speaker, is the Protestantism of India, as opposed to the Vedas, Brahmanism, and the soul-paralyzing caste system. It aims at the perfection of character, not through faith, but through current conduct and systematic intellectual activity or concentration, as opposed to the Yogi system of intellectual vacuity. The speaker said:

"If a religion may be known by its fruits, what shall we say of this one, which, though now numbering 2,000,000 votaries and dating its origin long prior to the entrance of the Aryans into India in prehistoric times, has never yet produced a murderer? Though regarding kingship as the greatest injustice, still the Jains do two-thirds of all the financial business of India. They never eat meat, and the monks often carry brooms and sweep the paths to avoid crushing the insects. They believe in the advancement of women, in reincarnation, and the eternal persistency and progressive evolution of each ego, and hold that the activities of the soul and intellect, such as sense knowledge, clairvoyance, telepathy, the emotions, the physical constitution, and the power to achieve, are all under the obscuration of Karma, which, to the Jain, is a substance. The object of their study and effort is to shake this Karmic clog out and to liberate the soul by vibrating in a certain way. This may be done by concentrating on such ideals as benevolence, charity, or wisdom, by analyzing the teachings found in their enormous and as yet untranslated libraries, and then by synthetizing and immediately acting on these truths. Jainism, then, is the religion of intelligence, utility, and of action.

Wealth from a Spiritual Standpoint.

Col. Robert G. Ingersoll in 1888, gave utterance to the following: "Jay Gould could no more go to heaven, if the Bible be true, than could the Devil himself, and he knows it. Moreover, Jay Gould never talked with Paxton or anybody else on the subject, except by way of diversion, because he is a total unbeliever in orthodox Christianity. I know this for a positive fact, because I have more than once had conversation with him on the subject. Naturally, as I am a conspicuous Pagan, people are quick to speak to me on religious subjects. Sometimes they are jocular, sometimes they tacitly assent to my unbelief without really agreeing with me, and sometimes they assail me fiercely, but Mr. Gould is what I call a reasonable unbeliever. Just as there are millions of professed Christians who have no absolute views of their own, and do not know why they are Christians at all, so there are unbelievers who have not brought themselves to that profession by any course of reasoning. But Mr. Gould is a calm, deliberate agnostic—that is to say, a man who has thought the whole thing over and has come to the conclusion that he knows as much as anybody else about a future state. Mr. Gould is a student. He devotes more time than people imagine to reading, and that on subjects entirely disconnected with finance. Christianity received for many years his careful researching attention, and the result of it all is that he stands to-day an agnostic."

Among the truly progressive, great wealth, unless used wisely for the amelioration of human suffering, is not considered a powerful lever by which the possessor can be exalted to a high position in spirit life. The denunciations of Jesus were directed mostly against the money class and those high in authority. On the material side of life money is the principal agent whereby the sufferings of the poverty-stricken can be relieved. A sermon on the beauties of benevolence or charity amounts to but little, however, unless accompanied by substantial means to relieve the hungry, clothe the naked and furnish comfortable homes for those destitute of them.

Spiritualism teaches the absolute necessity of each one relieving the wants of some one less fortunate.

By exalting others you at the same time exalt yourselves.

It is a fact that ninety times out of a hundred those who possess great wealth do not accomplish a good work in proportion therewith. They go on systematically accumulating money without broadening the sphere of their benevolent operations, which demonstrates their own inordinate selfishness. The one who systematically makes money for the sole purpose of doing good to humanity, is now living in an exalted sphere, and he will be among the honored of spirit life.

That this earth was launched in its orbit by an Overruling Power, whether a God or an exceedingly wise Spirit or Band of Spirits, or a Principle, or Nature—he, she or it—we have no doubt, although this explanation of its origin may not be satisfactory to the average mind; hence the products of the earth, air, and water, etc., should never be monopolized; but human laws have given individuals the privilege of accumulating property without limitation, and without any definite idea in view of doing good thereby, and very great evils have arisen therefrom.

The Forum says that near the close of 1885 there died in New York city a citizen of that place, who left to his children a fortune estimated at $182,000,000, besides making a number of minor bequests. It will help us to form an idea of the magnitude of this sum if we consider that it would have sufficed to give a Christmas present of $140 to every inhabitant of the city, or at the rate of $700 to every family of five persons, supposing the population at that time to have been 1,300,000. A political committee of one hundred, appointed in the same city, comprised eight members whose estimated wealth reached an aggregate of somewhat more than $300,000,000, and at least two of the most colossal fortunes were unrepresented in this number. Estates rising into the tens of millions are to be found in various other cities, and, taking the country through, one might designate twenty-five persons whose united wealth, according to current estimates, is not less than two-thirds of a billion dollars, or about 1 per cent of the total wealth of the United States, supposing this to have increased even 50 per cent since the census of 1880. Were all the property in the country held in equally large amounts, the whole would barely suffice for 2,500 proprietors; or, supposing these to have families averaging four persons each besides themselves, it would supply a population a trifle larger than that of the little town of Yonkers. There are no authentic statistics showing the distribution of property among different portions of our people, but whatever the facts may be as to the comparative diffusion of such wealth as is held by the classes outside the circle of the extremely rich, it will hardly be disputed that the latter now hold a much larger proportion of the total wealth of the country than was held by a like percentage of the people twenty-five or thirty years ago, for the proofs that this is the case lie upon the surface and thrust themselves upon general observation. Moreover, one has no reason to believe that the tendency to increasing accumulation at the upper end of the possessory scale has reached or is approaching its limit. A great fortune, with ordinarily careful management, possesses an enormous power of accretion. Even when invested in good securities, at a very moderate rate of interest, a fortune that rises into the millions affords ample means of making yearly additions to principal. If invested in real estate in any of our growing cities, it yields increasing income from decade to decade as the land advances in value, putting it in the power of the owner to lay aside an increasing surplus; while, in the hands of a shrewd speculator, not over-scrupulous in his dealings, its power of increase may be still greater. In January, 1880, the New York Commercial Advertiser reported the rumored additions during the preceding year to ten or twelve of "the greatest fortunes identified with "Wall street" at $80,000,000.

The above figures and conclusion were given in 1888, and since then the accumulation of riches by a certain few have grown more ponderous.

It can be truthfully said that the man who accumulates wealth for the purpose of doing good, great shall be his reward. He who accumulates it to subserve selfish purposes will find himself in darkness in spirit life—a most abject object of pity. Such may be the case with Jay Gould, and hundreds of others.

WILLIAM DENTON.

He Is Unnecessarily Alarmed.

In Letter Number Nine in The Progressive Thinker, William Denton, of the spirit world, enters a protest against mundane Spiritualist organizations—against local societies, against the N. S. A., against everything except the home circle. This seems strange when we reflect on some of his grand earth-life work. He seems to have forgotten the old-time maxim that "in union there is strength." He seems no longer to know that all nature and all life is an organized union. He seems to forget that even the savages exist instinctively in tribal unions. He forgets that the strongest man, alone, is chaff before a mob. He forgets that science has its organizations, American and British; that the public school is one of the most glorious of organizations; that all institutions of learning are organized unions; that at last labor has become sufficiently alive to its best interests and has organized unions, thus for the first time in the history of the world securing the respect of, and against assaults from, capital.

The only persons down here on this lower mundane sphere that see no good in organization are the anarchists, and even they falsify themselves for they have their secret organizations. They also have an anarchist co-operative community in Washington. I should have been no more surprised if Mr. Denton had protested against our National Republic having an organized form. He forgets that students educated in large classes are more harmonious than where each is self-made, consequently is ignorant of what others know.

It is easy to imagine how in the spirit world, where food, raiment and shelter are of no moment, each can go it alone, where one so desires. He seems oblivious to the charm and delightful congeniality in organized association, to say nothing of its increased security and enlarged advantages. I am surprised that he did not advise the Chicago University, the Smithsonian Institute, at Washington, D. C.; Yale and Harvard, to throw up their charters and organizations, scatter their students to the four winds and let each "root hog or die."

He says he wishes his medium, Carlyle Petersilea, exonerated from all blame. I do this most heartily, for I regard him as one of the greatest and most perfect mediums in the world; and all the better for having previously been trained in our higher mundane educational institutions. I think this is one large reason why Mr. Denton prefers him to other mediums.

In criticising a spirit, blame cannot be justly attached to the medium. If a message over a telegraph wire is faulty, no one blames the wire.

William Denton, from his high spirit home, says the mortal mediums need no protection. The mediums know better. For fifty years the mediums have struggled and suffered. We now propose a change, in some respects, that shall make it easier and pleasanter for them, and we are pleased to note that there are some great and grand spirits that are with us in the higher movements.

Mr. Denton says trust to the ballot to protect all public phases of Spiritualism. In one of these forty-five states the legislature passed a law making it a crime for Spiritualists to hold Sunday meetings. Thanks to the good sense of the Spiritualists of that state, they had a sufficient degree of organization to present a front and power causing the repeal of the nefarious act. How many centuries would have been required to have gotten it by the ballot?

He says mediums that make mediumship their entire business should pay a license as other people in other kinds of business do. Here again he forgets, if he ever knew, that the other kinds of business do not pay a license. The hawkers and such kinds as are considered a public nuisance, only, are made to pay a license. I am sure our patient mediums, that have done so much for the spirits, are very glad that William Denton is not back here in the form and had all the law-making power in his hands.

He says the N. S. A. will silently but surely rivet the fetters stronger and stronger as time goes on. He here evidently likens the N. S. A. to the church. The church is aristocratic, because based on false principles. No lover of truth is aristocratic. No scientist organization is aristocratic. No intelligent infidel is aristocratic, because he loves truth. The N. S. A. is based on truth as solid as that of science. It can never become aristocratic. A thousand William Dentons could not endorse the home circle more emphatically than the N. S. A. does, and the Morris Pratt Institute will. Both of these organizations will aid camp-meetings and local societies to know better how to keep from being imposed upon. The honest medium likes to be watched and the dishonest one ought to be.

Mr. Denton does not seem to see that the home circle, while it is the best starting place for mediums, should not be the end of their career. There is a great and most useful field for well developed mediums on the rostrum. And no man likes to reach thousands of hearers at one sitting better than William Denton.

It may be a relief to Mr. Denton to know that neither the N. S. A. nor the Spiritualist college have power to pass a law binding on a single individual in the land. Only congress and the legislatures can do that.

Spiritualism, from the first, as if by instinct, led on with Sunday meetings. It was natural. It dealt with the same problems that have worried the church for ages. It was as natural as breathing, that Spiritualism should be a substitute for the church. It still clings to the Sunday meetings as its supreme charm. The time has come when mediums need better protection and when Spiritualism needs to be presented with greater beauty and power; and the mortal world is equal to it.

It has been complained that the educated have been the worst enemies. It is true. The fault was not with the fact of education but with the kind. A Presbyterian education fails when applied to Methodism.

Someone says Moses Hull will be the summum bonum of the new college. The fact is he cannot possibly be but a fraction of it. A. J. Weaver, the professor of mediumship, is probably better qualified for that position than any other man in the United States. There will be many other chairs. Each professor will be thoroughly independent. The tree will not start off full grown, but it begins with an excellent promise. William Denton has by nature a good brain and, given time, he will wheel into line and be proud of his mortal associates and co-partners, the N. S. A. and the new Spiritualist college included.

THE HOME CIRCLE

THE ONLY TRUE AND PERFECT WAY TO THE HIGHER SPIRITUAL ATTAINMENTS AND UNFOLDMENTS.

A Pathetic Dying Scene in Prison.

I.

An incident related by the chaplain of the prison at Auburn, N. Y., several years ago, possesses features of more than common interest. It appears there died in that prison a young man of good parts, member of a highly respected family in another land, and who became involved in the meshes of the law through moral irresolution rather than innate depravity. His thoughts, which had wandered much during the latter days, on the last one of all centered upon his home, and he imagined that the most eager wish of his heart in this extremity had been realized, and that his loving mother soothed his dying bed. A few moments before his soul took flight he raised himself slightly, and, extending his attenuated arm, drew down close to his lips his spirit mother, while with a look of ineffable content glorifying his pallid features, his last breath was surrendered (as he thought) to the parent who bore him.

II.

Poor, poor convict; he yearned for the presence of his dear mother, and who can prove that God in his wisdom did not allow her to return to earth to soothe his dying moments? Though a convict in prison garb, and to a certain extent disgraced, he probably had within his nature enough noble qualities to fully redeem him from the baneful effects of the missteps he had made. How beautiful the thought that the angels can minister even to a poor convict; and their divine mission is rendered more grand by the contrast between the prison walls and their glorified presence. God's divine government shines forth with additional resplendence when an angel of light descends to any of the poor children of earth to illuminate some dark corner of their lives. That this convict, while dying, had his spiritual vision so opened that he did discern the presence of his angel mother, seems certain. With an expression of ineffable contentment glorifying his pallid features, he extended his attenuated arms and seemed to tenderly embrace one of God's angelic messengers.

We are inclined to believe that the visions of the dying are generally real. At times they stand midway between the celestial climes and the abode of mortals, and it is then that they have a foretaste of heaven. If the angels of God are required anywhere, it is especially around the bed of the dying. Common sense teaches mortals that death is simply the second birth, and the new-born spirit may sometimes require the same tender care that the babe does when first ushered on earth.

III.

As set forth in the Chicago Tribune, some time ago, on one important occasion was "Little Mother" day at the Joliet Penitentiary. After an absence of nearly a year, Mrs. Ballington Booth, whose efforts in behalf of the inmates of penal institutions throughout the United States have won for her the appellation of "Little Mother," returned to her "boys" at Joliet, to be the recipient of a sincere expression of affectionate interest, and to forward the work of reformation which she has so successfully begun.

While the prison orchestra, consisting of twenty-eight pieces, played the prelude to the morning service, 1,200 expectant men in gray uniform filed slowly into the prison chapel and took their seats. During the singing of the anthem by the choir of male voices every eye was fixed upon the door through which Mrs. Booth was to enter.

When it was announced that Mrs. Booth was coming to Joliet a young convict whose heart had been touched by the previous appeals of Mrs. Booth undertook the composition of a song to be dedicated to her. As the last notes of the anthem died away the young man, clad in his prison garb, made his way to the platform and sang with proud emotion the words of his song, set to the air of "Just Tell Them That You Saw Me." Mrs. Booth, who had taken her seat during the singing of the song, was visibly affected. With bowed head she listened, while the tears ran down her face, but they were tears of joy. In the gallery, where fifty or more visitors were seated, there were many moist eyes. The song which voiced the sentiment of the young convict and his fellows ran:

Our wasted lives, our blasted hopes are gone—they'll ne'er come back,
The lessons we have learned have cost us dear;
We'll use them in the future in fighting for the right,
And trying other weary hearts to cheer.
We'll show to those around us that our lives are not the same,
And point them to a kind and loving friend.
Then, when her loving kindness has won them to our side,
With joyful hearts this message they will send.

Then came the chorus:

Just tell our "Little Mother" that our hearts are ever true,
Our feet are planted on the narrow way;
And don't forget to tell her—it will please her well to know—
We're going home to meet her there some day.

As Mrs. Booth arose to speak at the close of the song the entire audience united in applause lasting several minutes. With tears in her eyes she said:

"I can't tell my boys in Joliet how deep the words of that song have sunk into my heart. They give me new hope and fresh courage to go forward fighting your battles. It has been a long time since I saw you last, but I have been working hard to earn money for my boys so that when they go from this place they may have a refuge where they may find hope and courage. It has been five years now since we began the new life here in Joliet, and some of you boys may wonder if the little mother loves you as much as she did then. Boys, listen: Indeed I do love you as much and more than ever, and all the mother love in my nature goes out to you."

Since last June Mrs. Booth has given her time exclusively to lecturing, the proceeds from which she devoted to the maintenance of her homes for discharged convicts, Hope Hall in Chicago and a similar institution in New York. Her lecturing tour has netted $11,000 for the work. It is now her intention to undertake the raising of an endowment fund for the support of the homes and the extension of the work. She has evolved a plan by which she hopes to secure pledges from 1,000 people to give $1 each year.

"I will succeed, too, boys; never fear about that, either," she told them. "The world will soon be on our side, and when you go from these prison walls to begin life anew, shielded and encompassed with the arms of God's protecting love, you will not be an outcast, but the world will open its arms to you and give you another trial. They will know what I have been trying all these years to make them believe, that there is yet manhood in your hearts to enable you to command the respect and admiration of the world."

After telling the listening prisoners of the success of her work in behalf of the league she said:

"The solution of the whole problem lies right here with you. If our work is to succeed and you are to become honored again in this life, it will be because you have been redeemed. Boys, it is the up-hill climb that proves your strength and courage. It is not an easy matter to face your old companions and tell them that you can no longer follow in their footsteps. I have seen the face of a man change in prison after he made his peace with God, and that is the only solution of the problem which confronts you."

In her talk Mrs. Booth cautioned her hearers against accepting a sentimental view of their condition, and urged them to apply their intellect to the difficulties which confronted them.

"I bring you no sentimental philosophy," she said. "You must fight it out with the higher powers, not with your hearts, but with your brains. Emotion and sentimental feelings will not save you. Think. Get your brains to working and settle your difficulties on the basis of calm reason."

IV.

There comes a time when each one will stand for a moment at the midway station that lies between the two realms—the spiritual and material, just as the prison convict did. Right there the scenes of earth life commence to vanish from view, and at the same time the beauty and grandeur of the spirit realms, if one's life has been pure, bursts upon the enraptured vision in a manner that surpasses the loftiest imagination to conceive.

The midway station between life and death blends with the spiritual universe and with things material, just as the expiring light on one side of the earth as it revolves, blends with the glory of the morning sunshine.

Sometimes at this midway station one can see the angels, hear their voices, and see the sublime grandeur of the scenes of spirit light, and at the same time behold the darkened condition of earth life.

This convict in the Auburn prison, standing temporarily at this mid-way station, was overshadowed by his mother's spirit. She came with a smile of ineffable sweetness beaming on her features, glowing with the radiance of love and purity, until the sombre room of the penitentiary was illuminated with a light that drove away the gloom, and then she impressed upon his lips an angelic kiss.

The scene was transcendentally grand and beautiful. On one side the angel mother; on the other side a convict, whose aspirations for a pure life had ascended to the heavens above, and measurably redeemed him from a single false step in life.

He who aspires to do good, to be good, to rise out of the debris of sin and corruption, can do so, for his aspirations are the connecting links between him and the angels. Then the demons, the evil spirits recede; then the darkness and gloom of the soul, like a pestilential cloud, commence to fade away; then revengeful thoughts, fiends incarnate, always corroding to the soul, subside, and a new day scintillating with the incense of heaven and illuminated with the smiles of angels, dawns upon the mind.

He who harbors revenge, feeds and sustains an enemy in his own soul.

He who cultivates unkind thought towards others, only causes weeds and poisonous plants to spring forth in his own nature, retarding all growth towards the sublime and beautiful, and preventing the attainment of that which is pure and good.

He who would maliciously destroy the peace and contentment, the happiness of another, only introduces into his own environment weapons that will pierce himself.

He who sends the poisonous shafts of hate towards an enemy wounds himself the most severely, and places between himself and heaven a veil of darkness.

Your own thoughts, your own acts, your own aspirations, your own conduct in life manufacture, as if by machinery, your own heaven or hell.

Each one is now weaving the fabrics of his future existence.

V.

This convict, whose exalted spirit mother came to him bearing with her a nature of ineffable loveliness, the outgrowth of her own goodness and exalted aspiration, had measurably renovated his own soul by cultivating kind emotions, that blossomed forth more beautifully than any dew-laden garden flower; and his aspirations, like rays of silvery light, had penetrated beyond the unhealthy gloom of the prison walls, and ascended heaven-ward until they found lodgment in the heart of angels, causing approving smiles of recognition. He had struck a keynote, the rhythmic vibrations of which were in tender, loving harmony with the grand reformers of spirit life, and they opened the way for his advancement, and prepared him for the reception of his spirit mother. What a greeting he received from her! Tears of gladness, pearls of the divine within, glistened more radiantly than the diamond on the coronet of a king, as they mutually embraced. He had sought heaven; he had cultivated thoughts overflowing with humanitarianism, and aspirations, too, adorned with all the cardinal virtues, and right here, in the arms of a loving mother was the beneficent result—heaven itself with its transcendent glories was revealed!

Seek and you will find. If you seek revenge, darkened conditions, like the poisonous effluvia of a dismal swamp, will extinguish heaven's light within and mete out to your own nature the poison that you would confer upon others. If you seek true nobility of character, spiritually, intellectually and morally, you will find that the radiance of spirit life will commence beaming upon you.

TRUTH UNDEFILED.

Every heart knows its weakness, its burden of sin,
What need to reveal them? Love says, "Look within,"
For God and each soul there's a witness between.

He shall judge thee and others, fear not, for the scale
Of Justice and Mercy He holds shall prevail—
In the triumph of Truth, tho' its teachers be frail.

Let the good in thy brother be dear to thy heart,
With his vices and follies the truth has no part,
It will live and will triumph the most thro' Love's art.

Men cannot defile it, tho'-sunk in the mire,
'Tis the Jewel of heaven that mortals shall tire
Of striving to tarnish or burn in the fire.

They may try it as dross in the furnace of pain,
But pure as when given the truth will remain,
And show never to angels one scar or one stain.

Oh! learn then the lesson Love bears to the earth,
All truths that exalt thee are jewels of worth,
And none the less holy, tho' lowly their birth.

But, remember, Love never works ruin or ruth
To any who toil in the kingdoms of truth,—
For behold! Love herself is the holiest truth,—

And when born in the spirit, then sink to repose
All the passions that add to humanity's woes,
For Love hides the secrets that hate would disclose.

Oh! sing then in gladness the songs of the heart
And the joys that they give to others impart,
'Tis Love, and Love only, gives food to the heart.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage: His Influence On the Thought of To-Day; His Life On Earth and in Spirit State.

An Address

Given through the Lips of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, Chicago, Ill., April 20, 1902.

"Now we see through a glass darkly; then face to face."

"What we are we know; what we shall be doth not yet appear."

Within the last few days there has passed from earth, from human sight and human affairs, one of the most prominent clergymen of this country: Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage.

His life, like that of Mr. Spurgeon in London, marks with its closing a certain cycle of theological thought, a certain order of ministration of religion. We might just as well say here, that we think Mr. Talmage's life almost closes that kind of theological ministration.

We are not here to discuss Mr. Talmage personally. Of course, his life, his associations, and his relations were not only his own, but he was, undoubtedly, true to his convictions in every walk of life. We believe he was true to his convictions in his theological life; for no man could fully accept or preach the kind of religion that Mr. Talmage did, if he did not believe it. He would try to evade it, he would talk about something else, as a great many ministers of the same and similar denominations do. But he did not seek to avoid doctrinal sermons, he did not seek to turn away from the severity of the creed which he believed. Therefore, we think he was sincere. Perhaps between hypocrisy and that kind of religion it is better to be sincere, whatever one believes.

But with the passing of Mr. Talmage that kind of religion ceases to have sway over a very large number of people.

Owing to a peculiar arrangement of the Associated Press his sermons had a very extensive circulation. We do not say that a great many people believed in his theology, but he had a great influence personally. He was a man of strong convictions and opinions, and a nature whose opinions would blind him to the truth, if it differed from those opinions. We do not think that he ever willfully falsified against any liberal movement, but his convictions were so strong against them that he believed the statements that he often made, we mean concerning the Liberal churches, concerning the Spiritualists, concerning all things that were not in accordance with the theology which he believed in.

A great many people are sincere in their statements when a little effort would convince them that they are mis-statements. A great many people do not wish to be informed if their opinions are wrong. This is the case often with scientific men, so-called, as well as theologians.

When Mr. Huxley said he "would not cross the street to find out if Spiritualism were true" he proved his narrowness and bigotry, notwithstanding his supposed scientific enlightenment. We say it is quite in keeping that he might make some statements of opinions that are grounded in prejudice, and that having prejudice for their outgrowth must, of course, narrow down the outlook of the individuals in an age like this.

Some people have the courage to look at a subject through an open window; others only look at it through a key hole; others do not look at all; and that constitutes the difference in the point of view concerning the thoughts that are in the world. But for the most part the world is moving, not only scientifically and in all directions of human thought, but the theological world is impelled by the great undercurrent of change that is going on in the world, despite prejudices, and the clergyman that can see this and float with the current is the popular minister of to-day; while the clergyman that can see this and endeavors to resist it is often popular for his resistance.

Mr. Talmage reached a class of people that do not, as a rule, do their own thinking—religious thinking; in fact think it is wicked to have opinions that are not in accordance with the religious teachings they have received; and he reached psychologically a much larger class, a class that has no opinions, or do not know that they have any opinions and are moved or swayed by the powerful thoughts that come in their way. All such clergymen reach their followers either through fear or through a swaying magnetic impulse.

Henry Ward Beecher was largely a man of impulse; he swayed by his great magnetic heart. He had a good brain, but unless his heart was in his sermons he did not preach, it was merely talk. Mr. Talmage probably had a heart, but his sermons were full of the theology in which he had been trained, appealing to the fears of the people.

When we say that the cycle of fear is passed, we mean it. We mean that the world, in Protestantism, has so far advanced that sectional and sectarian barriers are removed; that creeds are being remodeled; that when the Presbyterian Church can change the creed that has been handed down almost from the time of John Calvin, it means progress. When the church to which Mr. Talmage belonged can go so far as to have one clergyman preach a liberal Unitarian sermon, while another preaches perhaps, Orientalism, it shows the world changes its religion, and its theology along with it.

That Mr. Talmage exercised such great influence, seemingly, must be owing to the fact that people are easily controlled through their fears. Far other was the influence of Mr. Moody, the revivalist. He did not so much appeal to human fear as to human love to rescue people from their danger. To rescue souls from darkness of Hades he presented a strong picture of a lost soul; he presented as the influence of his life the exalted love of Jesus to save, it was the salvation of God's love that he presented most effectively.

Of course Mr. Talmage considered ethically a great many of the propositions of human life; presented them vigorously from his standpoint. But the underlying theology of his existence was the theology that appealed to human fear; to the possibility of being eternally lost. Souls were to be saved in Mr. Moody's religion and the love of Jesus was to save them. In the building and teaching of Mr. Talmage souls were to be saved, but they were to be saved by having the picture presented to them of eternal torment, of being lost, and being urged to fly or escape from doom. Mr. Spurgeon also was that kind of a theologian or preacher. He would picture to his people the heat—or supposed heat—of Hades, and he would slide down the bannisters of the steps that led to his pulpit to illustrate to his people the rapidity with which people went to hell. A great many of those things were exaggerated, yet he was perfectly conscientious and sincere. Mr. Talmage took occasion to visit some of the mining regions of England when he was abroad, where the ore was being wrought out in the furnaces while there, and afterward he described it to his friends, telling them that he considered hell a literal place and a million times hotter than those iron furnaces. Of course, believing that, it would be his duty to try to save souls from such a doom.

All the sweet logic of the Sermon on the Mount, all the petition of the Golden Rule, all the life and love of Jesus could not avail when the horror of such a picture has to be presented; and at this moment, if the mass of the people could be shown a literal picture of Hades, like that shown in the play of Faust, or purgatory exaggerated, and people believed it to be true, would they not from very fear fly to the religion of Jesus? It would not be for the love of Jesus, but for the fear of Hades. Witness the panic in a fire, or when there is a storm at sea. It is very seldom that human faith, however well trained in the Christian religion, prevents a panic. Here and there a devotee may be calm; here and there a philosopher, who does not claim to be a church member, may be calm. But the great instinct of human life is to fly from danger physically. When that danger is presented as a moral danger, a spiritual danger, and when the fire instead of being transient is eternal, you do not wonder that people try ing transient is eternal, you do not wonder that people seek to fly from it if they can be made to believe in the literalness of the fire.

It seems a strange thing, when you turn to the first four Gospels in the New Testament and read exactly what Jesus taught, how there could be considered such a Hades, such a religion out of the few simple utterances there recorded. Of course Paul was the doctrinarian of Christianity. But it is very difficult to find a literal hell-fire even in the writings of Paul. Human fear, which is the basest of human passions, cupidity and ignorance constitute the foundation for that kind of teaching. And yet it must serve its purpose. It is the stepping-stone to something higher. Perhaps it is this belief in the fear of Hades that refines the gold of the spirit and sends it forth purer. Then it gives to the mind another suggestion. It is a very subtle, psychological suggestion: that people do not believe it after all; that although the mind may accept it and the fears may be dominated by it, the soul does not believe it, for every human being who actually believes in the literal, eternal hell-fire would be bound to be insane. We have known of a great many mothers who have been driven insane when the ministers have told them that their children were in hell. We have known a great many people whose hearts rebelled against such a thought and who turned away from the austerity of such a creed, and the rest, without knowing it, have a protest down deep in the spirit—an a priori knowledge that it is not true; or else they hold a slender thread of creed or of hope on which they think that their loved ones may cross to a place of safety; the "deathbed repentance," at the last moment, in which the spirit may admit or acknowledge the great supremacy of Christ. There is always a chance of escape. But if it were true that you believed that any friend of yours, any child, any sister, any brother, any father or mother, wife or husband were literally in Hades you would not be human if you were not insane.

With all his sincerity, with the power which we ascribe to Dr. Talmage, with the great spirit of invective, with the spirit of misrepresentation, with the thought that he believed what he preached, we think, nevertheless, that there was down deep in his spirit a certain protest; that if his intellect had been broader, or he could have burst the barriers of precedent, he would have spoken more liberally in his later days. But having committed himself in any one direction he did not have the courage to retract. He did not believe that he could retract; he even reiterated things that were not pressing in order to be literally true because of this spirit of blindness, this prejudice. Later on, as his life grew older he did, indeed, endeavor to adapt his sermons to the needs, the growing needs, of the people.

We remember he gave a series of sermons, not many years ago, on "The Occupations of Spirits in Heaven." Having read the Bible very carefully, especially the New Testament, you know there is very little said about what people shall do in heaven there. As Mr. Talmage did not admit the possibility of spirit communion, or of modern visions or seers, we often wondered from what source he received his information concerning the occupations in heaven? He never vouchsafed to tell. He did not say he had a vision like Dante, or like the prophets, or that he was upon the Mount of Transfiguration with Jesus and the two disciples; he did not say that any of those "ministering spirits" referred to in the Bible had told him. But he seriously talked about the occupations in heaven as though he knew. Does not that prove that when a man says there can be no intercommunion between the two worlds, he, after all, knows there is intercommunion? Because without intercommunion, one way or another, no human being could tell what are the occupations of souls in heaven.

Perfect as is the flood of inspiration accompanying the present spiritual teachings that are in the world, the "many mansions in the Father's house" are closed and sealed, unless by visions through angelic presences or by ministration through spirit communion those states are revealed, and no man knows what the "many mansions" hold. If Mr. Talmage was a seer, then all he said against Spiritualism must be accounted false. If Mr. Talmage had messages from spirits, then that controverts what he said about the impossibility of spirit communion; and if all spirits are "lying spirits sent to deceive," then might not he also have been deceived? These are contradictions that do not occur to the ordinary minds, to the minds intent on believing whatever their pastor says; to the minds that do not think that he preaches sermons one year that contradict the sermons of the next year, or the reverse.

But people accept that which they like to believe. The best minister is the one who tells his people their own thoughts; the best minister is the one who tells you what you would like to say if you had the language. If your ideals are high and your minister tells you those ideals are true he pleases you; if you are seeking for money in the world, and your minister tells you how to get it, that pleases you. He may also tell you to be honest, to have integrity, but that you do not have to literally obey the Golden Rule, and you like him for that. We have heard ministers of as great popularity as Mr. Talmage, saying to their congregations, that the "Golden Rule was never intended for practical life." What was it intended for? If it was for life in heaven, why was it not kept there instead of being imparted to earth? If intended for an ideal life, apart from business, why was it thrust into human existence? Or was it only to apply to the Great Teacher and not to all who followed him toward the fraternity of man?

Oh, no! you "cannot serve God and mammon." And yet some Christian clergymen tell you you can, and tell you so in many of the churches of this city and those on Fifth avenue, New York. The sermons that are preached at the head of Wall street in Trinity Church are very tender of the feelings of those who try not to think that the Golden Rule is intended for daily use. But when the Rev. Dr. Huntington, fresh from the heart-beats of the people, consecrated his life to their service, said he was going on a missionary tour to Fifth avenue, he meant that there was more need of missionary work there than at the Five Points. Just the spirit of what Jesus said when he said "the publicans and sinners"—with whom he sat down to their table—"were nearer to the kingdom of heaven than the scribes, pharisees and hypocrites."

The great baptism of true humanity is rising in the world, and we are glad that Mr. Talmage has done his work and passed on to his reward, because he must have felt the waning tide of that theological life that brought him into such great notoriety; he must have felt the sands receding from under his feet that formed the foundations of that "house of God" which could not save the souls that He is said to have made; he must have realized that the great tide of human affairs was setting the other way spiritually or religiously.

Though his successor in name and in theology repeats very weakly some of the things Dr. Talmage said years ago, it is but a faint echo, it bears no trace of the original vigor. But this vigorous life expended itself in the great energy he used in building a false fabric of the future, a fabric destroyed by knowledge; and his going forward among the multitude to do his work is a spectacle; it is presented as a picture.

We have sometimes wished that people had half the energy in advocating a work for the truth of the Gospel that is merciful and loving and free. If people would exercise one-hundredth part of the enthusiasm over a religion of love that they do over a religion of fear the world would be in the millennium. But you see they cannot.

We were told very seriously by a noted Unitarian minister, that he thought that the hold upon human thought was waning in the Unitarian church, and we asked what he thought was the reason? "Well," he said, "the moment people begin to think for themselves they do not think there is any need of thinking together, they each start on an exploring expedition of their own." Of course there is no authority in the Liberal churches; fear and authority constitute the source of energy and power in the evangelical and in the Roman Catholic churches. There is no better piece of mechanism than the organization of the Roman Catholic church. But it is grounded in the fears of the masses.

There was not a better piece of humanitarian influence than that which Mr. Moody strove to exercise in his great revival work; but that also was founded in the fear of humanity. There is no better or more merciful organization in the world than the Salvation Army; but it is to save souls from hell.

If humanitarian societies; if the people could be pervaded by as great love for humanity to save them from the slums, and from the existing conditions of human life, there would be an upward movement instantly. Jane Addams illustrates what can be done with love for humanity in their present state.

Souls are valuable, therefore God does not mean to lose them; humanity here and now is given to man's charge and the great Philanthropic work of the church constitutes its stronghold. It is not the mystic rites and ancient truths of Freemasonry that bind men to it; it is the spirit of fraternity, of loving kindness and loving service. Every human being ought to do for each other that which they bind themselves to do in the lodges of the Freemasons. When Christianity came into the world this principle was recognized by the few, and every human being recognizing it made a pledge by that recognition to do good to his fellow-man. What is the need of fraternal orders if the spirit of Christianity prevails? And what is the need of all this talk about souls when it is the body, the mind and the spirit that are to be trained to express the soul?

Mr. Talmage taught that only a portion of human beings were to be saved. He did not arrogate to himself the right to say the number or to designate those who were to be saved; he spoke vigorously of those who would not be saved, and urged people to fly from the conditions that were not conducive to salvation.

In the changes of human life, at the last moment of existence there is always another message; there are always ministering ones attending those who are to pass from earth; there is always more or less consciousness of this transition; there is always preparation. But you may be perfectly well assured, that during the interval between the last of human consciousness and the realization, in its fulness, of the spirit state, that there was preparation for Mr. Talmage on his entrance into spirit life. Yet with all preparation and whatever there may be in the spirit of hope, whatever uplifting power of faith, you can also be aware what a vast surprise awaits every human life on knowing that the body is really cast aside and the spirit is consciously set free. The ordinary human life is not so much surprised as two extremes: the materialist and the theologian. The materialist is surprised to find himself alive, and very much doubts that his body is dead, then he proceeds sophistically to say, "Even if my body is dead this is only a little effervescence outlasting the body, which will also pass. This is a sort of a delirium which will shortly pass away." But when there come thronging around the spirit of the materialist those friends supposed to be dead who welcome him, the surprise of the materialist more and more increases. Not long ago, the late Robert G. Ingersoll, whose spirit spoke through the instrument who stands before you, said, "it was as though the scales had fallen from my eyes." When the theologian hopes to enter the kingdom of heaven, that which he has described to his people; when he expects to be welcomed by angels and borne into the presence of Jesus, and perhaps of the Infinite; when he has pictured to himself that which shall be his reception; possibly, if he is favored of heaven with that exalted, immortal state; when his fears have been merged in his faith so that he dares to hope for that estate; you may imagine his surprise when he sees around him the familiar friends of his childhood and his youth; when he sees the loving ones of his own household; and when there is no great gala occasion, when there is nothing of the prevision of the great apocalypse, no passing away of the earth and the rending of the veil, nor angelic presences to herald him into the presence of eternal life when all is dust, but it is only the next step of existence.

Yet so conscious does the spirit become with the throwing off of the earthly organism of its own inadequacy, of the lack of spiritual possessions, that every spirit enters spirit life from the human state with some degree of humiliation. So after the first greeting there is a season of introspection, and the spirit meets what it sows, reaps the harvest of the seeds that have been planted, and, if sufficiently advanced or aware, perceives the inadequacy of that planting.

What do you suppose must be the thought of the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage when he sees no fires of Hades, when he hears no voices from those who are condemned, when he meets face to face his friends and companions, and even those with whom he differed in theology; and when, above all, there is no sound of rustling pinions, no opening of ineffable gates; but he enters the spirit state for which he is prepared by the thoughts and deeds done in human life?

It is a surprise to every human life. We do not follow any spirit into those introspections and reflections that are for the individual spirit alone. We give that which is granted even by the most of earth's relations and friends, we give the spirit the solitude that belongs to the disembodied spirit. When that spirit enters into its own inheritance it is known within and it is known to God. There are none to point fingers of reproach or scorn, none to praise unduly. Every life sees that which it has sown. With the greatest tenderness, and with a devotion in which human love has become spiritualized the friends of the earthly estate receive those who pass from earth.

Do you not suppose Mr. Talmage is happier in his spirit home, surrounded by his friends, the relations of earth and those who were congenial with him, than he would be in a far-off heaven with the knowledge that Hades had engulfed some of his companions and friends? And do you not suppose it is great relief to any kind-hearted and affectionate human being to find that the fires of Hades are within instead of without, that the judgment there is a voice from within the soul instead of an external censor or judge? Even though every human life walks into its own portion of the shadows that have been fashioned by itself, is not that a great merciful respite compared to what has been taught by theology?

Now after this shall have been learned, do you suppose that there is anything that will prevent a sincere, honest spirit from endeavoring to un-teach that which was wrong in his teaching; to help the people out of the fear that he must have engendered by his false theology? Whenever the great awakening comes, whether it be at the moment of transition or whether by slow degrees it dawns upon the spirit, that spirit must teach that intercourse with spirit friends is possible and continues as long as love abides.

Such time as Dr. Talmage learns that there is no literal hell-fire, and that the way to the kingdom of heaven is within, will there not be for all the rest of the time that any human life is on earth that is swayed by his influence enough for him to do? And such as have passed to spirit existence and have found his teachings not true, will they not be willing teachers and helpers of him, who, like the revivalist, was tethered in the small cobweb of his own fashioning out of the theology in which he was reared, and fettered by that until death set him free.

And if through the shadows that thus arise the glimmering of this perfect immortal state, and the love of mother, father, child, brother, sister and friend shall come cleaving in, how blessed to know that neither the theological heaven nor the theological hell holds any other soul when that life outgrows the thought. Then the great mission and ministry must be the unsealing of the eyes of others.

When John Calvin awoke to the enormity of the crimes committed under the name of religion, he felt that eternity was too short for him to undo what he had done. Now hither and thither, night and day over all the earth and in spirit states wherever a mind can be impressed, wherever a minister can be told he inspires from within by the voice of truth, that there is no hell save that which is within. Like John Calvin, seeing that the seething fires of Hades are not true, will not the true spirit of Mr. Talmage, rising from his place of theological bondage and amenable to the light of the new religion, set the seal on this which has been said and speak from out the voices of the skies for this man who has risen and say: "Whereas he was blind, now he sees; whereas he was deaf, now he hears, and the light of the spirit has burst through these barriers and mists of theological shadows and behold! he will become as one of those who like little children shall be led by little children and shall teach the kingdom of God's love.

THOUGHTS ON TELEPATHY.

Philosophy and Method of Thought Transference.

Communication between minds without the aid of the ordinary means, namely, the five physical senses, is known as telepathy.

Wireless telegraphy is as assured fact. In time, telepathy will undoubtedly become just as, and, perhaps, more practical than Marconi's or any other system of wireless telegraphy.

There are very many instances where telepathy has proven to be a very effective means of communicating intelligence. Many cases are recorded where, just at death, the outgoing spirit has appeared or telepathed a message to someone whom it wished to know of its condition.

Telepathy is the method of communicating between subjective minds of living people. It is undoubtedly the mode of communication between many animals.

Trance or inspirational mediums are undoubtedly influenced by the same power, though in this case the telepathic messages proceed from spirit intelligences out of the form.

Telepathy enables the mesmerist (or the operator who uses the mesmeric method when producing the trance state) to make his subjects obey mental orders.

The subjective mind of man is nearly always dominated by the objective mind, and although the subjective minds of two persons in a room may be communicating with each other, the persons are unaware of it, because the communications do not rise above the threshold of consciousness. In other words, they are not perceived by the objective mind.

Now, if one of the persons was sensitive or mediumistic, he would probably catch the message, either by hearing it clairaudiently, seeing it clairvoyantly, or by being impressed by one of the many methods common to psychic sensitives.

The higher phenomena of the mesmeric or hypnotic trance, such as thought transference, psychometric readings, etc., are all made possible by telepathy.

Distance is no bar to the sending or receiving of telepathic messages, only so far as our objective belief in distance hinders our efforts in this direction. Objective education must be overcome to a certain extent to enable anyone to become a sender of telepathic messages. People are prone to consider it impossible to do some of the things attributed to the power of mind, and it is this unbelief and lack of faith that retards progress in this science.

A telepathic message can be sent or received at the antipodes, that is if the sender and receiver are both in the passive state, and are able by one of the many methods to bring the message above the threshold of consciousness.

Natural sleep is one of the best conditions under which to send or receive telepathic messages. But as there is really little difference between ordinary sleep and a self-induced partially hypnotic state, it seems that either condition would be equally good for this purpose.

The sender of telepathic messages must thoroughly understand the law of auto-suggestion, as this is one of the principal factors which make communication between minds possible.

Many of the recipients of telepathic messages have been in a natural sleep, others wide awake, while others were partly asleep. Some telepathic messages are perceived by one or more persons at the same time. Sometimes the one to whom the message is sent does not at once receive it and the message will probably rest in his subjective mind, until perhaps in a few hours time he becomes more passive, and then the message comes above the threshold of consciousness and is perceived and taken cognizance of by the objective mind. At other times, some person in close connection with the one to which it is sent gets it and makes it known.

So-called personal magnetism is undoubtedly hypnotic suggestions telepathed from one subjective mind to another.

The whole foundation of absent mental treatment is based on the power of telepathy. The healer goes into a partially hypnotic state and sends out on the psychic ether, waves of health, which reach and impress the patient's subjective mind; and, true to the law of suggestion, are retained; and as the subjective mind has full control over all the organs and functions of the body, it is readily seen how the conditions of health are brought about. It is all under a natural law, and there is nothing unnatural or improbable about it.

Under the right conditions telepathic messages can become so intensified as to become actual materializations. Thus the witches of old would, while they were entranced, project images resembling themselves, and various animals, which they would send to worry and annoy those against whom they had a grudge.

The means most generally employed to send telepathic messages is to produce a state of passiveness of the objective faculties. The deeper the objective or physical senses are locked in sleep, the greater and more perfect will be the manifestations.

The witches were known to anoint their bodies with a mixture of powerful narcotics, and then retire to a secluded spot, free from molestation, and lapse into a profound and deathlike sleep. The mystics throughout the world, in any country, all become more or less entranced when producing subjective projections. The power of auto-suggestion is what enables them to determine what the different manifestations shall be. Before going to sleep, or becoming entranced, they suggest to themselves, what visions or manifestations their subjective minds shall produce; and, true to the law of suggestion the effect comes about.

A good many modern investigators take natural sleep for the sending of telepathic messages. They retire to bed, and while their objective senses are slowly becoming locked in slumber, they suggest to themselves that their right mind will produce such and such a manifestation. If the right conditions are present, their projections or messages will be seen by the person to whom they are sent.

Some telepathic messages are seen or taken cognizance of subjectively and then brought above the threshold of consciousness, while others may be seen objectively. Some telepathic projections, both from the subjective mind of a living person and from the spirit world, may become plain enough to be caught by the camera. Spirit photography is along the same lines, the picture is either a projection from the subjective mind or spirit of a living person, or a projection from the spirit world.

TWO MEN.

When all the world to him is bright
And he's from trouble free,
In everything he takes delight
An optimist is he.

But let a cloud bedim his sky
And thorns beset his way,
The ready tear comes to his eye
To woe he is a prey.

The world is dark that erst looked bright,
And everything's atwist
In human life; there's nothing right;
He is a pessimist.

* * * * * * * * * * *

When there is sunshine in his sky
And fortune's smiles are bland,
He meets you with a beaming eye,
With kindness grasps your hand.

When fortune turns on him her frown
And shows him her ill will,
He seems not to the world cast down;
His mien is cheerful still.

He meets life's ills with courage strong,
And with a heart to fight
Rolls up his sleeves when things go wrong
And works to set them right.

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five percent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advise free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. Address New York & London Electric Association, Dep. THE SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE.

A VERY IMPORTANT WORK.

The Spiritual Significance is by Lilian Whiting, author of "The World Beautiful," "After Her Death," "Kate Field, A Record," "A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning." Cloth, $1.00.

Miss Whiting finds the title of her new book in these lines from "Aurora Leigh:"

"If a man could feel
Not one, but every day, feast, fast, and working-day,
The spiritual significance burn through
The hieroglyphic of material shows,
Henceforward he would paint the globe with wings."

The aim of this book is to reveal the curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an unseen realm into which humanity is rapidly advancing and thus gaining a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautiful" continues the same argument presented in those volumes in a plea that the future life is the continuation and development of our present life in all its faculties and powers, and that the present may be ennobled by the constant sense of the Divine Presence, and a truer knowledge of the nature of man and his relations to God tend to a higher morality and increasing happiness. The book is characterized by the same essential style and qualities that have insured for "The World Beautiful" volumes an almost world-wide popularity.

LISBETH.

An Interesting Story of Two Worlds.

Elevating, Fascinating, Instructive Throughout.

This work by Carrie E. S. Twing is exceptionally interesting. She well says: "These characters which have brought out the highest and lowest in different religious beliefs, have moved me, not I them." The whole book is interesting, fascinating, and instructive. Price $1.00.

Healing, Causes and Effects.

By W. P. Phelon, M. D. Deals with the finer mental and spiritual forces as applied to healing. Price, 50 cents.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE.

By the Editor of the National, with Preface and Notes by Peter Eckler. Illustrated with views of the old Paine Homestead and Paine Monument, at New Rochelle; also portraits of Thomas Clio Rickman, Joel Barlow, Mary Wollstonecraft, Madame Roland, Condorce, Brissot, and the most prominent of Paine's friends in Europe and America. A Very Interesting Book for All.

Philosophy of Spiritual Intercourse. This work contains a graphic account of the very wonderful spiritual developments at the house of Rev. Dr. Phelps, Stratford, Conn., and similar cases in all parts of the country. This volume is the first from the author directly upon the subject of Spiritualism, and has stood the test of many years. Cloth, $1.20; postage 10c.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require. Every item sent to us for publication, should contain the full name and address of the writer. We desire to know the source of every item that appears. This rule will be strictly adhered to.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Bear in mind that all notices for this page are cut down to suit the space we have to occupy when received.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Bear in mind, please, that Isa Wilson Kayner's address is at No. 112 Winchester avenue, Chicago, where she can be addressed.

Inspirational lecturer in German open for engagement. Write to Julius Kuhn, No. 803 North Carnac street, Philadelphia, Pa., for full particulars.

Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt may be addressed for camp or society engagements, at 498 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill., or at The Progressive Thinker office.

Harry J. Moore who has proved a great favorite at Rochester, Ind., as a lecturer, will respond to calls to attend camp-meetings. Address him at No. 773 Sixty-third Place, Englewood Station, Chicago, Ill.

Bro. M. E. Taylor is now in Summerland, Cal., and circumstances have so wrought that he is liable to tarry there some time and he wishes all his friends to address him as follows: Box 2, Summerland, Cal.

The Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, by his eloquent allusions to the "reward beyond" for good done in the flesh, coaxed a good many dollars from poor people to give to foreign missions, but he did not deprive himself. His will filed in Washington yesterday shows that he left an estate of $300,000, all of which goes to his family; one-third to his widow and the balance to his children. Not a cent is left for the poor or mission work. Most of the estate is in personal property, consisting of secured notes, government bonds, stock and cash in bank. Of course no one can say if the Rev. Talmage made his religion pay in the next world, but he certainly made it pay in this.—Atchison Globe.

Press compliments to Prof. W. M. Lockwood: "A very able speaker."—Cincinnati Star Times. "His deductions are those of a scholarly mind."—Clinton (Iowa) Herald. "A man of great ability and far-reaching thought."—Watseka (Ill.) News. "One of the greatest thinkers in this country, his exposition of great problems are marvelously clear and lucid."—Munich (Ind.) Herald. "He discusses various philosophical propositions with ease and fluency, showing a deep insight into, careful preparation and complete mastery of the subject."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Mrs. M. A. Logue writes from Butte City, Mont.: "The Progressive Society of Spiritualists meet at my home every Sunday evening and two nights in the week for the study of the philosophy. We have interesting classes. Meetings are free. We hold a social every month, creating a fund in the treasury, so that we can in time rent a hall and employ a good speaker. We have never had any speaker here, with but one exception, and no reliable mediums; most all of them have been of the tramp order."

The last Sunday in April G. H. Brooks closed a very successful month's engagement at Newport, Ky. He is now at his home, and will respond to calls for funerals addressed him at 114 President street, Wheaton, Ill.

Byron Barber writes from Mineral Wells, Tex.: "I get almost out of heart sometimes as to the prospects of any great good coming to the people here along the lines of the new thought; but when I read The Progressive Thinker and see the general result of the movement I take new courage, and think there is hope of the human family becoming free from priestcraft within the next quarter of a century. If the human family is ever sufficiently educated to think independently of a dictating element the question of the millennium will become a reality. We have a divine healer among us who is doing good. He claims to heal by the power of God. There are wise(?) people here who say it is hypnotism. Now, there you are; and what are you going to do about it? I ask them if the power (whatever it is) is good. They say, 'Yes.' I ask them to tell me the source whence all good comes. They say, 'God.' Well, I ask them if it is divine or not. Now isn't it strange that people will try so hard to hide the true value of a thing by giving it another name?"

W. J. Elmo writes: "The First Spiritual Church at 9251 South Chicago avenue, Tinsley Hall, South Chicago, opened last evening to an audience of about sixty. There is greater interest in Spiritualism there than we anticipated. This is a good field for spiritual work. Tests and messages given by Sam Foss, Mrs. Longstaff and Mrs. McMenamin, were highly appreciated. Mrs. McMenamin has taken charge of the work and will have the best of mediums from Mrs. E. J. Demorest's address is 300 Bissel street, Chicago, Ill., where she can be addressed for platform work and private readings. She has the reputation of being an excellent medium.

If one mentions Spiritualism to some people one finds that it means to them charlatanism or chicanery. It is utterly useless to declare to them that there can possibly be any religious aspect about it founded upon the very best declarations of the Bible. To many persons Spiritualism is based upon fraud and deception pure and simple. Such people can conceive of but three places for present or future existence—earth, heaven or hell. As to the second named place people are in a continual state of doubt about its attainment, the impossibility of which makes future existence in the last mentioned place a certainty. They pretend to believe in a future existence the conditions for the acquirement of which are something awful. People capable of reasoning should leave no investigation undone of one or the other of the various religious dogmas before them before condemning any or all of them. The Bible teaches Spiritualism; but the Bible also teaches the other fellow to knock out the mercy of God by preaching the certainty of a bottomless, eternally burning hell, and that the chances of getting to it are about nine million to one. Spiritualism teaches men to help one another; the other part of the Bible teaches the other fellow to help those most who believe as he tells them to. The writer attended a meeting of Spiritualists in their temple, at the corner of Third avenue and Michigan street, recently. There were no horns, cabinets or other paraphernalia there, but that part of the service undertaken by Mrs. G. G. Cooley and Mrs. C. A. Sprague was both wonderful and convincing, while the lecture of Mr. Sprague was an appeal to the reason of any one capable of thought. There was nothing in the lecture from which a person of reflection would dissent on other than purely selfish grounds or from prejudice born of ignorance.—Union Label, Evansville, Ind.

J. M. White writes: "Owing to the fact that I have been sick with smallpox and in the hospital for thirty days, I will not make any engagements to work before July, as the conditions with which I was surrounded there had such a depressing effect on me that it will be several weeks before I can be in shape for messages. My lecture on 'Christian Heathen,' which I delivered at the Nebraska State Camp-meeting, at Crete, Neb., last year, has been improved by addition of new matter which I gathered in my recent experience. Notwithstanding my surroundings I did considerable missionary work with the spiritual poems and explaining our principles while there. In July I will be ready for camp-meeting work. Those desiring my services may learn something of me by writing Jones Campbell, Havelock, Neb. Present address is General Delivery, Marshalltown, Iowa."

Carrie F. Weatherford writes: "I have just received, printed in convenient form, a composition in high class music, by John W. Ring, of Galveston, entitled 'Name the Baby.' This little gem is something which has long been needed, is not burdensome, and is just long enough to give time for a pretty little spiritual ceremonial. It is also constructed as to furnish a fine setting for an ordination service. There is nothing like it on the market and societies should each and all purchase a full outfit for choir practice and thus be ready for emergencies. Price, one copy, 35 cents, 5 copies, $1.50. Address the composer, J. W. Ring, as follows: The Temple, Galveston, Texas."

C. H. Mathews writes: "If any of your readers have a lingering doubt that this is a Christian country, let them be at once undeceived. A glance at the naval appropriation bill in congress, April 22, discloses as follows: 'Two battle-ships, to cost $4,212,000. Two armored cruisers, to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, $4,659,000 each. Two gun-boats of 1,000 tons each, to cost $382,000 each. The 16,000-ton battle-ships will be the largest warships afloat. The amount carried by the bill is slightly over $76,000,000.' Just think of it, seventy-six millions of hard-earned money to be expended in engines of destruction to kill off people made in the image of God. There will hardly be a Christian clergyman in the United States that will dare raise his voice in deprecation of this gigantic war measure, in times of peace."

W. J. Elmo writes: The moving pictures were a success at our meeting. The hall was crowded, and the audience seemed in good spirits to receive the messages given by Mrs. Elmo. Everything points out a grand success for our entertainment and dance to be held at Lakeside Hall, corner 31st street and Indiana avenue, Saturday evening, May 10. The programme is an excellent one. Quite a number of tickets have already been sold. The admission is but 25 cents. They who come will surely get their money's worth."

Prof. J. N. Yakes writes from Milwaukee, Wis.: "I am constantly hustling for the good of the cause of truth for humanity, lecturing in new localities where the hungering masses are crying for more light and a higher knowledge of the immortality of the soul. What a wonderful change has dawned in our state. People of all churches are earnestly inquiring of me: 'Can an exalted Spiritualism give more evidence than the clergy from the various pulpits?' I answer very briefly: 'Come and hear what I have to say.' 'Investigate,' I tell them, 'be your own judge relative to the tests that I give you at the close of each lecture. Attend spiritual lectures, seances of the various phases, just as often as you attend church and I am positive you will get value received for your time.' The shells of old orthodoxy are cracking wide open. Not a great deal longer can creeds hold people down in theological servitude. The seeds of Spiritualism are taking root. The small scions are springing up here and there, like the vegetation of the spring-time."

Wm. Follett, of Mariposa Cal., writes: "There is a person called Lorene A. Gore who advertised in your paper for Spiritualists to colonize in a beautiful valley near Mariposa, Cal. I warn all correspondents to be on their guard, and to shut off all communication with the party. I speak from experience, and can give all the facts in the case, if necessary, but deem this notice enough to stop further correspondence, and any more people going into the valley to make locations on government land."

Alma M. Wood writes: "Last year, Mr. Jesse Leverich, a pioneer Spiritualist, said he was going to make a Spiritualist of me. 'Well,' I said, 'that is easy to do, for I have no prejudice to overcome. As a class of people I like them.' He then said: 'I will have The Progressive Thinker sent to you for a year if you will read it.' It has come for a year and I have read the paper and like it very much. The Hull-Jamieson debate I was very much interested in. I was some acquainted with Mr. Jamieson. He stopped with me when he lectured in Waverly, and Mr. Hull conducted a funeral here once, and I thought they were both able defenders of their views. Mr. Leverich called the other day and insisted on my taking a dollar to pay for The Progressive Thinker for the coming year. He is very kind to furnish me with good reading."

G. W. Kates and wife, N. S. A. missionaries, desire calls in Missouri, Kansas and Iowa, during May, June and July. Address them at 600 Pennsylvania avenue, S. E., Washington, D. C.

G. W. Kates and wife write that they organized a society at Millersville, Mo., Sunday, April 19, and chartered the same with the Missouri State Association. They had large meetings here and also a packed audience at Jackson, the 20th. This was the first Spiritualists meeting ever held here, and it aroused much enthusiasm. They served at Watseka, Ill., April 26 to 30. There is a local society here with an active membership. The "Watseka Wonder" occurred here and the same made Spiritualists of the Roff family and others. Asa B. Roff and Mrs. H. H. Alter, of the family, are earnest supporters here of Spiritualism and also were cordial and liberal entertainers of the missionary pilgrims.

T. S. Russell writes: "Our hall was packed to the doors Sunday, April 27. Mrs. Warne's lecture was very fine, and Maggie Waite's tests were the best we ever heard. Harry J. Moore follows her."

E. A. Warner writes: "I have been an interested reader of The Progressive Thinker for six months or so, buying it where I could, and finally subscribing for it, and my only excuse for writing you is to voice my appreciation of your valuable paper. In the issue of April 26, the article from the pen of Nora Batchelor, Ashland, Ore., appeals very strongly to me, as being the right idea, well expressed and I hope it will be read and acted upon by Spiritualists everywhere. I am a commercial traveler, and am developing for a materializing medium under the control of my own father who has been in spirit life over seven years, and I find many who are open to receive the truths of spirit communion. They are interested to listen to your experiences, and say frankly: 'If I could see or experience any of the things you mention, I would be convinced.' My greatest regret is that I am not able to say to such: 'Come to my room and I will ask my spirit friends to convince you.' When I can arrive at that attainment I shall be happy to convert or convince any of those who are sincere and anxious to know that their loved ones can communicate. I want to ask you to encourage and solicit correspondence on the Home Circle, for I believe that the experiences therein narrated over the signatures of those who have passed through the tedious trial and developing time, help more of your readers than you can imagine."

Scribe writes: "Rev. Marguerite St. Omer Briggs closed her engagement Sunday evening with the Society of Spiritual Unity, Detroit, Mich., with a very appropriate address, and very convincing spirit messages. She serves the society in Bay City, the 4th and 11th of May. Her ministry in Detroit has been very successful, and sad was the parting."

J. Osborne Lunt writes from New York: "I notice my subscription expires the current week, so enclose $1.25 for the same, and also a copy of 'Religion of Man and Ethics of Science,' by Hudson Tuttle, which you announce to almost give away. If you persist in this course, your subscribers will have almost a free library in time. I stopped over one year back puzzling my brains to see how you can do it."

Mrs. L. Graham writes: "April 27th will long be remembered in Englewood as being the banner Sunday of the season of the Englewood Spiritual Union, the occasion being the engagement of Mrs. Maggie Waite, one of the best known mediums in the country. Mrs. Dr. G. B. Warne was the speaker of the evening and delivered one of the finest addresses she has yet given. Mrs. Warne is heart and soul in the work, and has accomplished much good through her effort. It was a master stroke of business in securing Mrs. Waite, for although the admittance fee at the door had been raised the large hall was filled to overflowing; the rapidity and accuracy of her tests astound the most skeptical; her manner is very pleasing."

Mrs. Mabel Hunt writes from Columbus, Ohio: "A series of lectures lasting through five weeks has just been completed in this place by Rev. Nellie S. Baade. A reception was held in the parlors of the church last Tuesday evening to bid farewell to the parting sister. One of the prettiest tributes to the church was presented on this evening in the form of a very fine enlarged portrait of the donor of the church, Mr. Ebenezer Barcus. This was a surprise to Mr. Barcus as well as to many others of the congregation. In a very appropriate and delicate manner Mrs. Baade in her gracious way presented this token to the church. A number of responses were made by members. Afterward all adjourned to the supper-rooms where a dainty repast was partaken of by all. Every one seemed to enjoy themselves, and a bond of sympathy and fellowship seemed to unite one and all, and to incite them to renewed efforts to go forward and work for the cause. Mrs. Baade has put forth every effort to enthuse the workers with interest in their cause of right; not the least of her efforts being for the Sunday-school children. This earnest worker brought before the mind the urgent necessity of bringing the children into the ranks and under the influence for good. We trust the next place Mrs. Baade visits will appreciate as we have done the true worth and noble character of this earnest enthusiast in our cause, and that she may do good in the field of free and wholesome thoughts wherever she may go. Many items from The Progressive Thinker were discussed and an interest taken in your paper which guides the ideas to an upward and onward line of thought. We trust Columbus will continue in the good work."

Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley has been engaged by the Texas State National Association of Spiritualists for the month of May and part of June, to make a tour of the Lone Star State, beginning May 4, at Fort Worth, in The Temple. Points in the state desiring the services of Mrs. Cooley should address Mrs. Nettie M. Wood, State Secretary, 2011 Washington street, Houston, Texas.

E. W. Sprague and wife, missionaries for the N. S. A., will work in Ohio and Pennsylvania during the month of May. Parties wishing their services, please write to them at once. Address, Rochester, Ind.

C. M. and Mrs. Josie K. Folsom write from Springfield, Mo.: "We have at last a very beautiful little Spiritual Temple here. It will be dedicated May 11. The lady that built it was converted in one of our circles last February. We are making converts everywhere. A few weeks ago we converted a holiness minister."

M. H. writes from Philadelphia, Pa.: "It is a great pleasure to state that one of the best and and greatest platform test mediums," Mrs. May S. Pepper, of Providence, R. I., has served the Philadelphia Spiritual Society during the month of April. The hall was overflowing; the crowds Mrs. Pepper draws bespeaks her popularity. There are many in every walk of life that are ever ready to lend an eager and listening ear to the words of truth that fall from her lips. Her quick perceptive faculties are simply marvelous, and it is useless to try to evade 'Bright Eyes,' who works earnestly and honestly for the truth. The month has been a successful one in a financial as well as a spiritual way. The society held a bazaar, and Mrs. Pepper (the chief attraction) gave many readings in behalf of the treasury of the society. May this wonderful woman ever hold fast to the pearl of truth, which is embedded in her grand powers, and may she go on with a cheerful spirit and perform the work that is hers to do and which she is so befittingly adapted. I think very many times that the Spiritualists as a whole do not know and realize the great responsibility which is theirs, as well as the joy gained through the knowledge of the cardinal principles underlying the vital truths of this grand philosophy. We should cherish the truth-bearers and try to remove all thorns from their pathway. We are glad to say that Mrs. Pepper will be with the Philadelphia Spiritual Society next November, also, April of 1903."

Thursday evening, May 1, the Band of Harmony held its annual election. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Mrs. C. L. V. Richmond, president; Mrs. Louise de Forrest, vice-president; Mrs. Arlington Austin, secretary; Mrs. Nettie Ashton, treasurer; Mrs. Lilly C. LeSieur, corresponding secretary.

B. R. Anderson writes as follows in reference to that "Jewish peddler": "It would seem that there is always a certain class who feel it their duty to cover Spiritualism with error. In your issue of May 3, a correspondent again resurrects the body of that fictitious peddler and appends the title of Jew to him on the present occasion. Well, there never was any truth in the story. A few of the over-credulous made themselves the butt of ridicule by digging for such a body which they never found. The story has been refuted at least twice through the press by those who were present at the search. Lest I might have forgotten I have just reread the lengthy history or account of the early rise of Spiritualism in Chambers' Encyclopedia. No peddler is mentioned. I have re-read Uriah Clark's work written concerning the rise of Spiritualism, but found nothing of it there. The story is surely without foundation."

Mrs. Mary Burland is located permanently at 3136A Rhodes avenue. Circles every Friday evening. Developing class Tuesday afternoon; trance readings daily.

Mrs. F. E. Jackson, clairvoyant and business test medium, is located at 192 37th street.

H. D. Simons, of Cambridgeport, Mass., sends us a club of subscribers. Another club comes from L. Worthen, Hillsboro, Bridge, N. H. They have our sincere thanks. The Progressive Thinker is reaching a large class in the East.

Herbert L. Whitney sends the following: "The fifth annual convention of the New York State Spiritualist Association will be held in the First Spiritualist church, South Church street, between William street and Madison avenue, in the city of Elmira, N. Y., on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, May 30, 31 and June 1, 1902. Election of officers will take place on the afternoon of Saturday, May 31. Fine speakers and Phenomenal mediums, choice music under the direction of the Elmira society. Come and join us in making this the most successful convention yet held, as it is to be our farewell meeting with our president, Moses Hull, who removes to another state September 1. Individual membership $1 per year. Come and aid us in our work for truth, justice and liberty."

H. D. Simons, who sends us a club of subscribers from Cambridgeport, Mass., writes: "The Progressive Thinker, the light that shines in the darkness, what should we do without it?"

The annual election of officers of the Grand Rapids Spiritual Society took place April 27, and the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. Amanda Coffman; vice-president, S. E. Keifer; secretary, Lou E. Johnson; treasurer, J. M. Ogden; trustees, Mr. Hembling, Mr. L. H. Austin, Mrs. L. H. Austin, Mrs. J. M. Ogden; financial secretary, Martin Gooshen. Mrs. Coffman served the society during the month of April. She always gives good satisfaction, and is always willing to assist the society when needed and to show our appreciation of her and her work, have elected her president. We hope for a prosperous year and that harmony and peace may prevail."

Gerda Johnson, of this city, writes: "Last week I started to sit with a gentleman who is not a Spiritualist, but an honest investigator and willing to accept the truth. The first sitting we had raps on the table, answering some questions, and stated that next time to bring the trumpet. At the next sitting we had our hands on the table; also trumpet. Loud raps were heard, and the trumpet moved around. We received independent whispers. At the next sitting we felt the trumpet touch our heads, and also received loud raps on it. Last evening we sat as usual, and to our astonishment received a beautiful fern foliage scented with oriental perfume, such as I know only spirits can produce. (I hope, dear readers, this will encourage all who desire to communicate with their loved ones. I know they will receive messages of truth and love."

A. F. Hill writes from Boston, Mass.: "The Boston Idea of Sunday' is before me. You are in error. Our legislature is in session. Some of us have asked that all laws on the statute books be enforced equally. This in part has been done in Boston and these laws are in a fair way of being abolished. A good general leads his people to defeat their enemies in detail; this we are trying to do with the evil and foolish laws. We also oppose any more foolish laws being made to make us criminals and to oppress us."

L. writes from Detroit, Mich.: "Mrs. Rose Ferris, of Detroit, gave tests and delivered inspirational addresses the 20th and 27th, before the Spiritualists of Battle Creek, to large and interested audiences. Her tests were well received. Mrs. Ferris has taken the large and popular hall, 55 Grand River avenue, Detroit, and held her first meeting there last Sunday evening, and will continue every Sunday evening at this fine hall. She is assisted by Mrs. Duffus, with tests, and an excellent musical program. These popular mediums will maintain the noble cause of Spiritualism at a high standard in Detroit.

Dr. Julia M. Walton spoke and gave tests for the Earnest Workers last Sunday, and Wm. Stansbury, the two Sundays previous. He spoke in Jackson last Sunday."

Golden Jubilee, or Semi-Centennial Celebration of the First Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia, Pa., will take place May 11, 12, 13, 14, at the Temple, 12th and Thompson streets. The First Association of Spiritualists being the oldest society of Spiritualists in the world, having held continuous meetings for half a century, invite all Spiritualists in Philadelphia and vicinity to unite in celebrating its Golden Jubilee. It seems eminently proper that this Fiftieth Anniversary should receive special attention from all Spiritualists. The committee having the arrangements in charge has been untiring in its efforts to present a program that will fittingly mark this epoch in the history of Spiritualism. The best talent has been secured for this occasion. Noted speakers, mediums and musicians will assist, which will insure an interesting programme. The most prominent exponents of the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism in the United States and Canada will be present and take part in the sessions. Among them will be the following: Mr. H. D. Barrett, president of the National Spiritualists Association; J. Clegg Wright, Amelia, Ohio; Hon. Milan C. Edson, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Carrie Twing, Westfield, N. Y.; Mrs. Ennie Leys Edson, Washington, D. C.; Miss Margaret Gaule, New York; J. H. Altemus, Washington, D. C. Music will be a prominent feature at each session and will be in charge of Prof. J. Frank Bacon and a full corps of competent assistants. Sunday services, 10 a. m., 2 p. m. and 7:30 p. m.; Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, 2:30 p. m. and 7:30 p. m. Admission, week days, afternoon, 15 cents; evening, 25 cents, Season tickets, $1.

Chris Seiler writes from Bremen, Ind.: "When I get 'A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands' I will have all your premium books. I find a great deal in all of them that interests me. I am the only avowed Spiritualist in this town of 2,000 inhabitants. The church members think that I am in conspiracy with the Devil to break up Christianity."

E. T. Ahrens, of Paola, Kans., writes that Dr. Louis Schlesinger has been doing some excellent work there.

Mrs. John Lindsey, of Grand Rapids, Mich., was down to McCords last week, and held a number of parlor meetings and circles that were seeds sown which will be productive of good in the future. Her address is 162 Scribner street, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Mrs. R. S. Semple, who sends $5 to this office, writes: "You will see I am quite ahead with my subscription; and I want to keep ahead as long as I can see to read the great Progressive Thinker. It may not be very long, as on the 18th of October, if spared till then, I will enter my 90th round of years. I am not very strong at present; have lost much of my hearing, but my eyes are strong enough to write you this letter without glasses of any kind, for which I am truly thankful."

Another Experience with Dr. Henry Slade.

On April 3, about three o'clock in the afternoon, in bright light, two gentlemen called, and in a few minutes the Doctor sat at the end of a common fall-leaf table and placed his hands on the same. Immediately loud raps were heard. In a few minutes the Doctor took a clean slate and placed it under one leaf of the table with his left hand, and in a few seconds it left his hand. He then placed both hands on top of the table, and his feet in plain sight of all of us. Then he asked the force to bring the slate back, and instantly it appeared from the opposite side of the table from where the Doctor was sitting, and came upon the table without any visible power. Now this table stood close to a window with the shade raised. There were lace curtains over the window end the slate came up between the lace curtains and the window, then through the opening in the lace curtains and onto the table, and anyone outside the window could have seen the slate as it came from under the table. I have seen this phenomenon four times.

Wednesday, April 9, we changed our place of living from Crescent avenue to the north part of this city, and the Doctor told me to lock his trunk, which I did, and in less than thirty minutes from the time we arrived in our new quarters, he placed his left hand on the lock of his trunk and I placed my hand on his shoulder, and in less than one-half minute the trunk was unlocked once more without any key, but the Doctor being in a paralyzed condition he is very weak, therefore after these wonderful phenomena he is very much exhausted and it takes him several hours to get his strength back, but it shows that the same power is still with him that he has had all through his life.

There is not a day but some manifestation takes place, and some other time I will write some more as I keep a record of all phenomena that occurs with us. JUD JOHNSON.

1852 - GOLDEN JUBILEE - 1902

Of the First Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia, Pa., May 11, 12, 13, 14, 1902.

All local and State Associations are cordially invited to send representatives or greetings to the oldest association of Spiritualists in the world, on the occasion of the celebration of its Fiftieth Anniversary, Golden Jubilee, May 11, 12, 13 and 14, at the Temple, 12th and Thompson sts., Philadelphia, Pa. As this association has held continuous meetings for half a century and as nearly all the prominent speakers and mediums in the world have at some time ministered to the society in the past years, it is fitting that they should be represented on this occasion. All are cordially invited to send letters of greeting to the officers of the society, who will be pleased to welcome the same.

NEW EDITION

THE LYCEUM GUIDE

BY EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

Do you want to organize a society for the social, intellectual and spiritual advancement of the children and adults?

THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM

furnishes all you desire.

Do you want a self-sustaining society, founded on the basic principles of the spiritual philosophy? You have it in "THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM."
It furnishes a system of evolution by internal growth; not the old cup and pitcher Sunday-school.
It has something to interest and advance every member, and those who are most active in teaching are the ones who learn most.

NO SPECIAL INSTRUCTOR REQUIRED.

THE LYCEUM GUIDE gives every detail needed for effective organization, and for conducting the society when established.
It has Golden Chain Recitations; the prettiest songs and music; choral responses; a service for a Band of Mercy; calisthenics; how to make the badges, flags and banners; marching exercises; full instructions in conducting the exercises, with parliamentary rules, etc.
Many Spiritualists living in isolation, have formed lyceums in their own families; others have banded, two or three families together, while large societies have organized on the lyceum platform, and found great interest in this self-instructive method.
Do not wait for a "missionary" to come to your assistance, but take hold of the matter yourself, procure copies of the GUIDE, and commence with the few or many you find interested.
Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle (address, Berlin Heights, Ohio) will answer all questions pertaining to lyceum work.
The price of THE LYCEUM GUIDE is 50 cents, postpaid, or by the dozen, 40 cents each, by express, charges paid by receiver. Address

Father Tom and the Pope,

Or a Night at the Vatican.

Written probably by Sir Samuel Ferguson. From Blackwood's Edinburg Magazine. This is a humorous account of a rollicksome visit to the Pope of Rome by Father Tom, an Irish priest, armed with a superabundance of Irish wit, two imperial quart bottles of Irish "putteen," and an Irish recipe for "conwounding" the same. "What's that?" says the Pope. "Put in the sperits first," says his Riv'rence; "and then put in the sugar; and remember, every dhrop of wather you put in after that, spoils the punch." "Glory be to God," says the Pope, not minding a word Father Tom was saying. "Glory be to God!" says he, smacking his lips, "I never known what dhrink was afore," says he. "It bates the Lachymatichrystal out ov the face," says he—"it's Nectar itself, if is, so it is!" says he, wiping his epistolical mouth wid the cuff of his coat. Paper, 25cts.; cloth, 50 cents. QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE,

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Elsie Hornbeck: Q. From the beginning of known time on earth to the present, there has been 5,905 years; why not count in that manner or M. S. 54, instead of from the advent of Christ, this being just to all—Jews, Gentiles, Christians and Infidels?

A. If chronology could be really established as firmly as it appears to be in the mind of this correspondent—and we may add in that of the preachers—the propriety of a direct count from the creation, instead of the awkward reckoning of after and before Christ, would be advisable. As it is, the chronology of the Bible is as unreliable as that of the Chinese. Both reach back into the age of mythology, and only the order of events can be satisfactorily known.

The Roman world counted time from the foundation of the city of Rome, and not until the seventh century did the Christians begin to count time from the advent of Christ, the date of which event was then entirely unknown and indeterminable.

To change the present method of counting time would be confusing, and without adequate return. For the present method, we simply follow the custom of our time, without making any admission. As for beginning a new era, as intimated by "M. S. 54," that is from the advent of Modern Spiritualism, it has no advantages, and we might as well start with the birth of Darwin, or Galileo, Bruno or any of the leaders in scientific thought.

The Freethinkers begin with the Era of Man and date their publications therefrom, but beyond their circle it has not been received. If the Methodists would count time from Wesley, the Lutherans from Luther, the Presbyterians from Calvin, the Disciples from Campbell, it might minister to the pride and bigotry of each, but would not supplant the received method which has become inseparably wrought into history.

W. H. Tucker: Q. We have a very strange case of mediumship in this city of a man about 50 or 55 years of age. He never has sat in a circle for development and yet he is able to converse with spirits as he passes along the street and is frequently controlled to write. At times he says he is controlled by a spirit that he was formerly well acquainted with, who at times uses very insulting and objectionable language. He wishes to escape from this control. How can he do so?

John H. Sharpe: Q. My wife has received messages from our spirit friends which have been very consoling, but now whenever she sits, and the message is half-finished, another comes in and writes nonsense and will not go away. This spirit we knew when in earth-life. His name was Smith, and he was killed by his brother about 12 years ago. It is such annoyance, we would do anything to free ourselves from this influence.

A. Constantly are questions like these asked: What are we to do to rid ourselves of these undesirable communicants? What are we to do with Smith, who unbidden comes? One answer is for all: To control such influences you must control yourself. Inharmony cannot come when there is harmony.

If this spirit when in the earth life should have come to this acquaintance, he would have been received and entertained. His language would have been overlooked, because it was the rough exterior of a really kind and generous mind. Why should he now be met with rebuff?

Meet him kindly, ascertain what he desires, and assist him to rise out of his present sphere of earthly longings. Remember that antagonism begets antagonism, and opens wide the door for the entrance of such influences; while a loving sympathetic frame of mind receives only that which is like itself. However sensitive a medium may be, he can by the assertion of his selfhood always remain superior to the controlling power, and choose the influences which he receives.

T. D. Woolsey: Q. Is it possible for a spirit to speak in an audible voice without material organs of speech? Some three several times it has occurred to me, of which I will mention but one. A few years since I was living in the suburbs of a small city and on my way home from a Fourth of July celebration, while passing through a vacant lot, a clear plain voice said: "You will never see another Fourth of July in this city." This was very foreign to my mind, as I expected to stay there during life. But it proved true, as did also the others.

A. It is possible for a spirit to speak in an audible voice, without the use of a human organism for a medium, but this case does not require this method of explanation; it is a case of pure clairaudience, or hearing by the spirit senses. Where several are present and a voice is heard by all; it must be taken as an independent voice, the spirit by certain means having produced sound vibrations in the physical atmosphere. But where only one in a company hears a sound, it shows its subjective nature; that is, it is an impression received by that one, which the others are not in condition to receive. When the recipient is alone where he hears a voice, he has no means of testing the manifestation by the observation of others. It may then be either objective or subjective, and he has no ready means of determining.

But in most such cases, the impression strikes the mind with such force, that it is mistaken for a voice. It is real spirit-hearing: a spirit in the flesh hearing the thoughts of another spirit out of the mortal garb, or possibly also within, for the voices of living persons have been heard by those susceptible, thousands of miles away, as has been recorded.

This faculty is of exceeding value, and should be cultivated as a rare possession by those having it.

K. Hougen: Q. (1) How can Spiritualists advocate the books of Col. Ingersoll?

(2) Does the use of tobacco unfit for mediumship and sitting in home circle?

A. (1) Spiritualists advocate the ideas of Ingersoll so far as they are true. His repudiation of old theological dogmas is acceptable to Spiritualists, for they do the same. He does not deny the possibility of a future existence—he does not know. He nowhere attacks that belief. As a generous, outspoken champion of free thought, Spiritualists accept him as they do Mohammed, Darwin, and all others, for whatever of truth they may express.

(2) The use of tobacco is not commendable on any grounds, as it is depletive of vital force, uncleanly and offensive to many. Yet some excellent mediums have used it to excess. While it may not "unfit" for the home circle, if its use disgusts the members it will be a means of discord, and the medium desiring the best results should discontinue its use.

Amelia Hazel: Q. Can a medium be controlled by a spirit to speak a language he does not understand? Does the medium thus controlled speak in the voice of the spirit? Is it possible for a spirit to control a medium who has little knowledge of music, to play?

A. It is possible for a medium to be controlled and speak in a language he does not understand, and it is possible for a spirit to control a medium ignorant of music to play intricate passages, as instance Blind Tom, the almost idiotic negro, who executes the most difficult compositions, and the performance of many mediums. But it is the most difficult of the two methods of control.

The usual course is by impressibility, and the thought is conveyed and not the words. Hence the thought is reproduced in the mind of the medium in his own language, and more or less in his own peculiar expression. If he is ignorant or talks in dialect, the communication will partake of his characteristics. To overcome this a superior degree of control must be gained, whereby the subject becomes an instrument, directly used. Hypnotists now and then find a subject, one in hundreds or thousands, who in the hypnotic state is able to read the thoughts of the operator, or may be willed to perform any given act. In the same way spirit control may find a medium whom they can thus perfectly control, as a machine, and are able to speak through him, as though his organs of speech were their own, or to use his hands in musical performances.

Will Continue to Speak.

One of the world's greatest preachers has "passed away," says Willis E. Edson, his biographer, speaking of Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, "having devoted his life and wonderful talents to the pointing of others to the way of eternal life, has at last himself stepped over into the larger, fuller life of God's eternal day.

"The influence on the lives of the thousands who heard and read his sermons will continue and Talmage, the great preacher, though dead, will continue to speak." Amen!

I am glad to read this public avowal, that Dr. Talmage is not exactly "dead," but only "passed away," and "though dead will continue to speak." Rather paradoxical!

If he does so, I hope The Progressive Thinker will secure his sermons and give them to the world. Of course, there will be much improvement in his sermons. Will he continue to "paint hell as a reality," and "make his hearers believe that when the Bible talked about hell, it meant exactly what it said?"

There will be great interest to hear from Dr. Talmage, who "will continue to speak," says his friend. If William McKinley can communicate to the world, why not the wordy Dr. Talmage? If the various Christian churches have not money and influence enough to open up communication with the "spirit world," it will be a sort of endorsement of M. E. Bishop Foster, when he says: "We do not yet know that death does not end all."

Again, I say, let us hear from the immortal Talmage.

MORRIS PRATT INSTITUTE,

And the Michigan Mediums' Home.

To the Editor:—The writer has been reading with a good deal of interest lately the various articles pro and con in your columns on these subjects, and he feels deeply impressed to say a few words on these topics and upon one or two others in the course of this letter. As a worker in the field in a variety of positions during the past sixteen years, and as the son of one of the arisen pioneers of the cause, the writer feels that he has a right to put in a word at this juncture.

Many of our friends seem to feel that the ordinary schools or no schools at all are good enough for our young workers, and that we should depend altogether on the "dear spirits" for our knowledge and support. Frankly and perhaps brutally the writer considers this as the most infernal "tommy-rot" that the world of Spiritualism has ever been cursed with. It is this very idiotic giving-up of the individuality of our psychics to the domination of anything and everything that came along and purported to be a spirit from the higher realms, and the swallowing without rhyme or reason of the alleged communications from the other side, that has brought our cause into disrepute among the people, and has caused our societies to lose the bequests that have been willed to them by the friends of the truth. When we cease giving such exhibitions of asinine credulity as the recent spirit marriages in Detroit, and a number of other places that the writer calls to mind at the present time, among others a case that occurred a few years ago in the city of Boston, in which the poor heart-broken victim was ruined and her reason wellnigh destroyed, then there will be more likelihood of our wills standing the test of the courts.

The writer knows what he is talking about when he speaks of the Boston gang, as it was one of their hellish fakes that sent him into the retirement of the Methodist church for a few years, and spoilt his life for the time being. He has never forgiven the fraud that was endeavored to be perpetrated on him at that time, and the frauds and fakirs may always be assured that they will find in him an uncompromising enemy, not of the individuals if they give up their nefarious calling, but of the tricks and vile practices that they endeavor to lead others into.

We need such institutions as the Morris Pratt Institute to educate our young people so that they can come before the public and do themselves and the cause credit. If they have the natural powers of psychic impressibility those powers will be all the better for a good common sense education in the rules of grammar and logic and in the use of their own natural abilities.

Right here the writer wants to say that it has been his experience that no psychic has ever yet risen in their inspiration above the natural ability that they themselves possessed. They may have gone beyond the technical knowledge and instructions that they had received, but they never yet rose above the natural capacity of their individuality to have acquired and put to use the information and philosophy they gave out under the inspiration or suggestion of the unseen forces that used them as the instrument. Because it stands to reason that the instrument must be capable of responding to certain vibrations or it cannot give them out.

What the cause needs is workers who are willing to acknowledge this fact and so train their natural abilities that they increase and intensify the powers they already possess. No carpenter or machinist ever attempts to do a fine piece of work with dull and imperfect tools, and so with the psychic operators. They cannot work to advantage with poor instruments, and if it is Denton, or Buchanan, or any of our arisen workers who are manifesting to us, we are not going to look for their manifestation through those whose every vibration, mentally, spiritually and physically is a direct contradiction of everything in the nature of the supposed spirit controlling.

By all means let us have the Institute, and the writer does not know of any better teachers to open the Institute than those who have been chosen. If we had more men and women like them the cause would be far better off than it is. Practical education is what our workers need. Not the rot of the oriental faddists and hifalutin illuminati, but the plain everyday logic and reason of the Spiritual philosophy, backed up by a thorough practical training in the correct use of terms and the correct use of the common English tongue. The world does not need such an overly large amount of the so-called classical training, but it does want good, choice, clean expression of thought, presented in a dignified way, and yet not so stilted and ponderous that not even the author or speaker can explain its meaning without the dictionary, after it is cold.

In regard to the Michigan Home, if the writer has correctly understood the reports of officers and trustees of the fund at the last two meetings of the Michigan State Association, that fund is tied up so that it cannot be used except for a home and headquarters at Lansing. As Father Goff is the donor of the principal if not the entire amount of that fund, and has made it dependent on the location, it seems to me that instead of blaming the officers of the Michigan Association for not rushing to give away money that was donated to them for a distinct and definite purpose, the wiser idea would be to get Father Goff to permit the use of this money for the Home at Reed City, although I have grave doubts of the wisdom of locating such a home at that place. We need such homes and it seems to me that some harmonious conclusion can be arrived at. While I do not like the location at Reed City, yet there is this to say in its favor, it is already built and in good hands, and has been given, and thus saves the expense of buying and building to a certain degree.

I know that the officers of the Michigan State Association wish to do the right thing in the matter, but I do say that some of the attacks that have been made on them and their motives have been outrageous and entirely uncalled for. As a delegate from one of the local societies, I worked for the election of the present board, believing that they were the best that we could get at that time, and that they would give the local workers of their own State a chance to be heard on occasion and not burden the State Association with a deficit caused by the importation of workers from abroad who could not reach the hearts of the masses. So far as I have heard from the State since I left on my Western trip, those officers have done good and faithful work. Their midwinter meeting was a financial success as I understand the reports, and it seems to me that there was no call for the sneer in the editorial columns of one of our papers at the quality and value of the phenomena presented at that meeting, in view of the character of the instruments and the class of phenomena that are sometimes engaged at the meetings held under the control of the organization, of which that paper is commonly accredited as being the official organ, and who have at times received its editorial endorsement. Why make fish of one and fowl of the other?

The writer has heard rumors of this and that, and has listened patiently to the cursing and damning of mediums by the president of a society in the State of Michigan, which society has refused to affiliate either with State or National, and that president a medium himself, but to judge by his conversation one would be led to believe that he was the only genuine "It" in the field, and that all others were only base imitations. With all due respect to the brother, who at heart, is a generous, well-intentioned person, we submit that hearsay is not evidence and that denunciation of a person is no evidence of their being frauds.

In what we have said about the character of the mediums and phenomena presented under the auspices of the N. S. A., and editorially endorsed by our papers, we are only speaking from the rumors that have come to us from time to time. We have personally met many of these and have found them far different from what they had been represented to us by some people, and so we have learned this lesson, that the only test of the truth of the phenomena or person is your own personal experience with them, but if one person or set of persons are to be ostracised because someone with an axe to grind has denounced them and presented hearsay evidence, why not condemn them all alike and not make fish of one and fowl of the other? Why not say something about the frauds and infernal vampires both male and female who come to the mediums and want them to use their powers to cater to their unholy lusts and appetites? Why lay it all on the poor devil of a medium? There are as many infernal liars and frauds among those who come to the mediums for sittings, as there are among the mediums, and the mediums deserve as much if not more protection from these vampires, as the public does from the fraud medium. If you endeavor to do honest work and say "No satisfaction, no pay," they lie to you and sneak out of paying you for your time. If an error is made in a description of a person and the wrong name given, as sometimes happens, they will acknowledge that it is correct and thus open the door to a flood of error and deception, and then go out and lie about you afterwards. The writer has no more use for this class of fakirs than he has for the others.

Let us have the truth on both sides, and let the sensitive medium receive as much sympathy and protection from the fraud vampire sitters as there is given or sought to be given to the sitter from the fraud vampire medium. The writer has passed through the furnace on this point and knows what he is talking about, and that is some of the very reasons why he welcomes the advent of such a school as the Morris Pratt Institute, where our psychics may be taught among other things the laws of self-control as well as being the instruments of others.

The writer does not wish to be conceited or personal, but what he has today has been the result of a fiery discipline that he would that no other may have to pass through. Whether he has come through it without scars is for the people to judge, and not himself. Errors of judgment he has made, no doubt, promises he has made in enthusiastic hope, that he has not been able to fulfill, but who is there in all the world that has not? Let us be just, then, to both the sitter and the medium, and of the two we dare say that the mediums from the very nature of their sensitive organization stand in need of your kindest thoughts and of a decent recompense for the time spent in many cases in answering fool questions and trying to see if you are to have a gold mine or get another woman or man to live with than the one you now possess, or if you will be fortunate in this or that speculation or love affair.

We need homes for the workers, it is true, but if the people had been willing to listen in the first place to the warning words of the early workers in the field, and cut out the personal fads, and have united on scientific and harmonial lines, the workers would have been protected and recompensed from the start, so that there would have been no need of the efforts now being made to extort their just dues from those who have worn them out body and soul by their insensate demands for the supermarvelous, at any and all times, regardless of conditions.

The time has come for both people and the psychics to use their own common sense and judgment, and remember that it is of as much value to them in their life expression as the opinion or the alleged opinion of some old king or harlot of the ancient past, whom we would not have admitted into our homes when in the earth body.

HENRY H. WARNER.
Columbia Hotel, Denver, Col.

Detroit, Mich.

Marguerite St. Omer Briggs was again greeted by a large audience last Sunday evening to welcome her back to the Society of Spiritual Unity, after her visit to Battle Creek. After the reading of the poem, "The Land of the By and By," by Mrs. Ferris, her guides chose the title as a subject for the address, which was listened to with the closest attention, as she depicted the searchers, methods and means people used to reach that land, which has been the idea prevalent through the ages past; and how best to reach it was eloquently and very clearly illustrated; that true Spiritualism had opened the minds of the people by brushing away the cobwebs of the creeds of the past, and by love, truth and harmony here, we should be better prepared to enter in at the open gate of the land of the by and by. Many were seen to wipe away the falling tears during the address. I will mention one of the remarkable tests she gave, proving that the loved ones who had passed through the doors can and do return to us. To a gentleman she said: "I see an elderly lady stand by the side of you, and she shows me a legal document, you had something to do with drawing up, and she tells me it was not as she wished it, in one particular; she also says that when they burned her linen, etc., you burned the ashes of her dear one with them, but it has all been made right since." The gentleman said he did not clearly understand about the papers not being right, as it was the will he wrote for Mrs. Cleveland, who passed away last winter. "Yes, I know now," he said, "her watch she promised to a personal friend, but it was not given to her, and when the will was probated, the circumstance of the watch was mentioned, and the judge allowed it to go to the person it was promised to."

It is a pleasing sight to see the audience shake hands with her and thank her with loving words for such beautiful and comforting tests. One old gentleman said "That is the second time I heard the same address." I asked him when he heard it before. He replied: "Last night, in my dreams, I heard it." Can anyone explain how this man could hear the address in his dreams before its delivery, even though the subject was chosen? He was a stranger and never attended the meetings before. SCRIBE.

THE HOME CIRCLE.

An Account of Some Experiences.

To the Editor:—I read with interest in our Spiritualistic news circulator, The Progressive Thinker, the Home Circle column, and it is under this head that I desire to inform the readers of some home circle happenings from our city. I believe even now at this late day there are many spiritual philosophy believers that do not hesitate to voice their supposed knowledge that all materializing mediums are only pretenders, fakes and humbugs. It is those principally, whom I wish to reach with these lines, and show them that they are "off the track;" that there is something more to Spiritualism than mere philosophical theory.

Some two years ago a boy trumpet medium from Canton, Ohio, Mr. Meredith, was in our city and held a circle at the house of Mr. William Snyder, and during the evening one of the guides of Mr. Meredith informed Mr. Snyder that with a short development he could be made an excellent materializing medium. Mr. Snyder having no knowledge of Spiritualism whatever, and being somewhat skeptical, could hardly believe or place credence in this information. However, he determined to gratify the wishes of those unseen personalities, and give a short time for a few evenings, and await the consequences. And not long had he to wait, for the period was of short duration before he was placed in a trance condition in the cabinet, and hands materialized and lights were shown to his family who were the sitters. The improvement has been rapid since, and now while the materializing manifestations are somewhat different from the ordinary seance, some very remarkable phenomena are produced. I have been one of the developing circle, and I know whereof I speak.

Mr. Snyder has been, at his wish, placed under the strictest of test conditions, but his spirit help never falls. The Indian band of "Pontiac," "Black Leaf" and "Wolf," can now stay in the materialized form from five to fifteen minutes, in a light whereby they are plainly discernible. Mr. Jerry Stevens, Mr. Sommers and Mr. Snyder's son, Charley, are very valuable and entertaining help to aid the manifestations that prove to us that there is no death.

The cabinet chemist, Dr. Powell, is a wonder-worker in building up forms and in using the trumpet in giving us desired information.

Another beautiful phase of mediumship has also been brought about. Mrs. G. M. Stanley, also one of the developing circle, is near the beginning of the seance placed under control, ordinarily by Black Leaf, and remains in the trance condition until nearly the close, when she is brought out by "Toulu," her guide. During this interval she has what is termed "soul flight," and visits the spirit world with Toulu or some other near relative in spirit. Upon her return to consciousness she, by her recollections is enabled to tell us of her experiences while there, and this in itself is very entertaining, and satisfies a longing for knowledge of the life to come.

At some future time I desire to inform the readers regarding Mrs. Stanley's varied experiences while in spirit, and also give a more detailed description of some of the manifestations given through the mediumship of Mr. Snyder, who is by trade a blacksmith and follows that vocation for a livelihood, detesting the idea of making a charge to those who have been witnesses of his spiritual gifts.

Is materialization true? If I am blessed with any knowledge whatever, I can say by the aid of that knowledge I know it is true. A. S. WELLS.

CHANGE OUR GOD.

There is little for the many and a plenty for the few,
And starvation for the idler while there's lots of work to do,
And there must be "hens of plenty" in the hen-coops of the rich,
That are laying golden treasure by the millions in their niche.

There are thousands at the mercy of each multi-millionaire,
Who must work for lowest prices or must live on faith and air;
There are thousands trampled under that great foot of shining gold
And as many dying daily from the hunger and the cold.

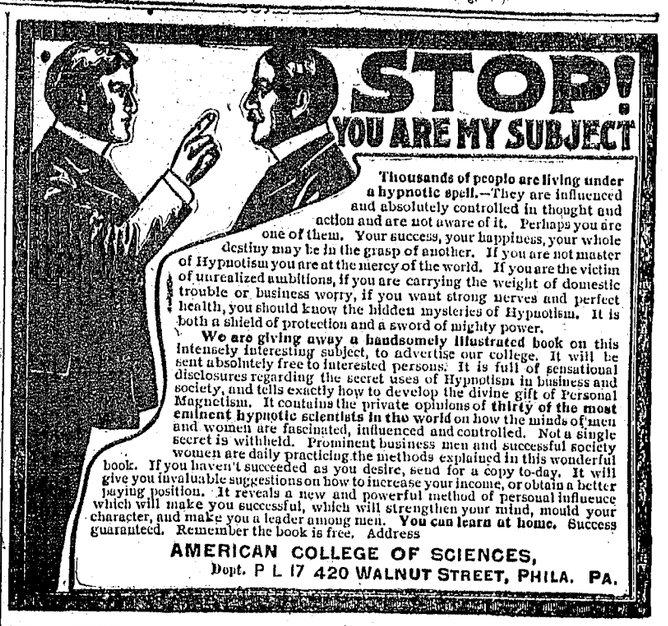
Now, I wonder if the Father whom I hear so much about—
As the God who hears the whisper full as plainly as the shout—
Can forgive himself for letting fall the good things to a class,
And then hearing not the crying of the poor, down-trodden mass?

Then 'tis time to think a little of the changing of our God
When He stoops to deal injustice with a cold and cruel rod.
If the Christian God and Savior has so far forgot the right,
We had better choose a ruler that will treat us more polite.

We had better get a Savior that will save our wicked God
From the laws of His own making, with their Christian creedal prod;
We had better coax Abe Lincoln from his bright and shining shore,
For we know that he is honest, true and loving to the core.

I do not sanction grumbling when the wind against me blows,
And I don't believe in whimp'ring or in whining thro' the nose,
But if this old God don't suit us after trying him for years,
We should rise and get another that is just as he appears.

We have had some honest rulers; men who served us; men we tried;
Men who went through all temptations and came out with honest pride;
Men who showed some kindly feeling for the masses in distress,
And we need their blessed counsel from their home of happiness.



We should get another ruler, or let Nature rule alone,
For the people and religion God and Bibles have outgrown,
And the musty, foggy notions are the millstones on the necks
Of the preachers who invented and then perished in the wrecks.

STOP! YOU ARE MY SUBJECT

Thousands of people are living under a hypnotic spell.—They are influenced and absolutely controlled in thought and action and are not aware of it. Perhaps you are one of them. Your success, your happiness, your whole destiny may be in the grasp of another. If you are not master of Hypnotism you are at the mercy of the world. If you are the victim of unrealized ambitions, if you are carrying the weight of domestic trouble or business worry, if you want strong nerves and perfect health, you should know the hidden mysteries of Hypnotism. It is both a shield of protection and a sword of mighty power.

We are giving away a handsomely illustrated book on this intensely interesting subject, to advertise our college. It will be sent absolutely free to interested persons. It is full of sensational disclosures regarding the secret uses of Hypnotism in business and society, and tells exactly how to develop the divine gift of Personal Magnetism. It contains the private opinions of thirty of the most eminent hypnotic scientists in the world on how the minds of men and women are fascinated, influenced and controlled. Not a single secret is withheld. Prominent business men and successful society women are daily practicing the methods explained in this wonderful book. If you haven't succeeded as you desire, send for a copy to-day. It will give you invaluable suggestions on how to increase your income, or obtain a better paying position. It reveals a new and powerful method of personal influence which will make you successful, which will strengthen your mind, mould your character, and make you a leader among men. You can learn at home. Success guaranteed. Remember the book is free. Address

A Sequel to "Rending the Vail."

The two volumes together as a record of practically obtained facts demonstrating the claims of Modern Spiritualism as to post mortal survival, are unique and overwhelming.

Every communication is from a full materialized spirit form, in good light, and either spoken audibly or written in full view by the form. There is not an automatic or trance message in the book.

It is illustrated by several engravings, the originals of which were drawn in the presence of the circle by a full form materialized spirit artist.

BEYOND THE VAIL is, as a rule, the experiences of spirits in both worlds—their own account of their lives on earth and their progress after death to their present condition of freedom from earth conditions. The narratives are intensely interesting, instructive and often highly dramatic.

Coincident with these are the profoundly philosophical comments of the controlling spirits of the seances. Prof. William Denton, Thomas Paine, Dr. W. H. Reed and others—covering law, medicine, jurisprudence, theology and metaphysics. There are no books in existence of like character or of higher authority. Price, by mail, $1.75.

THE BEAUTIFUL SOUVENIR VOLUME,

By A. LEAH UNDERHILL,
(Of the Fox Family.)

The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism.

Thirty-three chapters, 477 pages, superbly printed, and bound in colors and gold, 15 illustrations, 5 steel engraved portraits of the celebrated Fox Family, a full page engraving of the old house at Hydesville, which to this day, by the act of its wealthy and respected owner, Artemas Hyde, Esq., bears the inscription, "Here Spiritualism Originated in 1848."

A complete history of the Initiation of the movement known as Modern Spiritualism, from the epochal period which dates from March 31, 1848. Since that day, starting from a small country village in western New York, Spiritualism has made its way against tremendous obstacles around the civilized globe.

Only a limited number of copies of this rare book, now out of print, are to be had, and these can be obtained only at this office. Those who remit at once will receive a copy, post paid, at the GREATLY REDUCED PRICE OF $1.

Note.—By failure in 1885 to complete contract with the author, a large portion of the edition was left unbound, and so remained for a number of years, when they were rescued and bound at additional cost, hence this valuable contribution to the cause of Spiritualism was not properly presented to the Spiritualistic public, and a host of investigators have not had the opportunity of securing a copy until the present time. Do not fail to send for a copy at once. J. R. FRANCIS.

"THE UNKNOWN"

—BY—

CAMILLE FLAMMARION.

"The Unknown" created a marked sensation in France when first published and can scarcely fail to arouse the greatest interest in this country. It is an eminent scientist's study of the phenomena of the spirit world. In touching upon the various physical manifestations the author cites many absolutely authenticated instances, and chapters of his book are as weirdly fascinating as the most fantastic of Poe's tales. It treats on incredulity, credulity, hallucinations, psychic action of one mind upon another, transmission of thought, suggestion, the world of dreams, cerebral physiology, psychic dreams, distinct sight in dreams, actual facts, premonitory dreams and divination of the future, etc. 487 pages, cloth bound. Price $2.00.

The Noted Chronist,
Is Now Located at

No. 1087 Boylston street, Boston, Mass., where he will be pleased to meet all who may call between the hours of 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. The wonderful work in healing the sick that Dr. Watkins is accomplishing is indeed most astounding; his patients live to testify to his wonderful powers as a healer. For the last year his work has been most wonderful. He says himself that his cures this year have been more than ever before in numbers, as he confined himself to only 30 new patients a month. Dr. Watkins attends personally to each case, and therefore he can do better work than if he had a great many assistants; no staff of visible helpers are in his office to annoy and suggest this and that. He knows what is the trouble with each patient, and knows the right specific to give. He prepares and puts up all of his medicine, and has no help in his medical treatments that is visible help. Write him to-day, and by return mail you will receive the diagnose. No charge made for diagnosing your case. Send age, sex and leading symptom.

? ARE YOU SICK ?

—IF SO—

Does Your Doctor Understand Your Case?

Are You Getting Better?

If you are not getting better write today to DR. C. E. WATKINS, Boston, Mass., and write him just your condition financially, and he will make his price for treatment within your reach. He is treating a great many cases free; others he charges a light fee.

He makes no charge whatever for Diagnosis.

If You Are Sick

Why not write him today, and no matter who has failed to help you, to consult him COSTS NOTHING.

Try DR. WATKINS.

Let him diagnose your case, and then it will help you to decide who knows best what is the matter with you. Send all letters to 1087 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.

POINTS OF THOUGHT.

The New Thought and the Broad Thought.

The New Thought and the Broad Thought. The New Thought is quite old for a new thing, having existed in India, in its fundamental principles, many thousand years ago. In this age of restless activity, when the people become careworn and nervously exhausted from rubbing against this material world of ours, the New Thought comes with many blessings in its train, teaching people the potency of mind and introducing a new peace of soul among desponding thousands by introducing a more spiritual perception of things. But like all good things in this human life, extremes are apt to creep in. The apostles of this creed have concluded that all power lies in mental forces, there being no such thing as the cure of disease, for instance, aside from the action of the mind. And yet the mind itself must have a material brain, and not a force or phenomenon in the whole known world ever takes place without the working of matter as well as spirit. If such is the case in the known world, it must be the same thing in the invisible or unknown world, for a part is like the whole, unity of law forever ruling in every conceivable realm of being.

The Broad Thought accepts every beautiful and true thing in the New Thought, and uses the infinite storehouse of nature besides, including water, air, light, electricity, massage, exercise, food and food-medicines. The Broad Thought while advocating suggestion, mental control, psychic influence, a loving and harmonious nature, and spiritual aspirations, makes thousands of wonderful cures differing from these in connection with the great world around us. Infants, animals, and many human beings aside from all suggestions, imaginations or other forms of mental forces, may be cured in a remarkable way by agencies in which the material side of force is more prominent than the spiritual. Physiomentalism, the union of spirit and matter, then, is a far more correct word than Metaphysics, which latter presumes to go beyond nature, and hence finds itself in a realm of bottomless mysteries.

It is often said that Brahmins are principally interested in the contemplation of Brahm or God, and care but little for the practical upbuilding of the people, which deficiencies the Buddhists are supposed to remedy. A closer acquaintance with them has convinced me that they have many grand souls in their midst, whose self-denying efforts for their fellows would sometimes shame the religion of our kind of Christianity. It may be interesting to quote from the letter of K. S. Ayyengar, who calls himself a "sunlight doctor" of Kurnool, India. He has been working there for years, building up the suffering people wholly without charge. A portion of his letter is as follows:

"Kurnool, Feb. 20, 1902.

"To E. D. Babbitt, M. D.—Respected Sir:—Though I have wanted to write to you every day for the last five years, what prevented me from doing so, I cannot say. I am a Brahmin, aged 38. I passed my matriculation examination in 1881. I have been a schoolmaster for over fifteen years. I was allowed to teach high school classes by the government in 1880. I edited a journal called 'The Schoolmaster,' so late as 1886 when Madras was quite ignorant of good teaching....About five years ago I met with some of your books and began to treat diseases accordingly. I could not get proper measurement for a funnel (disk.) After some time I made one according to directions in your Principles of Light and Color. People used to laugh at me when I began this work. I stood all such ridicule. When I began to show some results, orthodox physicians spoke against me and would not allow cases to come to me. I then began to read general books, discussing the methods of these orthodox men, and used to defy their medicines and their treatment. I then opened a big hospital with some ten funnels and boxes and entertained patients gratis as usual. When some cases incurable under other methods, were cured by me, the neighboring doctors could not but accept the superiority of sunlight treatment. If I had cared for money, I would not have been able to record so many cures, or give good publicity to the treatment. Sacrificing one's individual convenience is nothing when compared to the benefit accruing to the public. With a tin funnel, I cured more than 600 cases during a year, and in Kurnool where I am camped now, I have cured more than 100 cases in October alone. After staying in a place for a month, people join me and surgeons also say: 'It is a good treatment.' Though I think I am not yet up to the mark, I am able to get on with the surgeons of the place. I have read all of your books. A doctor who uses natural remedies is not in need of so many details. Mrs. Noble when she was in Madras, advised me to get your diploma. I think I should do so, but cannot get the amount as I am never in the habit of taking any remuneration.

"Officials and rich men have asked me to start some dispensaries here. You being my guru (spiritual teacher), I think I should consult you about it. The gentleman who has consented to advance me money ($72) is worth some lacs (several hundred thousand rupees). I have cured cases of apoplexy, enlargement of spleen and liver, etc., in his family. I therefore leave to you the allowance of discount. I am here your servant, to do as you bid me, and I am bound to you in the bond of truth."

The dear man sent for 80 chrome lenses or bottle lenses as he expressively calls them. I have sent him the lenses together with some other instruments, books, etc., and paid freight on them to his home.

Brahminism, though one of the oldest religions of the world, dating far beyond the Mosaic system, does not propose to go to sleep and let the world slide by it. It must yet modify its ideas of caste and its treatment of woman. Asiatic peoples have not yet learned that woman when perfected is the more beautiful and lovely side of humanity. But Brahmins are usually more devoloped psychically and in the appreciation of sunlight and other refined natural forces, than our own people. During this last year a club of eminent scholars, lawyers and judges, of Southern India, all of whom I believe were Brahmins, sent an invitation to myself to make them a visit and give them lectures and practical demonstrations of the solar and other new methods of cure, offering to pay all expenses. Not being able to go myself, I recommended one of our able and experienced graduates, Dr. Emily Noble. They accepted of her and made up a purse of nearly $800 for expenses. She championed the cause there, lectured, corresponded with the papers, converted some of the doctors and used some of the sun healing instruments with fine effect, even when the perspiration was streaming down her whole system in that burning climate. The brave little woman is now healing and lecturing in Boston, but purposes getting back to California where our beautiful climate may atone for what she suffered in India.

I have received "A Biography of James M. Peebles, M. D., A. M., by Edward Whipple." This is a massive volume of about 600 pages, sold as I learn at a very low figure. It is full of gems of oratory and wit and racy items culled from the whole life of Dr. Peebles. It has so much that is ennobling and so much that is instructive that I trust that both young and old will read this work. While it has very much about the well-rounded and superior character of the Doctor, it also shows up some of his shortcomings. The following is very amusing:

"During one of his speeches in Decatur, Mich., he ascended to a pitch of defiant eloquence, and then thundered down upon his hearers after this style: 'Let no man who swears come within four feet of me; six feet, who chews tobacco; ten feet, who drinks whisky—breaths of such like Lazarus' dead body stink.' After this explosion he cooled down a little and touched the kinder sympathies of his auditors. In the rear of the house sat a dignified ex-judge, somewhat 'over the bay,' amusing himself at the orator's somersets. Rising, he deliberately came toward the desk, commented upon the eloquence of the speaker just seated, and suggested that he be paid for his services. 'As no man can travel and work without money, I propose to make him a donation.' Putting his huge hand into his pocket, he drew out a half-eagle, and stepped back from the desk just four feet, saying, 'I sometimes swear.' Then he stepped back six feet, 'I chew tobacco,' then ten feet, 'I drink whisky;' and at that distance held out his long arm toward Mr. Peebles, looking him complacently in the eye, squealing out, 'Here is a half-eagle, sir!' and then quietly put it into his pocket. There was no chance for a retort; the house was in a perfect uproar, his own laughter as loud as the rest; and when still again, he dignifiedly thanked the judge for his 'generous donation'—a gentleman whom he would never forget. And he never did. The severe joke taught him not to defy men by measures, but to take them by the hand and hold upon their hearts till they twain shall be one spirit."

Dr. Peebles' work on Vaccination presents an overwhelming array of facts against the whole delusion. It can be shown that the whole system of vaccination is founded on a lack of real science, in spite of the fact that it lessens the spread of the disease temporarily in some cases. People's systems can become impure enough without filling them with rottenness. The fearful effect of antitoxin for the cure of diphtheria has been demonstrated lately. The eminent late Dr. Garth Wilkinson, of England, estimated that 90,000 lives had been destroyed within forty years by vaccination for small-pox.

A beautiful home and sanitarium has been established at 874 South 15th street, Newark, N. J., by Mrs. Susan F. Martin, M. D., D. M., and J. D. Davis. They will promulgate and exemplify by lectures and practical healing, the new and grander methods of cure by sunlight and other refined and spiritual forces. All over the world there is a movement in this direction and the people will soon have a far better understanding of the philosophy of life.

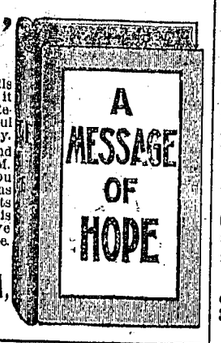
HEALTH RESTORED



The entire country is astonished at the wonderful cures perfected through the method originated by Dr. J. M. Peebles, the Grand Old Man of Battle Creek, Mich. This science is a subtle force in nature combined with magnetic medicines, and called by the eminent doctor,

Psychic Science

It has been termed the greatest pain reliever ever known. In a perfectly natural manner it builds up the system and restores health. It makes no difference how serious or hopeless the case may seem, there is positive hope in this grand science. It has restored the deaf, blind and lame, cured the paralytic, and those suffering from Bright's Disease, Consumption, Stomach Trouble, Catarrh, Nervous Debility, Neuralgia, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Female Troubles, as well as men and women addicted to the liquor, morphine and other vile habits.

Geo. H. Weeks, of Cleveland, Ohio, sends heartfelt thanks for restoration to health after suffering from nervous prostration and insomnia for years; he says he now enjoys health and restful sleep every night. Mrs. J. A. Rust, of Itasca, Minn., cured of uric acid poisoning in two month's treatment writes: "I am better than in years, and each day brings new health and strength. I will refer all ailing ones to you." Mary A. Earl, Crawford, Mich., suffering from pronounced female difficulties and kidney disease, says: "I took your treatment three months and it has been a success in my case. I am indeed grateful to you for my recovery." C. E. Davis, Woodman, N. H., who suffered all the miseries of a dyspeptic, writes that as the result of Dr. Peebles' treatment, he had not missed a meal since last March. D. W. Bridgman, of Del Norte, Col., writing Sept. 30, after three months' course. "When I began treatment with Dr. Peebles' Institute of Health I was a cripple, unable to walk but little with a cane. Now I am able to walk with ease. Some days ten or fifteen miles. My general health is excellent. I can hardly find words to express my gratitude, as previously I had tried everything I could hear of and got no relief. Mrs. Isaac Varney, Dover, N. H., a sufferer of spinal trouble and nerve exhaustion, writes that she would not go back to the state of health she was in before taking this treatment for all the world. Solomon Fried, of Vanderbilt, California, cured of neuralgia and catarrh, says: "I am well and a thousand times obliged to you."

"A Message of Hope"

Written by Dr. J. M. Peebles, in a plain and concise manner, tells you exactly how and where you can gain perfect health; in fact, it gives you the key to the greatest knowledge known to man. Remember, this book costs you nothing, and it reveals wonderful secrets and makes the impossibilities of yesterday realities of to-day.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, from Oakland, Cal., April 22, Dr. Elizabeth H. Johnson, aged 65 years. Appropriate funeral ceremonies were conducted by Mrs. R. S. Lillie, assisted by Mr. Lillie, with beautiful vocal selections, and remarks by Will C. Hodge, an old-time friend of the family. The physical tenement, amid a profusion of flowers, was laid to rest in beautiful Mountain View Cemetery. WILL C. HODGE.

John L. Bachelder, aged 73 years, passed through the change called death, April 1. He was a staunch and ardent Spiritualist, and a warm admirer and old-time subscriber of The Progressive Thinker. He was a man who took great pleasure in defending the principles he endorsed. He leaves a loving helpmee and worker, and two sons to rejoin him in "the sweet bye-and-bye."

A. G. W.

Passed to spirit life, from Delphi, Ind., April 24, 1902, Mrs. Sarah A. Peffley, aged 72 years. She was a kind, sympathizing friend, a devoted mother and companion, and has enjoyed the comforts of our beautiful philosophy for thirty years. While the friends were taking the last farewell look Mrs. India Hill, the speaker, saw her standing by the casket with a kind look of satisfaction. Then late in the evening she reported through the mediumship of Mrs. Hill that all had went well, that she had met those dear ones she had expected to; then with words of good cheer and grateful thanks to those who so kindly ministered to her wants, she passed on to her new home. J. P.

Passed to spirit life in Philadelphia, Pa., April 21, 1902, Margaret Mary Harding, aged 28. Miss Harding was brought up a Catholic, but abandoned that faith when the light of Spiritualism dawned upon her, and although only one of her family (a brother) shared her views, she spent all of her time that she could spare from other duties in the development of her mediumship. Her Catholic friends, stepmother, half-brothers and sisters, were frantic in their grief for "the poor girl;" not so the own brother who looked calmly upon her sleeping face, beautiful in death, and knew she was not far away. Her funeral was held at the residence of two sisters with whom she had made her home for some time, and in her passing away feel that one of the family will be sadly missed. The writer officiated at the funeral.

C. E. S. TWING.

Passed to spirit life, April 12, at Augusta, Mich., Mrs. Medora S. Emmons. She was a true mother and a faithful companion, and seldom has the Angel of Life reaped a lovelier soul. Into the presence of her dreamy sleep, friends came and went, and laid about her the thoughts more precious than the flowers of their sympathy. And thus shall she live a new life with those she loved, and who in turn crown her with the bright radiance of her own deeds. Words of comfort spoken by the writer.

MARIAN CARPENTER.

Passed to spirit life, April 5, 1902, at Port Huron Mich., Miles O. Parker, aged 19 years, after a lingering illness of typhoid fever. He was a true Spiritualist, and found comfort in its beautiful philosophy. He often told his mother that he would not live to be very old, and his prophecy came true. Services by the writer.

MARIAN CARPENTER.

Samuel Grndrod passed to spirit life, April 19, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. S. M. Cronk, Port Huron, Mich. Mr. Grndrod was born in Lacshire, Eng., Dec. 21, 1814. He came to America when 21 years of age, and shortly after was married to Miss Nancy Hurd, who with one daughter, survives him. He had been an ardent Spiritualist for many years. Services were conducted by the writer.

MARIAN CARPENTER.

"Religion as Revealed by the Material and Spiritual Universe." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. In the World Celestial

Is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance mediums, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer. This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement. Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold, and has a full page portrait of the angel heroine, from a spirit painting. Price, $1.00.

Esoteric Lessons.

An Argument Against Physical Causation.

The object of this book, considered a most excellent one by some, is to establish what is commonly regarded as purely physical health upon a purely psychical basis; to show that health is knowledge, wisdom, insight; that men suffer from so-called purely corporeal disease only because they form erroneous judgment; also, to show that the fundamental erroneous judgment is, that there is any such thing in the universe as physical causation, a belief in which leads both directly and indirectly to disease. Often directly in case of the individual, but more commonly indirectly as a race-belief held throughout the known history of mankind. This work is by Sarah Stanley Grimke. Price $1.50.

A NEW CATECHISM,

BY M. M. MAGASARIAN.

This is a new "Catechism" in the full sense of the word. There has as yet appeared in the world of liberal literature nothing like this most wonderful little book of reason. E. P. Powell, the well-known author, the reviewer and critic, says: "The remarkable thing about this 'Catechism' is that it tells the truth." It deals with the questions of God, Immortality—the Creeds, the Clergy, the Church, Prayer and Salvation, Jesus and his Teaching, the Growth of the Christ in Scriptures, and many other philosophical, scientific and ethical questions with the utmost candor, courage and clearness. 189 pages. Cloth 75c; paper, 50c

ASPHODEL BLOOMS AND Other Offerings.

BY
EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storiettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 285 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The Author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.

The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."

"That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."

Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest."

Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered, hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

"AS IT IS TO BE."

A VERY SUGGESTIVE WORK.

It Beams With Spiritual Truths.

This is a beautiful book, by Cora Lynn Daniels, and it scintillates with grand spiritual thought. An idea of this work can be obtained by reading the titles of a few of the chapters therein:

The Process of Dying; Light and Spirit; The Law of Attraction; Senses of the Spirit; What Is Unconscious Will; Fear; Astrology; The God-Soul of Man; The Drama; A Day in Heaven. Price $1. For sale at this office.

"NO BEGINNING."

An Excellent Work for Thinkers.

This book, "No Beginning," is by William H. Maple. The Arena says of it: "The argument is unanswerable. The book will at once appeal to the reason of every reader, and leave him more amazed than ever at the prevalence of the theory of Creation." The Two has always been a fateful num- Free Thought Ideal says: "We found it full of glittering thoughts for thinkers, and the very death warrant of Christian superstition shines upon its pages." Price 75 cents.

LIGHT OF EGYPT.

The Second Volume of a Most Valuable Work.

This is the author's posthumous work left in MS. to a few of his private pupils in occultism, and like Volume I. is (a valuable addition and) a library on occult subjects. Spiritual astrology is especially elaborated. Alchemy, Talismans, the Magic Wand, Symbolism, Correspondence, Penetralia, etc., are a few of the subjects treated of in a scholarly and masterly manner, showing the author to be familiar with his subjects. You cannot afford to be without it, as well as all his other books, viz.: The Light of Egypt, Vol. I., bound in cloth, $2; paper, $1. The Light of Egypt, Vol. II., bound in cloth only, $2. Celestial Dynamics, cloth, $1. The Language of the Stars, paper, 50 c
